

KF
705
S37
1896

Cornell Law School Library

Cornell University Library

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

BY

JAMES SCHOULER, LL.D.

PROFESSOR IN THE BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL, AND AUTHOR OF TREATISES ON "THE DOMESTIC RELATIONS," "BAILMENTS, INCLUDING CARRIERS," "EXECUTORS," AND "WILLS"

THIRD EDITION

IN TWO VOLUMES

VOL. II.

BOSTON
LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY
1896

LA8826

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1876,
By JAMES SCHOULER,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1884,
By JAMES SCHOULER,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1896,
By JAMES SCHOULER,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

Norwood Press:
Composition and Electrotyping by J. S. CUSHING & Co.

University Press:
Presswork by JOHN WILSON AND SON.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

---

WHAT has been said by way of preface to Volume I. of this work applies to the present volume in its second and third editions. The author has personally revised the entire work, introducing section heads, and incorporating the latest English and American decisions with text or foot-notes. The plan of the entire work remains essentially as before.

The scope of this volume is such that the writer has been enabled to treat at length of the subjects here presented. Upon the law of Title to Personal Property by Original Acquisition, by Gift, and by Sale, it is confidently believed that these pages afford a full, comprehensive, and intelligent treatment, adapted to the wants of students and practitioners. The author has spared no pains to make this work useful to the profession, and on the law of Sales especially to provide a genuine American treatise.

This volume is issued in its third edition simultaneously with the first volume. The author has increased the text of the present volume by at least sixty pages over the second edition, mainly by developing the law in the light of the latest decisions. Some six hundred new cases, too, are cited in this volume by titles; but the printed Table affords no just criterion, for many other cases of minor importance for illustrating a principle will be found cited by book and page only.

In both volumes of this edition the author has received competent clerical assistance, but the real revision of every part of the work is his own.

J. S.

September 1, 1896.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

---

WHEN my former volume on Personal Property was issued, three years ago, it was announced, that, in order to complete the work according to the original plan, another volume on Title would be required. I then felt diffident about trespassing upon my professional brethren with another book; but as to the propriety of giving unity and scope to the present work I never doubted, and the warmth of welcome with which the first volume was received soon convinced the publishers and myself that the second and final one must follow.

Pursuing, as before, a natural order of progression, I am enabled in this volume to give to the leading topics the full space needful for an elementary text-book. Our law of Original Acquisition (which embraces topics familiarly known by the names of Occupancy and the Confusion of Goods) and of Gifts receives in these pages a more ample treatment than any former writer has bestowed. With the law of Sales it is different; for here I have been much aided by the larger works of Story and Benjamin, — the latter especially, — besides Judge Blackburn's essay, as my foot-notes constantly attest. But, pursuing independent methods, making ample use of materials collected from all other accessible sources, and constantly investigating the reported cases for myself, I have carefully prepared an exposition of the law of Sales of Personal Property which I may fairly call my own; the leading object being, if it were possible, to furnish, within the space of some four hundred and eighty pages, a better working treatise on the subject for English and American lawyers than has hitherto been presented. [The minor topics of Assignment, Limitations, and Bailment, incidentally touched upon in my former volume, have received here such final treatment as appeared suitable.<sup>1</sup>]

Whether this work on Personal Property, which has cost me six years of persevering labor, be, on the whole, well or ill done, I leave to the judgment of my readers; and for myself will only add, that I value the office of a text-writer too highly to pen a single paragraph for the accuracy of whose statements I cannot at least pledge a personal investigation of the authorities, on my part, in the effort to extract a true guiding principle.

JAMES SCHOULER.

Boston, May 8, 1876.

<sup>1</sup> These topics have since been transferred, because of later volumes prepared by this author. "Assignment" and "Limitations" will be found treated in Volume I. of this work hereafter, while the law of "Bailments" is developed in a distinct work. — J. S., 1884.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PART IV.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

CHAPTER I.

TITLE IN GENERAL; OCCUPANCY.

	PAGE
§ 1. Summary of Doctrines in the Preceding Volume . . . . .	1
§§ 2, 3. Our Final Standpoint that of Title; Title and its Essentials . . . . .	2, 3
§ 4. How Title to Personal Property may accrue; Original and Derivative Acquisition . . . . .	4
§ 5. Title by Original Acquisition defined; Occupancy, and Title to Products . . . . .	5
§§ 6, 7. Occupancy; Foundation of Primitive Title . . . . .	5, 7
§ 8. Occupancy in Modern Times; Chattels abandoned or derelict . . . . .	8
§ 9. Waifs; to whom they belong . . . . .	9
§ 10. Treasure-Trove and its Ownership . . . . .	10
§§ 11, 12. Wrecks; Ancient and Modern Doctrines as to Title . . . . .	11, 12
§ 13. Various Things afloat without apparent Ownership . . . . .	13
§§ 14, 15. Lost Chattels; Rights of Finder, etc. . . . .	14, 16
§ 16. Rule as to Lost or Destroyed Negotiable Instruments . . . . .	17
§ 17. Estrays and Wild Animals; their Ownership . . . . .	19
§ 18. Stolen Chattels; Rights of Ownership, etc. . . . .	21
§ 19. Bonâ Fide Holder's Title to Lost or Stolen Chattels . . . . .	22
§§ 20, 21. Exception as to Bonâ Fide Holder for Value of Negotia- ble Instruments . . . . .	24, 25
§ 22. Rule of Larceny; when a Finder may be treated as a Thief . . . . .	26
§ 23. Miscellaneous Instances; Unclaimed Goods; Unknown Cred- itor, etc. . . . .	27
§ 24. Certain Chattels not recognized as Property . . . . .	28
§ 25. True Owner's Title, how divested; General Rule . . . . .	29
§ 26. Summary of Modern Doctrine of Occupancy . . . . .	30

CHAPTER II.

TITLE TO PRODUCTS: ACCESSION AND CONFUSION.

§ 27. Chattels newly produced: General Products; Accession; Confusion . . . . .	31
§ 28. Title to General Products: Creations of the Brain . . . . .	31

	PAGE
§ 29. Title to Products: Increase of Animals; Income of Capital, Profits, etc. . . . .	32
§ 30. Accession considered as a Rule of Title; Definition, etc. . .	33
§ 31. Old Distinction as to creating some New Species or not . .	34
§ 32. Closeness with which Component Parts are thus united . .	34
§ 33. Element of Comparative Values . . . . .	35
§ 34. Test of New Species or not; whether suitable . . . . .	36
§ 35. Accession a Rule of Practical Convenience . . . . .	37
§ 36. Taker's Conduct as affecting Title in such Cases . . . . .	38
§ 37. Doctrine summed up as to Accession without Mutual Assent .	39
§ 38. Accession of Chattels by Agreement; Use of Materials to repair, manufacture, etc.; Bailment or Sale . . . . .	40
§ 39. Accession by Agreement applied to Pledge or Chattel Mortgage . . . . .	42
§ 40. Doctrine of Accession, in Annexation of Chattel to Land or Severance . . . . .	42
§ 41. Rule where One's Chattels are cast upon Another's Land . .	43
§ 42. Confusion considered as a Rule of Title; Definition . . .	43
§ 43. Application of the Rule of Confusion . . . . .	44
§ 44. Leading Tests in Confusion to be examined . . . . .	45
§ 45. Rule where Confusion was by Mutual Consent . . . . .	45
§ 46. The Same Subject; its Application to Grain Elevators, etc. .	46
§ 47. Rule where Confusion was by One's Wilful Misconduct . .	48
§ 48. The Same Subject; Mingling Funds in Breach of Trust, etc.	50
§ 49. Rule where Confusion was by Unintentional Error . . . .	51
§ 50. Rule where Confusion is caused by a Stranger; Attaching Officer, etc. . . . .	53
§ 51. Rule where Confusion is caused by Inevitable Accident, Vis Major , etc. . . . .	54
§ 52. Roman Law of Confusion . . . . .	56
§ 53. Final Comparison of Doctrines of Accession and Confusion .	56

PART V.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY GIFT.

CHAPTER I.

GIFTS IN GENERAL.

§ 54. Definition of a Gift . . . . .	59
§ 55. Origin and History of such Transfers of Personal Property .	59
§ 56. Absence of Consideration as an Element in Gifts . . . .	61
§ 57. Gifts to be classed with Contracts as founded in Mutual Undertaking . . . . .	63
§ 58. Capacity of Parties and Good Faith in the Transfer . . .	66

	PAGE
§ 59. The Same Subject: Rule of Mental Capacity applied . . .	66
§ 60. Rule as to Freedom of Will and Good Faith applied . . .	68
§ 60 a. Improvident Gifts not favored . . . . .	70
§ 61. Gifts on Immoral Consideration . . . . .	71
§ 62. Subject-matter of Gifts; Rule as to Property or Persons not in Existence . . . . .	71
§ 63. Gift as applied to Personal Property; Gifts Inter Vivos and Gifts Causâ Mortis . . . . .	71

CHAPTER II.

GIFTS INTER VIVOS; HOW EXECUTED.

§ 64. Gifts Inter Vivos defined; their Essentials . . . . .	73
§ 65. Unexecuted Gift; whether Promise to give is enforceable . .	73
§ 66. Such Promises distinguished from Contracts upon Consider- ation . . . . .	74
§ 67. Delivery with Suitable Intention requisite in Gifts . . . .	75
§ 68. The Same Subject; Words of Gift, etc., not sufficient . .	75
§ 69. The Same Subject; Delivery of Corporeal Chattels . . . .	76
§ 70. Rule where Donee is Custodian, Bailee, etc. . . . .	76
§ 71. Whether Delivery of Receptacle carries its Contents . . .	77
§ 72. Rule of Delivery as applied to Incorporeal Chattels . . .	78
§ 73. The Same Subject; Earlier Application of the Rule . . . .	79
§ 74. The Same Subject; Gift of Sealed Instrument . . . . .	80
§ 75. Symbolical Delivery of Incorporeal Chattel . . . . .	81
§ 76. Imperfect Delivery supported at this Day on Equitable Grounds . . . . .	81
§ 77. Gift of One's Own Check, Promissory Note, etc., not complete	83
§ 78. The Same Subject; Equitable Assignment of Deposit-book .	84
§ 79. Imperfect Delivery supported as Declaration of Trust . . .	86
§ 80. Doctrines of Equitable Assignment and Declaration of Trust compared in this Connection . . . . .	88
§ 81. The Same Subject; Safer Opinion restrains the Operation of such Doctrines . . . . .	89
§ 82. Bailment of Incorporeal Property is no Gift . . . . .	90
§ 83. Delivery to Donee through some Third Party . . . . .	90
§ 84. The Same Subject; where Third Party takes as Trustee for the Donee . . . . .	90
§ 85. The Same Subject; Rule where Custodian is to deliver . . .	91
§ 86. The Same Subject; Revocation of Custodian's Agency; Death of Donor, etc., pending Delivery . . . . .	92
§ 87. Declaration of Trust with Co-operation of Third Person . .	93
§ 88. Delivery by Written Instrument; Deed of Gift . . . . .	94
§ 89. Gift by Other Instruments in Writing; Statute Formalities, etc. . . . .	95
§ 90. Acceptance on the Donee's Part; how far presumable, etc. .	96

	PAGE
§ 91. The Same Subject; Acts consistent or inconsistent with Acceptance . . . . .	97
§ 92. Acceptance where there is an Equitable Assignment or Declaration of Trust . . . . .	98
§ 93. Proof needful to establish an Executed Gift; Evidence of Intention, etc. . . . .	99
§ 94. The Same Subject; Circumstances favorable to sustaining a Gift . . . . .	100
§ 95. The Same Subject; Circumstances unfavorable to sustaining a Gift . . . . .	101
§ 96. The Same Subject; where a Deed of Gift is made . . . .	102
§ 97. The Same Subject; where a Debt is forgiven . . . . .	102
§ 98. The Same Subject; Miscellaneous Points . . . . .	103
§ 99. The Same Subject; Mental Reservation does not prevent a Gift . . . . .	104
§ 100. Gift not sustainable where Possession is without the Owner's Consent . . . . .	104
§ 101. Summary of the Law of Execution of Gifts Inter Vivos .	104

CHAPTER III.

GIFTS INTER VIVOS; EFFECT OF EXECUTION.

§ 102. Effect of Execution to be viewed in Two Aspects . . .	105
§ 103. First Aspect as concerns the Parties themselves; Gift cannot be revoked by Either . . . . .	106
§ 104. The Same Subject; Trustee under a Gift should carry out the Trust . . . . .	107
§ 105. The Same Subject; Gift how upheld after Donor's Death .	108
§ 106. The Same Subject; Avoidance for Mental Incapacity or Fraud . . . . .	109
§ 107. The Same Subject; Parties may rescind or modify by Mutual Consent . . . . .	109
§ 108. New Dealings with the Property based upon Mutual Assent	110
§ 109. The Same Subject; Revocation of Parental Gifts . . . .	110
§ 110. The Same Subject; Civil Law of Revocation . . . . .	111
§ 111. Effect of Executed Gift as concerns Third Persons; Generally conclusive . . . . .	112
§ 112. The Same Subject; Exceptions; Bonâ Fide Purchasers, etc.	112
§§ 113, 114. Main Exceptions as to Prejudiced Creditors of the Donor; Legislation against Fraudulent Transfers	113, 115
§ 115. The Same Subject; whether such Legislation extends to Incorporeal Personalty . . . . .	116
§ 116. The Same Subject; Fraudulent Purpose under such Acts .	117
§ 117. The Same Subject; Fraud a Question of Fact; Presumptions	118
§ 118. The Same Subject; Presumption as to Antecedent Creditors	118
§ 119. The Same Subject; Presumption as to Subsequent Creditors	120

	PAGE
§ 120. General Considerations of Fraud upon Creditors . . . .	122
§ 121. Rule as to setting aside Gift where Donor has died Insolvent	123
§ 122. Rights of Creditors lost by Laches, etc. . . . .	124
§ 123. Concluding Remarks as to the Doctrine of Fraudulent Transfer . . . . .	124
§ 124. Donee takes the Gift subject to all Equities existing at the Time of Transfer . . . . .	125
§ 125. Summary of Law as to the Effect of Executed Gifts . . .	125

CHAPTER IV.

QUALIFIED OR CONDITIONAL GIFTS INTER VIVOS.

§ 126. Gifts may be under Reservation, etc., instead of Absolute .	126
§ 127. Successive Expectant Interests by Way of Gift . . . .	126
§ 128. Gift in the Alternative; Conditions Precedent and Subsequent	127
§ 129. Gift with Resulting Trust in Donor's Favor . . . . .	128
§ 130. Gift subject to Donee's Discretion . . . . .	129
§§ 131, 132. How far the Donor may give under Reservations in his own Favor . . . . .	129, 131
§ 133. Gift for One's Own Beneficial Use cannot exclude One's Creditors . . . . .	132
§ 134. How to determine whether Gift is Qualified or Absolute .	132

CHAPTER V.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; PRELIMINARIES.

§ 135. Gift Causâ Mortis ; its Nature; Definition . . . . .	133
§ 136. Origin and History of Gifts Causâ Mortis . . . . .	135
§§ 137, 138. Gifts Causâ Mortis contrasted with Ordinary Gifts, Legacies, etc. . . . .	136, 137
§ 139. Gift Causâ Mortis ; distinguished from a Contract or Trans- fer upon Consideration . . . . .	139
§ 140. General Division of Subject for this and Succeeding Chap- ters . . . . .	140
§§ 141, 142. As to Capacity of Parties to the Gift; Donor's Testa- mentary or Contract Capacity . . . . .	140, 142
§ 143. The Same Subject; Other Questions of Capacity as to Parties . . . . .	143
§§ 144, 145. As to the Property given; whether Gift may embrace Donor's Whole Property . . . . .	143, 144
§ 146. The Same Subject; Conflicting Decisions considered . .	145
§ 147. Gift Causâ Mortis is confined to Personal Property; Corpo- real and Incorporeal Kinds included . . . . .	147
§ 148. Exception as to Gift of Donor's own Promissory Note, Con- tract, etc. . . . .	149
§ 149. The Same Subject; English Cases . . . . .	150

	PAGE
§ 150. The Same Subject; American Cases . . . . .	151
§ 151. Such Gifts sustained where Drawee accepts the Instrument, etc. . . . .	153
§ 152. As to Expectation of Death; Civil and Common Law Doc- trines . . . . .	154
§§ 153, 154. The Same Subject; American Cases . . . . .	156, 157
§ 155. The Same Subject; English Cases . . . . .	159
§ 156. Proofs, Presumptions, etc., as to Expectation of Death . .	160
§ 157. General Conclusion as to the Element of Expectation of Death . . . . .	161

CHAPTER VI.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; HOW EXECUTED.

§ 158. Method of executing Gift considered in this Chapter . . .	162
§ 159. Execution requires Delivery on Donor's Part; Uninter- rupted Change of Possession, etc. . . . .	162
§ 160. Element of Delivery associates Gift Causâ Mortis with other Gifts . . . . .	163
§ 161. Mere Promise to give is ineffectual . . . . .	163
§ 162. Delivery by Donor as to Corporeal Chattels; Manual, Sym- bolical, etc. . . . .	164
§ 163. The Same Subject; Delivery of Receptacle and Contents . .	164
§ 164. Instances of Insufficient Delivery of Corporeal Chattels . .	166
§ 165. There must be Intention to give, and Act of Delivery . .	166
§ 166. Donor's Delivery of Incorporeal Chattels; Rule radically changing . . . . .	166
§ 167. Gift Causâ Mortis of Bond, Mortgage, etc. . . . .	167
§ 168. Gift Causâ Mortis of Bills, Notes, or Other Negotiable In- struments . . . . .	168
§ 169. Gift Causâ Mortis of Insurance Policy . . . . .	169
§ 170. Gift Causâ Mortis of Stock . . . . .	170
§ 171. Indorsement, Assignment, etc., expressive of Intent . . .	171
§§ 172, 173. Gift Causâ Mortis of Savings-Bank Deposit . . .	171, 173
§ 174. Gift of Voucher, Receipt, etc. . . . .	173
§ 175. Delivery of Receptacle containing Incorporeal Chattels . .	174
§ 176. Gift Causâ Mortis to a Third Person for Donee . . . .	175
§ 177. Intervention of Trustee distinguished from Agency . . .	176
§ 178. Miscellaneous Instances of Gift through Third Person; Residuary Legatee, etc. . . . .	177
§ 179. Gift Causâ Mortis by Instrument in Writing; Deed of Gift, etc. . . . .	177
§ 180. Whether Delivery is dispensed with where Donee or Trus- tee is already in Possession . . . . .	180
§ 181. How far Chancery aids Informal Delivery . . . . .	181
§ 182. Part Delivery where the Gift was entire . . . . .	182

	PAGE
§ 183. Execution on Donee's Part; Acceptance and Continuous Possession . . . . .	182
§ 184. Proof of Execution to sustain a Gift Causâ Mortis . . . .	183
§ 185. How the Issue of Gift is determined in Practice . . . .	185
§ 186. Gift constituted by the Forgiveness of a Debt . . . . .	186

CHAPTER VII.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; EFFECT OF EXECUTION.

§ 187. Effect of executing Gift as between Donor and Donee . .	186
§ 188. The Same Subject; Gift Causâ Mortis is revocable . . .	186
§ 189. Revocation by Donor's Recovery from the Peril . . . .	187
§ 190. Revocation by Donee's Death before the Donor . . . .	188
§ 191. Revocation by Donor who repents of the Gift . . . . .	188
§ 192. Other Special Causes of Revocation; Fraud, Force, etc. .	189
§ 193. Controversies between Donee and Donor's Representatives	189
§ 194. Effect of executing Gift as concerns Donor's Creditors, etc.	190

CHAPTER VIII.

QUALIFIED GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS.

§ 195. Special Qualifications or Conditions annexed to Gifts Causâ Mortis . . . . .	191
§ 196. Trusts or Conditions coupled with a Gift Causâ Mortis must be contemporaneous, certain, etc. . . . .	192
§ 197. Concluding Observations; Impolicy of Informal Gifts Causâ Mortis . . . . .	192
§ 198. The Same Subject; Legislative Restraints upon Such Gifts desirable . . . . .	194

PART VI.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY SALE.

CHAPTER I.

LEADING ESSENTIALS OF A SALE.

§ 199. General Observations as to the Law of Sales of Personal Property . . . . .	196
§ 200. Definition of Sale; its Main Characteristics . . . . .	197
§ 201. Barter or Exchange distinguished from Sale . . . . .	198
§ 202. Sales Classified; Absolute or Qualified, Executed or Executory, of Things Specific or not Specific, Legal or Illegal, Private or Public . . . . .	199

	PAGE
§ 203. Sales Classified; Involuntary or Judicial Sales . . . . .	200
§ 204. Parties to a Sale; Bargain and Sale; Sales of Corporeal or Incorporeal Things . . . . .	201
§ 205. Three Leading Essentials; Thing to be sold, Price, Mutual Assent, etc. . . . .	201
§ 206. A Thing to be sold is essential to Every Sale . . . . .	202
§ 207. Sale of a Thing which has ceased to exist . . . . .	202
§ 208. Sale of that which some one else owns . . . . .	203
§ 209. Sale of what has not yet come into Existence . . . . .	203
§ 210. The Same Subject; Transfer of Potential Rights . . . . .	205
§ 211. The Essential of a Price . . . . .	207
§ 212. Price imports the Application of a Money Valuation . . . . .	208
§ 213. Price must be fixed or ascertainable . . . . .	208
§ 214. Where Something remains for ascertaining Price, Sale is not complete . . . . .	209
§ 215. Price sometimes left to a Third Party's Adjustment . . . . .	211
§ 216. Price may be implied from Circumstances . . . . .	211
§ 217. Price should be Bonâ Fide ; Need not be Adequate . . . . .	212
§ 218. The Essential of Mutual Assent to the Transfer of the Thing at the Price . . . . .	213
§ 219. The Same Subject; Fraud or Force or Error in Essentials; Genuine Intention . . . . .	214
§ 220. The Same Subject; Mutuality as to Price . . . . .	215
§ 221. Mutual Assent in General; how expressed . . . . .	216
§§ 222, 223. Negotiation of a Bargain; Proposals, etc. . . . .	217, 218
§§ 224, 225. Bargain, how concluded by Mail Correspondence . . . . .	220, 221
§ 226. The Same Subject; Rule of Civil Law . . . . .	223
§ 227. Bargains by Messages other than through the Mail; Tele- grams, etc. . . . .	224
§ 228. Limitations as to Place and Time of accepting Proposal . . . . .	225
§§ 229, 230. Whether Offer may be withdrawn where Time was given for Assent . . . . .	226, 227
§ 231. Death or Refusal revokes an Offer . . . . .	228
§ 232. Mutual Assent to a Bargain inferable from Circumstances . . . . .	229
§ 232 a. Order for Goods . . . . .	230
§ 233. Sale may be Conditional or Qualified; Right to repurchase, etc. . . . .	230
§ 234. Writings merge Previous Oral Stipulations; Construction of Writings constituting a Bargain. . . . .	230

CHAPTER II.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY RIGHT IN SPECIFIC CHATTELS.

§ 235. As to Transfer of Property Right in a Sale . . . . .	231
§ 236. Mutual Intention is here the Guiding Principle . . . . .	232
§§ 237, 238. Executory and Executed Sale Contracts, etc.; Dis- tinctions of Common and Civil Law . . . . .	234, 235

	PAGE
§ 239. Effect of Contract of Sale in Transferring Property Right to be considered . . . . .	236
§ 240. Property Transfer as to Specific Chattels; what are Specific Chattels . . . . .	236
§ 241. Specific Chattels may be sold though lying with Other Chattels . . . . .	237
§ 242. Leading Considerations; whether Something remains to be done to Specific Chattels . . . . .	238
§ 243. Where Nothing remains to be done; Transfer presumed when Bargain is closed . . . . .	238
§ 244. This Rule is one of Presumption only; Qualification where Price is not paid . . . . .	239
§ 245. The Same Subject; Qualification as to Matter of Delivery .	241
§ 246. The Same Subject; Presumption applies with above Qualifications . . . . .	242
§ 247. Where Something remains to be done; Presumption against Immediate Transfer . . . . .	242
§ 248. The Same Subject; Artificial Rules as stated by English Judges . . . . .	243
§ 249. English Cases reviewed where the Seller is to do the Act .	244
§ 250. American Authorities with Reference to this Point . . .	246
§ 251. Further Considerations where the Seller is to do the Act .	248
§ 252. Cases reviewed where the Buyer is to perform the Further Act . . . . .	250
§ 253. Where the Act remaining is to be done by both Buyer and Seller . . . . .	252
§ 254. Delivery as a Circumstance evincing Mutual Intention of Transfer . . . . .	252
§ 255. Summary of Doctrine; English Rules restated . . . .	254

CHAPTER III.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY RIGHT IN CHATTELS NOT SPECIFIC.

§ 256. No Transfer in General until the Subject-matter becomes specific . . . . .	255
§ 257. Instances where this Doctrine is applied . . . . .	256
§ 258. But Numerous Exceptions are found; Mutual Intent regarded	258
§ 259. Instance where an Article is made to Order . . . . .	259
§ 260. Doctrine of Subsequent Appropriation of Chattels to the Contract . . . . .	260
§§ 261, 262. Cases reviewed as to General Appropriation under a Contract . . . . .	262, 264
§ 263. Rule where Something more than Appropriation is needful . . . . .	266
§ 264. Delivery as a Circumstance, in Appropriation of Specific Chattels . . . . .	267

	PAGE
§ 265. Summary of the Doctrine of Appropriation under a Sale Contract . . . . .	269
§§ 266-268. How Appropriation is constituted, where Chattels are made to order . . . . .	271, 273, 275
§ 268 a. Appropriation after a Rejection . . . . .	276
§ 269. The Same Subject; Summary of the Doctrines as to Chattels made to order . . . . .	277
§ 270. Property Transfer may pass for Certain Purposes only; Rule as to Creditors, etc. . . . .	278

CHAPTER IV.

SELLER'S RESERVATION OF THE JUS DISPONENDI.

§ 271. How the Seller may reserve the Dominion of the Thing . . . . .	279
§ 272. Rule of Reservation applies especially to Delivery through a Carrier . . . . .	280
§ 273. The Same Subject; where Bill of Lading is taken out . . . . .	280
§ 274. The Same Subject; where Bill of Lading is accompanied by Draft for the Price . . . . .	282
§ 275. Limitations of this Reserved Dominion Doctrine . . . . .	283

CHAPTER V.

CONDITIONS IN SALES.

§ 276. Conditions Precedent to Transfer of Property . . . . .	285
§ 277. Conditions under General Law of Contracts; Rule of Mutual Intent . . . . .	285
§ 278. Stipulations in an Executory Contract, whether Dependent or Independent . . . . .	286
§ 279. Precedence of Conditions where Stipulations are dependent; Concurrent Conditions . . . . .	287
§ 280. How far a Stipulation may affect the Whole Consideration . . . . .	288
§ 281. General Maxim that Each Party should strictly perform in Turn; Exceptions . . . . .	289
§ 282. Exception where Other Party prevents or waives Performance . . . . .	289
§ 283. Exception as to Impossibility from External Circumstances . . . . .	290
§ 284. Restatement of Exceptions to Performance of Condition Precedent . . . . .	292
§ 285. Conditions as a Doctrine in the Law of Sales; Conditions Precedent and Concurrent . . . . .	292
§ 286. Condition where a Third Party must first perform, etc. . . . .	293
§§ 287, 288. Exceptions as to Waiver and Impossibility considered . . . . .	294, 296
§ 289. Stipulations as to Time of Performance; how far Conditional . . . . .	298

	PAGE
§ 290. Stipulations as to Place of Performance; how far Conditional . . . . .	299
§ 291. Sales upon Notice; Requirement of giving Notice as a Condition Precedent . . . . .	300
§ 291 a. The Same Subject; where Either Party has an Option . .	301
§ 292. Property Transfer conditioned on paying or securing Price .	301
§ 293. Obligation to deliver and Obligation to pay, as Conditions Concurrent, etc. . . . .	302
§ 294. Condition of no Transfer of Title until Price is adjusted .	303
§ 295. The Same Subject; Condition sustained notwithstanding Delivery . . . . .	304
§ 296. The Same Subject; Rule applied where the Condition is not for Cash Payment; Payment by Check, etc. . . . .	305
§ 297. The Same Subject; Partial Adjustment of the Price; Sale on Instalment Plan . . . . .	306
§ 298. The Same Subject; Delivery carrying Possession without Property; how Possession is resumed by Seller, etc. . .	307
§ 299. Condition of no Title notwithstanding Delivery, applied as against Buyer's Creditors . . . . .	308
§ 300. Rule as concerns Sub-purchasers from Buyer . . . . .	309
§ 301. Qualifications of this rule as to Bonâ Fide Purchasers for Value; Negotiable Instruments, etc. . . . .	312
§ 302. Who is a Bonâ Fide Purchaser, etc., in this Connection . .	314
§ 302 a. Interests of Buyer and Seller before Breach of Conditions .	314
§ 303. Conclusion as to Sales with Condition of no Property Transfer until Payment . . . . .	315
§ 304. Exceptions growing out of Waiver or Impossibility . . . .	315
§ 305. Seller may be estopped by his own Acts, etc., from claiming Goods as his own . . . . .	318
§ 306. How Buyer should pay or adjust Payment, perform Condition, and gain Title . . . . .	319
§ 307. Rules of Evidence as to Sale for Cash on Delivery or upon Credit . . . . .	319
§ 308. Rule applied in Sales upon Partial Delivery or Partial Payments . . . . .	321
§ 309. Property in Chattels sold may pass as Defeasible by Condition Subsequent . . . . .	323
§ 310. Sales "on Trial" or "on Approval;" Bargain of "Sale or Return" . . . . .	324
§ 311. The Same Subject; Sales "on Trial," etc., considered . . .	325
§ 312. Bargains of "Sale or Return" . . . . .	327
§ 313. Other Instances of Buyer's Option; Sale to be Satisfactory, etc. . . . .	329
§ 314. Sales of Goods "to arrive," etc. . . . .	331
§ 315. Miscellaneous Conditions Precedent; Rule of Construction in Doubtful Cases . . . . .	333
§§ 316, 317. Sale by Sample or Description; its Implied Condition; Warranty distinguished . . . . .	334, 337

	PAGE
§ 318. Sales of Incorporeal Securities; Condition of Genuineness, etc., implied . . . . .	338
§ 319. Sales of Specific Corporeal Chattels; Implied Condition of Genuineness, etc. . . . .	340

CHAPTER VI.

WARRANTY.

§ 320. Warranty in Sales; Introductory Remarks . . . . .	341
§ 321. Warranty defined; Warranty and Representation . . . . .	342
§ 322. Caveat Emptor , the Rule in a Sale; Exceptions noted . . . . .	344
§ 323. Warranty in an Executory or Executed Sale . . . . .	344
§ 324. Warranty by One's Agent . . . . .	345
§ 325. The Same Subject; Agent as Arbitrator . . . . .	347
§ 326. Effect of Custom upon the Law of Warranty . . . . .	347
§ 327. Waiver of Warranty; when inferred . . . . .	349
§ 328. Express and Implied Warranty to be considered . . . . .	349
§ 329. As to express Warranty; what constitutes it . . . . .	350
§ 330. The Same Subject; Warranty under Limitations . . . . .	352
§ 331. No Special Form of Words for Express Warranty . . . . .	353
§ 332. Time of giving Warranty; Prospective Warranty, etc. . . . .	354
§ 333. As to Buyer's Opportunity for ascertaining Defects, etc. . . . .	355
§ 334. Express Warranty as to Latent Defects not presumed . . . . .	357
§ 335. Express Warranty in Writing; Question of Intent . . . . .	357
§ 336. The Same Subject; Evidence Admissible . . . . .	358
§ 337. General Proof of Express Warranty; Uncertain Expressions, etc. . . . .	359
§ 338. Express Guaranty construed as Warranty and not as Condition . . . . .	362
§ 339. Express Warranty in Sales of Animals; Warranty of "Soundness" . . . . .	362
§ 340. The Same Subject; Other Expressions importing Warranty . . . . .	365
§ 341. The Same Subject; as to Defects Open or Latent, etc. . . . .	366
§ 342. Implied Warranty; Subdivision of the Subject . . . . .	368
§ 343. Implied Warranty as to Quality; Rule and Exceptions; Sources of Confusion . . . . .	368
§ 344. The Same Subject; Warranty and Condition Precedent not clearly distinguished . . . . .	369
§ 345. The Same Subject; Caveat Emptor as a Modern Doctrine . . . . .	370
§ 346. Distinction as to Implied Warranty of Quality between Chattels Ascertained and not Ascertained . . . . .	371
§ 347. Implied Warranty of Quality in Ascertained Chattels; Opportunity of Inspection, etc. . . . .	372
§ 348. Rule applied to Sale of Meat, Provisions, etc. . . . .	374
§ 349. Implied Warranty of Quality in Unascertained Chattels; Sale by Description . . . . .	376
§ 350. The Same Subject; Instances stated . . . . .	377

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xix

	PAGE
§ 351. How far Description affords Condition Precedent rather than Warranty . . . . .	378
§ 352. Buyer's Right to refuse such Chattels, if not what were called for . . . . .	379
§ 353. Instances of Descriptive Language in Such Sales . . . . .	379
§§ 354, 355. Implied Warranty that Chattels are Salable or fit for Special Purpose stated . . . . .	381, 383
§ 356. The Same Subject; Limitations of this Doctrine . . . . .	384
§ 357. Further Illustrations of Warranty as to Merchantable Condition and Fitness for Special Purpose . . . . .	386
§ 358. Implied Warranty of Quality deducible from Circumstance that the Seller's Skill or Expert Knowledge must be relied upon . . . . .	387
§§ 359, 360. Implied Warranty of Quality in Sales by Sample . . . . .	388, 389
§ 361. The Same Subject; "Average Sample" Sales . . . . .	390
§ 362. Rule of Final Inspection by Buyer in Sample Sales . . . . .	391
§ 363. The Same Subject; Other Instances of Decisive Inspection . . . . .	393
§ 364. The Element of Fraud in Sample Sales; Dealer or Manufacturer . . . . .	394
§ 365. Rule as to Latent Defects both in Sample and Bulk . . . . .	396
§ 366. Rule of Implied Warranty as to Second-hand Chattels . . . . .	398
§ 367. Whether Express Warranty excludes an Implied Warranty . . . . .	398
§ 368. Implied Warranty of Title to be considered; Warranty and Quitclaim . . . . .	399
§ 369. Doctrine of Implied Warranty as to Executory Contracts . . . . .	399
§ 370. Fraud in Matters of Title renders Sale Voidable . . . . .	400
§ 371. Express Warranty of Title may be given . . . . .	400
§ 372. Warranty of Title sometimes negatived by Circumstances; Judicial Sales; Sales under Pledge, etc. . . . .	400
§ 373. Warranty of Title in Sale of Incorporeal Chattels . . . . .	401
§ 374. A Quitclaim of One's Own Title is always implied . . . . .	403
§ 375. Inquiry whether, in General, a Sale implies a Warranty of Title . . . . .	404
§§ 376, 377. The Same Subject; English Doctrine . . . . .	404, 407
§ 378. Whether a Sale implies a Warranty of Title; American Doctrine . . . . .	409
§ 379. Whether a Sale implies a Warranty of Title; Rule of Civil Law . . . . .	412
§ 380. Miscellaneous Warranties; Warranty as to Quality, Manufacturer's Make, etc. . . . .	412
§ 381. Summary as to Implied Warranty and Caveat Emptor . . . . .	413

CHAPTER VII.

DELIVERY.

§ 382. Delivery in a Sale to be considered . . . . .	415
§ 383. What is Delivery; Numerous Senses of the Word . . . . .	415

	PAGE
§ 384. Seller's General Duty of Delivery to fulfil Bargain . . .	417
§ 385. As to the Place of Delivery . . . . .	418
§§ 386, 387. As to the Time of Delivery . . . . .	421, 423
§ 388. As to the Quantity to be delivered; the Terms of the Contract determine . . . . .	424
§ 389. The Same Subject; Substantial rather than Literal Compliance required; Expressions "More or Less," etc., construed	425
§ 390. Rule as to Delivery by Instalments, etc. . . . .	426
§ 390 a . Tender of a Second Delivery . . . . .	427
§ 391. As to the Manner of Delivery; General Principles . . .	428
§ 392. Indicia of Title; Delivery of Bill of Sale or Bill of Lading, etc. . . . .	428
§ 393. Other Instances of Constructive Delivery . . . . .	430
§ 394. Where Buyer waives Complete Delivery . . . . .	430
§ 395. Effect of Delivery as concerns Third Parties . . . . .	431
§ 396. Delivery to Buyer's Agent is Delivery to Buyer; Case of Carrier, etc. . . . .	432
§ 397. Delivery whether by Means of Seller's or Buyer's Agents .	434
§ 398. Miscellaneous Points as to Delivery; Acts of Parties construed; Usage, etc. . . . .	435
§ 399. Where Thing Sold is already in Buyer's Possession, no Formal Delivery . . . . .	436
§ 400. Seller's Responsibility as to a Chattel sold but not delivered	436
§ 401. Seller's Duty as to Delivery; Concluding Summary . . .	437

CHAPTER VIII.

BUYER'S DUTIES; ACCEPTANCE AND PAYMENT.

§ 402. Acceptance and Payment the Buyer's Leading Obligations	438
§ 403. As to Acceptance of the Chattels; General Principles . .	438
§ 404. Acceptance is more than a Mere Receipt . . . . .	439
§ 405. Buyer's Duty as to Acceptance where Seller has performed his Part . . . . .	439
§ 406. Buyer's Right to Inspect, etc., before Accepting . . . .	440
§ 407. Acceptance; how Inferable from Words and Acts; Detention, etc. . . . .	442
§ 408. Buyer refusing Acceptance; his Proper Course . . . .	444
§ 409. Seller may waive Prompt Notice of Non-Acceptance . .	445
§ 410. Acceptance where Delivery is by Instalments, etc. . . .	445
§ 411. As to Payment; Modes of Payment stated . . . . .	446
§ 412. Payment in Cash; Ordinary Rule . . . . .	447
§ 413. The Same Subject; Time and Manner of Payment . . . .	447
§ 414. The Same Subject; Payment by Instalments . . . . .	448
§ 415. Payment in Cash, with Risks of Delivery, etc. . . . .	449
§§ 416, 417. Rules as to Cash Payment applied; Tender, etc. .	449, 452
§ 418. Payment by a Present Adjustment not in Cash; Various Modes . . . . .	454

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxi

	PAGE
§ 419. Buyer's Own Note or Acceptance, whether Absolute or Conditional Payment . . . . .	455
§ 420. Adjustment of Price where a Third Party's Obligation is given . . . . .	457
§ 421. Compound or Optional Adjustment; Miscellaneous Points	458
§ 422. Sales on Credit; General Rules Stated . . . . .	458
§ 423. Payment through Agent of Buyer or Seller . . . . .	460
§ 424. Rule of Payment where Brokers, Factors, etc., are employed	461
§ 425. Agent's Authority in settling on Seller's Behalf . . . . .	462
§ 426. Roman Law of Payment and Tender . . . . .	463
§ 427. Miscellaneous Costs and Expenses attending a Sale . . . . .	464

CHAPTER IX.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS; CONTRACTS OF SALE EMBRACED.

§ 428. Common Law of Sales is modified by Legislation . . . . .	464
§ 429. Statute of Frauds; its History; Language of 17th Section	465
§ 430. Policy of such Legislation as to Sales; Writing, etc., not always essential . . . . .	468
§ 431. Legal Consequences of a Non-Compliance; Conflicting Theories . . . . .	468
§ 432. The Same Subject; Contract exists but is unenforceable .	470
§ 433. How Sale Contract becomes good by Subsequent Compliance with Statute . . . . .	471
§ 433 a. Sale Contract if fully executed stands unaffected . . . . .	473
§ 434. Conflict of Laws as to Statute; the Remedy affected . . . . .	473
§ 435. Unenforceableness extends to Note given for Price . . . . .	473
§ 436. Leading Divisions to be observed in considering Statute of Frauds . . . . .	474
§ 437. Contracts of Sale embraced under the Statute, 17th Section	474
§ 438. "Contracts for the Sale of," etc.; whether Executory Contracts are included . . . . .	474
§ 439. The Same Subject; English Decisions Reviewed . . . . .	475
§ 440. The Same Subject; English Rule affected by Act 9 Geo. IV. c. 14 . . . . .	477
§ 441. The Same Subject; Latest English Decisions reviewed . . . . .	479
§ 442. The Same Subject; American Rule as to Executory Contracts . . . . .	481
§ 443. Summary as to whether Executory Contracts are included	483
§ 444. Auction Sales included under the Statute . . . . .	485
§ 445. Chattel Mortgages, Miscellaneous Agreements, etc., whether included . . . . .	486
§ 446. Entirety of a Contract under the Statute; Sale by Parcels, etc. . . . .	487
§ 447. "Goods, Wares, Merchandises;" what Property is included	489
§ 448. The Same Subject; Unsevered Crops; 4th and 17th Sections compared . . . . .	489

	PAGE
§ 449. Cases reviewed as to Unsevered Crops . . . . .	490
§ 450. The Same Subject; Distinctions as to Annual Crops, or Fruits of Industry . . . . .	492
§ 451. The Same Subject; Cases further Reviewed; Natural Products, etc. . . . .	493
§ 452. General Summary as to Unsevered Products; whether within the Statute . . . . .	497
§ 453. Contracts for the Sale of Fixtures, Buildings, etc., whether under Section 17 . . . . .	499
§ 454. Whether Section 17 applies to Incorporeal Chattels; Bills and Notes, Stock, etc. . . . .	500
§ 455. Statute Provision as to Standard of "Price" or "Value" . . . . .	503
§§ 456, 457. The Same Subject; Rule of Entirety of Contract here applied . . . . .	505, 506

CHAPTER X.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS; ORAL COMPLIANCE.

§ 458. Two Methods of Oral Compliance to be considered . . . .	508
§ 459. Compliance by Buyer's Part Acceptance and Actual Receipt	508
§ 460. The Same Subject; what is Acceptance and Actual Receipt	510
§ 461. The Same Subject; Doctrine of Entirety applied . . . .	511
§ 462. The Same Subject; Test of Part Acceptance, etc. . . .	512
§§ 463, 464. Whether accompanied necessarily by Transfer of Title . . . . .	513, 515
§ 465. Statute satisfied by Part Acceptance and Receipt; whether Contemporaneous with Sale or not . . . . .	517
§ 466. As to Part Acceptance; Doctrine considered in detail . .	518
§ 467. The Same Subject; Specific and Unascertained Goods distinguished . . . . .	519
§ 467 a. The Same Subject; Sample Sales . . . . .	521
§ 468. Whether Carrier or Other Agent may accept . . . . .	521
§ 469. The Same Subject; Fact of Acceptance; how evinced, etc.	522
§ 470. The Same Subject; Conclusion as to Part Acceptance . .	525
§ 471. As to Actual Part Receipt; General Doctrine . . . . .	525
§ 472. Rule applied where Goods are already in Buyer's Custody .	526
§ 473. Rule applied where Goods are in a Third Person's Custody	527
§ 474. Rule applied where Goods are in the Seller's Custody . .	529
§ 475. Constructive Receipt and Delivery by Agents, Carriers, etc. . . . .	531
§§ 476, 477. Compliance by giving Earnest or Part Payment	532, 533
§ 478. As to Sufficiency of Part Payment where Mutual Debts are reckoned . . . . .	534
§ 479. Giving Earnest or Part Payment does not necessarily transfer Full Title . . . . .	535

CHAPTER XI.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS; WRITTEN COMPLIANCE.

	PAGE
§ 480. Written Compliance with Statute of Frauds; General Rule stated . . . . .	536
§ 481. Compliance by Party against whom Enforcement is sought is the Requisite . . . . .	536
§ 482. Memorandum thus distinguished from Written Contract of Sale . . . . .	537
§ 483. Common Rules of Interpretation apply . . . . .	537
§ 484. Classification of the Subject for this Chapter . . . . .	538
§ 485. As to the Written Note or Memorandum under the Statute; of what it may consist . . . . .	538
§ 486. The Same Subject; Several Writings . . . . .	540
§ 487. Written Proposal and Parol Acceptance; and the Reverse . . . . .	540
§ 488. Intention not Material; nor Address of the Memorandum .	541
§ 489. Writings not Contemporaneous; Evidence to support them, etc. . . . .	542
§ 489 a. Admissibility of Parol Evidence . . . . .	543
§ 490. As to what the Written Memorandum should contain; Essentials . . . . .	544
§ 491. The Same Subject; Identity of Buyer and Seller as such .	544
§§ 492, 493. Subject-matter and Essential Terms of Bargain should appear . . . . .	546, 549
§ 494. Whether a Writing which repudiates can be a Memorandum	550
§§ 495, 496. Application of Statute where Original Bargain is modified . . . . .	553, 554
§§ 497, 498. As to signing the Memorandum; how and by whom . . . . .	555, 557
§ 499. As to Delivery of the Note or Memorandum; Unauthorized Memoranda, etc. . . . .	558
§ 500. As to Statute Compliance by Agents; General Rule . . .	559
§ 501. The Same Subject; Implied Agency for such Purposes . .	560
§ 502. The Same Subject; whether Agent signs as such, etc. . .	562
§ 503. The Same Subject; Rule applied to Telegrams, etc. . . .	563
§ 504. Agent cannot be the Charging Party himself, etc. . . . .	563
§ 505. Auctioneers and Brokers may make a Memorandum binding both Parties . . . . .	564
§ 506. Auctioneer's Memorandum considered . . . . .	564
§ 507. Broker's Memorandum considered; Broker's Book; "Bought and Sold Notes," etc. . . . .	566
§ 508. The Same Subject; Broker contracting without a Principal	570
§ 509. Sales as affected by 4th Section of the Statute of Frauds; Collateral Undertaking . . . . .	570
§ 510. The Same Subject; Agreement not to be performed within a Year . . . . .	571

CHAPTER XII.

SELLER'S REMEDIES BY PERSONAL ACTION.

	PAGE
§ 511. Seller's Remedies for Buyer's Breach; Subject classified . . . . .	572
§ 512. Personal Action to be here considered . . . . .	572
§ 513. Personal Action for Damages where Property has not been fully transferred . . . . .	572
§ 514. The Same Subject; General Rule as to Damages . . . . .	573
§ 515. The Same Subject; ceasing to supply after contract is broken . . . . .	574
§ 516. The Same Subject; Duty as to Disposing of Goods refused by the Buyer . . . . .	575
§ 517. The Same Subject; Standard of Damages, etc. . . . .	576
§ 518. Rule where Buyer dies or becomes Bankrupt or Insolvent before Delivery . . . . .	577
§ 519. Miscellaneous Points as to Damages . . . . .	577
§ 520. Rule of Damages where the Goods are worth all or more than the Price; where they are Worthless, etc. . . . .	579
§ 521. Special Exceptions to the Rule of computing at Market Value, etc. . . . .	579
§ 522. Choice of Remedies for Breach in Local Practice . . . . .	581
§ 523. Rule under a Part Delivery . . . . .	582
§ 524. Rule of Liquidated Damages under an Agreement . . . . .	583
§ 525. Personal Action for Price where Property has passed from Seller to Buyer . . . . .	583
§ 526. But Rights under Security remain; Conditional Delivery, etc. . . . .	584
§ 527. Form of Action for Goods sold and delivered . . . . .	585
§ 528. Action where Property has passed but not Possession; Lien Advantages to be considered . . . . .	585

CHAPTER XIII.

SELLER'S GENERAL REMEDIES AGAINST THE GOODS.

§ 529. Re-sale, Lien, and Stoppage in Transitu the Subjects for Consideration . . . . .	586
§ 530. Unpaid Seller's Rights as Possessor where Property has passed . . . . .	587
§§ 531, 532. Nature of the Lien Right here conceded to the Seller . . . . .	587, 589
§§ 533, 534. Lien Right as between Unpaid Seller and Insolvent Buyer . . . . .	590, 591
§ 535. Where Sale is on Credit, Delivery may be withheld upon Buyer's Insolvency . . . . .	594
§ 536. Lien Right as between Unpaid Seller and the Buyer's Sub- buyer . . . . .	594
§ 537. The Same Subject; Estoppel of the Seller by his Own Con- duct . . . . .	595

	PAGE
§ 538. The Same Subject; Lien otherwise Good against Sub-buyer	596
§ 539. The Same Subject; Bills of Lading, etc., not here considered; Bills of Sale . . . . .	596
§ 540. Estoppel as to Third Parties further considered . . . . .	597
§ 541. The Same Subject; English Cases . . . . .	598
§§ 542, 543. The Same Subject; American Cases . . . . .	600, 601
§ 544. How Warehouseman or other Bailee may be estopped . . . . .	602
§ 545. Law of Re-sale; General Doctrine . . . . .	603
§ 546. Re-sale where Property has passed but not Possession . . . . .	603
§ 547. Such Re-sale a Technical Breach of Contract, but available; More than a Mere Lien allowed . . . . .	604
§ 548. The Same Subject; English Rule of Re-sale . . . . .	605
§ 549. The Same Subject; American Rule of Re-sale . . . . .	608
§ 550. Notice is Proper before a Re-sale; Modes of Sale . . . . .	609
§ 550 a. Rule of Damages under a Re-sale . . . . .	610
§ 551. Whether Replevin lies on the Unpaid Seller's Behalf . . . . .	610

CHAPTER XIV.

SELLER'S LIEN, AND RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

§ 552. Lien and Stoppage in Transitu on a Seller's Behalf . . . . .	611
§ 553. The Seller's Lien; its Nature and Extent . . . . .	611
§ 554. How the Lien may have been excluded or waived . . . . .	612
§ 555. Up to what Period the Lien extends; Effect of Delivery, etc. . . . .	614
§ 556. Effect on Lien, where Documents of Title are transferred . . . . .	616
§ 557. How Buyer may put an End to the Lien by tendering Performance, etc. . . . .	617
§ 558. Right of Stoppage in Transitu ; its Nature . . . . .	619
§ 559. The Same Subject; Division of this Topic . . . . .	620
§ 560. Parties by whom the Right is exercised; Seller, Consignor, etc. . . . .	620
§ 561. Party against whom the Right is exercised; Insolvent Buyer, etc. . . . .	622
§ 562. The Transit, with its Proper Limits; Intervention of Carrier . . . . .	623
§ 563. The Same Subject; Buyer may Break Transit and intercept Goods . . . . .	625
§ 564. Carrier's Acts at Terminus; what Acts exclude Seller . . . . .	626
§ 565. Method of exercising Right of Stoppage in Transitu . . . . .	628
§ 566. Effect of exercising the Right of Stoppage in Transitu . . . . .	630
§ 567. How the Right of Stoppage is defeated by Transfer or Documents of Title . . . . .	631
§ 568. The Same Subject; Transfer must be to Bonâ Fide Third Party for Value . . . . .	632
§ 569. Other Means of defeating or excluding the Right of Stoppage . . . . .	632

CHAPTER XV.

BUYER'S REMEDIES.

	PAGE
§ 570. Leading Instances stated where Buyer may invoke Remedies . . . . .	634
§ 571. Where the Seller fails altogether to deliver; Action for Damages . . . . .	634
§ 572. Rule of Damages in Such Case . . . . .	635
§ 573. Damages where Buyer has paid in Advance . . . . .	638
§ 574. Damages where Delivery should have been by Instalments . . . . .	639
§ 575. When Demand should precede Suit . . . . .	639
§ 576. Choice of Remedies, where Property has passed; compelling Specific Performance . . . . .	640
§ 577. Rule as to suing in Trover, etc., considered . . . . .	641
§ 578. Where there is Delivery, but not of Suitable Kind, Quality, or Quantity . . . . .	641
§ 579. Confusion of Rules; Buyer's Right to reject, etc. . . . .	641
§ 580. Limit of the Right to reject; its Legal Effect . . . . .	644
§ 581. Buyer may keep Goods and claim Damages for Breach of Warranty . . . . .	645
§ 582. The Same Subject; Buyer may recoup Damages or bring Separate Action . . . . .	646
§§ 583, 584. The Same Subject; Matters of Practice in such Cases . . . . .	646, 649
§§ 585, 586. Measure of Damages recoverable for Breach as to Quality . . . . .	651, 652
§ 587. Rule applied to Delivery by Instalments; Miscellaneous Points . . . . .	653
§ 588. Waiver of Remedies for Breach . . . . .	653
§ 589. Remedies for Breach of Warranty of Title . . . . .	654
§ 590. Remedies for Failure in Quantity, etc. . . . .	655
§ 591. Remedies where Delivery is unreasonably late . . . . .	656
§ 592. Action not always based on Contract of Sale . . . . .	656

CHAPTER XVI.

SALES INVOLVING ERROR AND FRAUD.

§ 593. Special Causes of Avoidance; Error, Fraud, Illegality, Mutual Rescission . . . . .	657
§ 594. Avoidance by Reason of Error or Mistake . . . . .	657
§ 595. The Same Subject; Error should be Substantial . . . . .	657
§ 596. Mistake as to the Party dealt with . . . . .	659
§ 597. General Rule as to Mistake . . . . .	661
§§ 598, 599. Rules of Construction; Mutual and One-sided Mistakes . . . . .	661, 662
§ 600. Effect of Mistake upon a Sale . . . . .	663

	PAGE
§ 601. Rule of Restitution applied . . . . .	664
§ 602. Avoidance by Reason of Fraud; Fraud in General . . . .	665
§ 603. Fraud of the Seller on the Buyer; Caveat Emptor applied .	666
§ 604. But Caveat Emptor does not countenance Fraud . . . .	667
§ 605. Buyer must have been deceived; his Avoidance of the Sale	669
§ 606. He may sue upon the Fraud, or claim Damages for Breach of Warranty . . . . .	671
§ 607. Buyer's Avoidance where Fraudulent Sale is by Agent, etc.	673
§ 608. Fraud of the Buyer on the Seller; Seller's Avoidance of the Sale . . . . .	675
§ 609. Rule applied to Sub-buyers, etc. . . . .	676
§ 610. Where Buyer is an Impostor . . . . .	677
§ 611. Caveat Emptor applied in Buyer's Favor . . . . .	678
§ 612. Buyer's Fraud as to Credit of a Third Party; Lord Tenter- den's Act . . . . .	679
§ 613. Seller's Election of Remedies; Matters of Practice . . .	680
§ 614. Extortion of a Bill of Sale; Avoidance is Personal to the Seller . . . . .	682
§ 615. Fraud in a Case of Exchange . . . . .	682
§ 616. Fraud of Buyer and Seller upon some Third Party . . .	683

CHAPTER XVII.

ILLEGAL SALES; MUTUAL RESCISSION.

§ 617. Avoidance by Reason of Illegality; General Rule . . . .	684
§ 618. Rule where Some Promises are legal and Others illegal . .	686
§ 619. Inclination of Courts as to Transactions plainly Immoral .	687
§ 620. Principal cannot profit by Agent's Illegal Transaction . .	688
§ 621. As to Sales Illegal at Common Law . . . . .	689
§ 622. Sales against Public Policy and Good Government; Sale of Offices, Lawsuits, etc. . . . .	690
§ 623. Sales in Restraint of Trade Illegal . . . . .	691
§ 624. Sales made Illegal by Legislation; Penal Acts, Usury, etc.	693
§ 625. The Same Subject; Liquor Laws, Sunday Laws, etc. . .	694
§ 625 a. The Same Subject; Constructive Illegality not to be favored . . . . .	695
§ 626. Avoidance of Sale by Mutual Rescission; Mutual Re-sale .	696

CHAPTER XVIII.

SALES AT AUCTION.

§ 627. Public or Auction Sales in General . . . . .	697
§ 628. Leading Topics to be considered . . . . .	698
§ 629. Auctioneers; their Rights and Duties; Auctioneer as Agent	698
§§ 630, 630 a. The Same Subject; his Personal Responsibilities, etc. . . . .	701, 702

	PAGE
§ 631. Auctioneer's Rights; Compensation, Indemnity, etc. . . .	703
§§ 632, 633. Preliminaries of Auction Sale; Advertisement, Terms of Sale, etc. . . . .	704, 707
§ 634. Method of conducting Sale at Auction; closing upon Bid, etc. . . . .	708
§ 635. Memorandum and Part Payment under Statute of Frauds .	709
§ 636. The Same Subject; Auctioneer's Warranty . . . . .	710
§ 637. Auctioneer's Right to enter upon Premises; Place of Sale, etc. . . . .	711
§ 638. Auction should be open to Honest Competition; Fraud vitiates Sale . . . . .	712
§ 639. The Same Subject; Fraud on the Part of Bidders . . . .	713
§ 640. The Same Subject; Fraud of Seller or Auctioneer; Puffing, etc. . . . .	714
§ 641. Limiting Bids; Sale with Reserve, etc. . . . .	715
§ 642. Miscellaneous Points as to Fraud in the Sale . . . . .	716
§ 643. Enforcement of the Auction Contract; General Rules . .	717
§ 644. Settlement with Purchaser; Deposit Money, etc. . . . .	717
§ 645. Remedies to enforce Auction Contract . . . . .	718
§ 646. Auctioneer's Final Responsibility for the Sale Proceeds, etc.	720

---

TABLE OF CASES CITED . . . . .	xxix
INDEX . . . . .	723

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

		SECTION
A.
Abbott v. Shepard	223, 225	Allen v. Pink	336
v. Tenney	115, 121	v. Polereczky	64, 86, 156
Acebal v. Levy	216, 492, 493	v. State	17
Acraman v. Morrice	249	Allerton v. Allerton	605
Adams v. Adams	17	v. Lang	71, 76, 105
v. Coulliard	619	Alley v. Adams	43
v. Dale	386	Allman v. Davis	250
v. Edmunds	16	Allsopp v. Wheatcroft	623
v. Lindsell	224, 225, 230	Alna v. Plummer	506
v. O'Conner	298, 307	Althouse v. Alvord	517
v. Richards	583	American Wine Co. v. Brasher	605
Adams Mining Co. v. Senter	250, 251	Ames v. Miss. Boom Co.	43
Adamson v. Jarvis	371, 630	v. Quimby	211, 213
Agra, &c. Bank v. Leighton	584	Amis v. Witt	168, 169
Aguirre v. Parmelee	560	Ammons' Appeal	120
Aiken v. Blaisdell	624	Amory v. Flyn	17
v. Bruen	112	Amson v. Dreher	465
v. Hyde	311	Ancrum v. Wehmann	327, 580
Albert v. Albert	97	Anderson v. Green	112
Alden v. Hart	354	v. Morice	249
Aldrich v. Jackson	318	v. Reed	556
Aldridge v. Johnson		v. Scott	469
	260, 261, 262, 264, 272	Andrew v. Dieterich	214
Alexander v. Brown	416	Andrews v. Durant	267
v. Comber	439	v. Kneeland	324
v. Dutton	339, 341	Anglo-Egyptian Nav. Co. v. Rennie	259
v. Gardner	264, 394	Angur v. Couture	497
v. Gibson	324	Ankeny v. Clark	626
v. Warman	598	Antrobus v. Smith	65
Alger v. Savings Bank	78, 80	Applegate v. Hogan	549
Allard v. Greasert	456, 468	Appleman v. Fisher	621
Allen v. Aguirre	477	Archer v. Bayles	494
v. Allen	29	Archibald v. Argall	419
v. Bennett	491, 497, 498	Argus Co. v. Albany	488
v. Cowan	68, 69	Armitage v. Insole	384
v. Delano	209, 298	Armsbee v. Machir	257
v. Duffie	625	Armstrong v. Bufford	356
v. Gardiner	625	v. Lawson	451
v. Hammond	595	v. Toler	617
v. Jarvis	442, 513, 520, 521	Arnold v. Brown	638
v. Knowlton	122	v. Delano
v. Lake	350	241, 532, 534, 553, 554, 555
		v. Prout	264, 397

	SECTION		SECTION
Artcher v. Zeh	454, 477, 478	Baker v. Squier	326
Ash v. Abdy	429	v. Williams	131
v. Putnam	560	Baldev v. Parker	446, 456, 464
Ashbrook v. Ryon	78, 168, 173	Baldwin v. Bank of Newbury	502
Ashburn v. Poulter	416	v. Van Deusen	318
Ashcroft v. Butterworth	492	v. Williams	454
v. Morrin	492	Ballard v. Burgett	299, 300
Ashton v. Dawson	168	Ballentine v. Robinson	521, 528
Astey v. Emery	397, 475	Baltzen v. Nicolay	506, 635
Atkins v. Boylston, &c. Ins. Co.	386	Banchor v. Warren	257
v. Hosley	378	Bank v. Williams	148, 150, 151, 168
v. Howe	633	Bank of Mobile v. Meagher	16
Atkinson v. Bell	259, 261, 441	Bank of Republic v. Millard	150
v. Handon	421	Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt	604, 606
v. Holiday	244, 254	Bankart v. Bowers	308
v. Mailing	392	Bannerman v. White	316, 317, 350
v. Smith	293, 298	Barber v. Meyerstein	556
Attorney-General v. Taylor	627	v. Taylor	393
Attwood v. Emory	386	Barclay v. Tracy	636
Atwater v. Clancy	336	Barclay's Estate	178
Atwood v. Cobb	386	Barker v. Bates	13
v. Lucas	462	v. Dinsmore	219, 610
Audenried's Appeal	60	v. Furlong	630 a
Augusta Bank v. Fogg	86	v. Hodgson	283, 288
Aultman v. Theirer	311, 583	Barkley v. Rensselaer R.	468
Austen v. Craven	256, 257	Barnard v. Backhaus	621
Averill v. Hedge	225	v. Campbell
Avery v. Willson	232, 394, 410, 523		258, 301, 305, 542, 544, 609
Az��mar v. Casella		v. Kellogg	326, 362, 364
	218, 316, 317, 338, 350	Barnett v. Speir	602
		v. Terry	580
		Barnum v. Reed	179, 196
		Barr v. Gibson	218
		v. Gilson	347, 349, 353
		v. Logan	549
		Barrett v. Deere	423
		v. Goddard	250, 474
		Barrow, Ex parte	564
		v. Armand	513, 571
		Barrowman v. Drayton	315
		v. Free	268 a, 390 a
		Barry v. Coombe	497
		Bartholemew v. Bushnell	583, 606
		v. Marwick	515, 523, 527
		v. Warner	324, 372
		Bartholom��e v. Paull	232, 407, 580
		Bartlett v. Blanchard	571
		v. Funnell	506, 645
		v. Smith	210
		Bartmeyer v. Iowa	625
		Barton v. Gainer	74, 105
		Barwick v. English, &c. Bank	607
		Bascom v. Manning	583
		Basket v. Hassell
			137, 138, 147, 168, 171, 179, 195
		Bass v. White	418
		Bassett v. Camp	473
		Batchelder, Re	554
		Bates v. Chesebro	474

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

xxxi

	SECTION		SECTION
Bates v. Coster	445	Betts v. Lee	31, 36
v. Kempton	76, 105, 147, 168	Bexwell v. Christie	627, 629, 640
Batterbury v. Vyse	286, 287	Bianchi v. Nash	407
Baxendale v. Bennett	21	Bibb v. Allen	433 a, 497, 507
Baxter v. Bailey	88, 143	Bickley v. Keenan	497
v. Duren	318	Biddle v. Carraway	121
Beach v. Branch	631	v. Levy	612
v. Schmultz	47, 50	Bigelow v. Benedict	621
Beach's Appeal	302 a	v. Huntley	300
Beak v. Beak	172, 173	Bigg v. Whisking	446
Beak's Estate, In re	148	Bigge v. Parkinson	336, 354, 367
Beall v. McGehee	124	Bigler v. Hall	245, 288
v. White	210	Bigley v. Risher	214
Beals v. Crowley	151	Bill v. Bament	433, 465, 489
v. Olmstead		Bird v. Boulter	506, 629
316, 321, 330, 333, 347, 350		v. Brown	560, 563
Beauchamp v. Archer	413, 416, 418	v. Munroe	489
Beaumont v. Brengeri	469, 474	Birge v. Edgerton	262, 270
Beaver v. Beaver	78	Bishop v. Honey	617
Beck v. Sheldon	241	v. Shillito	285, 293, 294, 295
Becker v. Hallgarten	555, 556, 564, 567	Bissell v. Balcom	476
Beckwith v. Cheever	228, 229	Bixby v. Carskaddon	604
v. Talbot	489	Bixter v. Saylor	201, 615
Bedell v. Carl	73	Black v. Bakers	558
Beecher v. Mayall	626	v. Jones	19
Beeckman v. Montgomery	119, 120	v. Thornton	112
Beer v. Walker	348, 354, 355	Blackburn v. Smith	600
Beers v. St. John	33, 38, 40	Blackmore v. Shelby	210
Begbie v. Phosphate Co.	595	Blades v. Free	231
Begole v. McKenzie	250	v. Higgs	17
Behn v. Burness	278	Blair v. Forehand	17
Beirne v. Dord	359, 360	Blake v. Lowe	179
Belcher v. Costello	611	Blakeney v. Goode	454, 510
Belford v. Crane	118, 119	Blakey v. Blakey	88
Bell v. Cafferty	318	Blanchard v. Page	264, 273
v. Moss	560	v. Sheldon	84
Beller v. Block	645	v. Williamson	77
Bellows v. Wells	209, 210	Bland v. Macculloch	94
Belt v. Stetson	409	Blasdel v. Locke	78
Bement v. Smith	266, 513, 521	Bleeker v. Graham	635, 644
Bemis v. Morrill	250	Blenkinsop v. Clayton	476
Benadict v. Field	314, 420	Block v. Maas	257
Benedict v. Schaettle	561	Blood v. French	324, 372
Bennett v. Cook	70	Bloomer v. Bloomer	192
v. Judson	607	Bloomington v. R. R.	565
Bennett's Branch, &c. Co.'s Ap- peal	637	Blossom v. Railroad Co.	633
Benney v. Rhodes	424	Blount v. Burrow	152
Bentall v. Burn	385, 473	Bloxam v. Morley	531, 533
Benton v. Jones	119	v. Sanders	307, 384, 531, 533
Berdson v. Russell	21	Bloxsome v. Williams	625
Berghem v. Iron Co.		Blum v. Marks	561, 566
390, 574, 587, 591		Boardman v. Cutter	454, 464
Berndston v. Strang	562, 566, 567	v. Spooner
Berry v. Berry	85, 128	326, 336, 473, 492, 497, 507
Bethel Steam Mill Co. v. Brown		Bodurtha v. Phelon	340, 583
239, 252		Bogan v. Finlay	69
Bethell v. Clark	562, 564	Bog Lead Mining Co. v. Montague	467
Betts v. Francis	94, 99	Boinest v. Leigneze	645, 646
		Bold v. Rayner	507

	SECTION		SECTION
Bolden v. Brogden	339	Brady v. Oastler	572
Bolding v. Reed	210	v. Todd	324
Bollman v. Burt	308	Bragman v. McGuire	419
Bolton v. Lancashire, &c. R. R.		Brandon v. Nesbitt	621
Co.	560, 564	Brandon Manuf. Co. v. Morse	413
v. Riddle	386	Brandt v. Bowlby	273, 294
Bond v. Bunting	76, 81	v. Focht	301, 460, 471
v. Greenwald	246, 254	v. Lawrence	289
v. Whitfield	17	Brantley v. Cameron	68
Bondurant v. Crawford	604	Brasher v. Davidson	519
Bookwalter v. Clark	521	Brawley v. United States	380, 389
Booraem v. Crane	294	Brayley v. Kelly	497
Boornan v. Nash	517, 518, 571	Breckenridge v. McAfee	19
Booth v. Savings Bank	78	Breed v. Hurd	416
v. Spuyten Duyvil Mill Co.		Brehen v. O'Donnell	244, 307, 308, 412
	288, 572	Brent v. Green	444, 635
Boothby v. Plaisted	360	Breton's Estate, In re	79, 82, 89
v. Scales	324	Brett v. Carter	210
Boothe v. Fitzpatrick	17	v. Clowser	632
Borneman v. Sidlinger		Brewer v. Harvy	68
	176, 183, 190, 194	Brewster v. Burnett	605
Borrekins v. Bevan	316, 348	Bricker v. Hughes	449
Borries v. Hutchinson	572	Bridges v. Hawkesworth	14, 15
Bos v. Helsham	215	Briggs v. Light Boat	259, 267
Boston & Maine R. R. Co. v. Bart-		v. Penny	129
lett	230	Brigham v. Maxey	372
Boston Ice Co. v. Potter	219, 596	Brighty v. Norton	412
Bostwick v. Mahaffy	84	Brinckerhoff v. Lawrence	97
Boswell v. Green	250, 262, 397	Brink v. Gould	92, 128
Bottle v. Knocker	81, 89	Briscoe v. Eckley	76
Boudreau v. Boudreau	93	British, &c. Tel. Co. v. Colson	225
Boughton v. Standish	407	British Columbia Saw Mill Co. v.
Boulton v. Jones	219, 596	Nettleship	572
Bourne v. Ashley	572, 577	Brock v. Rice	638
v. Fosbrooke	68	Brockman v. Bowman	121
v. Seymour	389	Brogden v. Marriott	286
Bousfield v. Hodges	630	v. Metropolitan R.	223, 257
Boutts v. Ellis	151, 176, 178	Bromley v. Brunton	77, 86, 151
Bowen v. Burk	304, 555	Brooke Iron Co. v. O'Brien	564
v. Owen	417	Brooklyn Bank v. DeGrauw	417
v. Sullivan	14	Brotherline v. Swires	638
Bowers v. Anderson	445, 460	Broughton v. Silloway	643
Bowes v. Shand	289, 410	Brown v. Allen	431, 443, 445
Bowker v. Hoyt	232	v. Bateman	210, 259, 268
Bowman v. Coffroth	622	v. Bellows	215
Bowry v. Bennet	617	v. Bigelow
Bowser v. Birdsell	577		331, 335, 339, 340, 341, 586
Boyd v. Eaton	618	v. Brown	147, 167
v. Siffkin	314	v. Child	250
v. Wilson	360	v. Dibbs	576
Brabrook v. Savings Bank	78	v. Edgington	354
Brackenridge v. Holland	48	v. Elkington	341
Brackett v. Edgerton	617	v. Fitch	300
v. Waite	118	v. Foree	116
Bradford v. Bush	645	v. Foster	313
v. Peckham	623	v. Hare	262, 273
Bradley v. Hunt	168	v. Leach	603
v. King	308	v. Montgomery	611
v. Kingsley	639	v. Moore	148

	SECTION		SECTION
Brown v. Muller	574	Burnby v. Bollett	348
v. Murphee	354	Burnell v. Marvin	302 a
v. Nelson	407	Burney v. Ball	94
v. Olmsted	419	Burr v. De la Vergne	454
v. Perkins	24	v. Williams	254
v. Sanborn	457	Burrell v. Stevens	608
v. Sayles	365, 585	Burrill v. Sampson	410
v. Slauson	445	Burrough v. Skinner	644
v. Speyers	621	Burson v. Huntington	21
v. Stanton	643	Burst v. Burton	572
v. Whipple	489, 491, 493, 498	Burt v. Denny	589
Brownfield v. Johnson	410	Burtis v. Thompson	282, 574
Browning v. Hamilton	240, 257	Busby v. Byrd	62, 86
Brownlee v. Bolton	516, 517, 549	Buschian v. Hughart	73
Bruce v. Bishop	219	Bush v. Cole	629, 641
v. Pearson	223	v. Holmes	462, 465
Brummet v. Barber	127	Busk v. Davis	257, 258
Brunson v. Henry	191	Bussey v. Barnett	306
Brunswick Co. v. Hoover	299	Butler v. Northumberland
Brush v. Scribner	20		579, 583, 584, 617, 625
Bryant v. Crosby	323, 331, 332, 449	Butler v. Schofield	62, 68
v. Isburgh	579	v. Thompson	507
v. Moore	324	v. Thomson	492
v. Pember	595	Buxton v. Rust	485, 488, 494, 498
v. Pennell	39	Byard v. Holmes	613
v. Ware	51	Byassee v. Reese	451
Bryson v. Whitehead	623	Byrne v. Van Tienhoven	223, 225, 634
Bubbard v. Bliss	378	Byrnside v. Burdett	378
Buck v. Albee	617	Bywater v. Richardson
v. Pickwell	451, 492		330, 339, 632, 633
v. Spence	314
Buckingham v. Osborne	465
Buckingham's Appeal	78
Buckinghamshire v. Drury	59
Buckley v. Briggs	639
v. Furniss	561, 564	Cabeen v. Campbell	562
v. Gross	51	Cabot Bank v. Morton	318
Buckmaster v. Smith	29, 209, 298, 299	Cadwell v. Blake	278
Buckner v. Ries	445	Cain v. McGuire	451
Budd v. Fairmaner	339	Caine v. Coulson	416
Buffington v. Ulen	246	Calahan v. Babcock	564
Bugbee v. Kendricken	509	Calcutta Co. v. De Mattos
Bull v. Parker	417		243, 262, 270
v. Robison	355, 396	Caldwell v. Renfrew	143
Bullard v. Smith	445	v. Wilson	69
v. Wait	394	Calkins v. Falk	491
Bullis v. Borden	116	v. Lockwood	210
Bullock v. Tschergi	475	Callanan v. Brown	330, 331
Bunce v. Beck	579	Cameron v. Peck	617, 625
Bunn v. Maikham	164, 191	Camidge v. Allenby	419, 420
v. Valley Lumber Co.	555	Camp v. Hamlin	549
Bunney v. Poyntz	419, 554	Camp's Appeal	78, 173
Burchfield v. Moore	595	Campanari v. Woodburn	231
Burge v. Cone	395	Campbell v. Evans	17
v. Stroberg	329, 340	v. Fleming	605
Burgess v. Chapin	318	v. Mersey Docks	262
v. Wilkinson	371, 378	v. Roots	451
Burke v. Haley	506, 635	Canaan v. Bryce	617
v. Partridge	454	Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany	318
		Candor's Appeal	156

	SECTION		SECTION
Capron v. Porter	616	Channon v. Lusk	45
Carew, In re	639	Chanter v. Hopkins	316, 321, 350, 356
Carey v. Guilloow	201, 615	Chaplin v. Clarke	223
Carleton v. Woods	618	v. Rogers	391, 469, 471, 474
Carlton v. Conroy	48	v. Warner	585
Carpenter v. Dodge	65, 72	Chapman v. Gwyther	330, 339
v. Galloway	457	v. Ingram	513, 517
v. Graham	258	v. Morton	407
v. Hale	18	v. Partridge	629
v. Rogers	219	v. Searle	336
v. Seatt	302 a	v. Shepard	243, 246, 258
v. Soule	76	v. Speller	372, 376
Carr v. Burdiss	88	v. Withers	311
v. Duvall	222, 228	Chappell v. Cox	47, 49
v. Silloway	77, 89, 95, 150	Charingbould v. Curtis	576
Carradine v. Carradine	68	Charlesworth v. Mills	630 a
v. Collins	93	Chase v. Corcoran	12, 13
Carson v. Baillie	316, 317, 362	v. Ingalls	300
Carter v. Abbott	606	v. Redding	147, 167, 194
v. Black	321, 330	v. Washburn	46
v. Buchanan	94	Cheney v. Trans. Line	223
v. Dow	17	Cherry v. Frost	301
v. Montgomery	61	Chesapeake Canal Co. v. Blair	16
v. Toussaint	464	Chevallier v. Wilson	161
Cary v. Bancroft	418	Chicago v. Greer	514
Case v. Dennison	173, 177, 180, 185	Chicago, &c. R. R. Co. v. Dana	222, 228, 229
v. Hall	589	Chicago Dock Co. v. Foster	609
v. Phelps	119	Childs v. O'Donnell	312
Cash v. Hinkle	389	Chinery v. Viall	548, 571, 577
Cason v. Cheely	442	Chinnock v. Marchioness of Ely	234
Cassell v. Backrack	244, 307, 412	Chittenden v. Brewster	115
Castle v. Playford	251, 252, 254, 270, 415	Churchill v. Merchants' Bank	386
v. Sworder	460, 464, 467, 474	v. Wells	118, 120
Castrique v. Imrie	617	City Bank v. Rome, &c. R. R. Co.	275
Caswell v. Hill	114, 119	Clapp v. Peck	564
Cathcart v. Keirnaghan	506	v. Sohmer	560, 569
Caton v. Caton	486, 497, 498	Clark v. Bamer	606
Catterall v. Hindle	424	v. Bartlett	569
Caulkins v. Hellman	468, 469	v. Bulmer	453
Cave v. Hastings	489	v. Clark	78
Central Branch R. v. Fritz	453	v. Depew	116
Central Co. v. Moore	521	v. Draper	391, 532, 554
Chadsey v. Greene	341	v. Duffey	445
Chaffin v. Kimball	112	v. French	119
Chalmers, Ex parte	420, 518, 535	v. Hornbeck	16
v. Harding	329	v. Lewis	17
Chamberlain v. Dickey	309	v. Lynch	561, 566
v. Smith	300, 312	v. Neufville	605
Chamberlin v. Perkins	527	v. Nichols	442
Chambers v. Spencer	118	v. Rice	313
Champion v. Plummer	491	v. Smythies	631
v. Short	223	v. Snow	16
Champney v. Blanchard	174	v. Wells	294, 296, 300
Chandeler v. Lopus	347	Clarke v. Dickson	595, 600, 602, 605, 613
Chandler v. Chandler	73, 103	v. Hutchins	396
v. Fulton	560, 563, 566, 567	v. Johnson	21
v. Graff	49, 388	v. Spence	267, 268
v. Johnson	618

	SECTION		SECTION
Clarke v. Westroppe	215, 287	Concord v. Delaney	617
Clarkson v. Stevens	267	Concord Bank v. Gregg	607
Clason v. Bailey	497, 507	Congar v. Chamberlain	321, 331, 332
Clay v. Crowe	16	Conklin v. Conklin	184
v. Yates	440, 441, 442	Connor v. Trawick	88
Clayton v. Andrews	439	Conover v. Walling	642
Clement, &c. Man. Co. v. Meserole	515, 517	Conser v. Snowden	173, 189
Clements v. Moore	114	Consolidated Co. v. Curtis	630 a
Cleveland v. Sterrett	313	Constantia, The	561
Clever v. Kirkman	489 a	Conway v. Bush	549
Clinton v. McKeown	105	Conyers v. Ennis	561, 564
Clough v. Clough	196	Cook v. Addison	48
v. Hoffman	291	v. Brandeis	522
v. London, &c. R. R. Co.	610, 613	v. Gilman	600
Clow v. Woods	616	v. Johnson	115
Coates v. Railton	562	v. Mosely	340
v. Stevens	339	v. Shipman	622
Cobb v. Arundel	272	v. Timmons	637
Coburn v. Pickering	616	Cooke v. Millard	442, 443
v. Ware	584	v. Oxley	229, 230
Cochrane v. Moore	68	Coolidge v. Brigham	595, 600, 613
Cockburn v. Lumber Co.	572	Coombs v. Bristol, &c. R. R. Co.	467, 468
Cocker v. Franklin	386	v. Emery	624
Coddington v. Goddard	491, 493, 495, 497, 501, 507	Coon v. Spaulding	386
v. Paleologo	386	Cooper, Ex parte	555, 562, 564
Coe v. Tough	489	v. Bill	249, 473
Coffman v. Hampton	645	v. Burr	71, 132, 163
Cogel v. Kniseley	603	v. Elston	439
Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co.	299, 300	v. Landon	583, 584
Colchester v. Law	23	v. Phibbs	599
Colcord v. McDonald	297	v. Smith	493
Cole v. Berry	299, 300	v. Willomatt	18
v. Kew	427	Cope v. Rowlands	624
v. Mann	295, 297, 298	Coppin v. Craig	645
Coleman v. Gibson	469	v. Walker	645
v. Parker	161, 163	Corbett v. Underwood	621
Coles v. Bowne	506	Corbin v. Tracy	576
v. Pilkington	56	Corle v. Monkhouse	183
Collette v. Weed	323	Corlies v. Cummings	424
Collins v. Demarest	634, 635	Cornish v. Abington	540
v. Dennison	605	Cort v. Ambergate R. R. Co.	514, 515
v. Townsend	605	Corwith v. Colter	386
Colonial Bank v. Whinney	454	Cory v. Thames Ironworks Co.	572
Colson v. Arnot	21	Cosnahan v. Grice	184
Colt v. Cone	234	Cotteen v. Missing	65, 85
Colvin v. Weedman	313	Cotterell v. Apsley	453
v. Williams	454	Cotterill v. Stevens	478
Commercial Bank v. Gillette	257	Couston v. Chapman	327, 390, 406, 407, 408, 414, 446, 579
Commonwealth v. Crompton	76	Couturier v. Hastie	208
v. Harnden	629	Covas v. Bingham	314
v. Packard	200	Covell v. Hitchcock	562, 564
v. Passmore	629, 637	Coventry v. Gladstone	564, 567
v. Savings Bank	21	Cowasjee v. Thompson	419, 556
Constock v. Affoelter	396	Cox v. Prentice	595, 600
Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co.	556, 567	v. Sprigg	67
Conawingo Co. v. Cunningham	386	Craig v. Harper	228

	SECTION		SECTION
Craig v. Kittredge	86, 154	Curry v. Powers	77
Crane v. London Dock Co.	19	Curtis v. Groat	36
Cranson v. Goss	625	v. Hoyt	453
Cranz v. Krager	109	v. Leavitt	617
Craven v. Ryder	538, 556	v. Portland Savings Bank	173, 196
Crawcour, Ex parte	297	v. Pugh	469
Crawford v. Manufacturing Co.	571, 572	Cusack v. Robinson	465, 467, 469, 475, 554
v. Russell	621	Cushing v. Breed	46, 258, 385
v. Wick	623	Cushman v. Holyoke	250, 254, 355
Crawshay v. Edes	564	Cutler v. Gilbreth	580
Creekmore v. Chitwood	621	Cutter v. Pope	451
Creighton v. Comstock	584, 590	v. Powell	277, 279, 280, 281
Crenshaw v. Slye	335	Cutting v. Gilman	165, 183, 184
Crittenden v. Phoenix Ins. Co.	76, 103	v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co.	572
Croak v. Owens	627
Crocker v. Gullifer	312
Crockett v. Scribner	442
Crofoot v. Bennett	214, 250, 252, 268
Crommelin v. N. Y., &c. R. R. Co.	553
Crompton v. Pratt	300, 302 a	Daggett v. Johnson	313
Croninger v. Crocker	388	Dalzell v. Watch Case Co.	454
v. Paige	378, 589	Dame v. Baldwin	19
Crook v. First Nat. Bank	85	Damon v. Bryant	119
v. Williams	638	Dana v. Fiedler	571
Crookshank v. Burrell	442, 455	v. Hancock	495
v. Rose	618	v. King	279, 293
Cropper v. Cook	507	Danforth v. Walker	462, 465, 515, 516
Crosby v. Wadsworth	449	Daniells v. Aldrich	327, 335
Crosby Hardwood Co. v. Tester	467	Darland v. Taylor	147, 186
Cross v. Eglin	389	Darnell v. Griffin	244, 307
v. Gardner	331	Daubenspeck v. Biggs	81, 95
v. O'Donnell	397, 465, 475, 566	Davidson v. Lanier	119
Crossley v. Elworthy	120	v. Nichols	606
Crossman v. Johnson	323	Davies v. Davies	623
Crow v. Bell	128	Davis v. Banks	637
Croyle v. Moses	341, 604	v. Cary	283
Crozier v. Young	115	v. Commonwealth	629
Crum v. Thornley	59, 141	v. Danks	629
Crummey v. Raudenbush	553, 558	v. Eastman	462
Crump v. U. S. Mining Co.	607	v. Garrett	646
Cudworth v. Scott	39	v. Hedges	582
Cuff v. Penn	495	v. Herrick	118
Cullen v. Bimm	337, 355, 514, 516, 522, 549	v. Hill	250
Cumberledge v. Cole	18	v. Jones	392
Cuming v. Brown	568	v. Miller	257, 263
Cummings v. Arnold	495, 496	v. Murphy	348
v. Dudley	416, 519, 525	v. Ney	84
Cummins v. Griggs	250	v. Shields	482, 492, 496, 507
Cundy v. Lindsay	19	v. Talcott	583
Cunliffe v. Harrison	263, 388	Davison v. Davis	296
Cunningham v. Ashbrook	213, 214, 240, 251, 254	Dawson v. Collis	579
v. Brown	213	v. Susong	19
v. Hall	365	Day v. Bassett	302 a, 306
Currie v. Anderson	467, 469	v. Kinney	318
v. Steele	195	v. Pool	579, 583
		v. Ragnet	359, 360
		Daylight Burner Co. v. Odlin	424
		Dean v. Dean	94

	SECTION		SECTION
Dean v. Emerson	623	Dixon v. Yates	243, 244, 246, 295,
v. James	416		383, 538, 554, 555, 560, 561
v. Morey	341	Doane v. Dunham	406, 583
v. Nichols Co.	327	Dodd v. Farlow	324, 326
v. Yates	609, 613	Dodsley v. Varley	464, 474, 531
Debison v. Emmons	163	Doe v. Oliver	219
Deere v. Lewis	571	Doggett v. Emerson	598
Delanater v. Chappell	313, 407	Dole v. Lincoln	196
De Levillain v. Evans	59, 90	v. Olmstead	45, 46
Dellone v. Hall	528	Dolson v. Hope	625
Delmotte v. Taylor	138, 183, 184	Donaldson v. Farwell	608
De Loach v. Hardee	286	v. Newman	318
Deming v. Foster		Donath v. Broomhead	564
	328, 336, 346, 347, 356, 367	Donnell v. Donnell	60
Den v. De Hart	118	v. Wylie	65
v. Zellers	641	Donovan v. Finn	115
Denew v. Daverell	631	Doran v. Doran	191
Denman v. Cherokee Iron Co.	403	Doremus v. Howard	523
Dent v. Grath	636	Dorr v. Fisher	378, 579, 583, 600
De Pouilly, Succession of	89	Dorsey v. Smithson	121
Derry v. Peek	613	Doty v. Wilson	97, 132
Des Arts v. Leggett	16	Dougherty v. Haggerty	257
Deshon v. Bigelow	298	Douglas v. Douglas	70, 89
Devane v. Fennell	250	v. Patrick	416
Devaux v. Connolly	601	v. Shumway	555
Devine v. Edwards	385	Douglass, &c. Co. v. Gardner	583
Devoe v. Brandt	609	Dounce v. Dow	316, 317, 351
Devol v. Dye	176	Dow v. Sanborn	608
Dewey v. Erie Borough	311	v. Worthen	478
De Witt v. Berry	328, 360	Downer v. Thompson	263
De Wutz v. Hendricks	24	Downs v. Belden	302
Dexheimer v. Gautier	154	v. Congregational Society	56
Dexter v. Norton		v. Skillinger	442
	207, 245, 246, 283, 288	Dows v. Greene	556, 567
Dexter v. Shepard	639	v. Kidder	300, 301
Deyo v. Vaughn	222	v. Nat. Exchange Bank	273, 274
Dibblee v. Sheldon	613	Drake v. Wells	451
Dickenson v. Naul	645	Dresser v. Dresser	84, 86, 105, 176
Dickerman v. Burgess	627	Dresser Man. Co. v. Waterston
Dickey v. Waldo	209		296, 298, 300
Dickinson v. Dickinson	445	Drew v. Ellison	334
v. Gay	326, 365	v. Hagerty	180
v. Richmond	625	v. Kimball	542
v. Shee	416	v. Spaulding	17
Dickson v. Zizinia	336, 367	Driesbach v. Lewisburg Bridge
Dietz v. Sutcliffe	613	Co.	332, 337
Dike v. Reitlinger	338	Drummond v. Van Ingen	360, 363
Dill v. Ferrell	579, 583	Drury v. Defontaine	625
Dillingham v. Smith	46, 47	v. Smith	136, 159, 162, 176, 194
Dillon, Re	147, 149, 181	v. Young
Dilts v. Stevenson	72		486, 488, 493, 494, 497, 499
Dimmock v. Hallett	641	Drysdall v. Smith	592
Dingle v. Hare	324	Duble v. Batts	227
Ditson v. Randall	609	Dubois v. Bigler	338
Diversey v. Johnson	48	Duff v. Budd	610
Dixon v. Baldwin	562	Duffield v. Elwes
v. Clarke	416		147, 152, 155, 167, 168, 181, 197
v. Fletcher	388	Dugan v. Nichols	395
v. Myers	250	Dugdale v. Lovering	631

	SECTION		SECTION
Farwell v. Rogers	386	Flynn v. Allen	373
Fassett, Re	97	Fobes v. Shattuck	45, 49
Faulkner v. Heberd	229	Fogg v. Griffin	607
Favenc v. Bennett	425	Foley v. Felrath	312
Faxon v. Durant	103	Folsom v. Cornell	626
Fay v. Richmond	324	Fontaine v. Bush	468
v. Wheeler	454, 464	Foot v. Bentley	337
Fearing v. Jones	180	v. Marsh	257, 258
Feigley v. Feigley	114	Foot v. Woodworth	587
Feise v. Wray	560	Forbes v. Marsh	294, 298, 299, 300
Fell v. Muller	384, 513	Force v. City of Elizabeth	21
Fell's Appeal	576	Ford v. Cotesworth	283, 288, 386
Fells Point Savings Institution v.		Ford v. Ford	17
Weedon	16	v. Hennessy	60, 60 a, 106
Felthouse v. Bindley	220	Fore v. McKenzie	372
Fenner v. Tucker	639	Forkner v. Stuart	116
Ferguson v. Carrington	608	Forster v. Hall	116
v. Louisville Bank	257	v. Mackinnon	21
Ferry v. Baxter	419	v. Pettibone	38
Fessenden v. Mussey	497	v. Ropes	239, 250
Fewell v. Deane	626	v. Taylor	624
Fick v. Runnels	425, 427	Fowler v. Bush	419
Field v. Runk	446	v. Hollins	507
v. Shorb	73	Fox v. Emerson	333
v. Stearns	609	v. Harding	572
Fielder v. Starkin	580, 583	v. Webster	608
Fifield v. Elmer	294, 296, 300	v. Willis	566
Filkins v. Whyland	336	Fragano v. Long	261, 264
Filson v. Himes	618, 622	Fraley v. Bispham	337, 360
Fink v. Cox	65	Frank v. Miller	489
Finley v. Quirk	625	Franklin v. Long	207
Finney v. Apgar	442	Franklyn v. Lamond	629
Fintel v. Cook	311	Fraser v. Witt	567
First Nat. Bank v. Balcom	156	Frazier v. Harvey	334, 346, 347, 365
v. Crowley	259, 270	v. Hilliard	210
v. Dearborn	392	v. Perkins	87
v. Kilbourne	48	Freeman v. Cooke	540
v. Lindenstruth	48	v. Freeman	56
v. Loan & Trust Co.	378	v. Nichols	301, 304
v. Scott	43, 47	v. Pope	115, 116, 118
Fitch v. Burk	250	Freeth v. Burr	289
Fitzsimmons v. Joslin	607	Freme v. Wright	633
Flanagan v. Hutchinson	211, 509	French v. Raymond	173, 180, 185
Flanders v. Putney	523	French v. Vining	354, 604, 606
Flanigan v. Crull	645	Freyman v. Knecht	579
Fleck v. Warner	297	Frost v. Frost	138, 139
Fleet v. Murton	508	v. Knight	282, 514, 574
Fleshman v. Hoylman	103, 109	v. Woodruff	250
Fletcher v. Drath	378	Fry v. Mobile Savings Bank	258, 264
v. Fletcher	69	Fryatt v. Sullivan Co.	40
v. Peck	237	Fuller v. Abrahams	639
v. Tayleur	572	v. Bean	24, 215, 250, 304
v. Young	333	v. Paige	48
Flight v. Booth	632	Fulton v. Fulton	80
Flint v. Pattee	148	Furlong v. Palleys	571, 572, 585
Flint v. Woodin	629, 640
Florence Mining Co. v. Brown	308
Florence Sewing Machine Co. v.
Warford	18

G.		SECTION		SECTION
Gabarron v. Kreeft		257, 275	Gibson v. Vail	311
Gaby v. Driver		644	Giddey v. Altman	297, 298
Galligan v. Fannan		620	Gidney v. Altman	420
Galloway v. Week		257	Gifford v. Betts	580
Gallup v. Josselyn		40	Gilbert v. Lichtenberg	410
Gammage v. Alexander		259, 266	Gilchrist v. Hilliard	318, 373
Gammar v. Borgain		331	Giles v. Edwards	601
Gammell v. Gunby		354	Gill v. Cubitt	20
Gammon v. Abrams		312, 580, 588	v. McNamee	627
Gammon Seminary v. Robbins		57, 65	Gillard v. Brittan	548
Gano v. Fisk		144, 163, 175, 196	Gilleland v. Failing	105, 121
Ganson v. Madigan		528	Gillespie v. Burleson	95
Garbutt v. Bank		608	Gillett v. Hill	256
v. Watson		439, 440, 442, 443	Gilligan v. Lord	135, 147
Gardiner v. Gray		354, 359	Gilman v. Hill	456, 467
v. Morse		639	Gilmour v. Supple	245, 246, 249, 252, 288
Gardner v. Clark		390, 414	Gilpins v. Consequa	287
v. Gardner		143, 147, 186	Gilson v. Bingham	410, 580, 583
v. Grout		462	Girard v. Taggart	522, 643
v. Hoeg		209, 595	Gisaf v. Neval	61
v. Howland		392, 556	Glass v. Hulbert	632
v. Joy		442	Gleason v. Drew	445
v. Lane		205, 317	Glyn v. East India Dock Co.	556, 565
v. Merritt		59, 78, 90, 105	v. West India Dock Co.	392
v. Parker		138, 152, 155, 156, 167, 184	Goad v. Johnson	348
Garfield v. Paris		470	Goddard v. Binney	257, 266, 269, 385, 442
Garland v. Spencer		605, 606	v. Winchell	8
Garman v. Cooper		395	Godts v. Rose	262, 263, 294, 295
Garrett v. Vaughan		19	Godwin v. Francis	502
Garvin v. Williams		60	Goff v. Brainerd	43
Gass v. Simpson		154	Golder v. Ogden	257
Gassett v. Andover		417	Golding, Ex parte	567
Gates v. Bliss		579	Goldsmith v. Bryant	297, 304, 307, 412
v. Rifle Boom Co.		43	Gompertz v. Bartlett	318
Gatling v. Newell		605	Gooch v. Holmes	454
Gatzweiler v. Morgner		222, 392	Goodall v. Skelton	476
Gault v. Brown		446, 457, 461	Goodman v. Griffiths	492, 493, 494
Gaunt v. Tucker		193	v. Simonds	20
Gay v. Hardeman		555	Goodrich v. Tracy	420
v. Kingsley		378	Goodwin v. Morse	584
Gaylord v. Man. Co.		354	Goodwyn v. Cheveley	17
Gaylord Man. Co. v. Allen		333	Goodyear v. Ogden	336
Geary v. Physic		497	Gordon v. Norris	266, 521, 528, 549, 571
Geiser Threshing Machine Co. v.		583, 584	v. Strange	416
Farmer		618	Gorham v. Fisher	467
Gelpcke v. Dubuque		583	Gorrisen v. Perrin	314
George v. Braden		606	Gosbell v. Archer	502
v. Skivington		584	Gosling v. Birnie	547
Gerding v. Adams		354	Goss v. Lord Nugent	495
Gerst v. Jones		519	v. Quinton	268
Gibbons v. United States		250, 252	Gossler v. Eagle Sugar Refinery	351, 603
Gibbs v. Benjamin		625	Gottlieb v. Miller	47
Gibbs Co. v. Brucker		558	Gough v. Tindon	148, 149
Gibson v. Carruthers		433, 485, 488, 499	Gould v. Mansfield	457
v. Holland		323, 392, 556
v. Stevens		295
v. Tobey

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

xli

	SECTION		SECTION
Gould v. Stein	360	Grizewood v. Blane	621
Goulding v. Horbury	163	Groat v. Gile	250, 251, 479
Gourley v. Linsinbigler	154	Gross v. Hennessy	378
Gowen v. Klous	492	v. Kierski	378
Gower v. Van Dedalzen	355	Grout v. Hill	560, 564
Gowing v. Knowles	223, 406	Grover v. Grover
Graff v. Fitch	250		73, 74, 76, 105, 108, 116
v. Foster	360	Groves v. Buck	439
Grafton v. Armitage	441	Grymes v. Hone
v. Cummings	491		147, 154, 170, 176, 179, 185
Graham v. Fretwell	501	Guerand v. Dandeler	623
v. Musson	501	Guilford v. Smith	562, 564
Grand Tower Co. v. Phillips	572	Gulick v. Ward	639
Grangiac v. Arden	68, 73	Gunn v. Bolcklow	419, 534, 539, 556
Grant v. Levan	499	Gunnaldson v. Nyhus	629
Grattan v. Appleton	135, 138	Gunnis v. Erhart	632
Graves v. Dolphin	133	Gunther v. Atwell	337, 360, 362, 363
v. Legg	314	Gurney v. Behrend	556
v. Weld	450	v. Howe	416
Gray v. Barton	97	v. Smith	318
v. Grey	95	Guthing v. Lynn	234
v. Hook	622	Gwyn v. Richmond R.	560, 562
v. Millay	214
v. Veirs	641
v. White	421	H.
Greaner v. Mullen	564
Greaves v. Ashlin	403	Habbard v. George	410
v. Hepke	254	Hackett v. Moxley	131
Green v. Armstrong	449, 451	Hackney v. Vrooman	74, 76, 93
v. Bartlett	631	Hadley v. Baxendale
v. Bavestock	640		513, 571, 572, 606
v. Brookins	454	v. Clinton, &c. Co.
v. Godfrey	625		334, 341, 347, 365
v. Hall	267	Haesig v. Brown	20
v. Langdon	73, 97	Hagedorn v. Laing	632
v. Rowland	294	Haines v. Tucker
v. Tatum	115		232, 291, 308, 388, 410, 513, 515,
v. Tulane	86, 131, 151		522, 549, 574
Greene v. Lewis	214	Haldeman v. Duncan	236, 257, 258
Greenfield v. Estate	60	Hale v. Hays	201, 211, 420
Greenwood v. Law	454	v. Huntley	250
Gregory v. Haworth	112	v. Milwaukee Dock Co.	556
v. Morris	554, 555	Hall v. Aetna Man. Co.	312, 580
v. Stryker	38	v. Conder	373
v. Underhill	330, 510	v. Fullerton	605
v. Wattowa	621	v. Gaylor	396
Gregson v. Rucks	507	v. Hinks	609
Gresham v. Bryan	257	v. Knappenberger	60
Grice v. Kenrick	645	v. McEwen	327, 588
v. Richardson	533	v. Rawson	314
Griffin v. Colver	572	v. Rice	76
v. O'Neil	220	v. Robinson	18
v. Stoddard	114	v. Thomas	62
Griffith v. Ingledew	264, 273	Hallett's Estate	48
Griffiths v. Owen	476	Halliday v. Hamilton	273, 277
v. Perry		Hallock v. Commercial Ins. Co.	225, 227
	419, 531, 533, 547, 548, 571
Grimoldby v. Wells	316, 408, 580	Hallowell Bank v. Howard	416
Grimshaw v. Atterwell	631	Halm v. Doolittle	335, 378

	SECTION		SECTION
Halterline v. Rice	259, 266, 267	Harris v. Pratt	562, 564, 568
Hamaker v. Blanchard	14	v. Rousevel	471
Haman v. Reeves	440	v. Runnels	624
Hambrooke v. Simmons	191	v. Truman	307
Hamer v. Letcher	610	v. Tyson	611
Hamill v. Gillespie	633	v. Waite	354
Hamilton v. Cunningham	48	Harris' Case	225
v. Davis	11	Harrison v. Colton	625
v. Ganyard	354	v. Shanks	372
v. Rogers	210	Hart v. Bush	468
v. Singer Man. Co.	551	v. Carpenter	300
v. Vaught	20	v. Mills	232, 388, 406
Hammer v. Schoenfelder	572	v. Ten Eyck	48
Hammett v. Linneman		v. Tyler	527
	301, 304, 307, 412	Hartford & N. H. R. R. Co. v.
Hammond v. Anderson	254	Jackson	222
v. Bussey	572, 585	Hartford Sorghum, &c. Co. v.
Hammonds v. Barclay	553	Brush	311
Hamor v. Moore	138	Hartley v. Tapley	209
Hanauer v. Bartels	396	Hartt v. McNeil	609
v. Doane	617, 618, 619, 621	Hartwell v. Kelly	453
v. Gray	618	Harvey v. Duffey	232
v. Woodruff	621	v. Harris	218
Hands v. Burton	201, 212	v. Stevens	491, 497, 506, 629
Handy v. Waldron	373	v. United States	634
Hannon v. State	62	Hasbrouck v. Lounsbury	294, 296
Hanson v. Armitage	469	Haskell v. Hunter	572
v. Busse	360	v. McHenry	513
v. Edgerly	599	v. Rice	555
v. Marsh	492	Haslem v. Lockwood	8
v. Meyer	236, 244, 249, 307	Haslock v. Ferguson	612
v. Slaven	285	Hatch v. Atkinson
Hardacre v. Stewart	630		146, 159, 163, 183, 198
Hardee v. Carter	311	Hatch v. Lamos	98
Hardesty v. Richardson	56	Hatcher v. Buford	170
Harding v. Coburn	47	Hathaway v. Haynes	20
Hardingham v. Allen	646	Hatton v. Jones	100
Hardman v. Booth	610	Haule v. Hemying	291, 291 a
Hargreave v. Spink	19	Haussman v. Burnham	433 a
Harkness v. Russell	300	Hawes v. Forster	507
Harlow v. Hall	392	v. Watson	544
v. Sparr	631	Hawkins v. Blewitt	67, 164
Harman v. Reeve	455, 457	v. Chace	492, 497
Harmony v. Bingham	283, 288	v. Pemberton	316, 317, 330, 331
Harnett v. Baker	633	Hawley v. Bibb	621
Harnor v. Groves	601	v. Keeler	431, 460, 476, 477
Harper v. Crain	621	Hayden v. Demets
v. Dotson	378		391, 392, 393, 394, 522
v. Parks	107, 127	Hayne v. Porter	396
Harralson v. Stein	232	Haynes v. Crutchfield	639
Harran v. Foley	220	Hays v. Mouille	561, 562, 564, 566
Harrell v. Miller	451	Hayslep v. Gymer	184
Harrington v. King	302 a	Hazard v. Loring	336, 416
Harris v. Clark	148, 150, 151, 168	Head v. Diggon	229
v. De Wolf	576	v. Goodwin	209, 210
v. Hanie	532	v. Tattersall	312, 583
v. Hopkins	94	Headley v. Kirby	144, 146, 163
v. Johnson	336	Heartley v. Nicholson	79
v. Nickerson	632	Heatley v. Newton	640

	SECTION		SECTION
Hebb v. Hebb	156, 184	Hillman v. Wilcox	321
Hebb's Case	223, 224, 227	Hills v. Hills	195
Hedges v. Hedges	136	Hills v. Snell	218, 630 a
Height v. Bacon	356	Himes v. Kiehl	585
Heilbutt v. Hickson		Himrod Furnace Co. v. Cleveland,
237, 239, 243, 246, 280, 363, 364, 579		&c. R. R. Co.	487
Heimemann v. Heard	572	Hinchliffe v. Barwick
Heller v. Elliott	554, 555		311, 312, 313, 583
Helm v. Martin	93, 95	Hinckley v. Arey	507
Helshaw v. Langley	497	Hinde v. Gray	618, 623
Henderson v. Barnewall	501, 506	v. Liddell	572
v. Henderson	98, 186	v. Longworth	118
v. Lauck	294, 298, 308	v. Whitehouse
Hendrickson v. Hendrickson	605	207, 444, 462, 479, 486, 489, 506
Henkel v. Pape	218, 227	Hine v. Champion	613
Hennequin v. Naylor	608	v. Roberts	297
Henshaw v. Robins		Hiort v. Bott	601
316, 333, 337, 344, 349, 351		Hirschorn v. Canney
Hensley v. Baker	372		296, 300, 301, 304
Hepburn v. Auld	417	Hirshhorn v. Stewart	407
Hepworth v. Hepworth	94, 129	Hitchcock v. Coker	623
Herrick v. Borst	561	v. Hunt	583
v. Carter	201, 211	Hoadley v. M'Laine	216, 492
Herring v. Skaggs	324	Hoare v. Rennie	289, 308
Herron v. Dibrell	329	Hobart v. Littlefield	273
Hersom v. Henderson	336	Hobbs v. Beavers	641
Hesseltine v. Stockwell	49	v. London, &c. R. R. Co.
Hewes v. Jordan	465, 467, 469		513, 514
Hewitt v. Kaye	149, 168	Hodgson v. Davies	421, 422, 507
Heyman v. Neale	501, 507	v. Johnson	457
Heywood v. Heywood	421	v. Temple	617
Heyworth v. Hutchinson		Hoe v. Sanborn	365
314, 338, 579		Hoereth v. Franklin Mill Co.	16
v. Knight	507	Hoffman v. Carow	18, 19, 630 a
Hicks v. Ayer	645	v. Noble	608
v. Cleveland	477	Hoghton v. Hoghton	60
Higgins v. Chessman	250	Hogins v. Plympton
v. Delaware, &c. R.	257, 386		316, 323, 329, 332, 344
v. Murray	396, 442	Holbrook v. Connor	603
v. Senior	504	v. Hyde	43
Higsons v. Burton	610	Holden v. Clancy	366, 373
High v. Stainback	103, 132	Holland v. Rea	522, 549, 550
Hight v. Ripley	442	Holley v. Adams	150
Hildreth v. Fitts	534	Holliday v. Atkinson	149
v. O'Brien	336	v. Morgan	339, 341
Hill v. Barney	16	Hollins v. Fowler	630 a
v. Chapman	162	Holloway v. Millard	120
v. Larro	555	Holmes v. Gregg	234, 410
v. McDonald	469	v. Hoskins	460, 464, 469
v. McKenzie	297, 304	v. Mitchell	499
v. North	333	v. Roper	148, 150
v. Perrott	612	Holroyd v. Marshall	210
v. Sheibley	76	Holt v. Holt	298, 299
v. Smith	572	Holton v. McPike	227
v. Southwick	584	Honck v. Muller	308
v. Spear	617	Hone v. Henriquez	631
v. Stevenson	78, 84	Honeyman v. Marryat	231
v. Wilson	90, 91	Hooker v. Knab	435, 442
Hillebrant v. Brewer	88	Hooper v. Goodwin	73

	SECTION		SECTION
Hoopes v. Strasburger	600	Humaston v. American Telegraph
Hoover v. Maher	257, 263	Co.	211, 420
v. Peters	348	Humble v. Mitchell	454
v. Tibbitts	564	Humfrey v. Dale	558
Hope v. Hutchins	131	Humphries v. Cawwalho	229, 311
Hopkins v. Hitchcock	351	Hunt v. Butterworth	105
v. Manchester	76	v. Hecht	467, 468, 469
v. Tanqueray	321, 346	v. Hunt	93
v. Ware	419	v. Philadelphia	629, 631
Hopton v. McCarthy	468, 469, 470	v. Sackett	378
Horn v. Batchelder	232	v. Wyman	310, 311, 312
v. Brick	580	Hunter v. Giddings	500
Horncastle v. Farran	554	v. Leavitt	469
Horne v. Midland R. R. Co.	572	v. Nolf	622
Horner v. Parkhurst	356	v. Wetsell
Horry v. Glover	29	385, 403, 476, 516, 522, 549
Horsfall v. Hey	453	v. Wright	272, 395, 397, 475
v. Thomas	604	Hurd v. Fleming	302 a Horton v. Buffington	617	v. West	38
v. Green	321, 329, 337	Hurff v. Hires	256, 258
v. McCarty	506	Hurst v. Beach	147, 167, 186
Hosmer v. Wilson	513	Hussey v. Horne-Payne	489 a Hotchkiss v. Finan	617	v. Sibley	318
v. Hunt	300	v. Thornton	300
Hotham v. East India Co.	282	Hutchings v. Munger	308
Houck v. Miller	410	v. Nunes	560
Hough v. Barton	16	Hutchins v. Munger
Houghton v. Davenport	48	304, 306, 308, 422
Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow		Hutchinson v. Bowker	222
Bank	607	v. Gordon	646
House v. Grant	193	v. Hunter	250, 257
Household Fire Ins. Co. v. Grant	225	Huthmacher v. Harris	218, 598
Houston, &c. R. Co. v. Mitchell	291 a	Hutley v. Hutley	622
Howard v. Castle	640	Hutton v. Moore	215, 286
v. Daly	225	Hyatt v. Boyle	356, 579
v. Emerson	348	Hyde v. Cookson	36
v. Harris	201	Hyde v. Lathrop	250, 262, 308
v. Savings Bank	78, 90, 105	Hydraulic Co. v. McHaffie	386
v. Sheward	324
v. Williams	118
Howe v. Batchelder	451
v. Hardy	427
v. Hayward	476, 477
v. Palmer	469
v. Ward	119
Howell v. Biddlecorn	603
v. Coupland	207, 245, 283, 288
Howes v. Ball	464
Howie v. Rea	585
Hoyt v. Holly	623
Hubbard v. George	362
Hudson v. Agee	17
Huff v. Broyles	583
v. Earl	48
v. McCauley	451
Huggins v. Perrine	120
Hughes v. Bray	360
Hull v. Hull	29, 209, 532, 534, 542

I.

Ibottson v. Peat	17
Idaho, The	47
Ide v. Stanton	492
Idle v. Thornton	314
Iley v. Frankenstein	312
Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough	216
Imperial Bank v. London Dock
Co.	560
Indianapolis R. v. Maguire	257
Ingalls v. Herrick	616
Inglebright v. Hammond	38, 46
Inglis v. Usherwood	564
Ireland v. Livingston	315, 390
Irish v. Nutting	64, 131, 154, 159
Iron Cliffs Co. v. Buhl	388, 394
Irons v. Smallpiece	159
Irvine v. Stone	457

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

xlv

	SECTION		SECTION
Isaacs v. Plaster Works	386	Jones v. Brown	142
Isherwood v. Whitmore	397, 406	v. Edney	632
Ives v. Stirling	56, 65	v. Flint	449
		v. Franklin	611
		v. George	317, 347, 351, 358
		v. Just 346, 347, 354, 355, 356,	585
		v. Lock	77, 79, 86, 109
		v. Mechanics' Bank	468, 469
		v. Moore	51
		v. Nasson	359
		v. Newhall	576
		v. Pearce	250
		v. Richardson	209
		v. Selby	136, 137, 162, 191
		v. Smyth	15
		v. St. John's College	288
		v. United States	283, 288
		v. Weakley	168, 173
		v. Wright	312
		Jordan v. Norton	222
		v. Parker	608, 609
		Joslin v. Cowee	613
		Josling v. Kingsford	316, 350
		Joyce v. Swan	216, 223, 273
		Judd v. Day	228
		Juilliard v. Greenman	416
		Junkins v. Simpson	605
		Justice v. Lang	482, 485, 488, 498
		K.
		Kahn v. Klabunde	311, 409
		Kain v. Old	336
		Kaufman Co. v. Stuckey	360
		Kaye v. Brett	423
		Kearney v. Clutton	630 a
		v. Taylor	639
		Kearon v. Pearson	283, 287, 288
		Keeler v. Goodwin	539, 556
		v. Vandervere	250
		Keepers v. Fidelity Co.	163
		Kein v. Tupper	232, 250, 390, 406
		Keith v. Reid	637
		Kekewich v. Manning	79
		Kellam v. McKinstry	386
		Keller v. Strasburger	422, 527, 528
		Kellogg v. Adams	60, 109
		v. Barnard	359
		v. Denslow	583
		Kelly v. Bliss	626
		v. Roberts	234
		Kelner v. Baxter	504
		Kelsea v. Haines	254
		Kemper v. Kemper	176, 179
		Kempson v. Boyle	507
		Kendall v. Marshall	562, 564
		v. Wilson	218, 604
		Kenistons v. Sceva	184

	SECTION		SECTION
Kennedy v. Clayton	637	Knott v. Hogan	72, 86, 134
v. McKay	607	Knowles v. Dabney	283
v. Panama Mail Co. 597, 598	599	Kottwitz v. Alexander	617, 618
Kenner v. Harding	331, 333	Kountz v. Kirkpatrick	216, 571
Kenney v. Public Administrator	184	Kreth v. Rogers	48
Kent v. Riley	118	Kribs v. Jones	495, 496
Kenworthy v. Schofield		Kriete v. Myer	492
	444, 502, 506, 635	Krohn v. Bantz	476, 477
Kerr v. Seaver	17	Kruger v. Blanck	315, 389
Kerrigan v. Rautigan		Krulder v. Ellison	264
	78, 87, 94, 103, 115, 119	Krumbhaar v. Birch	378, 589
Kershaw v. Ogden	252	Krumm v. Beach	607
Ketchum v. Bank of Commerce	595	Kuhn v. Stansfield	118
v. Brennan	19
Key v. Cotesworth	273
Keys v. Harwood	212		L.
Keyser v. District	453
Kibble v. Gough		Labouchere v. Dawson	623
	462, 463, 464, 465, 467a	Ladd v. Dillingham	618
Kidd v. King	424	Ladue v. Branch	17
Kiddell v. Burnard	339, 341	Lagrange v. Barrè	110
v. Kidder	68, 73	Laidlaw v. Organ	611
Kidderminster v. Hardwick	644	Laidler v. Burlinson	268
Kiff v. Weaver	147, 167	Lake v. Morris	385, 399
Kilby v. Godwin	176	Lamb v. Crafts	336, 350, 442
Killmore v. Howlett	451	Lambert v. Overton	147, 170
Kilpin v. Ratley	70	Lamert v. Heath	318, 595
Kimball, The	419	Lamond v. Duvall	548, 632, 633
v. Jackman	300	Lamont v. Le Fevre	213
Kimberly v. Patchin	45, 258	Lamprey v. Sargent	258, 264
Kincaid v. Eaton	14	Lamson v. Patch	395
King v. Bates	300	Lance v. Lance	131
v. Eagle Mills	599	Lane v. Chadwick	396
v. Jarman	246, 254	Lange v. Werk	618, 623
King Philip Mill v. Slater	308	Langridge v. Levy	606
Kingman v. Denison	561	Langton v. Higgins	249, 262
Kingsbury v. Taylor 334, 347, 365, 606		v. Hughes	619, 621
Kingsford v. Merry	22, 609	L'Apostre v. L'Plastier	376
Kingsley v. Holbrook	449, 451	Lara v. Hill	631
Kinloch v. Craig	560	Larey v. Taliaferro	321
Kinney v. Kiernan	613	Larkin v. Lumber Co.	396
v. McDermot	625	Larkins v. Eckwurzle	609
v. Showdy	641	Larmon v. Jordan	229
Kirk v. Gibbs	283	Larned v. Andrews	624
Kirkpatrick v. Alexander	289, 386	Lassiter v. Ward	606
v. Finney	89	Latham v. Hartford	341
Kleeman v. Collins	488	v. Morrow	640
Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews	395	v. Sumner	297
Kline v. Baker	608	Lawrence v. Bartlett	143
Klinitz v. Surry	462	v. State	14
Knibs v. Jones	571	Lawson v. Lawson	136, 148, 152, 156
Knight v. Abbott	416	Lawton v. Keil	321, 329, 579
v. Barber	454	Layton v. Hennen	632
v. Bean	283	Lazarus v. Andrade	210
v. Herrin	638	Leach v. Francis	116
v. Mann	462, 467	Leask v. Scott	568
Knights v. Wiffen		Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus
	258, 394, 397, 541, 542, 544		433, 485, 488, 494, 496
Knoblauch v. Kronschnabel	467	v. Larsont	622

	SECTION		SECTION
Leatherdale v. Sweepstone	416	Livingston v. Byrne	641
Leavitt v. Jones	29	Llansamlet Tin Plate Co., Ex
v. Leavitt	116	parte	574
Le Breton v. Peirce	646	Lobdell v. Baker	318
Leddel v. Starr	60	Lockhart v. Barnard	18
Lee v. Bayes	19, 627	Loeb v. Flash	608, 609
v. Boak	147, 167, 186	v. Peters	561, 568
v. Cheney	491	Logan v. Le Mesurier	245, 249, 254, 288
v. Gaskell	453	Lomi v. Tucker	337
v. Griffin	440, 441, 442, 443	London, &c. R. R. Co. v. Bartlett	563
v. Hester	632	Loneragan v. Stewart	38, 46
v. Hills	492, 493	Long v. Hickingbottom	378
v. Kimball	568	v. White	453
v. Luther	65	Loop v. Litchfield	366, 606
v. Magrath	76	Lord v. Grow	334, 347, 350, 365
Legal Tender Cases	416	v. Price	577
Leggat v. Sands' Ale, &c., Co.		Lorymer v. Smith	316, 406
326, 335, 355		Lounsbury v. Depew	184
Leggett Co. v. Collier	407	Lovatt v. Hamilton	314
Leighton v. Stevens	300, 304	Love v. Francis	94
Lemon v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co.	73, 103	Low v. Martin	46
Leonard v. Davis	246	v. Pew	209
v. Fowler	361	Lowry v. Barelli	285, 413
v. New York Tel. Co.	227	Loyd v. Malone	639
Lerned v. Wannemacher	482, 485, 489	v. Wright	396
Leroux v. Brown	434	Lucas v. Dixon	489
Lerow v. Wilmarth	123	v. Nichols	385
Lespard v. Van Kirk	354	Lucas Oil Co. v. Brewer	308
Lester v. East	246	Lucy v. Mouflet	311
Leven v. Smith	298	Lucy Ann, The	128
Levi v. Levi	639	Ludgater v. Love	607
Levy v. Green	263, 388	Lukens v. Freund	347, 356
Lewis v. Bannister	614	Lunn v. Thornton	210
v. Courtright	40	Lupton v. White	43, 48, 51
v. Greider	550 a	Lush v. Wilkinson	120
v. Merritt	184	Lyman v. Cessford	119
v. Peake	586	v. Robinson	223
v. Reed	629	Lynch v. Beecher	609
v. Rountree	317	Lyon v. Bertram	579, 583, 595, 600, 601
v. Sharvey	564	v. Strong	625
v. Swift	270	Lyons v. Hoffnung	562
v. Wood	491
Lickbarrow v. Mason	556, 558, 560, 567		M.
Liddard v. Kain	341
Like v. McKinstry	630	Maberley v. Sheppard	464, 469, 471
Lillywhite v. Devereux	472	Macdonald v. Longbottom	493
Lincoln v. Gallagher	385	Mack's Appeal	74
Lindon v. Eldred	550	Mackanness v. Long	200
Lindsay, In re	267	Mackay v. Commercial Bank	607
v. Cundy	596, 610	v. Douglas	116, 118, 119, 120
Lingham v. Eggleston	250	Maclay v. Harvey	223, 224, 225, 228
Linnendall v. Doe	66	Maclean v. Dunn	501, 507, 548
Linsenbiger v. Gourley	131, 154	Macomber v. Parker	252
Linton v. Porter	378	Macon Railroad v. Meador	564
Litt v. Cowley	565	Mactier v. Frith	225
Littauer v. Goldman	318	Maddison v. Alderson	431, 432
Little v. Page	244, 294, 296, 300	Magniac v. Thompson	56
v. Willets	116	Magruder v. Gage	264, 396

	SECTION		SECTION
Mahon v. Baker	62	Massey v. Sladen	412
Mainprice v. Westley	629, 641	Massie v. Crawford	583, 584
Mallan v. May	623	Matasee v. Hughes	419
v. Radloff	337, 347, 354	Matheny v. Mason	589
Mallory v. Willis	36	Mather v. Chapman	13
Maltby v. Christie	629, 631, 646	Mathews v. Feaver	115
Manahan v. Noyes	605	Matson v. Abbey	73
Mann v. Everston	354, 355	Matteson v. Ellsworth	419
Manning v. Albee	603, 604	v. Holt	605
Mansell v. Clements	631	Matthews v. Baxter	219
Manser v. Back	629	v. Discount Corporation	524
Manufacturers', &c. Bank v. Hazard	540	v. McElroy	645
Marble v. Moore	250	Matthiessen Refining Co. v. Mc-
March v. Wright	300	Mahon	478
Marcy v. Amazeen	78	Mattice v. Allen	478
Marden v. Babcock	116	Mattingly v. Nye	119
Margetson v. Wright	341	Mattison v. Westcott	442
Marietta R. v. Stephenson	17	Maxted v. Fowler	373
Marine Bank v. Wright	273, 274	Maxwell v. Brown	460, 467, 468
Markland v. Creditors	562	May v. Ward	442, 493
Marland v. Stanwood	388, 410	Mayer v. Clark	116
Marsh v. Fuller	71, 105, 121	Mayfield v. Wadsley	451, 452
v. Hyde	431, 465	Mazoue v. Caze	645
v. Jelf	629, 630	M'Andrew v. Chapple	278
v. Low	579	McAvoy v. Medina	14
v. Rouse	460, 473	M'Bain v. Wallace	237, 267
v. Webber	606	McCall v. Iron Co.	232
v. Whitmore	516	McCandlish v. Newman	216
Marshall v. Berry	137, 142, 144	McCarthy v. Nash	465
v. Duke	378	McCarty v. Blevins	209
v. Ferguson	449	v. Kearnan	139, 184
v. Green	451, 469	McClartey v. Gokey	387, 416
v. Lynn	495	McClellan v. Scott	607
v. Perry	579, 583	McClintock's Appeal	451
Marston v. Knight	579	M'Cluney v. Lockhart	94
v. Marston	103, 108, 127, 132	McClung v. Kelley	250
Martin v. Adams	234, 312	McClure v. Briggs	313
v. Black	228	v. Jefferson	268
v. Funk	78, 79, 87	M'Comb v. Wright	634
v. Mason	43, 49	McCombs v. Guild	300
v. McCullough	91, 94	McConihe v. New York, &c. R. R.
v. McMillan	619	Co.	38, 259, 266
v. Ramsey	88, 179	McConnel v. Murphy	321, 337, 380, 389
v. Ranlett	638, 639	McConnell v. Hughes	213
v. Silliman	631	v. McConnell	147
v. Thompson	40	McCord v. McCord	196
v. Wade	622	McCormick v. Dunville	583
v. Youngblood	88	v. Hamilton	517, 527, 572
Martindale v. Booth	270	v. Sarson	362, 410, 580
v. Smith	525, 557, 566	McCormick Co. v. Lewis	304
Martineau v. Kitching		McCormicks v. Fuller	321, 332
244, 251, 252, 254, 270, 307,		McCrae v. Young	222, 234
412, 415		McCraw v. Gilmer	304, 307
Martrick v. Linfield	94, 128	M'Culloch v. Eagle Ins. Co.	225
Marvin v. Treat	15	McCutchen v. McCutchen	88
v. Wallis	460, 474	M'Donald v. Crockett	94
Mason v. Chappell	345, 354, 356	v. Hewett	250
v. Thompson	250	McDonald Man. Co. v. Thomas	337
		McDowell v. Rissell	47

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

xlix

	SECTION		SECTION
McDowell v. Simms	638	Meldrum v. Snow	312
McElroy v. Buck	493	Melledge v. Boston Iron Co.	419
v. Leery	491	Mercantile, &c. Bank v. Gladstone	566
McEwan v. Smith		Merchant v. Merchant	138, 190, 191
531, 533, 536, 538, 539, 556		Merchant Banking Co. v. Steel Co.	539, 560
McEwen v. Morey	216	Merchants' National Bank v.
McFarlane v. Taylor	619	Bangs	262, 264, 273
McFetredge v. Piper	564	Meredith v. Meigh	397, 469
McGavock v. Puryear	617, 619	v. Watson	186
McGiffin v. Baird	378	Meriwether v. Morrison	176
M'Gonnell v. Murray	78, 173	Merrell v. Kenyon	610
McGrath v. Reynolds	171, 179, 182	Merriam v. Field 334, 335, 336, 353, 354
McHose v. Fulmer	571, 572	v. Wolcott	318
McHugh v. O'Conner	73	Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard
McIniffe v. Wheelock	423	585, 587, 588, 591
McIntyre v. Kline	259, 266	Merritt v. Clason	497, 500, 501, 502
M'Kane v. Bonner	103, 132	v. Johnson	38, 266, 267
McKay v. Evans	380	Merry v. Green	14
v. Hamblin	400	Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor
M'Kean v. Wagenblast	48	289, 308
McKee v. Garcelon	392, 395, 556	Mesnard v. Aldridge	633
McKenzie v. Downing	148	Messers v. Woodman	527
McKlung v. Kelley	354	Messmore v. N. Y. Shot Co.
McKnight v. Devlin	589, 618	363, 572, 579, 580
v. Dunlop	465	Metz v. Albrecht
McLaughlin v. Waite	21	307, 308, 390, 398, 412, 575
McLay v. Perry	389	Mews v. Carr	506
M'Lean v. Grier	640	Meyerstein v. Barber	556, 565
v. Nicoll 431, 432, 485, 486, 493		Michel v. Ware	378
McLean v. Richardson	549	Michener v. Dale
v. Weeks	121	135, 146, 147, 153, 162, 163, 176,
McLeod v. First Nat. Bank	609	193, 194
v. Jones	385	Michigan Central R. R. Co. v.
McMasters v. Commissioners	642	Phillips	244, 300, 301
M'Meichen v. Baltimore	629	Middlesex v. Thomas	417, 419
McMeichen v. Marman	115	Middlesex Co. v. Osgood	385, 431
McMillan v. Bethold	16	Miles, Ex parte	564
v. Larned	302 a	v. Gorton	533
M'Mullen v. Helberg	493, 507	v. Roberts	385
McNaught v. Dodson	513	Milgate v. Kebble	548
McNeal v. Emerson	385	Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey	283, 288
McNeely v. Hart	637	Miller v. Desha	118
McVeigh v. Bank	646	v. Eastman	95
McWillie v. Van Vacter	88	v. Garman	270
Meach v. Meach 143, 145, 146, 179		v. Jeffress	138, 180
Mead, In re	150, 173	v. Michoud	40
Meagher v. Hollenberg	297	v. Miller	162, 168
Means v. Williamson	397	v. Moore	360
Mears v. Waples	518	v. Post	624
Mebane v. Mebane	133	v. Stevens	493
Mechanics' Assoc. v. O'Conner	372	Milliken v. Warren	554
Mechling's Appeal	138	Mills v. Bayley	286
Medbury v. Watson	586	v. Hunt	446, 461, 629
Medlock v. Powell	68	v. Mills	622
Meehan v. Sharp	462	Minchin v. Merrill	84
Meek v. Kettlewell	79	Miner v. Bradley	605
Mehan v. Sharp	454	Ming v. Corbin	234
Mehlberg v. Fisher	419
Meincke v. Falk	442

	SECTION		SECTION
Minneapolis Harvester Works v.		Morris v. Rexford	294, 295
Bonnallie	585	Morrison v. Dingley	256, 258
Minneapolis R. v. Rolling Mill	222	Morrow v. Reed	250
Minor v. Rogers	78, 87, 103	Morse v. Brackett	362, 579, 583, 595, 601
Mintum v. Main	645	v. Meston	147
Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank	275	v. Moore	584
Mirick v. French	56, 65	v. Rathburn	603, 605
Mitchell v. Gile	201	v. Reed	17
v. Newhall	318	v. Sherman	246
v. Smith	175	Morse Twist Co. v. Morse	623
v. Zimmerman	633	Mortimer v. Bell	640
Mixer v. Colburn	345, 346	Morton v. Dean	444, 498, 506, 635
v. Cook	304	v. Tibbett	465, 467, 469
v. Howarth	442	Moses v. Mead	346, 348
Mody v. Gregson	362, 364	Moss v. Sweet	279, 312
Mohawk Bank v. Atwater	116	Mottram v. Heyer	564
Mohr v. Boston, &c. R.	562, 563, 564, 567	Mouflet v. Cole	623
Moline Scale Co. v. Beed	257	Moulton v. Scruton	585
Moller v. Tuska	613	Mount v. Lyon	308
Mollett v. Robinson	508	Mount Hope Iron Co. v. Buffinton	266
Monat v. Parker	61	Moyce v. Newington	609
Moncrief v. Goldsborough	640	Mucklow v. Mangles	259, 266, 267
Mondel v. Steel	579, 580, 582, 584	Mudge v. Oliver	596
Monte Allegre, The	324	Mueller v. State	625
Montefiori v. Montefiori	617	Mullain v. Thomas	328, 336
Montgomery v. Breed	17	Mullen v. Wilson	119, 120
v. Edwards	431	Muller v. Eno	583, 585, 586
v. Miller	76	Mulvany v. Rosenberger	341
Moody v. Brown	266	Mumford v. Gething	623
v. Wright	210	Mundorff v. Wickersham	607
Mooklar v. Lewis	584, 585	Murphy v. Dunham	8
Moore v. Bowman	49, 50	v. Roese	501
v. Campbell	389, 495, 507	v. Simpson	625
v. Darton	86, 137, 142, 147, 174, 177, 186	Murray v. Brooks	324
v. Erie Railway Co.	51	v. Cannon	78
v. Gwyn	93	v. Mann	646
v. Hays	475	v. Meredith	585
v. Moore	60, 73, 79, 81, 147, 168, 170	Musgrove v. Robinson	642
v. Mountcastle	488	Muskegon Booming Co. v. Underhill	555
v. Owsley	633	Myers v. Meinrath	617, 625
More v. Bonnet	618, 623	Mygatt v. Tarbell	445
Morehead v. Hunt	638, 640		N.
Morehouse v. Comstock	323, 327, 348	National Bank v. Bigler	419
Moreland v. Myall	449	v. Insurance Co.	48
Morgan v. Bain	518, 626	v. Railroad Co.	296
v. Gath	388	v. Sprague	119, 633, 637, 639, 640
v. Gregg	45	National Bank of Commerce v.
v. Malleson	79, 81	Merchants' National Bank	274
v. Taylor	395	National Fire Ins. Co. v. Loomis	634
Moriarty v. Stofferam	613	Naylor v. Dennie	564
Morley v. Attenborough	369, 372, 374, 376, 377	Neal v. Gillaspay	372
v. Loughman	60, 60 a	Neale v. Neale	56
Morrill v. Wallace	331	Negley v. Jeffers	495
Morris v. Levison	389	Neill v. Whitworth	290

	SECTION		SECTION
Palmer v. Stephens	497	Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons	315, 380, 389
Pappa v. Rose	325	Pence v. Langdon	605
Parcher v. Savings Institution	154	Pender v. Fobes	336
Pardee v. Kanady	518	Penfield v. Thayer	71, 76
Parish v. Murphree	116, 118, 119	Penn. R. R. Co. v. Titusville, &c.	572
v. Stone	148, 150, 168	Co.
Parker v. Baxter	300, 301, 303, 304	Pennington v. Gittings	65, 73, 170, 185
v. Byrnes	564	Pennock v. Coe	210
v. Kuckens	23	v. Stygles	317, 327, 362, 580, 588, 604
v. Marston	191	People v. Cogdell	22
v. Nolan	589	v. Grant	629
v. Palmer	360, 407	v. Johnson	85
v. Parker	60	v. Walker	386
v. Ricks	84, 103	People's Bank v. Kurtz	318
v. Staniland	449	Perkins v. Bell	406
v. Wallis	467	v. Cushman	16
Parkinson v. Lee	334, 346, 347, 360, 365, 367	v. Dacon	286, 309
Parkman v. Welch	118, 119	v. Douglas	312
Parks v. Morris, &c. Co.	323, 335, 579	v. Eckert	396
Parsons v. Hill	59	v. Whelan	378
v. Loucks	442	Perley v. Balch	583, 584, 606
v. Sutton	571	Perrine v. Cooley	324
Partelo v. Harris	116	Perry v. Iron Co.	410
Parton v. Crofts	482, 507	Peters v. Ballistier	556
Pasley v. Freeman	329, 331	Peterson v. Christensen	617
Pate v. Wright	625	Peto v. Blades	630
Paton v. Duncan	317	Pettitt v. Mitchell	406
v. Rogers	595	Pfistner v. Bird	257
Patten's Appeal	566	Phelan v. Andrews	583, 584
Pattison v. Jenkins	603	v. Crosby	612
v. Josselyn	642	Phelps v. Comber	565
Paul v. Reed	294, 298, 299	v. Cutler	393
Payne v. Cave	634	v. McGee	572
v. Powell	88	v. Pond	65
Peabody v. Bags of Cotton	12	v. Willard	266
v. Maguire	299, 301, 304	Philadelphia R. v. Wiseman	264
v. Speyers	454	Phillimore v. Barry	497
Peacock v. Pursell	419	Phillips v. Bistolli	219, 471
Pearce v. Blackwell	603	v. Moor	223, 243, 252, 415
v. Brooks	617, 619, 621	v. Williams	306
v. Carter	572	v. Wooster	116, 119
Pearson v. Dawson	537	Phillpotts v. Evans	517
v. Mason	521	Phippen v. Stickney	639, 640
v. Pearson	65	Phipps v. Hope	72, 86, 105, 175
Pease v. Gloahec	556, 567, 609, 613	Pickard v. Bankes	416
v. Norton	386	v. Sears	540
v. Sabin	345, 347, 354	Pickett v. Bullock	554
Peck v. Frees	232	Picot v. Sanderson	73, 85
v. List	640	Pier v. Duff	245
Pecker v. Kennison	618	Pierce v. Corf	629
Peckham v. Peckham	211	v. Emery	210
Peek v. Gurney	606	v. Five Cents Savings Bank	172, 173, 175, 194, 197
v. North Staffordshire R. R.		Pierson v. Crooks	406, 410
Co.	486, 489	v. Heisey	109
Pearce v. Burroughs	90	Pike v. Balch	635, 638
v. Corf	501, 506
Pellecat v. Angell	621
Peltier v. Collins	492

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

liii

	SECTION		SECTION
Pike v. Fay	606	Price v. Price	419
v. Vaughn	250	Prickett v. Prickett	95
Pinkerton v. Railroad	115	Printing Co. v. Sampson	623
Pinkham v. Mattox	464, 469	Proctor v. Spratley	360
Pinney v. Andrus	332, 333, 337, 341	Providence Institution v. Taft	73
Pitkin v. Noyes	442	Pulcifer v. Page	33, 38
Pitts v. Beckett	492, 493, 501, 504	Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Metropolitan R.	406
v. Mangum	65, 131, 134	Putnam v. Piercy	449, 451
Place v. Rhem	119	Putnam v. Cushing	39
Platt v. Broderick	313	v. French	425
Pleasants v. Pendleton	258	v. Glidden	522
Plume v. Small	632, 633	v. Wyley	29
Plumley v. Massachusetts	625	Pym v. Campbell	489 a
Plummer v. Rundlett	97, 107
Poland v. Brownell	333, 603
v. Miller	354
Polhemus v. Heiman	323, 330, 583	Q.
Pollard v. King	632	Quarles v. George	291
Pollen v. Le Roy	550	Queen v. Glyde	14
Polyglass v. Oliver	416	v. Saddler's Co.	602, 613
Pool v. Glover	115	Quincy v. Tilton	626
Pooser v. Tyler	96	Quinn v. Davis	19, 25
Pope v. Allis	580	Quintard v. Bacon	468, 469
v. Porter	308
v. Savings Bank	78
Poplett v. Stockdale	621	R.
Poree v. Bonneval	629
Porter v. Bright	372
v. Parks	609	Radford v. Newell	507
v. Pettengill	294, 312	Raffles v. Wichelhaus	598
v. Pool	323	Raisin Co. v. Barrow Co.	288
Posey v. Scales	384	Ralph v. Chicago, &c. Co.	579
Post Carbon Iron Co. v. Groves	356	Ramazzotti v. Bowring	425
Potsdamer v. Kruse	410	Rand v. Mather	457
Potter v. Taggart	605	v. White Mountain Railroad	521
Pottinger v. Hecksher	564	Randall v. Kehlor	324
Potts v. New York & New England R.	564, 566	v. Lautenberger	638
v. Whitehead	223, 225, 229	v. Newson	347, 357, 358, 365
Poullain v. Poullain	67	v. Raper	572, 586
Poulton v. Lattimore	583	v. Thornton	335
Powell v. Eckler	124	Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott	257, 601
v. Edmunds	632	Ranger v. Hearne	335, 336
v. Hellicar	163	Rankin v. Matthews	632
v. Horton	337	v. Weguelin	147
v. Jessop	454	Ranney v. Higby	396
v. Preston	298	Raphael v. Bank of England	20
Power v. Barham	337, 636	v. Burt	377
Powers v. Benedict	613	Rappleye v. Adee	465, 469, 474
Pratt v. Byrant	49	Raspberry v. Moye	583, 584
v. Chase	393	Rattary v. Cook	385
v. Wiley	425	Rawls v. Deshler	301
Pray v. Mitchell	454	Rawson v. Johnson	292
Prescott v. Locke	252, 253, 263, 442	Ray v. Light	218
v. Norris	617	v. Simmons	78, 87
v. Wright	611	v. Thompson	312
Preston v. Whitney	297	Raymond v. Sellick	148, 150
Price v. Jones	300	Read v. Hutchinson	420
v. Lea	446, 461	Reade v. Livingston	118, 119, 120, 121
		Readhead v. Midland Railway Co.	357

	SECTION		SECTION
Reddel v. Dobree	163, 183	Robbins v. Clark	286
Redgrave v. Hurd	604, 605	v. Oldham	616
Redington v. Roberts	608	Roberts v. Applegate	340
Reed v. Blades	209	v. Brett	386
v. Hastings	329, 330	v. Egerton	621
Reeder v. Machen	257	v. Fisher	420
Reese Silver Mining Co. v. Smith	636	v. Jenkins	339
Reg. v. Clinton	13	v. Roberts	79
v. Moore	22	v. Watkins	286
v. Thomas	10	Robinson v. Bird	630 a
Reggio v. Braggiotti	585, 586	v. Ferraday	417
Regina v. Kenrick	604	v. Holt	43, 47, 50
Reid v. Butt	88	v. Macdonnel	209
v. King	43	v. Morgan	553
Reitz's Appeal	233	v. Noble	389
Remick v. Sandford	462, 465, 493, 507	v. Rutler	424, 645
Rentch v. Long	442	v. United States	326, 398
Renton v. Maryott	603	v. Wall	641
Reuss v. Picksley	487	Robinson Machine Works v.
Reuter v. Sala	289, 388, 410	Chander	227
Rex v. Brooks	24	Rocchi v. Schwabacher	347, 603
Reynolds v. Boston, &c. R.	560, 561	Rockford, Ex parte	534, 543
v. Dechaums	640	Rockford, &c. R. R. Co. v. Lent	388
Rhodes v. Bate	60	Rockwood v. Wigginn	184, 185
v. Childs	64, 94	Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte	568
Rice v. Andrews	419, 421, 422	Rodgers v. Niles	354, 358, 365
v. Churchill	385	Rodliff v. Dallinger	609, 610
v. Codman	326	Rodwell v. Phillips	450, 451, 468
v. Underwood	17	Rogers v. Hanson	579, 583
Rich v. Mobley	95	v. Rutter	417
Richard v. Moore	467 a	v. Thomas	561
Richards v. Delbridge	79	v. Woodruff	289, 314
v. Porter	488, 494	Rohde v. Thwaites	261
Richardson v. Boston Chemical		Roland v. Schrack	95
Laboratory	417	Rolls v. Pearce	151
v. Brown	339	Rommel v. Wingate
v. Cooper	495	223, 227, 228, 263, 386, 388, 396
v. Crandall	622	Rondeau v. Wyatt	439
v. Dunn	232	Root v. Bonnema	47
v. Jackson	417	Roper v. Johnson	574
v. Mellish	621	Ropes v. Lane	241
v. Richardson	79, 81	Roscorla v. Thomas	321, 332
v. Smallwood	120	Rose v. Hurley	606
v. Squires	462, 477	v. Story	300
Richey v. Daemicke	329, 336	Roseman v. Canovan	604
Rickard v. Moore	462, 465	Rosenbaums v. Weeden	522
Rickers v. Simcox	24	Rosenblatt v. Townsley	625
Ridden v. Thrall	78, 154	Rosevear Clay Co., Ex parte	562
Riddle v. Driver	36	Ross v. Mather	606
v. Gage	589	v. Welch	449
v. Varnum	250, 251, 252, 254	Roth v. Wells	50
Rider v. Kelley	259, 266	Rothchild v. Rowe	616
Ridgeway v. Kennedy		Rourke v. Bullens	214
294, 298, 299, 300		Rouse v. Lewis	289
Ridgway v. Wharton	489	Rousillon v. Rousillon	623, 625
Riegel v. Wooley	133	Routledge v. Grant	229, 230
Riley v. Wheeler	424, 526	Rowan v. Union Arms Co.	297
Ringgold v. Ringgold	48	Rowe v. Marchant	70
Rinker v. Rinker	59, 84, 90	Rowley v. Bigelow	562, 566, 569, 609

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lv

	SECTION		SECTION
Rucker v. Abell	88	Sawyer v. Ware	445
v. Donovan	565	Sayles v. Wellman	625
Rugg v. Minett	249, 252, 283, 415, 427	Sayre v. Hughes	129
v. Moore	308	v. Wheeler	625
v. Weir	421, 422	Scattergood v. Sylvester	18
Rummens v. Hare	76	Schell v. Stephens	324, 629, 636
Rumsey v. Berry	621	Schermerhorn v. Talman	624
Ruohs v. National Bank	318, 373	Schlesinger v. Stratton	312
Russell v. Carrington	239, 240, 241, 244, 392	Schmidt v. People's Nat. Bank	16
v. Miner	631	v. Thomas	465, 469
v. Minor	296	Schneider v. Norris	486, 497
v. Witt	285	Schnitzer v. Oriental Print Works	361
Rust v. Eckler	579	Scholefield v. Robb	341
Ryall v. Rowles	376	Schollmier v. Schoendelen	78
Ryan v. Ulmer	329	School District v. Dauchy	288
v. United States	489	Schotsman v. Lancashire, &c.
Ryder v. Hathaway	47, 49	R. R. Co.	562, 566
v. Neitge	348	Schreyer v. Scott	119
		Schuchardt v. Allens	222, 223
		Schurtz v. Kleinmeyer	339
		Schwoerer v. Boylston Market	278
		Scott v. Eastern, &c. R. R. Co.	440, 446, 461
S.		v. Harmon	622
Safford v. McDonough	464, 474, 554	v. Littledale	218
Sage v. Sleutz	295, 297, 298, 299	v. Mann	638
Sainsbury v. Matthews	449	v. Savings Bank	95
Saladin v. Mitchell	549	v. Scholey	115
Salisbury v. Stainer	359	v. Uxbridge R. R. Co.	417
Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard	491, 492, 500	v. Warner	595
Salomons v. Nissen	568	v. Wells	252
v. Pender	638	v. Willson	13
Salter v. Woollams	385, 392	Scovell v. Boxall	451
Saltus v. Everett	25	Scranton v. Clark	372, 378
Sampson v. Shaw	617	Scudder v. Bradbury	304, 307
Samson v. Samson	60 a	v. Worster	256, 257, 258, 397, 542
Samuel v. Marshall	60	Scull v. Shakespear	267
Sanborn v. Benedict	209, 291	Seabright v. Seabright	144, 146, 184
v. Flagler	487, 491, 497, 501, 502, 504	Searight v. Calbraith	416
v. Goodhue	103	Searle v. Keeves	473
v. Sanborn	148, 150	Seath v. Moore	267, 268
Sanders v. Jameson	407	Security Bank v. Lutgen	274
v. Maclean	392, 413	Sedgwick v. Cottingham	385, 397
Sandford v. Wiggins Ferry Co.	267	v. Stanton	622
Sands v. Taylor	549	Sedwich v. McKim	318
Sarbeck v. State	396	Seeger v. Duthie	278
Sard v. Rhodes	419	Seemuller v. Fuchs	629
Sargent v. Currier	378	Selby v. Selby	497
v. Graham	416	Selleck v. Selleck	91, 134
Sarl v. Bourdillon	491, 492	Selser v. Roberts	316
Saunders v. Clark	216	Serviss v. Stockstill	572
v. Topp	465, 467, 469	Sessions v. Moseley	64, 76, 85, 86, 176, 183
Saunderson v. Jackson	485, 497	Sewall v. Fitch	442
Savage Man. Co. v. Armstrong	279	v. Glidden	68, 88
Savannah Nat. Bank v. Haskins	17	Sexton v. Wheaton	118, 119
Sawyer v. Gerrish	209	Seybel v. Nat. Currency Bank	20
v. Joslin	562, 564	Seymour v. Davis	433
v. Taggart	621	v. Newton	560, 564, 565, 566

	SECTION		SECTION
Seymour v. Wyckoff	43	Simpson v. Krumdick	465
Shackelford v. Brown	176	v. Margitson	631
Sharman v. Brandt	504, 508	v. Nicholls	625
Sharp v. Parks	19	Sim's v. Howell	354
Shattuck v. Green	378	v. Landray	506
Shaw v. Carbreay	453	v. Marryat	376, 377
v. Clark	621	v. Walker	178
v. Life Insurance Co.	282	Singer Machine Co. v. Cole	297
v. Merchants' Bank	20	Singer Man. Co. v. Clark	18
v. Smith	259, 266, 268, 270	Singerly v. Thayer	313
Shears v. Rogers	118	Singleton v. Cotton	68
Sheedy v. Roach	196	Skilling v. Bollman	274
Sheegog v. Perkins	70	Skipper v. Stokes	209
Sheffer v. Montgomery	286, 309	Slater v. Maxwell	639
Sheldon v. Capron	218	Slaughter v. Gerson	347
v. Cox	201, 212	v. Green	46
v. Sherman	41	Sloane v. Van Wyck	548, 626
v. Soper	637	Slocum v. Seymour	451
Shelley v. Nash	627	Small v. Stevens	407
Shelton v. Livius	632	Smeed v. Foord	572
Shepard v. Lynch		Smith v. Barker	561
	254, 326, 380, 389, 392, 398	v. Bean	625
Shepardson v. Cary	397, 556, 556	v. Berry	572
Shepherd v. Hampton	572	v. Bettger	419
v. Harrison	273, 274, 275, 285, 295	v. Borst	330
v. Kain	350	v. Brittenham	615
v. Pressey	460	v. Dallas	234, 309
v. Pybus	357	v. Dennie	304
v. Trigg	116	v. Dorsey	131, 154
Shepley v. Davis	257	v. Downey	179
Sherk v. Endress	74	v. Ferguson	180, 196
Sherman v. Champlain Trans. Co.	378	v. Gillett	385
v. Johnson	370	v. Goss	566
v. Rugee	566, 569	v. Gowdy	222
Sherwin v. Mudge	214	v. Greenlee	639
Shindler v. Houston	469, 471, 473	v. Hale	333
Shinn v. Bodine	308	v. Hudson
Shipley v. Carroll	21		462, 467 a, 468, 469, 475, 562
Shireman v. Jackson	294, 298, 300	v. Hughes	218, 603, 604, 605
Shirley v. Whitehead	141	v. Jones	489
Short v. Simpson	556	v. Justice	321, 329, 331, 340
Shower v. Pilck	68	v. Kay	80
Shufeldt v. Pease	609	v. Kittridge	148, 150
Shumway v. Rutter	50	v. Lewis	218, 282, 388
Shurtleff v. Willard	385	v. Love	605
Sidney Furniture Co. v. School		v. Lozo	299
District	410	v. Lynes	304
Sievwright v. Archibald	482, 483, 507	v. Maine	184
Siffkin v. Wray	560	v. Mercer	420
Silisbury v. McCoon	36	v. Miller	419
Simmonds v. Humble	465, 469, 473	v. Millikin	462
Simmons v. Cincinnati Savings		v. Montgomery	94
Society	77	v. Morrill	49
v. Swift		v. Myers	263, 314
	214, 236, 243, 244, 246, 249, 527	v. Neale	373
Simon v. Motivos	444	v. Neefus	500
Simond v. Braddon	314	v. Pettee	314, 549
Simonton v. Minneapolis Bank	629	v. Pope	638
Simpson v. Crippin	289, 308, 574	v. Reavis	118

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lvii

	SECTION		SECTION
Smith v. Richards	599, 604	Stanley v. Jones	622.
v. Sanborn	43, 50	Stanton v. Austin	384
v. Smith	109, 162, 600	v. Eager	566, 567
v. Sparkman	250	Stapleton, Ex parte	518
v. Stanton	489	Star Glass Co. v. Longley	264
v. Surman	451, 488, 493, 494	v. Morey	326, 583, 587, 606
v. Tracy	324	Starke v. Paine	47
v. Ward	257	Starr v. Starr	148
v. Welch	47	Startup v. McDonald	387, 406
Smoot v. United States	282, 287	State v. Burt	51
Snellgrave v. Bailey	76	v. Harvey	17
Snelling v. Hall	313	v. Haws	17
v. Thomas	632	v. King	386
Snow v. Schomacker Man. Co.	358	v. O'Neil	396
v. Warner	468	v. Poulterer	629
Snyder v. Christ	120	v. Schulein	612
Soames v. Spencer	501, 502	Stead v. Dawber	495, 626
Soles v. Hickman	492	Stearns v. Hall	495, 496
Solomons v. Chesley	395, 539, 556	v. Washburn	528
Somerby v. Buntin	454, 510, 576	Stedman v. Gooch	422
Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co.	553	Steel Works v. Dewey	385, 398
Sonstiby v. Keeley	416	Steele v. Ellmaker	629, 641
South Australian Ins. Co. v. Randall	211	v. Ward	116
Southerland v. Southerland	147, 176, 180, 185	Stephens v. Ells	372
Southern Life, &c. Co. v. Cole	454	v. Orman	603
Southwestern Freight Co. v. Plant	300, 307	v. Santee	257
v. Stanard	250, 532, 554, 555	v. Tucker	209
Sovern v. Yoran	10	v. Wilkinson	548, 626
Spader v. Davis	115	Stephenson v. Cady	308
Spalding v. Preston	24	v. Hart	610
v. Ruding	567	v. Little	47
Sparkes v. Marshall	261	Sterling v. Baldwin	451
Sparks v. Messick	335, 336	Stevens, Re	56
Spartali v. Benecke	554	v. Brennan	299, 302, 609
Spence v. Union Mar. Ins. Co.	43, 46, 47, 51, 52	v. Briggs	38
Spencer v. Halo	468	v. Curtis	17
v. Harding	632	v. Lee	646
v. Jones	622	v. Lyford	572
v. Vance	68	v. Stevens	82, 180
Spicer v. Cooper	493	Stevenson v. McLean	223, 229
Spicers v. Harvey	266	v. Newnham	613
Spickler v. Marsh	311, 312	Stewart v. Ball	29
Spirett v. Willows	118, 119	v. Eddowes	495
Splawn v. Martin	116	v. Emerson	608
Spooner v. Holmes	630 a	Stewart's Estate, Re	81
Spring v. Chipman	645	Stiles v. White	606
Spring Co. v. Knowlton	617	St. Louis Church v. Bonneval	629
Springer v. Kleinsorge	640	Stock v. Inglis	266, 270
Sprott v. United States	619	Stoddard v. Ham	596, 610
Stadtfeld v. Huntsman	300	Stollenwerck v. Thacher	556
Stagg v. Compton	223	Stonard v. Dunkin	544
Staines v. Shore	640, 641	Stone v. Browning	462, 464, 467, 492
Stainton v. Wood	386	v. Gerrish	138, 139
Staniland v. Willott	138, 155, 189	v. Hackett	73, 76, 103, 105, 132
		v. Perry	295, 296, 299, 304
		v. State	629
		v. Swift	556
		Stovall v. Johnson	109
		Stoveld v. Hughes	537

	SECTION		SECTION
Stowe v. Taft	399	Taylor v. Jones	50, 232
Straus v. Herman	201	v. Plumer	646
v. Ross	250	v. Pope	301
Strauser v. Kosier	17	v. Staples	65, 67, 72
Street v. Blay	579	v. Stringer	638
Strickland v. Turner	207, 595, 600	v. Taylor	60, 179
Strong v. Bird	97	v. Wakefield	465, 472, 555
v. Doyle	453	Taylor's Estate	156, 168
v. Taylor	285	Tempest v. Fitzgerald	464, 469, 471
Stroud v. Pierce	331, 335	v. Kilner	454
Stucley v. Bailey	331, 335	Templeman v. Gibbs	445
Sturges v. Crowninshield	57	Tenbrook v. Brown	70
Sturtevant v. Orser	560, 564	Terry v. Bissell	318
Sugar Refinery v. Allis Co.	311	v. Wheeler	222, 245, 250
Suit v. Bonnell	409	Tewkesbury v. Bennett	321, 329
Sully v. Frean	595	Thacher v. Phinney	118, 119
Summers v. Vaughan	321, 332	Thacker v. Hardy	621
Sumner v. Cottey	297, 300	Thetford v. Hubbard	416
v. Hamlet	38, 239	Thol v. Henderson	572
v. Jones	625	Thomas v. Degraffenreid	93, 118, 119
v. Parker	282	v. Kerr	629, 642
Sutton v. Hawkins	417	v. Knowles	595, 626
Sutton v. Campbell	293, 297, 308	v. Lewis	146, 175, 184, 197
Suydam v. Clark	507	v. Winchester	606
Swain v. Seamens	495	Thome v. Colton	49
v. Shepherd	264	Thompson v. Alger	476, 521, 528
Swanwick v. Sothorn	251, 252	v. Baker	118
Swayze v. Hull	622	v. Baltimore, &c. R.	391, 396, 532, 534
Sweeting v. Turner	644	v. Gardiner	507
Sweetman v. Prince	378, 604	v. Gould	207
Swett v. Shumway	351	v. Kelly	632, 645
Swift v. Stevens	16	v. Menck	469
Swire v. Francis	607	v. Ray	285, 286, 290, 294
Sykes v. Giles	643, 645	v. Rose	608, 609
		v. Thompson	143, 156, 561
		v. Williams	625
		v. Woodruff	571
		Thomson v. Dougherty	119, 120
		v. Sexton	345
		Thornburn v. Whitacre	287
		Thorndike v. Bath	259, 268
		v. Locke	521
		Thorne v. Mosher	416
		Thornett v. Haines	640, 641
		Thornton v. Charles	507
		v. Kempster	218, 507
		v. Wynn	580, 583
		Thorold v. Thorold	179
		Thorp v. Amos	141
		Thorpe v. Fowler	299, 554
		Thrall v. Hill	208
		v. Newell	318
		Thruston v. Thornton	219
		Thurnell v. Balbirnie	286
		Thurston v. Spratt	378
		Tibbetts v. Jageman	637
		Tigriss, The	565
		Tillinghast v. Wheaton	78, 173, 197
T.
Taft v. Travis	216
Tailby v. Official Receiver	209, 210
Tamvaco v. Lucas	315, 389
Tancil v. Seaton	14
Tancred v. Steel Co.	389
Tanner v. Scovell	555
Tansley v. Turner	214, 249, 273
Taplin v. Florence	637
Tappan v. Evans	115
Tarling v. Baxter	246
Tate v. Hilbert	136, 148, 149, 168, 179
v. Leithead	86, 152, 155
Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co.	224, 225
Taylor v. Blanchard	623
v. Bowers	617
v. Bullen	350, 351
v. Caldwell	207, 283, 288
v. Cole	397
v. Henry	78
v. Johnston	59

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lix

	SECTION		SECTION
Tipton v. Feitner	232	Union Refining Co. v. Pentecost	631
v. Triplett	378	United States v. State Bank	646
Tisdale v. Harris	433, 454, 465	Upton v. Suffolk County Mills	324
Todd v. Grove	60	Utley v. Donaldson	223
Tome v. Dubois	18
Tomlinson v. Savage	640
Toner v. Zell	336	V.
Tooke v. Hollingsworth	384
Torrance v. Bolton	598, 600, 632	Vail v. Strong	201
Towers v. Osborne	439	Vale v. Bayle	397
Towle v. Leavitt	630, 640, 641	Valpy v. Gibson	562
Town v. Trow	417	v. Oakeley	533, 547, 548, 554, 571
Townes v. Birchett	424, 643	Van Alen v. American Bank	48
Townley v. Crump	474, 533	Van Castell v. Booker	273, 560, 562
Townsend v. Hargraves	246, 431, 433, 465, 488	Vandenburgh v. Spooner	491
Tozer v. Jackson	89	Van Deusen v. Rowley	59, 73, 98, 105
Tracy v. Talmage	617, 624	Vandewalker v. Osmer	333, 604
Treadwell v. Aydlett	569	Van Trott v. Wiese	605
v. Packing Co.	274	Van Vechten v. Smith	329
v. Reynolds	407, 469	Van Wyck v. Seward	118
Treat v. Barber	47, 50	Vassar v. Camp	225
Tregelles v. Sewell	262	Vasser v. Buxton	554
Trevor v. Wood	227, 485, 503	Vaugh v. Hopson	300
Tripp v. Armitage	266, 267, 268	Vaughan, The	556
v. Barton	629, 646	Vawter v. Griffin	454
v. Brownell	209	Veal v. Veal	167, 197
v. Riley	45	Veazie v. Somerby	395
Trist v. Child	622	v. Williams	638, 640
Trough's Estate	81, 89, 95, 169, 175	Veerkamp v. Hulburd Co.	390, 414
Trow v. Shannon	82, 131	Ventress v. Smith	19
Trowell v. Carraway	81, 94, 103	Verdin v. Robertson	227
Trueman v. Loder	502	Vermilye v. Adams Express Co.	20
Trust v. Board of Publication	150	Vernede v. Weber	314
Turley v. Bates	252	Vernon v. Keys	611
Turner v. Harvey	611	Vertue v. Jewell	560, 568
v. Langdon	528	Vibbard v. Johnson	589
v. Liverpool Docks	273, 562	Vickers v. Vickers	215, 286
v. Mucklow	347	Vincent v. Germond	433, 473
Turpin v. Thompson	143	v. Leland	323, 331, 332, 583
v. Turpin	59	Vinton v. Peck	625
Tuthill v. Bogart	303, 534	Voorhees v. Earl	605
v. Skidmore	535, 561	Voorhis v. Olmstead	539, 542
Tuttle v. Brown	329, 332, 585	Vyse v. Wakefield	291, 291 a
v. Holland	617
v. Standish	16, 17	W.
Twyne's Case	114
Tye v. Fynmore	337, 359	Wabash Elevator Co. v. First Nat.
Tyers v. Rosedale, &c. Iron Co.	390	Bank	244, 294
Tyler v. Freeman	295, 304	Waddell v. Wolfe	633
Tyre v. Causey	583	Waddington v. Bristow	450
Tyree v. Williams	627	v. Oliver	388
		Wain v. Walters	429, 492
		Wait v. Baker	260, 273, 396
U.		v. Green	300
		Waite v. Jones	618
Udell v. Atherton	607	Wake v. Harrop	599
Ullmann v. Kent	516, 550	Walden v. Dixon	131, 154
Union Bank v. Munster	640	Waldo v. Belcher	257

	SECTION		SECTION
Waldron v. Chase	254, 258	Watkins v. Eames	65
v. Romaine	397	v. Robb	416
Walker, Ex parte	565	Watrons v. Blair	617
v. Hoisington	340, 341, 583	Watson, Ex parte	562, 565
v. Matthews	19	v. Spratley	454
v. Mottram	623	v. Walker	291
v. Nussey	476, 478	Watts v. Friend	445, 449, 455, 464
v. Pue	347, 603	v. Hendry	258
Wallace v. Breeds	257	Way v. Martin	323
Walsh v. Lennon	419	Wayne v. Merwood	515
v. Sexton	170, 175, 197	Wayne Steam Co. v. Morewood	523, 527
v. Studdart	180	Waynesburg College's Appeal	86
Walsh's Appeal	173	Weast v. Derrick	645
Walter v. Hodge	184	Webb v. Baltimore R.	454
Wambold v. Vick	94	v. Fairmaner	386
Wanamaker v. Yerkes	263, 308	v. Odell	318, 595
Wangler v. Franklin	300	Webber v. Davis	246
Ward, Matter of	78	v. Minor	391
v. Bourne	419	Webster v. Anderson	241, 246
v. Haggard	318	v. French	634
v. Hobbs	606	v. Le Compte	433 a
v. Shaw	214, 250	v. Power	48
v. Smith	418	Weddigen v. Boston, &c. Fabric	420
v. Spelts	232	Co.	47
v. Taylor	273	Weil v. Silverstone	329, 345, 346, 347, 606
v. Turner	136, 159, 162, 163, 168, 179, 194	Weir v. Bell	607
Warden v. Jones	115	v. Cram	17
v. Marshall	385, 399	Weisiger v. Chisholm	116
Warder v. Fisher	583	Welch v. Moffat	251, 427
Ware v. Houghton	589	Weld v. Cutler	258, 264
Ware River R. v. Vibbard	553	v. Dyer	584
Warfield v. Booth	623	v. Lancaster	622
Waring v. Edmonds	147	Wellauer v. Fellows	232, 407
v. Waring	167	Wellington v. Downer Kerosene	606
Warlow v. Harrison	629, 634, 641	Oil Co.	446, 457
Warner v. Cushman	46, 47	Wells v. Day	622
v. Martin	424	v. Foster	328
v. Vallily	613	v. Spears	167
Warren v. Buckminster	257	v. Tucker	555
v. Coal Co.	337	Welsh v. Bell	15
v. Durfee	150, 151	Wentworth v. Day	566
v. Jones	623	v. Outhwaite	449
v. Kirk	313	Westbrook v. Eayer	583
v. Millikin	46	Westcott v. Rims
v. Ulrich	10	Westerlo v. De Witt	147, 162, 168, 184, 193
v. Wheeler	293	Western Bank v. Addie	605
Warren Chemical Co. v. Holbrook	442	Western Transportation Co. v.	301
Warriner v. Rogers	88, 89, 95	Marshall	522
Warwick v. Bruce	449	Westfall v. Peacock	155, 189
Washburn v. Burrows	451	Weston v. Hight	318, 595
v. Cuddihy	341	Westropp v. Solomon	567
Washburn Iron Co. v. Russell	258, 264, 272, 385, 395	Westzinthus, In re	33, 36, 49
Washington Ice Co. v. Webster	487, 493	Wetherbee v. Green	326
Wason v. Rowe	335, 339	Wetherill v. Neilson	572
Waterman v. Meigs	442	Wetmore v. Pattison
Waters' Heater Co. v. Smith	313

TABLE OF CASES CITED.

lxi

	SECTION		SECTION
Wheat v. Cross	223, 225, 595, 597	Wiley v. Backus	70
Wheatley v. Abbott	68	Williams v. Bacon	493, 500, 501, 502
v. Harris	17	v. Banks	119, 120
Wheeler v. Glasgow	73	v. Burgess	445, 464
v. Knaggs	416	v. Carpenter	416
Wheeler Man. Co. v. Teetzlaff	297	v. Dixon	17
Whelan v. Sullivan	219	v. Evans	424, 643
Whitaker v. Whitaker	151	v. Fitch	178
Whitcomb v. Denio	605, 606	v. Guile	86, 154, 169
v. Whitney	245, 246, 254	v. Healey	293
White v. Barber	621	v. Hodges	564
v. Buss	617	v. Jackman	267
v. Corliss	223	v. Jones	513
v. Foster	451	v. Lerch	397
v. Franklin Bank	617	v. Poor	629
v. Harvey	406	v. Reynolds	572
v. Miller	354, 585	v. Robb	234
v. Mitchell	561	v. Robinson	431, 488, 492, 493
v. Sawyer	607	v. Spafford	359, 360
v. Welsh	532, 534, 553	v. Tucker	482
v. Wilks	257, 258	v. Willington	629, 645
White Bronze Co. v. Gillette	390 a, 408	Williamson v. Allison	583, 606
Whitehead v. Anderson	563, 564, 565	v. Barton	634
Whitehouse v. Frost	257, 258	v. Berry	200, 211
White Mountain Bank v. West	48	v. Connady	324
Whitfield v. Whitfield	129	v. Johnson	132
Whitford v. Horn	81, 94, 109	v. Russell	609
Whiting v. Barrett	62, 91	Willis v. Smith	78
Whitlock v. West	17	Willoughby v. Moulton	605
Whitman v. Freese	337, 351	Wilmot v. Hurd	332
Whitmarsh v. Walker	451	v. Ouachita Belle	626
Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co.	326, 336, 585	Wilmshurst v. Bowker	273
Whitney v. Boardman	337, 549	Wilson v. Buchanan	118
v. Eaton	294, 296, 304, 419	v. Carpenter	73, 76
v. Heywood	378	v. Cooper	46
v. Slayton	623	v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co.	571
v. Taylor	340	v. Wilson	234
v. Wheeler	184	Winchell v. Carey	625
Whittaker, Ex parte	608	Winchester v. Newton	308
Whittemore v. Gibbs	454	v. Pyrites Co.	264
v. Whittemore	633	Wing v. Clark	264
Whittier v. Dana	496	v. Merchant	70, 76, 80
Whitwell v. Vincent	294	Winpenny v. French	622
Wieler v. Schilizzi	351	Winslow v. Leonard	257, 395
Wiener v. Whipple	499, 504	v. Norton	567
Wiggin v. Day	609	Winsor v. Lombard	337, 344, 348
Wigle v. Wigle	191	Winter v. Winter	69, 70
Wilbur v. How	639	Wise v. Chase	420
Wilcox v. Henderson	324, 329	Wiseman v. Vandeputt	558
v. Matteson	183	Witherby v. Sleeper	311
v. Owens	338	Withers v. Lyss	249
Wilcox Silver Plate Co. v. Green	396	v. Reynolds	293, 298, 308
Wilkins v. Bromhead	261, 266	v. Weaver	131
Wilkinson v. Alston	631	Witt v. Amis	147, 169
v. Evans	485, 488, 494	Wittkowsky v. Wasson	214, 250
v. Holiday	239, 250	Wofford v. Police	16
Willard v. Rice	39, 48	Wolcott v. Hamilton	29
v. Stevens	339	v. Mount 316, 346, 349, 350, 572, 585

	SECTION		SECTION
Wolf v. Van Metre	629	Wright v. Vaughn	395
Wood v. Bell	267, 268	v. Weeks	492
v. Hitchcock	417	v. Wright	148
v. Jones	560	Wulschner v. Ward	445
v. Manley	385, 392	Wyble v. McPheters	84, 104
v. Pierson	15	Wylie's Appeal	542
v. Sheldon	318, 373, 589, 606	Wyoming Bank v. Dayton	395
v. Tassell	385
v. Yeatman	563, 566
Woodburn v. Woodburn	183	Y.
Woodbury v. Robbins	341
v. Woodbury	60	Yaeger Milling Co. v. Brown	625
Woodford v. Patterson	445	Yancey v. Field	184
Woodley v. Coventry	258, 541, 542	Yeakel v. McAtee	60
Woods v. Miller	317	Yenni v. McNamee	556
v. Rocchi	591	Yockey v. Norn	385
v. Russell	259, 267, 268	Yosti v. Laughran	60
Woodward v. City of Boston	637	Youghiogheny Iron Co. v. Smith	579, 580
v. Libby	588
Woolfe v. Horne	629, 634, 646	Young v. Blaisdell	473
Woolston's Appeal	118	v. Cole	318
Wooton v. Hinkle	639	v. Matthews	259, 268
Worcester v. Eaton	617	v. Miles	45, 46
Word v. Cairn	378	v. Young	80, 81, 87
Worth v. McConnell	329	Yourt v. Hopkins	629
v. Northam	38
Worthen v. Wilmot	572	Z.
Worthington v. Bullett	118
v. Cowles	318
Worthy v. Cole	286, 309	Zagury v. Furnell	249
Wright v. Barnes	388	Zaleski v. Clark	313
v. Dannah	504	Zeller v. Jordan	77
v. Lawton	420	Zimmerman v. Morrow	323
v. Percival	464	v. Streeper	81, 175
v. Tetlow	268	Zoller v. Morse	348
v. Vanderplank	60	Zuchtman v. Roberts	305

THE LAW OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

---

PART IV.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

---

CHAPTER I.

TITLE IN GENERAL ; OCCUPANCY.

§ 1. Summary of Doctrines in the Preceding Volume. — In our former volume,<sup>1</sup> after a general statement of our plan of investigation, by way of introduction, we first considered the nature and general incidents of Personal Property, and next proceeded to set forth, in order, the leading classes of Chattels Personal which are recognized in English and American law at the present day, whether such chattels are to be called corporeal or incorporeal ; whether, in other words, they are, like ships, furniture, and animals, objects of bodily senses, or have a mental existence only. In the latter case, as we took occasion to show, the chattel characteristic is essentially that of a valuable money right on behalf of the creditor, and a money debt as correspondingly viewed by the debtor, — this right or debt being sometimes naked and simple, and sometimes established by the additional security of a lien, pledge, or mortgage ; in some instances resting for proof upon word of mouth alone, but in others evidenced by writing as a muniment of title ; by a written instrument, it may be, of such recognized form and character as to float the debt into some one of those specially privileged classes of personal chattels known as negotiable paper, or so as to find representation in a certificate of stock.

<sup>1</sup> Schouler Pers. Prop. vol. i.

§ 2. Our Final Standpoint that of Title; Title and its Essentials.— We are now to view the law of Personal Property from still another and a final standpoint, — that of Title. Title is the true foundation of ownership; and the right of ownership may be defined as that right by which a thing belongs to one person, or set of persons, to the exclusion of all others. If there be any obscurity in the legal significance of “Title,” it is because men apply the word somewhat indiscriminately to the means of establishing a right of ownership, and again to the right itself; in which latter sense alone, and as synonymous with the right of ownership, we mean here to apply it.

Title to real property is now evinced by instruments in writing; and it has long been our universal rule, founded in English legislation, that you can show no transfer of an estate in land by word of mouth: whereas the great criterion of title to personal property is, and always has been, in a primary sense, possession; transfers of chattels, and especially of corporeal chattels, being most frequently effected by mere delivery, without the aid of formal conveyances or the sanction of a public registry. We shall indeed have occasion to observe, as we go on, by way of confirming impressions already received, that possession is not an absolute and unerring test of title to personal property; that there is in chattel jurisprudence a Statute of Frauds of partial application, just as there has been a Statute of Frauds which took away altogether the right of real-estate transfers by parol; that with the modern development of incorporeal chattel law has grown up a system of transfers by indorsement and assignment with peculiar formalities and peculiar results;<sup>1</sup> that, even as to corporeal chattels, there may be a possession wrongfully acquired or kept, which is inconsistent with the genuine right of ownership. And yet, as a general proposition, it is true, that he who has a chattel in his own possession and keeping holds it by a title not likely to be disputed, and needs only to deliver it with suitable intention in order to confer upon another presumptively the exclusive right of an owner.

<sup>1</sup> As to this particular topic, see supra, vol. i. §§ 72, 83.

§ 3. The Same Subject. — But title to property, like any other right, becomes at times a matter of dispute between individuals; and that presumptive evidence of ownership which the possession of a chattel should furnish as against the world will not equally avail to defeat the claim of one out of possession who can show that the chattel belongs to him of right, and not to the possessor. For a title may be, in common parlance, good, bad, or doubtful. A thief may have possession of goods; but a thief has no title. Possession, too, may have been given by a man in fraud of his creditors, or of other parties having prior rights to the person who took the goods from his hands; in which case these third parties may recover the goods, though the party giving possession cannot; and here the holder's title is doubtful. There should be then, in one who acquires personal property, besides possession, the right of possession, to make the title a good one. But one may hold possession of goods merely in trust, or by way of bailment; and, if so, he is a rightful possessor, but no owner, notwithstanding the law usually deems his title sufficient for maintaining an action against strangers who would injure the goods, or deprive him of possession. Besides possession and the right of possession, then, there should be likewise the right of property in order to make a complete and beneficial title by way of ownership.

In short, it is only where possession, the right of possession, and the right of property, meet in one and the same person, that title to the particular chattel stands complete, and an individual's right of ownership indisputable. Any title short of this, if effectual at all, is effectual only under certain phases: either as against certain parties, or for certain purposes. And yet, since possession must, in the nature of things, be essential to an exclusive and proper enjoyment of the chattel, and he who is out of possession with the bare right of property must usually bring an action, overcome presumptions by proof, and establish his own right, it follows that, with possession alone to start with, one may frequently become in time the clear owner. His title ripens and becomes full, not as indisputable, but because undisputed: lapse of time bars out all suitors; and at last his exclusive right to enjoy and transmit no one can deny, for no one can set up and show a better title. All this because he first took possession, and then kept it.

§ 4. How Title to Personal Property may accrue; Original and Derivative Acquisition. — Title to personal property may accrue in three ways: (1) by original acquisition, (2) by a transfer by some act of law, (3) by a transfer by some act of the parties; which last two classes might be embraced under the single head of Derivative Acquisition. And as title reaches down through a chain, so to speak, commensurate in length, if complete, with the chattel's period of actual existence, the first link of the chain, or, supposing a break, of the chain recommenced whose connecting link is gone, stands for title by original acquisition; while each successive link represents a transfer, either by act of law or by act of the parties. Two modes of transfer, again, are contemplated by jurists both of the civil and common law, — transfer as between living parties, and transfer as effected on the death of a party; in neither of which cases would the law willingly suffer the old chain to fail for want of a succeeding link. Thus, then, may the general course of title to personal property be mapped out.<sup>1</sup>

Let us confine ourselves strictly then, in this volume, to Title by Original Acquisition, Title by Gift, and Title by Sale: for, as regards the transfer between living parties, one could seldom become the absolute owner of a specific chattel unless it was sold to him, or given to him, or he stood entitled by original acquisition; while, in one or another of except for the peculiar topic of Gifts causa mortis, which will be found discussed in the present volume.

<sup>1</sup> The devolution of title to personal property on the death of the owner is treated by this author in his work on Executors and Administrators,

these three ways, the full ownership of a chattel constantly arises. These subjects will be taken up and considered in order.

§ 5. Title by Original Acquisition defined; Occupancy, and Title to Products.—For this chapter, and those next succeeding, the subject is Title by Original Acquisition; that is to say, title where the owner takes the chattel without succeeding to the title of any former proprietor.<sup>1</sup> The chain illustration may still remind us that such a title may either begin at the original beginning, or after some break at which ownership lost its hold; in other words, that the owner's right by original acquisition is not always a right commencing at the creation of the identical chattel, but may likewise date from any subsequent period where the chattel has come to him under such circumstances that the law is unable to identify any party from whom he could have derived it. Under the head of Original Acquisition are to be specially considered Occupancy, and the Title to Products.

§ 6. Occupancy; Foundation of Primitive Title.—Occupancy is a term which properly denotes the taking possession of, with intent to appropriate, that which at the time has no owner, and yet had specifically an earlier existence. This sort of title is applicable to corporeal property generally; to lands, with more comprehensiveness than to chattels; in a word, to the things which are found anywhere belonging to nobody. The Roman law recognized such a class under the head of res nullius: comprehending, first, things which never had an owner, such as wild animals, fishes, wild fowl, jewels disinterred, and newly discovered lands; and, next, things which have not now an owner, as movables which have been abandoned, lands which have been deserted, and (by a stretch of analogy) the property of an enemy. In all such cases, whoever first took possession with the intent, as manifested by his acts, of keeping the property as his own was to be regarded the owner; and this principle underlies all the modern law of occupancy.

Title by occupancy, as applying to a primitive state of society, has doubtless afforded law-writers, ancient and modern, a wider field for speculation than the collating of decisions.<sup>1</sup> However much jurists may differ as to the origin of property rights, they are nevertheless quite harmonious in ascribing to occupancy, or the taking possession of a thing, the first foundation of that ownership which, in modern ages, is thought to be nothing if not exclusive. But occupancy alone must have conferred a weak title : length of time, to say the least, would be requisite to perfect it. On occupancy, then, followed by a continuous exclusion of others, the primitive right of ownership has been grounded by most writers on the subject. Savigny, expounding the Roman law, thus clearly epitomizes it : All property is founded on adverse possession ripened by prescription ; a position which differs not essentially from that taken by common-law writers like Blackstone.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 355; Bouvier Dict. "Acquisition."

A learned and acute English writer of our day, however, expresses his dissatisfaction with the conclusions drawn by these authorities, and indeed with the impression which has prevailed hitherto concerning the part played by occupancy in the early stages of society. It is not wonderful, he observes, that property began in adverse possession ; that the first proprietor should have been the strong man armed, who kept his goods in peace : for the mystery resides, not in the mode of assuming exclusive enjoyment, but in showing why it was that lapse of time should have created a sentiment of respect for his possession. And the result of his own reasoning is, that an occupant becomes the owner simply because all things are presumed to be somebody's property, and because no one can be pointed out as having a better right than he to the proprietorship of this particular thing.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Why the right of exclusive ownership should be considered a natural right, given man at the beginning for wise purposes, and not, as some would have us believe, man's own invention at an advanced stage of society, the product of civilization, the author took occasion to show in the first edition of this work. See 1

Schouler Pers. Prop., 1st ed., Introductory Chapter ; omitted in a second edition, for the sake of utilizing space in annotating the latest cases on the main subject considered in that volume.

<sup>2</sup> Maine Ancient Law, 4th ed. c. 8, pp. 256, 257, commenting upon Blackstone, Savigny, and others.

§ 7. The Same Subject.—Discussion might fairly be dropped here, with the remark, that occupancy, or adverse possession, being admitted on all hands to be the primitive legal mode of acquiring ownership in an existing thing, lawyers might well leave abstract questions concerning title to the metaphysicians. But, with the reader's permission, we call attention to still another element in the case, which all of these jurists seem to have overlooked; namely, that of labor and pains bestowed by the first occupant as further strengthening the title he acquired by taking possession. This is an element of ownership which one may trace in legislation on matters of original acquisition. Thus, under the present laws of the United States which deal with the waste and unoccupied public lands, a settler acquires title, not by merely squatting on the lands, but by bestowing a certain amount of work in improving the premises, besides occupying them for a fixed time. As the reward of labor, following upon occupation of the soil, government gives him the right of pre-emption therein, or donates the land to him outright. The law of emblements and fixtures proceeds upon a similar recognition. And again, to revert to personal property acquired by way of creation, authors and inventors are specially protected by law in the enjoyment of their valuable brain productions, because the sentiment is universal that every man ought to take the legitimate fruits of his own labor.

We may say, then, that the primitive title to property, which, as jurists agree, is founded in occupancy, ripens and inspires the respect of society through length of time and the bestowal of labor. For, let it be remembered, scarcely anything worthy the name of property is to be found in a primitive stage of society: the soil must be cleared and cultivated; minerals must be dug up; wild animals must be chased and caught; useful implements must be skilfully fashioned from materials gathered with care; even a valuable article, already prepared and ready for use, requires one's pains to keep it from spoiling; in fine, occupancy and labor must everywhere conjoin, or else exclusive enjoyment in any beneficial sense becomes a physical impossibility.<sup>1</sup>

§ 8. Occupancy in Modern Times; Chattels abandoned or derelict. — So much, then, for primitive occupancy. It is plain that, in a polished age and society like ours, where discovered lands are owned, whether wild or cultivated, by various individuals and by individual portions, title by occupancy to personal property can seldom occur save where something turns up, presumably owned before, but without a known owner capable of conferring the immediate title. The former owner has most likely abandoned or lost it, or some one has stolen it from him. Possibly he lives, and is unaware of his title; or he has died, leaving no one to come forward and claim the property by transmission.

To say that the thing, being of much intrinsic worth, was designedly abandoned would rarely be less than a violent assumption: men may give what they deem valuable for a designated object, and to persons or societies of their own choice; but they are not foolish enough to throw it upon the casual public. Yet instances of strict abandonment are doubtless to be found, especially where a product is deemed valueless by the owner who throws it away, while to some finder it would be valuable. Thus, manure belongs originally to the owner of an animal; but, by leaving the manure in the road where it was dropped, he is presumed to have abandoned it; in which case the first taker has a right to appropriate the chattel to himself.<sup>2</sup> A similar rule would apply to old clothing, junk, ashes, slops, and the like, which the owner casts out of his premises as worthless: for any-

<sup>1</sup> The primitive idea of occupancy seems naturally to attach in the first instance to the soil, and thus embrace, under the real estate, the potential acquisition of personal chattels from such possession.

The origin of the title to territory, as between different sovereign claimants to the New World is said to be discovery. Story Constitution, §§ 1-30; Johnson v. M'Intosh, 8 Wheat.

543. But occupancy is necessary to strengthen such a title; and improving the territorial possession by building a fort, establishing a trading station, or settling a colony and cultivating the soil, makes the rightful title still more positive.

<sup>2</sup> Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 500. Though it is possible the town might have a right as against the taker. Ib.

thing which one throws away, or leaves in such manner as to warrant an inference that he means to make no further claim thereto, comes under the rule of derelict or abandoned property, which may be appropriated by the first taker ;<sup>1</sup> subject of course, in each case, to such paramount title, if any, as local legislation may have given the State or municipality.

On the other hand, where one's cargo or chest of valuables has sunk to the bottom of a lake or sea, through some calamity, his ownership rights are not gone ; but he may contract to have the property raised by divers or may transfer his title to others.<sup>2</sup> Nor even though an aerolite should fall from the sky, never before having had a human owner, can a person, on the assumption of prior discovery, go upon another's land where it lies imbedded and take it away without the latter's consent.<sup>3</sup> In general, the abandoning intent of ownership cannot be inferred readily in favor of strangers and intruders ; while the facts usually warrant no such inference at all, but rather that of loss or concealment.

§ 9. Waifs ; to whom they belong. — Waifs are stolen goods waived or scattered by a thief in his flight in order to facilitate his escape. The common law, according to Blackstone, made such things the property of the king, whenever taken on his behalf ; any private finder in this case being disregarded, and even the plundered owner himself being powerless at law to procure restitution, on the fanciful theory that he could not have chased the thief with sufficient zeal if the king's officer got the property before him. No such absurd and unjust rule as this has ever been adopted in the United States ; and even in England it is set out with much reservation. And as no title can or ought to be conferred by a thief, running or standing, the true policy would seem to be that now quite generally recognized : namely, to make the State, wherever its officers take such property, acquire title substantially in trust for the true owner, who may regain the property on duly establishing his rights, and who, of course, shall have the things as his own if he takes them first from the thief;<sup>1</sup> or if no owner appears, to give the State or the whole community the benefit.

<sup>1</sup> Bouvier Dict. "Derelict ;" 2 Kent Com. 357. As to property in the hands of an officer, under judicial process, see Norton v. Nye, 56 Me. 211.

<sup>2</sup> Murphy v. Dunham, 58 Fed. 503.

<sup>3</sup> Goddard v. Winchell, 86 Iowa, 71. And see Elwes v. Brigg Gas Co., 33 Ch. D. 562.

§ 10. Treasure-Trove and its Ownership.— All such derelict as we have described are of chattels inanimate found on the earth's surface. Where chattels of value are found in the earth, under circumstances which indicate that they were at some former period concealed or deposited there by an owner now unknown, they are styled treasure-trove; and the term applies in general to money, bullion, valuable plate, and works of art, found hidden in any private place.<sup>2</sup> The fact of burying or concealing indicates rather the desire to keep safely than to part possession; and hence if the owner, whose secret was presumably lost, can be found, the property must be restored to him, or if he be dead, to his heirs or representatives.<sup>2</sup> But where no owner can be found, as generally happens, the property vests, according to the late English law, in the king. In most of the United States, the legislature has vested treasure-trove in the State as bona vacantia, though liberally remembering the finder who does not trespass and follows the formalities.<sup>3</sup> But the civil law, to a large extent, favored the owner of the soil, wherever hidden treasure was found; also the casual finder in another person's lands.<sup>4</sup> Such, too, appears to have been the early rule of the common law; but it is now a criminal offence in England for an individual finder to appropriate such property to himself, while concealing his discovery from the government.<sup>5</sup> But the strict government prerogative of treasure-trove appears to be limited usually to gold and silver coins; and, sub-

<sup>1</sup> 1 Bl. Com. 296, 297; 2 Kent Com. 358; Cro. Eliz. 694. Even the common law asserts the king's right with numerous reservations.

<sup>2</sup> Valuables are sometimes found which had been secreted by the owners, though not underground. Warren v. Aldrich, 130 Penn. St. 413.

<sup>3</sup> See Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269.

<sup>4</sup> 1 Bl. Com. 295, 296; 2 Kent Com. 358; Bouvier Dict. "Treasure-Trove;" Grot. de Jure Bell. et Pac. b. 2, c. 8, § 7; [1893] 1 Ch. 676.

<sup>5</sup> Reg. v. Thomas, 12 W. R. 108. See also 2 Bish. Crim. Law, 5th ed. §§ 875, 876.

ject to any claim of the State or monarch, the owner of the soil to buried property discovered therein has been preferred to the actual discoverer.<sup>1</sup>

§ 11. Wrecks; Ancient and Modern Doctrines as to Title. — A sort of constructive abandonment — or, as it might rather be termed, of forced abandonment — arises in the case of a wreck. By wreck, we popularly denote the destruction of a ship or vessel on the shore; and the maritime law, under this head, comprehends goods lately on board, and fragments of the shattered vessel, all of which are cast upon the land by the sea, and left so as to belong to the jurisdiction, not of admiralty, but of common law. Goods, to be wreck, should be found at low water, between high and low water mark; though whether resting wholly on the shore, or partially moved by the water, matters not.<sup>2</sup>

Wrecked goods were anciently adjudged to belong to the king; not, on the usual principle of derelict, to the first finder, lest bands of wreckers, those pests of a community, should be too greatly incited to plunder; nor even to the original owner, because it was said that all title had passed out of him when the ship went down. This sovereign right was usually delegated, by way of a perquisite, to the lord of the manor. But thus to apply the law of derelict was felt to be harsh indeed towards the owner; it was adding sorrow to sorrow: and hence was enacted the statute of Edward I., giving to the owner of wrecked property a year and a day in which to make his claim; and further providing, as the commentaries ran, that if a man, or a dog, or a cat, escaped alive to shore, the vessel should not be deemed a wreck.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Elwes v. Brigg Gas Co., 33 Ch. D. 562, where a prehistoric boat was discovered by the lessee of the premises in excavating six feet below the surface. See also 86 Iowa, 71.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Hale, in his treatise De Jure Maris 37, speaking of wreck, says: "The kinds of it are two: First, such as is called properly so, the goods cast upon the land or shore; second, improper, for goods that are a kind of sea waifs or stray; flotsam, jetsam, and ligam." Flotsam means what floats upon the water; jetsam what had been cast into the sea to save the ship; ligam what is buoyed in a measure. See 58 Fed. 503, 509.

<sup>3</sup> Stat. Westm. 3 Edw. I. c. 4, amending earlier statutes; Hamilton v. Davis, 5 Burr. 2732.

Out of this latter quaint expression grew a curious controversy, in which the sensible and humane finally prevailed over the more precise construction of the statute; for it was decided in a case before Lord Mansfield about a century ago, upon full argument, that the dog and cat of the old law were used merely by way of illustration, and not in a literal sense; that the true intent of the act was to save the goods to the owner, provided something remained to identify the property as his, whether it were a live animal or a dead one, or any distinguishing mark. The whole inquiry, therefore, conformably to this decision, resolves itself into a question of ownership; and, under this statute (which is old enough to be deemed part of the common law of our country as well as of England), the goods go to the original owner if their identity can be established. A year and a day is the period allowed for the owner of wrecked goods to make his claim known; and, where the goods are of a perishable nature, they are sold, and the proceeds are retained subject to the same rule of final disposition.<sup>1</sup>

Ships or vessels, and their merchandise, found constructively derelict or abandoned at sea, are not, it is perceived, within the strict definition of wreck, though apparently once regarded as a sovereign perquisite of a similar sort. Later English statutes require the proceeds of such property, when sold, to be placed in the national exchequer, subject there to be claimed by the true owner within a year and a day.<sup>2</sup> So that the same generous policy now prevails, whether the admiralty or common-law courts take jurisdiction.

§ 12. The Same Subject. — Since admiralty jurisdiction belongs to the United States, and that at common law over the sea-shore to the several States, our American law of wreck and derelict at sea must necessarily be of limited application, whether on State or Federal side. But appropriate legislation has done much to insure uniformity, and to secure justice to the true owner, under whatever circumstances. It would appear that the proceeds of derelict property found at sea, for which no claimant appears, vest in the United States, subject to the payment of salvage.<sup>1</sup> As to property thrown upon the coasts, or found in inland and not navigable waters, the law of the particular State applies; the general policy of American legislation being, however, to keep the property or its proceeds for a year, subject to redemption by the owner; and, if not claimed within that period, to put the proceeds into the public treasury; usually regarding the casual finder only to the extent of paying all expenses, and perhaps allowing him something by way of salvage besides. Commissioners are appointed to take custody of shipwrecked goods, and preserve them on behalf of the State, subject to the owner's claims within the specified period; and penalties are imposed upon all private persons who intermeddle with such property with the object of appropriating it to themselves.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 1 Bl. Com. 291, 292; Hamilton v. Davis, 5 Burr. 2732; Bract. lib. 3, c. 3; 2 Kent Com. 323. See Dunwich v. Perry, 1 B. & Ad. 831.

<sup>2</sup> Acts 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 334; Palmer v. Rouse, 3 H. & N. 505.

§ 13. Various Things afloat without apparent Ownership.— In construing all such statutes, the courts are careful not only to distinguish between ships and goods cast upon the shore by the sea and those found afloat without an apparent owner, but even in the latter class of cases to discriminate according as circumstances may indicate that the property was or was not actually adrift because of some marine disaster. Thus, timber found floating loose not far from land may have merely slipped from its proper fastenings; and so it may frequently be with a stray boat. Some statutes are enacted with special provision for floating timber; and, in general, the burdensome formalities attending wreck legislation are not to be pursued where apparently there has been no marine disaster. Especially is this true of salvage compensation; though doubt-

<sup>1</sup> Peabody v. Bags of Cotton, 2 Am. Jur. 119; 2 Kent Com. 359; Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286. A vessel several miles from shore, much submerged, with boat gone, running rigging overboard, and a distress flag set, is presumed derelict and abandoned by the owners, even though anchored. 37 Fed. 233.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 359, with reference to local statutes, in notes; Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286; Mass. Gen. Sts. c. 81. As to salvage generally, see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 329, 330.

less the owner of the rescued property ought at least to make the finder whole for all expenses incidental to its preservation while in the latter's keeping.<sup>1</sup>

Whether marine products like seaweed, cast upon the shore, between high and low water mark, may be taken by the first finder, on the general principle of occupancy, is a question on which authorities differ: for the reason, that by the rule of some States, like Massachusetts, the rights of the owner of adjoining soil are deemed to extend to low-water mark; while in others, like Connecticut, they are limited at high-water. Where the former rule applies, the proprietorship of the soil would appear to confer a title, even as to wrecks, only secondary to the paramount claims of the State and the original owner, and quite sufficient for dispossessing any intruder upon the shore who claims to have been the first finder.<sup>2</sup>

§ 14. Lost Chattels; Rights of Finder, etc. — As to lost chattels, the general rule is drawn, like that of goods strictly abandoned, from the broad principle of occupancy. And here the first finder will acquire title to the thing by taking possession; his right of ownership, however, being less substantial than in the instance of derelict, inasmuch as there still remains a paramount claimant; namely, the loser, who may recover the property on presenting himself and establishing his right. The finder of lost property, then, has, at the common law, a valid title thereto against all the world except the true owner.<sup>3</sup> Nor is lost property the subject of larceny, or a suit for conversion, while the finder remains in ignorance of the former owner.<sup>4</sup>

A leading English case on the finder's title to lost goods is Bridges v. Hawkesworth.<sup>5</sup> A commercial traveller called

<sup>1</sup> Scott v. Willson, 3 N. H. 321; Barron v. Davis, 4 N. H. 338; Palmer v. Rouse, 3 Hurl. & N. 505; Baker v. Hoag, 3 Seld. 555; Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286, and authorities cited.

<sup>2</sup> Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382, passim; contra, Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. 255. And see Reg. v. Clinton, Jr. Law Rep. 4 C. L. 6, 16, cited 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 877.

<sup>3</sup> Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 7 E. L. & Eq. 424; 15 Jur. 1079; 1 Strange, 505; 2 Kent Com. 356; McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen, 548.

<sup>4</sup> Lawrence v. State, 1 Humph. 228; Queen v. Glyde, L. R. 1 C. C. 739; 16 Oreg. 269. And see infra.

<sup>5</sup> 7 E. L. & Eq. 424; 15 Jur. 1079 (Q. B. 1851). And see Merry v. Green, 7 M. & W. 623.

at a shop on business; and, as he was leaving, saw a small parcel lying on the floor, which he picked up, and showed to the shopman. Opening the parcel in the shopman's presence, he found it contained a considerable sum of money. He now called one of the firm, and placed the money in his hands for the purpose of having the property duly advertised for an owner. This was done; but the advertisement remained unanswered. No owner appeared; and, after three years had elapsed, the commercial traveller asked the firm to return the property to him, offering at the same time to pay all expenses, and furnish indemnity; but the firm refused to do so. Upon this state of facts a suit was brought. It was clear, that, had the parcel been found outside of the shop, the finder's right would have accrued; nor did the circumstances show a waiver of such right. But the single point at issue, and a novel one at common law, was, whether the circumstance of finding the property in their shop gave the firm any right as against the finder. The court decided that it did not, and applied to the case the general rule of occupancy; giving the property to the finder exclusively. We may not from this case, however, safely conclude that the local situation of the property is always to be disregarded. Yet the general rule now favored is that the finder of miscellaneous lost property is entitled to it as against all the world except the true owner, and that the place where it is found is ordinarily of no consequence, provided the finder be no trespasser.<sup>1</sup> Merely to

<sup>1</sup> Thus, there is a later Massachusetts case, which decides that where a transient customer accidentally leaves his pocket-book on the table at a barber's shop, and another customer sees it, and hands it to the barber to be advertised and kept for the true owner, the barber's title is paramount to that of this latter customer. McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen, 548; Lawrence v. State, 1 Humph. 228. Semble, that under such circumstances as these a waiver of the finder's right, if any right existed, might be inferred. For there may be a delivery to the owner of the premises inconsistent with such waiver. Even an employee who finds lost property on the employer's premises may, as against the employer, claim the property, as it is held, where delivered only temporarily to the latter. Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281; Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Penn. St. 377. Hence the right of finder may accrue, though the receptacle in which the thing was found belonged to another, and the finder was merely a bailee. Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588. And see Tancil v. Seaton, 28 Gratt. 601, as to a bank-note.

see a thing which the owner has casually laid down, and forgotten to take away, — both parties being customers in the place where it is left, — does not appear, nevertheless, to be so positive a case of occupancy as to entitle one to the rights of a finder.<sup>1</sup>

How far the loser's own title may be put at jeopardy by subsequent transfers of the found chattel will be presently noticed.<sup>2</sup> As to the finder, there are certain duties and rights resulting from the discovery. He should not only take suitable care of the property if he assumes to be the lawful finder at all, but should make reasonable efforts to ascertain the true owner: all this according to the special circumstances of the case, and with due reference to the value and perishability of the chattel. Advertising is usually resorted to; and, as the loser will probably advertise likewise in a matter of value, the finder can hardly be justified in turning from traces of ownership which are placed before his eyes.

§ 15. The Same Subject. — It follows that the finder is always entitled to suitable recompense for the expense and labor to which he may have been put in preserving the chattel and ascertaining the former owner; in other words, to full indemnity. And, besides, if the loser offer a reward for its restoration, the finder, upon giving it up, has the right to demand payment of the same; but as questions of this kind, so far as lost property on land is concerned, are determined upon the principles of contract, and not salvage, — in which respect we follow the Roman law, — the finder, who once accepts in satisfaction less than the advertised reward, cannot afterwards claim the full amount offered by the loser, even though he had deserved it.<sup>3</sup> Until a perfect title has

<sup>1</sup> See Kincaid v. Eaton, 98 Mass. 139; Merry v. Green, 7 M. & W. 623.

<sup>2</sup> See, as to market-overt, &c., infra.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 356, 357; Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254; Wentworth v. Day, 3 Met. 352; Marvin v. Treat, 37 Conn. 96. As to the finder's lien for compensation, see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 381; Wood v. Pierson, 45

Mich. 313. The finder cannot withhold possession from the known loser for the sake of a reward, and a promise thus extorted from the latter is void. 1 New Mex. 226. But his right to a reward is not waived by insisting on the identification of the property or any legal advantage connected with the finding. His conduct as to an ascertained owner must be accrued to the finder through lapse of time and the non-appearance of the true owner, his right of possession is to be deemed rather in trust than by way of ownership; a title sufficient, nevertheless, to enable him to maintain trover against all third parties.<sup>1</sup>

Legislation has, here as elsewhere, sought lately to narrow the rights of the individual occupant, by making the State or local municipality a paramount owner, and at the same time taking such initial steps as may the better enable the true owner to trace out and recover his property. Under the policy of Massachusetts and some other States, the first finder seems to be treated somewhat as a salvor, though perhaps not quite so favorably; and, next to the loser, the public steps in as the paramount party entitled to the benefit of a discovery of lost chattels. The practical enforcement of such legislation must needs be difficult; in small things, and with reference to society at large, almost impossible; since the finder, secure in what he deems a natural right, will risk threatened penalties in the hope of personal advantage: yet, in the case of valuable goods, there is much to commend a rule whose theory is to substitute for individual aggrandizement the equal welfare of all.<sup>2</sup>

§ 16. Rule as to Lost or Destroyed Negotiable Instruments.—Now that valuable chattels of the incorporeal sort abound, written instruments have become important muniments of title. Let us apply to these the doctrine of lost and found. If a writing be lost or unintentionally destroyed, the cause of action thereon is not thereby extinguished; for the general principle is, that the party who seeks to recover upon it must first prove the loss affirmatively by direct or indirect testimony, according to the circumstances; after which he may furnish secondary proof of its contents. This is the only prerequisite to a full recovery, unless the writing were of a negotiable character.<sup>3</sup> judged by all the circumstances.

Wood v. Pierson, 45 Mich. 313.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent 356; Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 7 E. L. & Eq. 424; 15 Jur. 1079.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 356 n.; Mass. Pub. Stats. (1882) c. 95; Jones v. Smyth, 18 N. H. 119.

<sup>3</sup> Clark v. Hornbeck, 2 C. E. Green, 430; Hoereth v. Franklin Mill Co.,

But this difficulty presents itself in the case of lost negotiable instruments, like bills, notes, and coupon bonds: that the party liable for payment thereof has undertaken to pay according to its tenor any one who may present the instrument properly indorsed to himself, or who occupies the mercantile standing of "bearer;" and accordingly should require the instrument to be delivered up to him for his suitable protection. Hence the law courts laid down the rule, that the party liable on negotiable paper could be sued if the writing were proved to be utterly destroyed, or lost while requiring some indorsement to give it negotiability, or even if lost when overdue; in other words, whenever the instrument was not in the full negotiable condition at the time the rightful owner had parted possession; for here the party liable on the instrument incurred no substantial risk; but otherwise the loss constituted a good defence. This principle of defence was applied to bank-notes, bills, promissory notes, coupon bonds, and the like; indeed, wherever any finder might give the instrument new circulation, and render the debtor liable a second time. Consequently the payee of a lost note or bond which is in full negotiable condition, cannot sue at law for the amount.<sup>1</sup>

But since the law here failed to do full justice between the parties, equity came in with a remedy well adapted to the emergency. Its rule was, that the party justly entitled to the instrument, who was unable either to produce it, or show that when he parted possession it was unavailable for title to others, should give a bond of indemnity to the debtor party, and thereupon might recover what was due. This has at length become the prevailing doctrine of England and America; our modern practice so blending equity and common-law functions as to enable the ordinary tribunals in most instances to afford a remedy of the same sort.<sup>2</sup> Manifestly, however,

30 Ill. 151; Swift v. Stevens, 8 Conn. 431; 1 Greenl. Evid. § 558. And see 66 Fed. 799, where equity declines to establish a lost instrument, merely for use as evidence in an action of tort.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Clark v. Snow, 60 Vt. 205;

Adams v. Edmunds, 55 Vt. 352. Cf. 43 Minn. 205 as to a destroyed note.

<sup>2</sup> Clay v. Crowe, 8 Ex. 295; Tuttle v. Standish, 4 Allen, 387; Des Arts v. Leggett, 16 N. Y. 582; 2 Pars. Bills & Notes, 260-263; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 458; Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455;

no negotiable instrument, lost or not lost, is to be sued upon before the maturity of the debt which it represents ;<sup>1</sup> and, if a bond of indemnity from the loser will suffice to enable him to recover on the lost instrument in any case, it is simply because this gives adequate protection to the party liable, since the indemnity requisite is always assumed to be that which properly covers the whole ground.<sup>2</sup>

§ 17. Estrays and Wild Animals; their Ownership. — An estray is any domestic animal whose owner is unknown. Estrays at English law belonged to the lord of the soil within whose domains they happened to be found ; but proclamation in the adjoining towns was usually required, and the former owner had a year and a day allowed him to reclaim the property as his own. In most if not all of the United States, there are statutes concerning estrays and animals generally which are found running at large ; the common practice being for the city or town authorities to impound the animals, subject to the true owner's reasonable claim ; and if no owner appears to claim and pay expenses, to dispose of them finally for the benefit of the public.<sup>3</sup> Tame animals found at large are Wofford v. Police, 44 Miss. 579 ; Hill v. Barney, 18 N. H. 607 ; McMillan v. Bethold, 35 Ill. 250 ; 21 W. Va. 183 ; Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183 ; Fells Point Savings Institution v. Weedon, 18 Md. 320 ; Perkins v. Cushman, 44 Me. 484 ; Bank of Mobile v. Meagher, 33 Ala. 622 ; Story Eq. Jur. §§ 81, 82 ; 123 Ind. 41 ; Schmidt v. People's Nat. Bank, 153 Mass. 550. And see, as to a lost insurance policy, England v. Lord Tredegar, L. R. 1 Eq. 344. Equity here seeks to afford relief without violating equal or superior equities to that of the loser. Chesapeake Canal Co. v. Blair, 45 Md. 102.

<sup>1</sup> Clay v. Crowe, 8 Ex. 295, per Parke, B.

<sup>2</sup> Tuttle v. Standish, 4 Allen, 387 ; Bond v. Whitfield, 32 Ga. 215 ; Savannah Nat. Bank v. Haskins, 101 Mass. 370.

<sup>3</sup> Strauser v. Kosier, 58 Penn. St.

496 ; State v. Harvey, 28 Tex. 632 ; Newsom v. Hart, 14 Mich. 233 ; Boothe v. Fitzpatrick, 36 Vt. 681 ; Clark v. Lewis, 35 Ill. 417 ; Abb. U. S. Dig. 1st Series, "Animals ;" Whitlock v. West, 26 Conn. 406 ; Rice v. Underwood, 27 Mo. 551 ; Goodwyn v. Cheveley, 4 H. & N. 631 ; Morse v. Reed, 28 Me. 481 ; 63 Me. 154. In some States the property goes to the finder, if not claimed. Hudson v. Agee, 6 Bush, 366. One who takes up an estray cannot claim reward, but only indemnity. Amory v. Flynn, 10 Johns. 102 ; Ford v. Ford, 3 Wis. 399. The person upon whose premises cattle stray is sometimes allowed to detain them. A lien upon the estray for expenses is given here by legislation. 63 Me. 84. But a private right to distrain animals merely grazing upon the highway is not to be inferred. 36 Wis. 42. As to animals not known to be dangerous no rule of law in doubtless sometimes of the derelict sort, — unusual labor and expense being involved in the keeping of this class of chattels, — but have more commonly strayed from the true owner. The public health and safety furnish reasons for other statutes and ordinances relating to stray animals, such as permitting unlicensed dogs to be killed, trespassing animals to be impounded by the finder, and the like.<sup>1</sup> But as all such legislation is in derogation of private rights, every act of this sort is to be fairly construed; in the owner's favor if possible, and against those who would wantonly deprive him of his property; yet always with due regard for the ancient maxim, that one should so use what belongs to himself as not to injure others.<sup>2</sup>

Wild animals, whose ownership has already formed a topic for investigation, furnish the only distinct class of chattels which could possibly have been made the subject of primitive occupancy.<sup>3</sup> Even here, notwithstanding the universal principle of law, that all mankind may pursue and take animals, whether of the air, earth, or water, in a wild state, the first occupant becoming the owner, there is found a restraint which ownership of the soil imposes, and which fastens the closer as population grows and civilization advances.<sup>4</sup> this country, aside from legislation, ever compelled a man to be liable for the trespass of his cattle upon unenclosed grounds of his neighbor. 133 U. S. 320.

<sup>1</sup> Kerr v. Seaver, 11 Allen, 151; Carter v. Dow, 16 Wis. 298; Adams v. Adams, 13 Pick. 384; Stevens v. Curtis, 18 Pick. 227; Campbell v. Evans, 45 N. Y. 356; Blair v. Forehand, 100 Mass. 136; Ladue v. Branch, 42 Vt. 574; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 50.

<sup>2</sup> See, besides cases supra, 2 Kent Com. 359; 1 Bl. Com. 297; 2 ib. 14; Ibbotson v. Peat, 3 H. & C. 644; Drew v. Spaulding, 45 N. H. 472; Wheatly v. Harris, 4 Sneed, 468; Williams v. Dixon, 65 N. C. 416. The stray decisions are very numerous, but not of much general importance. In newly settled and agricultural regions, cattle are generally permitted to range at will. 5 Col. 425. But statutory restrictions are imposed as population increases; such enactments, however, receiving a fair interpretation as to the owner of animals. Marietta R. v. Stephenson, 24 Ohio St. 48; Montgomery v. Breed, 34 Wis. 649; Weir v. Cram, 37 Iowa, 649.

In some large cattle-raising States, e.g. Texas, an owner of cattle brands his animals; and the brand, being matter of public record, identifies such property. State v. Haws, 41 Tex. 161; ib. 168, 186; Allen v. State, 42 Tex. 517. See more generally as to legislation concerning animals, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 50, notes.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 48-51, 97.

<sup>4</sup> See 2 Bl. Com. 403; Inst. 2, 1,

§ 18. Stolen Chattels; Rights of Ownership, etc.—The doctrine of chattels lost borders closely upon that of stolen chattels; but the standing of the taker, in the latter instance, is found essentially different in the circumstance that he has knowingly deprived the true owner of his property. The ancient laws of Europe seemed not averse to substituting the king for the thief, in all respects except punishment for the crime; for, upon the latter's conviction, the stolen goods were confiscated to the sovereign, without paying the slightest regard to the true owner's claim. But, in course of time, men grew wiser; and it is now our fundamental rule of personal property, that no man shall be deprived of his own property, without his consent.<sup>1</sup> At this day, the rightful owner, although out of possession, has a right to sell the property of which another has wrongfully deprived him, and to convey a title sufficient for the latter to set up in order to dispossess the wrong-doer.<sup>2</sup> As against the thief or wrong-doer: furthermore, as against any subsequent person who has acquired possession with knowledge of the theft, the true owner may follow up and regain the chattel which he had never intended to part with; for since the thief himself had no legal title to be transferred, neither has one who stands upon that title, at all events where he knew it had been wrongfully acquired.<sup>3</sup>

It matters not what the purchaser in bad faith may have paid for the goods: the law does not suffer the guilty partaker to profit by the thief's criminal act. Upon conviction of the thief, according to the practice commonly sanctioned by statute at the present day, the property, if in the custody

12; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 48-51. Statutes may affect this right of occupancy likewise. See, for instance, the game laws of England, 2 Bl. Com. 410-419, and n. The trespasser on land acquires no property in animals killed there as against the owner of the soil. Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. Cas. 621.

<sup>1</sup> Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. 285; 2 Kent Com. 321, 323; 2 Bl. Com. 449, 450.

<sup>2</sup> Tome v. Dubois, 6 Wall. 648; Hall v. Robinson, 2 Comst. 293; Carpenter v. Hale, 8 Gray, 157.

<sup>3</sup> Possession of personal property, obtained by taking it by a trespass from the premises of the person previously in possession, gives the trespasser no right as against the other. Cumberledge v. Cole, 44 Iowa, 181.

of the law-officers, becomes reinvested in the owner, and is restored to him.<sup>1</sup> Neither reward, nor indemnity for expenses incurred, can be demanded by the wrong-doer; and to discourage the compounding of crimes—a practice to which an owner too naturally inclines, so long as the thief can keep him at arm's length—there are frequently enactments, founded in sound policy, which make it a penal offence even to offer rewards for property stolen or lost in terms purporting that money will be paid and no questions asked, on restitution.<sup>2</sup>

§ 19. Bonâ Fide Holder's Title to Lost or Stolen Chattels.—Justice demands, therefore, and the law concedes, that the owner of lost or stolen personal property may pursue and reclaim the chattel wherever he can find and identify it. But, in his pursuit, he is sometimes met by a countervailing equity: namely, that of some holder of the chattel who has acquired it in good faith, and on payment of a valuable consideration. Here the law is in a quandary. It is difficult to apply a just rule; some innocent person must needs suffer loss. In England, the doctrine of sale in markets-overt or fairs has long been enforced to meet such cases. Sales in markets-overt are available against the original owner for the protection of an innocent purchaser, even though he bought the goods of a thief. While, in the country, there were customary days for market-overt sales, and a customary spot of ground for particular kinds of goods, thus insuring somewhat that publicity of transfer which the law contemplated as essential, the owner's chance of recovering his goods, if they were once brought into London, was very slight; for, in that city, every shop where goods of that particular sort were professedly exposed to sale was deemed for that purpose a market-overt, and every day of the week, save Sunday, a market

<sup>1</sup> Scattergood v. Sylvester, 15 Q. B. 506; supra, § 9.

<sup>2</sup> Florence Sewing-Machine Co. v. Warford, 1 Sweeny, 433; Lockhart v. Barnard, 14 M. & W. 674; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 102. If a stolen chattel be pledged by a wrong-doer, the

pledgee in general acquires no title. 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 406; Singer Man. Co. v. Clark, 5 Ex. D. 37; Cooper v. Willomatt, 1 C. B. 672. See as to pledge in general, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. Part III. c. 5.

day. Such, for centuries, has been the English rule, beginning at a period when simple methods of corporeal transfer prevailed, and extending down into an age of mercantile transactions of the most varied and complex sort.<sup>1</sup> This antiquated doctrine of markets-overt has never been recognized in the United States: on the contrary, we find it in several States expressly repudiated.<sup>2</sup> Even in England it has not been allowed to apply to transfers by gift or pledge, nor to sales conducted after sunset or in closed shops, nor under circumstances inconsistent with a bonâ fide purchase: in a word, the whole transaction, through delivery and payment, should be free from artifice and stealth, so that the former owner may have a full opportunity of overtaking the goods, and stopping the sale before it is too late.<sup>3</sup>

The American rule being to disregard this whole system of markets-overt, we are thrown back upon the general doctrine of the civilians of Europe, that no one can transfer a greater title than he himself has. We shield the true owner from loss; and consequently the bonâ fide purchaser, like the dishonest receiver and the thief, must surrender the chattel to the owner, whose right to lay hold of that which was taken without his consent, wherever he can find it, is thus put upon the very strongest foundation. The purchaser, in that event, has no recourse but to the party from whom he purchased; he must rely for indemnity upon the Clandestine sale of stolen goods on the purchaser's premises not a market-overt sale. Hargreave v. Spink [1892] 1 Q. B. 25. Under act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 100, the property of stolen animals revests in the true owner on conviction of the thief, notwithstanding a sale in market-overt. Meanwhile, however, a bonâ fide purchaser at such sale is owner; so that he cannot, in absence of a contract with the true owner, claim the costs of keeping the animal, when a surrender is demanded. Walker v. Matthews, 8 Q. B. D. 100.

<sup>1</sup> Cundy v. Lindsay, 3 App. Cas. 459. If not purchased in market-overt, the bonâ fide holder's title is infirm. Ib.

<sup>2</sup> Ventress v. Smith, 10 Pet. 161; Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. 285; Dame v. Baldwin, 8 Mass. 518; Black v. Jones, 64 N. C. 318; Dawson v. Susong, 1 Heisk. 243; 2 Kent Com. 323, 324; Ketchum v. Brennan, 53 Miss. 596; 79 Penn. St. 290; Quinn v. Davis, 78 Penn. St. 15.

<sup>3</sup> Crane v. London Dock Co., 5 B. & S. 313; 2 Inst. 713; 2 Bl. Com. 449, 450; Benj. Sales, Book I., part 1, c. 2, § 1; Lee v. Bayes, 18 C. B. 599.

implied or express warranty of title under which he made payment to his vendor.<sup>1</sup> The effect of this is salutary in discouraging dealings with irresponsible parties. An auctioneer, too, who sells stolen goods, has been made answerable to the true owner for the proceeds of the sale paid over by him to the thief, notwithstanding his own innocence of criminal intention.<sup>2</sup>

§ 20. Exception as to Bonâ Fide Holder for Value of Negotiable Instruments. — But, as concerns money, bank-notes, and current and not overdue negotiable instruments lost or stolen, the rule is well established, in the courts both of England and America, that the bonâ fide holder, who has paid a valuable consideration or furnished an equivalent, shall retain title against any former owner, — even against one from whom such chattel had been stolen. The only material questions here arising are two : (1) whether the present holder was a purchaser ; (2) whether his purchase was under circumstances of good faith and without notice of infirm title ; and the evidence is to be submitted to the jury, as in other questions of fact, for decision according to the weight of testimony. It is not enough for the owner dispossessed by loss or theft to show that the present holder had failed to make careful inquiries as to title before purchasing, and took the same imprudently ; for honest intent alone becomes the vital issue wherever a valuable consideration has passed ; nor are imprudence and negligence necessarily inconsistent with good faith.<sup>3</sup> The same principle applies to pledgees or three years is held to divest the rights of the original owner of a stolen chattel. Garrett v. Vaughan, 1 Baxt. 113.

<sup>1</sup> Ventress v. Smith, and other authorities cited supra. See Sales, infra, as to the doctrine of warranty. Whether the theft was a larceny at common law or by statute, a purchaser from the thief gets no title. Breckenridge v. McAfee, 54 Ind. 141.

<sup>2</sup> Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. 285 ; § 630 a. See also Sharp v. Parks, 48 Ill. 511. Adverse possession usually strengthens one's title in the lapse of time. Supra, § 6. And in Tennessee even the adverse possession of a bonâ fide purchaser for a period of

<sup>3</sup> Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343 ; Backhouse v. Harrison, 5 B. & Ad. 1098 ; Hamilton v. Vought, 5 Vroom, 187, disapproving Gill v. Cubitt, 3 B. & C. 466 ; 2 Pars. Bills & Notes, 263-279, and cases cited ; 13 East, 130 ; Brush v. Scribner, 11 Conn. 388 ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 458 ; Raphael v. Bank of England, 17 C. B. 161. But as to overdue paper, if dis-others who have advanced bonâ fide upon the security of such property; and liens thus created must be discharged before the true owner can recover absolutely what belongs to him.<sup>1</sup>

Why the equity of holders for value should be so strongly upheld in property of this description, while, as to other chattels, it is not permitted in our American courts to defeat the claims of any owner wrongfully dispossessed, may not clearly appear at first glance; and, indeed, the distinction has not always been applied with perfect legal consistency. The reason is doubtless found in the circumstance, that title and the preceding holder's good credit may readily be taken into account, wherever one seeks to purchase or advance money upon a horse, a bale of goods, and the like, which might not often change hands; while it cannot so well in the case of commercial paper, and, still more, of money, which may constantly circulate in the community as a medium of exchange, or for the mutual adjustment of debts and credits, on a valuation easily referred to the face of each chattel. Thus much does the law concede to mercantile convenience. And the same privilege has been extended by the latest cases to coupon-bonds and various other kinds of negotiable or quasi negotiable securities.<sup>2</sup>

§ 21. The Same Subject. — It follows, then, that one liable on a lost or stolen negotiable security discharges himself by payment, in good faith, to any bonâ fide holder thereof, who has the instrument at hand to give up to him; but as this rule will not always suffice for a debtor's protection, inasmuch as the holder's title may have been acquired in bad credited, the privilege does not apply. Vermilye v. Adams Express Co., 21 Wall. 138. Nor where the third party took the chattel by way of gift, or received previous notice of the infirmity of the title. Shaw v. Merchants' Bank, 101 U. S. 557. The late case of Seybel v. Nat. Currency Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, goes very far in sustaining the rights of a purchaser who has means of ascertaining the defect of title, but neglects to avail himself of his opportunity. But where one makes only a nominal payment for the instrument prior to receiving notice of the true claimant's title, he is not entitled to protection as a bonâ fide purchaser. Haesig v. Brown, 34 Mich. 503.

<sup>1</sup> See vol. i. §§ 403, 408.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 406, 458; Hathaway v. Haynes, 124 Mass. 311.

faith, or upon notice of infirmity such as should have put him on guard, legislation sometimes extends the debtor's indemnity to all cases of bonâ fide payment made by him upon the instrument.<sup>1</sup> If the debtor has received seasonable notice from the dispossessed owner before actual payment at maturity, it would appear to be unjustifiable in him to pay any party who may present the lost or stolen instrument without inquiry: his safer course, if the true ownership be in doubt, is to interplead the parties, or otherwise remit them to the courts for a final adjustment of the dispute.<sup>2</sup>

§ 22. Rule of Larceny; When a Finder may be treated as a Thief.—While the thief's transfer may avail to clothe a

<sup>1</sup> See Stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 100; Benj. Sales, Book I., pt. 1, c. 2, § 1.

<sup>2</sup> See McLaughlin v. Waite, 5 Wend. 404; 2 Kent Com. 357 and n. The purchase, though bonâ fide, of a negotiable instrument with indorsement erased, or otherwise mutilated so as on its face to give warning of infirmity, is void. Colson v. Arnot, 57 N. Y. 253; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 458; Force v. City of Elizabeth, 28 N. J. Eq. 403. But a genuine instrument, by being thus altered or mutilated, remains obligatory, and may be enforced by the true owner. 28 N. J. Eq. 403; 29 N. J. Eq. 587; supra, § 16. But the mere alteration of the number of a stolen negotiable bond is held insufficient spoliation to give warning of infirmity on its face, and the bonâ fide purchaser from a thief is protected accordingly. 29 N. J. Eq. 587; Birdsell v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 220; Commonwealth v. Savings Bank, 98 Mass. 12. Forged paper in general and negotiable instruments not genuine are worthless to the bonâ fide purchaser. Colson v. Arnot, 57 N. Y. 253. A genuine note which was never delivered by the maker, but was put into circulation wrongfully by one who has no right to the paper, is, moreover, held worthless even in the hands of a bonâ fide holder; though it cannot be said that the rule in this respect is fully established. Baxendale v. Bennett, 3 Q. B. D. 525; Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415, disapproving Shipley v. Carroll, 45 Ill. 285. But see Clarke v. Johnson, 54 Ill. 296; 38 Wis. 43. And as to an indorsement fraudulently procured, see Foster v. Mackinnon, L. R. 4 C. P. 704. See further, Big. Bills & Notes, 2d ed. 573 et seq.; 2 Pars. Bills & Notes, 255–263. Such a case may be distinguished from that of a note once operative by delivery, and afterwards lost or stolen; also from cases where there has been culpable negligence on the maker's part in allowing the note to get into circulation.

The rule which protects a bonâ fide holder for value is available at the present day to the holder of similar negotiable instruments by way of pledge or collateral security, so far as may be requisite to protect his advances. And if an owner, moreover, by his own careless acts, holds out another as his agent for the sale or pledge of similar instruments, he may, as an innocent party with the lesser equity, be postponed in rights to one who has parted with his own means on the strength of the apparent authority. 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 403, 408.

stranger with the rights of ownership to the limited extent just noticed, not only is his own title invalid, but he may be criminally indicted for larceny. Yet larceny is a crime not always to be defined with accuracy. For, supposing one has obtained goods under false pretences, he may yet pass them off by sale to a bonâ fide stranger, so as to prevent the defrauded owner from following them further, provided the latter had intended parting with ownership to the deceiver in the first place : though it is otherwise in cases where the circumstances show a transaction lacking this element of a defrauded owner's consent ; where, for instance, possession, but not a right of property, was the right intended to be conferred.<sup>1</sup>

And how is it where the finder takes goods which some one has left behind, but which do not appear to be derelict ? The doctrine of Ulpian made it theft for a finder to convert to his own use, animo lucrandi, property which he had no reason to believe had been abandoned. Our modern jurisprudence shrinks from applying so severe a test. True, a felonious intent on the finder's part, at the time of appropriation, makes the act criminal wherever he has observed marks or learned facts enabling him to ascertain the true owner. Indeed, the rejection of subsequent as well as simultaneous information, pointing out the true owner, has furnished ground for legal conviction,—the intent manifested at the time of finding, and consistently pursued, to deprive the owner, whoever that owner might possibly prove to be. But, in general, a mere intent to appropriate to one's self something found can hardly be deemed criminal, or justify a prosecution, so nearly is it generated from the universal right of occupancy.<sup>2</sup>

§ 23. Miscellaneous Instances ; Unclaimed Goods ; Unknown Creditor, etc.—There are other instances of chattels without

<sup>1</sup> Kingsford v. Merry, 11 Ex. 577. See Fraudulent Sales, infra, where the subject is considered at length.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 357 ; supra, § 14 ; Reg. v. Moore, 8 Cox C. C. 416 ; People v. Cogdell, 1 Hill, 94 ; 2 Bish.

Crim. Law, 5th ed. §§ 812, 813, 881. But there are local statutes which impose special duties on the finder of property, and prescribe corresponding penalties. Want of promptness in searching out the owner does not an owner, which might appropriately be referred to the general rule of occupancy, though neither derelict, lost, or stolen goods, in a strict sense. Such are goods unclaimed in the hands of some trustee or bailee, deposits in a bank, and debts due from parties ; where, as often happens, the rightful owner or creditor is not made aware of his rights. It may be, in such a case, that the owner is in ignorance, and would still assert his rights, should any notice reach him ; or it may be he has died. The usual consequence is, that the party who should have handed over the goods, or paid the debt, enjoys ownership and dominion without the trouble of making a discovery ; and, profiting by time and secrecy, he may come at last to own that which he really owed.

Over all property of this sort, the State, as trustee for the true owner, should one be found, otherwise on behalf of the public, may properly assume control ; and that legislation reaches in this direction is apparent by reference to recent acts in some of the United States, which require certain corporations to publish regular lists of unclaimed dividends and deposits ; also causing goods transported by common carriers, which remain unclaimed after a certain period, to be advertised, and sold at auction ; the proceeds, after the payment of all expenses and charges, to be turned over to the public treasury.<sup>1</sup> And as to the goods, effects, and credits of persons who have died leaving no known heirs in the State, certain public officers are appointed, under local statutes, with power to demand, collect, sue, and to settle the estate as in ordinary administration ; the State taking whatever balance may finally remain for distribution, in default of a known widow, husband, or kindred, surviving the person deceased.<sup>2</sup>

§ 24. Certain Chattels not recognized as Property.— Here it might be added that the law regards some things as not the proper subject of title in the full sense. This, in one aspect, prove felonious intent. 22 Ill. App. 177.

<sup>1</sup> Mass. Gen. Sts. c. 80 ; Act 1864, c. 139.

<sup>2</sup> See Colchester v. Law, L. R. 16 Eq. 253 ; Parker v. Kückens, 7 Allen, 509.

is because they are deemed not worth owning. Hence vermin and base animals have been treated as not the subject of larceny, because essentially valueless; and so it was formerly with choses in action or incorporeal chattels personal;<sup>1</sup> though the rule is now quite different as respects documents evidencing a money right.<sup>2</sup> But while the worthlessness of the thing might thus furnish exemption from criminal penalties, a dispossessed owner might nevertheless pursue his civil remedies on the theory of a title which was valuable by his own estimate;<sup>3</sup> a thing being often prized by him to whom it belongs far beyond its intrinsic worth, as in the case of an antiquary, collecting coins or stamps.

But again the law may well refuse its full protection to property in certain instances because of its spurious or hurtful character, and on strict grounds of public policy. Thus, obscene books and implements, a burglar's or gambler's tools, or counterfeit money, are not the subject of larceny, and may even be seized and confiscated under appropriate acts; nor, as it appears, could civil remedies be invoked in aid of an individual's title, if the ownership and use of such things were essentially and under all circumstances wrongful.<sup>4</sup> But one's private property, if a fit subject of ownership, is not to be appropriated by other individuals, not even by officers of the law, under any system of government; though there exists, as all admit, a public right to confiscate to a certain extent and under the due process of law. Hence in this country the title to a prisoner's money on his person at the time of his arrest, as also to his private household goods, remains his accordingly, unaffected by his crime or capture.<sup>5</sup>

§ 25. True Owner's Title, how divested; General Rule.—In general, the title of what deserves the name of property

<sup>1</sup> See 1 Schoul. Pers. Prop. § 50; Rex v. Brooks, 4 C. & P. 131.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Schoul. Pers. Prop. § 90.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Schoul. Pers. Prop. § 50.

<sup>4</sup> See De Wutz v. Hendricks, 9 Moore, 586; Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9. But spirituous liquors are the subject of ownership, with the usual civil remedies in the owner, notwithstanding prohibitory laws. Fuller v. Bean, 30 N. H. 181; 25 N. H. 587; Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray, 89. It is only under certain conditions that their sale and use is to be pronounced illegal at all. And the same may be said of arsenic or gunpowder.

<sup>5</sup> See Rickers v. Simcox, 1 Utah T. 33.

in chattels can only pass from the owner by his own consent and voluntary act or by due operation of law.<sup>1</sup> Title may, however, be transferred, by means of agents ; and the acts of an agent performed within the scope of his apparent authority may thus bind a principal.<sup>2</sup>

§ 26. Summary of Modern Doctrine of Occupancy. — On the whole, as the reader must have perceived, the means of acquiring title to chattels by occupancy are strictly confined in our modern practice. Not only has the primitive right itself disappeared far into the early domains of history, but occupancy, even as applied to perfected chattels which are casually thrown open to ownership, has been greatly hedged in by sovereign command and public legislation. The tendency of our modern jurisprudence is clearly to take from the individual all title to valuable goods abandoned, lost, and stolen, — to all chattels, in fact, which appear to have no known owner, — and to vest the privileges, present and prospective, of a finder, in the State ; no longer the State as personified in a monarch who grasps at the property for the personal gratification of himself and his favorites, but the State in the generous and enlightened sense of the public, of the whole people ; subject, however, to allowing a fair remuneration to the finder for his services and his honesty. This modern idea is theoretically just ; just, too, in practice, where the expenses of securing the property can be kept down. Policy, and the claims of order and tranquillity, afforded the early justification for public interference with individual occupancy : to this should now be added, the desire to enrich a whole community in preference to single members.

But the chief glory of our modern occupancy legislation appears in the humane and just regard which is paid to the dispossessed owner who has never intended abandoning his fundamental rights. Some of the old feudal expedients, such as a brief prescription for confirming a thief's title, and confiscation, whereby the king himself became by substitution a robber of the goods for which his subject had swung, have not stood the modern tests. The true owner has now, and always should have had, a fair chance to regain that which had passed from him without his consent ; not even the careless bonâ fide purchaser, except as to negotiable instruments, standing quite as securely as of old. Whenever the State lays hold of the vacant goods, it is, as the drift of American legislation plainly indicates, not only with the intent of subjecting it to the demands of the true owner, whoever he may be, but likewise for instituting a proper search for him ; the chattel, or its proceeds, finally reverting to the public, in most instances, by a title paramount, indeed, to that of the private occupant, but only perfect, as to the former owner, when it becomes reasonably certain that no one exists to claim on his behalf, or there has been a delinquency in asserting his right tantamount to utter abandonment of title.

<sup>1</sup> Salts v. Everett, 20 Wend. 366 ;
Quinn v. Davis, 78 Penn. St. 15.

<sup>2</sup> See this doctrine as applied in various instances, supra, § 21, notes, and post, under Gifts and Sales.

---

CHAPTER II.

TITLE TO PRODUCTS ; ACCESSION AND CONFUSION.

§ 27. Chattels newly produced: General Products; Accession; Confusion.— Having considered how title may be acquired in any chattel, already existing in its perfect state, which may appear at the time to have no owner, we proceed to those things personal which newly present themselves for ownership, because newly produced,— the results of brain creation, or the offspring of animals, or what we call income and profits, or, it may be, the working up of materials of certain kinds to form some new and distinct chattel, or the aggregate of mingled chattels. Let us consider, then, in the present chapter, I. The Title to General Products ; II. Accession ; III. Confusion.

§ 28. Title to General Products; Creations of the Brain.—
I. As to the title to general products. In patent rights and copyrights, we find useful and valuable kinds of personal property, the creation of human intellect; and as to all such products, municipal law now regulates and secures the title to the author or inventor for a fixed period. Every one has a natural dominion over his own ideas, whether it be to impart them to others, or confine them to himself: but this natural right is not found sufficient of itself to exclude others in society from making use of such fruits of the brain as are once communicated; and hence the protection is essential, for the promotion of science and the arts, which legislation now accords in the nature of a monopoly grant to the originator of something new and useful for addition to the world's stock of knowledge. The modern law of patents and copyrights in England and America rests upon statutes of local force, subject to local modification; and it is doubtful whether authors and inventors can be said to have had any valuable privileges of this character at the common law, or to enjoy at this day the exclusive benefit of their brain products otherwise than through legislative enactment.<sup>1</sup>

§ 29. Title to Products: Increase of Animals; Income of Capital, Profits, etc. — The increase of domestic animals generally belongs to the owner of the female, the proprietor of the male taking no share. But, where the female is hired for a limited period, the hirer, in absence of contrary stipulation, will take the increase as temporary proprietor;<sup>2</sup> and similar favor has been shown to the beneficiaries with a life interest in such property;<sup>3</sup> all this agreeably to the apparent intention of the owner. The beneficial enjoyment of any chattel, in fact, must, of necessity, carry with it the enjoyment of whatever that chattel produces; and whether it be in

<sup>1</sup> The subject of Patents and Copyrights has been fully discussed in 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 518-541.

<sup>2</sup> Putnam v. Wyley, 8 Johns. 432; Stewart v. Ball, 33 Mo. 154; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 51. But see Allen v. Allen, 2 Penn. 166. The sale of female animals passes their future offspring. Hull v. Hull, 48 Conn. 250; Elmore v. Fitzpatrick, 56 Ala.

400; Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203; Sales, post; Leavitt v. Jones, 54 Vt. 423. Even though change of possession by the sale be insufficient against the seller's creditors, yet the sale itself gives progeny to the purchaser who is in joint possession. Wolcott v. Hamilton, 61 Vt. 79.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 142; Horry v. Glover, 2 Hill Ch. 521.

the shape of income on invested capital, or profits accruing from the employment of some specific chattel, such as a ship, a coach, or a sewing-machine, the owner for the time being of the principal thing, with a certain definite period of dominion, is presumably the owner, too, of its products. Were the rule otherwise, temporary ownership, like that of a hirer or a life beneficiary, would frequently prove a burden instead of a blessing. The right to enjoy products, then, is not always that of the ultimate owner alone : a temporary proprietor for a substantial period, under a suitable express or implied contract, such as the charterer of a ship or the hirer of a coach, is entitled to profits or income as incidental to the beneficial enjoyment for which he contracted. But other considerations would arise if he took the chattel, not as beneficiary, but in trust for some one else, or as mere security for a debt due him, or by virtue of some contract which was not intended to give the holder's possession the dignity of a temporary and personal proprietorship. And it is to be observed, that contracts of chattel hire may furnish two sorts of income: one, the hire-money, for the beneficial enjoyment of the owner who lets the thing; the other, the immediate product or profits or income from use of the thing itself, for the beneficial enjoyment of the hirer, whose actual loss or advantage is in strictness computed by calculating the difference.<sup>1</sup>

§ 30. Accession considered as a Rule of Title; Definition, etc.
 — II. We come, next, to accession. Personal chattels of the corporeal sort take the widest possible variety of classification and development in an age of scientific progress. The same materials may be applied by human ingenuity to a variety of useful shapes and conditions for valuable purposes. Now, where the several materials which constitute any complete chattel are those of one owner, who has likewise applied his own labor exclusively to its making, it is plain that the chattel is his own, to do with it as he pleases; saving, of course, any rights of an inventor under a patent limiting the use of his prior ideas, which may have been infringed upon. Thus far, there is no controversy. But supposing the different materials which went to make up the chattel in its present state belonged to different parties; or one owned the materials, while another applied the labor: to whom shall the law assign the ownership of the whole thing? For it may be that the chattel, as now existing, is worth far more than the sum of the materials of which it was composed. It is here that disputes will frequently arise; and the doctrines, at first sight somewhat subtle and abstruse, which the civil and common law have long applied, deserve, therefore, an extended notice.

<sup>1</sup> See Schoul. Bailments, in general, as to this temporary proprietorship. A similar rule applies to the beneficiary of chattels under some testamentary or other trust, for a limited period of enjoyment.

Under the general head of Accession — a topic not wholly confined to new species of chattels, but covering all instances of chattels united to other chattels or with the ground, naturally or artificially, including the bestowal of one man's work on another man's materials, and with a further application to real property which is beyond the limits of this treatise — are determined questions of title to the new chattel, or the old chattel with its newly incorporated materials, or the land with its annexed chattels, as the case may be. The doctrines of accession come down to us from Rome. Bracton and the year-books recognized them in the earliest period of English law; and they are constantly applied by the courts of the United States at the present day, when such controversies arise.

§ 31. Old Distinction as to creating some New Species or not. — The first principle of the law of accession is commonly said to be, that if any given corporeal substance receives afterwards an accession by natural or artificial means, but is not changed into a new species thereby, the original owner of the thing is entitled to the thing in its later improved condition.<sup>1</sup>

§ 32. Closeness with which Component Parts are thus united. — But this rule is not to be applied without due regard to the closeness with which materials may have been blended; for we are here to suppose, not indeed an entirely new kind of chattel, with its original elements undistinguishable, but such a permanent union rather of the component parts, that to attempt to take them apart would cause so much damage in proportion to the value of the separate parts as to make severance impracticable. Thus, to attach one man's watch to another man's chain, or the car of one railroad company to another company's engine, calls for no rule of accession; while sewing one man's silk into another man's coat would.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 360, 361; 2 Bl. Com. 404; Eaton v. Monroe, 52 Me. 63; Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. 348.

This fundamental distinction between the practically separable and the practically inseparable, though an eminently proper one, is not so obvious as to have been always borne in mind; it suggests, too, that, with modern inventions and appliances, some of the ancient illustrations of accession may have become untrustworthy.

§ 33. Element of Comparative Values. — Nor is the rule of accession applicable without a reasonable regard to comparative values: for, as this word "accession" implies, it is the principal thing, that of the most importance and value, which must draw after it the title to whatever is accessory; and hence the owner of the most valuable component part is he whom the law selects in preference, if it may, as owner of the whole;<sup>1</sup> suitable recompense being given to the other party, if a worthy one.

Most of the modern accession cases involve this important element, — the bestowal of one man's labor in enhancing the worth of another man's materials. And here, again (supposing the materials to have been taken by no wilful trespasser), the test of comparative values should be applied. Thus, if a goldsmith melts up another man's gold into a vase, the owner of the gold becomes the owner of the vase, notwithstanding the goldsmith has supplied accessory labor and some slight materials towards the valuable result. And so with casting bullets. But supposing skilled labor of a high sort to have been honestly bestowed, — as that of an accomplished painter upon a piece of canvas, or a sculptor upon a block of marble, — can any one doubt, the material being of so little value as compared with the artistic work, that the finished painting or statue becomes the property of the artist? It would be ridiculous, say the Institutes of Justinian, that a picture of Apelles or Parrhasius should be deemed a mere accessory to a worthless tablet. Kent observes that the Roman law was quite inconsistent on this point; for, if a fine poem or history were written on another man's parchment or paper, the work belonged to the owner of the parchment or paper, and not to the author; an instance in which Pothier and Toullier lay down the contrary rule.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. "Accession," 34; Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322; "Adjunction;" 2 Kent Com. 360, Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; 361; 2 Bl. Com. 404; Inst. 2, l. 25, Pulcifer v. Page, 32 Me. 404.

In general, the honest bestowal of labor, whether with or without the slight addition of materials, upon the materials of another, will give to the owner of the principal materials the right to the finished chattel, unless the value of the chattel has become so greatly enhanced by the workmanship as to be out of all fair proportion to the worth of the materials taken; in which latter case, the principal value consisting in the workmanship and added materials, justice requires that the materials originally taken become the accessory, so as to vest the whole chattel in the party supplying work, with suitable compensation to the owner of original materials.

§ 34. Test of New Species or not; whether suitable.— The first principle of accession laid down by our writers is confined in terms to cases where no new species of chattel is created; or, to use a test, where the identity of original expressed them upon paper belonging to a stranger. Would not our law, upon such grounds, confer the title to the writing upon the writer, with compensation to the owner of the paper, even though it were but a private letter of no intrinsic value, instead of some valuable literary production, unless the writer had made public dedication of it? 1 Schoul. Pers. Prop. §§ 64, 518.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 362, citing De rer. div. 2, 1, § 34; Pothier, Droit de Propriété, n. 169-192; Toullier, tom. iii. pp. 73-79. But, as to this last case, the question involved seems not so much that of intrinsic value in filled-up paper, as whether ideas valuable or worthless ought ever to be allowed to go to third parties or the public, against the writer's consent, simply because the latter had

materials is not lost.<sup>1</sup> Now, some of the examples they furnish — of leather wrought into shoes, of cloth made into a coat, for instance — indicate that their classification is rather broad for the rule ; although the test of identity they offer is doubtless better than that still narrower one of the old civil law, — whether the species can be reduced back to the former rude materials or not. The importance of some distinguishing test appears from the second principle they announce ; namely, that, if an entirely new species has been created, — as wine from grapes, or bread from wheat, — the manufacturer must be deemed the true owner, and is only to make satisfaction to the former proprietor for the materials which he has appropriated.<sup>2</sup> Seldom, however, does a case of accession, in point of fact, come before the courts, in which there has not been, logically speaking, some new chattel produced as the result of an appropriation of materials ; something distinct, of a new market value, and designated by a different name from any of the materials taken ; though, to be sure, a simpler accession results from mere repair upon a thing.

§ 35. Accession a Rule of Practical Convenience. — Instead, therefore, of perplexing ourselves over distinctions between new and old species, it appears more rational to treat the rule of accession as one of convenience throughout ; and to say that, the identity of the appropriated materials appearing in any present product, the original owner of such materials may take the chattel as his own ; but that, if their identity be absolutely lost, and separation be impracticable, he cannot take the chattel from the party who had appropriated those materials, but must look for compensation instead. If separation of the identified materials be practicable, each owner receiving his own part, severance should be applied. And this whole matter of physical identity seems properly qualified, in cases of accession without mutual assent, by the considerations of closeness of union and of comparative values, already noticed, and that of wilful or unintentional trespass on the taker's part, of which we are still to speak.

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Bl. Com. 404 ; 2 Kent

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 363, 364 ; Inst. 2, l. 25 ; 2 Bl. Com. 404.

To the practically inseparable combination of differing chattels, or the application of one's special labor to another's materials or property, though not to the mere mingling of things similar, is the term "accession" properly applied, as a doctrine of personal property. If such combination took place under some contract, that contract governs; but at the outset we assume that there was no contract relation.

§ 36. Taker's Conduct as affecting Title in such Cases.— Let us see, then, how far the taker's conduct affects the question of title in cases of accession. The rule against wilful trespass has its foundation in the maxim, that no one should be deprived of his property without his consent. To apply this maxim to the rule of species new and old: how will corn serve as an illustration? If one's corn be taken and parched, doubtless the owner may recover it in its new condition; for its identity is not changed. If, instead, it be ground into meal, some of the cases expressly say, that the first principle of accession must still prevail, since there is no new species of chattel created on grinding corn such as to debar an owner from identifying his materials.<sup>1</sup> But, to go a step farther, suppose the corn be made, instead, into whiskey: does the first, or the second, principle now apply? For assuredly, if illustrations may serve at all, this falls within the class of materials changed into an entirely new species, beyond the power of their physical identification. It was precisely this last point which the important case of Silisbury v. McCoon<sup>2</sup> presented: and, inasmuch as the corn had been taken from the owner by a wilful trespasser, it was decided, notwithstanding the old books, that the title to the property had not changed; that the whiskey belonged, in fact, not to the manufacturer, but to the owner of the corn.<sup>3</sup> Admitting that, where the chattel is converted by an innocent holder into a thing of a different species,—as where wheat is made into bread, olives into oil, or grapes into wine,—the original owner cannot reclaim it, the court denied that any such distinction could avail a wilful wrongdoer.

<sup>1</sup> See Inglebright v. Hammond, 19 Ohio, 337; Mallory v. Willis, 4 Comst. 76.

<sup>2</sup> 3 Comst. (N. Y.) 379.

<sup>3</sup> Silisbury v. McCoon, 3 Comst. 379; Hyde v. Cookson, 21 Barb. 92; Eaton v. Munroe, 52 Me. 63. And see 2 Kent Com. 363.

To take one more illustration. A tree squared into timber is commonly mentioned as an instance where original materials may still be identified, and ownership is unchanged.<sup>1</sup> There are cases, too, where wood converted into charcoal has been reclaimed; its substantial identity still remaining as before.<sup>2</sup> But, in Wetherbee v. Green, the process of change had gone farther; for timber cut upon A.'s land had by B. been made into hoops. The court decided that A. could not reclaim his timber in this new shape; partly from regard to this circumstance, perhaps sufficiently decisive of the case, that A.'s materials bore no reasonable proportion to B.'s labor and expense in constituting the valuable product; but chiefly because the evidence showed that B. had been, at most, an involuntary trespasser, and certainly no wilful trespasser at all, in taking that timber.<sup>3</sup>

§ 37. Doctrine summed up as to Accession without Mutual Assent.—Upon the whole, this modern doctrine of accession appears to be thus properly summed up: One whose personal property has been taken by another without authority may follow and recover it from any wilful trespasser who has worked it into the composition of any chattel which presents the appropriated materials as still capable of identification; and even, according to the New York cases, where the materials taken cannot be absolutely identified in the new product; inasmuch as a new species of property results.

<sup>1</sup> Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. 348.

<sup>2</sup> Curtis v. Groat, 6 Johns. 168; Riddle v. Driver, 12 Ala. 590.

<sup>3</sup> Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311. The court intimates here a disapproval of Silbury v. McCoon, cited supra; but the two cases are readily distinguishable, one being that of wilful and the other of involuntary trespass.

This subject may be further examined in the light of various illustrations in 30 N. J. Eq. 291, reporter's note. Of the many citations here found, bearing upon this subject, few seem to be distinctly in point; but the general rules of the text appear to be confirmed.

Even where the trespass was not wilful, but accidental, as through some mistake of fact, and the materials taken can still be identified, and the labor and materials of the trespasser are not shown to have gone farther than the appropriated materials towards producing the present valuable chattel, the owner of the materials is still entitled to the chattel. But where no element of wilfulness or intentional wrong whatever appears on the part of him who applied another's materials, and the identity of those materials has finally disappeared in the new product, or where it can be shown that his own labor and materials contributed essentially much more to the value of the present chattel than those materials which he took without intending a wrong, he shall keep the chattel as his own; making, however, due compensation to the owner of the materials for what he took.

The true object of the rule is, first of all, to protect owners whose rights of property are invaded; next, to screen an involuntary or casual trespasser, who has expended of his own toil or materials in good faith, from punishment more severe than mere carelessness or honest error deserves.

§ 38. Accession of Chattels by Agreement; Use of Materials to repair, manufacture, etc.; Bailment or Sale.—Next, as to accession of chattels by agreement. Where the owner of materials parted possession voluntarily, the case will turn upon the mutual intention of parties, as in ordinary contracts. If raw materials be delivered to the mechanic or manufacturer to be wrought into a chattel and returned, the contract is one of bailment, and the title is not changed; the perfected chattel belongs to the owner of the materials, with suitable compensation to the bailee, usually secured by a lien; and this notwithstanding accessory materials are furnished by the latter. And so, too, where any article is left to be repaired, the original substance still constituting the principal portion, and the article retaining its identity.<sup>1</sup> But where the taker agrees to manufacture a certain article out of his own materials, or even to provide essentially the principal part thereof, the title is presumably in himself until the thing be finished and delivered.<sup>1</sup> Once more: where materials are delivered by an owner to be worked up, the party who takes them not agreeing absolutely to restore them in their new or altered form, but being at liberty to return something similar of equal value, — a sort of contract which the civilians termed mutuum, and reckoned apparently among bailments, — our law regards the contract as essentially a sale of materials, so as to divest the original owner of his title.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Babcock v. Gill, 10 Johns. 287; ens v. Briggs, 5 Pick. 177; Pulcifer Foster v. Pettibone, 7 N. Y. 433; v. Page, 32 Me. 404; Worth v. Eaton v. Lynde, 15 Mass. 242; Stev-Northam, 4 Ire. 102.

For example: If one builds a ship from the keel upwards with another's timber or chief materials, the latter is presumed to be owner of the vessel as the work goes on; while the ship-builder himself remains the owner of the unfinished vessel, if he supplied the whole or most of the materials, even though he may have purchased certain materials outright from the contemplated owner of the finished vessel.<sup>3</sup> And so, too, the man who patches up my boat, or mends my broken carriage, acquires no title to the property; but it would be otherwise if the boat or carriage were so far worn out when delivered to him, that the workman took the chattel merely for accessory stuff towards the production of something new of his own manufacture where the principal materials were his own.<sup>4</sup> To rules like the foregoing, exceptions are found corresponding to the variations of mutual intent, and where proof overcomes a presumption; as in the sale of chattels made to order, and payable by instalments at certain stages of the work.<sup>5</sup> Doubtless a valid sale can be made of an unfinished article; in which case, all materials and labor

<sup>1</sup> Gregory v. Stryker, 2 Denio, 628; Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. 473; McConihe v. New York, &c. R. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 495.

<sup>2</sup> Story Bailm. §§ 219-222; Longergan v. Stewart, 55 Ill. 44; Hurd v. West, 7 Cow. 752. And see Schoul. Bailm. §§ 3, 99.

<sup>3</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 361, 362; Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. 473.

<sup>4</sup> 2 Kent Com. ib.; Gregory v. Stryker, 2 Denio, 628; Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322.

<sup>5</sup> This subject is considered under "Sales," post, §§ 259-269.

afterwards applied by the seller would pass with the principal under the usual rule of accession.<sup>1</sup>

§ 39. Accession by Agreement applied to Pledge or Chattel Mortgage.—So, too, the mortgage or pledge of chattels, properly made and carried into effect, by delivery or record according to law, is presumed to cover any subsequent product of which those chattels constitute the sole or chief component; and generally such other accessory materials as the mortgagor or pledgor may afterwards have added; this, of course, not by way of immediate and absolute ownership, but for strengthening the security.<sup>2</sup>

§ 40. Doctrine of Accession, in Annexation of Chattel to Land or Severance.—When any chattel is firmly annexed to land, it becomes incorporated with the land, and converted into real estate, on the long-established principle that chattels are but accessory to land. Hence is it, that where one puts up a building on another's land with his own materials, or upon his own land with another's materials, the right of the erection goes with the soil, according to the civil and common law alike; for every building is deemed an accession to the ground whereon it stands.<sup>3</sup> And this doctrine is applied to trees, plants, and seeds, set out or sown in another person's land.<sup>4</sup> Justice would seem to demand, however, that, where there had been no wilful trespass committed, the owner of the land should make some compensation to the owner of the chattel in consideration of the enhanced value of his premises, unless a gift of the improvements is inferable. Nor is the rule without qualifications as concerns the land owner's title.<sup>5</sup> For granting that a house in process of

<sup>1</sup> Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. 76.

<sup>2</sup> Cudworth v. Scott, 41 N. H. 456; Willard v. Rice, 11 Met. 493; Putnam v. Cushing, 10 Gray, 334; Bryant v. Pennell, 61 Me. 108. Here we consider particularly the rights of parties inter se. See as to what a pledge may carry in security, 1 Schoul. Pers. Prop. §§ 395, 396. And correspondingly as to a chattel mortgage, see ib. §§ 420, 421. If accessions are made in a pledge there should be delivery of possession. The mutual intent of the transaction controls in any case.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 362; Miller v. Michoud, 11 Rob. La. 225; Bouv. Dict. "Accession;" Fryatt v. Sullivan Co., 7 Hill, 529.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.

<sup>5</sup> Johnson v. Hunt, 11 Wend. 135; Gallup v. Josselyn, 7 Vt. 334. But as to sowing on land to which one erection upon another's land becomes the property of the land owner as fast as the parts added become incorporated with the soil, yet the plank, mortar, brick, and other materials composing it, are personal, not real property, until permanently affixed to the freehold ; and, as the hirer of chattels for a fixed term becomes temporary proprietor, so peculiar considerations may arise in favor of a lessee of land as against his lessor, whether the annexation were made by himself or some stranger.<sup>1</sup>

On the other hand, where one cuts or severs from another's land, as in making hay from grass or harvesting a crop, the accession principle is sometimes applied, so as to regard comparative values, and the character, wilful or innocent, of the trespass.<sup>2</sup>

§ 41. Rule where One's Chattels are cast upon Another's Land.— If one man's chattels are carried upon another man's land by an inevitable accident, — as where some violent wind or flood carries off fruits, timber, or uprooted trees, — the one party is without remedy for the damage occasioned, if the other choose to leave him so by not reclaiming his property. But the Roman law made even such owner of chattels responsible, unless he utterly abandoned them; for if he chose to reclaim his property, and proceeded to remove it, he became at once liable for all damage occasioned to the owner of the soil by the casual deposit. And the same rule is expressly adopted in New York.<sup>3</sup>

§ 42. Confusion considered as a Rule of Title; Definition.— III. We come now to Confusion, — a doctrine akin to that of accession, but applicable, instead, to mixed chattels of one and the same general description ; not to the instance where claims title and of which he has adverse possession, see Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 618. Title to land should not be tried in a transitory action.

<sup>1</sup> Beers v. St. John, 16 Conn. 322 ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop., part ii. c. 6, as to Fixtures ; Baker v. Meisch, 29 Neb. 227.

<sup>2</sup> In Lewis v. Courtright, 77 Iowa, 190, a person who made and cut hay in good faith, under a mistake of title to the land, was allowed his hay, with recompense as merely for uncut grass to the true owner of the soil.

<sup>3</sup> Sheldon v. Sherman, 42 N. Y. 484 ; 1 Domat Civ. Law, pt. 1, b. 2, tit. 9, § 2.

various materials, or materials and labor, become united into a single product, or chattels are in connection with the ground. Here, too, the common law has apparently followed that of the Roman empire; not, however, without modification. Confusion of goods arises wherever the like chattels of two or more persons are so blended or mixed together as to have become undistinguishable.<sup>1</sup> § 43. Application of the Rule of Confusion. — Whatever the kind of property, the law makes no arbitrary disposal of the title beyond what necessity or convenience requires. Where the articles mixed together differed in value or quality, and the original value or quality of each component cannot now be clearly determined, the law of confusion must settle who is the owner. But, according to Lord Eldon, if the corn, flour, or other goods found mixed together, were of equal value, then even the injured party takes his proportional part, and no more.<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, the law of confusion does not apply to chattels of a sort to be readily distinguished and separated, — as in general instances of cattle, produce packed in barrels or boxes or bales, furniture, and the like; where by marks or visible appearance they may be known apart; for so long as one can identify his own chattels, and take them away, the ownership of articles need suffer no change because all happen to be lumped into one lot.<sup>3</sup> And yet the case might be conceived where the mixture of barrels, boxes, or bales, articles of furniture, or even animals of various values and without brand or mark to identify, had resulted in an undistinguishable mass.

That which keeps out the strict rule of confusion, and preserves the title to separate portions essentially unharmed, <sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 364, 365; Bouv. Dict., "Confusion of Goods;" 2 Bl. Com. 405; Inst. 2, l. 27, 28. There may be intermixture without confusion, but there is no confusion without intermixture. Drake Attachment, 5th ed. § 199; 36 Me. 237.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 365; Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432; Spence v. Union Mar. Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427.

<sup>3</sup> Seymour v. Wyckoff, 10 N. Y. 213; Holbrook v. Hyde, 1 Vt. 286; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557; Ames v. Miss. Boom Co., 8 Minn. 467; Smith v. Sanborn, 6 Gray, 134; Alley v. Adams, 44 Ala. 609; 55 Fed. 576; 81 Iowa, 658; 97 N. C. 383; Goff v. Brainerd, 53 Vt. 468.

must therefore be, after all, either (1) this identity of particulars, which has prevented any close admixture from taking place, or else (2) equality of the ingredients in quality or proportionate value, so as to enable ownership to fasten readily upon its precise share in the mass, though detached from its former physical particulars, and to sue without identifying.<sup>1</sup>

§ 44. Leading Tests in Confusion to be examined. — And, now, to examine this law of confusion in detail. Whenever a confusion of personal property has actually occurred, and the question of title presents itself, we should ask at once, What caused that confusion? Did it take place by mutual consent; or by one's wilful misconduct; or through one's unintentional error; or by the act of some stranger; or because of inevitable accident or superior force? And according as the mixture was brought about by one or another of these five general causes, so, according to the modern current of English and American authorities, should the title to the mass or admixture be determined.

§ 45. Rule where Confusion was by Mutual Consent. — (1.) If the mixture arose by mutual consent, the title to the whole admixture is founded in contract; and hence arises the presumption, in absence of special stipulation to the contrary, that the two contracting parties agreed to take the mass together, by way of ownership in common, in proportion to their several shares.<sup>2</sup> Here ownership might perhaps be considered as founded rather upon contract than in confusion at all.

The consequence of ownership in common in a divisible mass must needs be, that each proprietor has a right to dispose of his undivided share, and may sue any one who would appropriate the whole to the exclusion of his own interest.<sup>1</sup> And while the ordinary presumption, in chattel relations of this character, is, that the sole possession of one is the possession of all, divisible personal property so far differs from indivisible, that the exclusive appropriation or sale by one may be readily construed into an act of conversion, so as to enable the injured co-owner to maintain trover for his portion.<sup>2</sup> Each co-owner, too, has the right to sever and appropriate his own share, wherever it may be determined by measurement, weight, or count; and, indeed, the courts seem to encourage so sensible a practice, as though reluctant to compel any formal partition of the mass.<sup>3</sup> The relation of common ownership, under circumstances like these, ought to be regarded as a temporary state of things, with severance and separate appropriation to follow speedily; though, while the mass remains intact, the law protects the contributors after a somewhat clumsy fashion.

<sup>1</sup> This latter exception appears not so readily admitted in the courts as the former; identification being here impossible, and the proportionate division taking place rather from consideration of natural justice than of legal right. It applies, however, where the equities of parties to the admixture are alike. See statute cited in 44 Fed. 735; Reid v. King, 89 Ky. 388; 36 Minn. 46; Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 Mich. 309 (a case of logs); Martin v. Mason, 78 Me. 452; First Nat. Bank v. Scott, 36 Neb. 60.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 364, 365; 2 Bl. Com. 405. And see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 161-166, as to ownership in common.

But it is evident that the relation of the parties who consent to an intermixture of their goods may be varied by their own contract. It is not necessarily an ownership in common in every instance. To ascertain and give proper expression to their mutual intention in such cases is often a matter of great perplexity.

§ 46. The Same Subject; its Application to Grain Elevators, etc.—The transportation of grain in large quantities from our Western States, with the intervention of warehousemen and elevators, gives frequent occasion for applying the doctrine of confusion by consent.<sup>4</sup> Here the owner of a certain quantity agrees, perhaps, to its intermixture with other lots belonging to other parties, or to the warehouseman himself; taking a written receipt, which may enable him or the party

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 165.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 163–166.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Fobes v. Shattuck, 22 Barb. 568; Dole v. Olmstead, 36 Ill. 150; Morgan v. Gregg, 46 Barb. 183; Young v. Miles, 20 Wis. 615; Channon v.

Lusk, 2 Lans. 211; Tripp v. Riley, 15 Barb. 353. See Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330.

<sup>4</sup> See 6 Am. Law Review, 450–471, “Grain Elevators;” Schouler Bailm. c. 1.

to whom he may transfer it to demand an equal amount of the same quality, if not the identical grain which he has put in. Such contracts vary; and sometimes the bargain will contemplate a restoration of the identical property delivered, possibly in a different shape, though usually a due proportion of the mass is what shall be redelivered. To determine who shall bear risks and enjoy dominion while such an intermixture last, we must have recourse to the character of the transaction; for rights and responsibilities go according to the legal title. If the nature of the bargain be such as to make the several proprietors owners in common of the mass, any loss should be borne by them in proportion to their several interests; and such an ownership, we have said, is usually presumed.<sup>1</sup> But if one throws his goods into the common mass, on the understanding that the party receiving them may take from the mass at pleasure, and appropriate to himself on the condition that he shall restore other goods of the same sort in their stead, — and so, too, in stipulations for pecuniary compensation, — the dominion over the property passes to the receiver; and on this principle are some of our grain cases decided, the party owning the elevator or warehouse being treated as a purchaser, and not as a depositary.<sup>2</sup> In the instance of a mere depositary or bailee, on the other hand, and, indeed, wherever one takes goods on a contract to bestow care or labor upon them and restore the identical goods in the same or a different shape, the property remains in the original owner; and, in accordance with the law of bailments, the receiver incurs no liability, except it be through a violation of duty.<sup>3</sup> Where the party receiving the goods takes them by consent both for purposes of bailment and mixture with his own goods, as is sometimes done, the title of the contributing owner is put at extreme hazard; yet even here a common ownership in the mass between contributor and

<sup>1</sup> Chase v. Washburn, 1 Ohio St. 244, per Bartley, J.; Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427; supra, § 45; 14 Oreg. 529.

Ewing v. French, 1 Blackf. 353; Chase v. Washburn, 1 Ohio St. 286; Wilson v. Cooper, 10 Iowa, 565.

<sup>3</sup> Chase v. Washburn, 1 Ohio St.

<sup>2</sup> Lonergan v. Stewart, 55 Ill. 44; 244; Young v. Miles, 23 Wis. 643.

receiver should be presumed.<sup>1</sup> Business usage will often aid in solving the nature of all such transactions.<sup>2</sup>

§ 47. Rule where Confusion was by One's Wilful Misconduct. — (2.) If the intermixture was caused by one's wilful misconduct, the offender must bear the loss ; for it has long been settled at the common law, that where personal chattels, solid or fluid, are so mingled as to have become undistinguishable by the wrongful act of one owner, he cannot recover for his own proportion, nor for any part of the intermixture, but the entire property vests in him whose right was invaded.<sup>3</sup> Nor is the latter party obliged to compensate the former, in such a case, according to our laws ; in which respect, many have thought that we differ from the civilians: for the gist of the rule appears to be, the natural justice, on the one hand, of allowing the intentional trespasser to be the loser by his own wrongful act ; and, on the other, the injustice of permitting any innocent owner to be deprived of property without his consent. The intermixture being such, then, that the true proportions are undistinguishable, the injured party may replevy the whole, or sue in damages for its value.<sup>4</sup> And even

<sup>1</sup> Inglebright v. Hammond, 19 Ohio, 337 ; Slaughter v. Green, 1 Rand. 3.

<sup>2</sup> See Cushing v. Breed, 14 Allen, 376 ; Warren v. Milliken, 57 Me. 97 ; Dole v. Olmstead, 41 Ill. 344. Replevin is not the suitable remedy for one's undivided interest or share in an intermixture by consent, since it is incapable of exact identification ; though it is otherwise with wrongful intermixture, for reasons which will presently appear. Cf. Low v. Martin, 18 Ill. 286 ; Warner v. Cushman, 31 Ill. 283 ; Dillingham v. Smith, 30 Me. 370.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 405 ; 2 Kent Com. 365 ; Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298 ; Stephenson v. Little, 10 Mich. 433 ; Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427 ; The Idaho, 93 U. S. 575.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. ; Jenkins v. Steanka, 19 Wis. 126 ; Beach v. Schmultz, 20 Ill. 185 ; Warner v. Cushman, 31 Ill. 283.

This rule is applied to the fraud of a junk-dealer in Jewett v. Dringer, 30 N. J. Eq. 291. See reporter's note, ib. But, if the injured party has transferred his interest, his assignee should make a demand upon the wrong-doer holding the intermixture before bringing a suit. Root v. Bonnema, 22 Wis. 539.

It still appears as if the rule as thus laid down by the courts would work great injustice, if applied with utter disregard to comparative values. If one wrongfully empties another's bottle into a hogshead of his own wine, shall the former take the whole, without any allowance to the latter ? This seems to be the rule, if precedents must be followed ; but it visits a heavy penalty upon slight misconduct, and, should the question arise, perhaps the courts may escape such a conclusion.

if the goods were of the same kind and value, the wronged party will have a right to the entire aggregate, leaving the wrong-doer to reclaim his own if he can identify it or to demand his proportional part.<sup>1</sup>

Upon a similar reasoning, where A. takes goods doubting whether they are his own or not, and intermingles them in order to mislead B., the true owner, and to prevent B. from taking his portion without danger of taking A.'s likewise, it is said that A., by such fraudulent act, loses his own property.<sup>2</sup> That he runs, at least, the risk of losing his own, cannot be doubted; for reckless conduct evincing a dishonest intention, whether shown in actively seizing one's neighbor's goods or in permitting another to intermingle them with his own, is a suitable ground for rigidly enforcing the rule of confusion, which aims to protect innocent parties against the consequences of one's wrongful intent. A large proportion of the later decisions of this country are those involving fraud upon creditors; cases where the party causing the confusion of goods — sometimes the debtor himself, sometimes a party in probable collusion with him — seeks to perplex and hinder officers attaching on the creditor's behalf. It may be affirmed, as a rule, that one conniving at a scheme of this sort, though not, perhaps, the active trespasser nor the debtor, has at least the burden thrown upon him of identifying his own goods in order to exempt them from sale under the attachment. He, and not the creditor, must bear all the inconvenience arising out of such confusion; and if he fails to distinguish and separate what belongs to himself, the whole may be sold as the debtor's property.<sup>3</sup> This is because his motives are

<sup>1</sup> Stephenson v. Little, 10 Mich. 447; Mr. Justice Strong in The Idaho, 93 U. S. 575; § 43. And yet forfeiture is not to be here favored where the character of the mixture may dispense with it. 36 Neb. 607.

<sup>2</sup> Morton, J., in Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298.

<sup>3</sup> Beach v. Schmultz, 20 Ill. 185; McDowell v. Rissell, 37 Penn. St. 164; Smith v. Welch, 10 Wis. 91; Treat v. Barber, 7 Conn. 275; Chap-

pell v. Cox, 18 Md. 513; Weil v. Silverstone, 6 Bush. 698; Dillingham v. Smith, 30 Me. 370; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557. See Harding v. Coburn, 12 Met. 342; Starke v. Paine, 85 Wis. 633. The equities among various innocent parties affected by the wrongful confusion are to be considered with due regard to their several priorities. 69 Miss. 328; Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 44.

open to suspicion, if not clearly fraudulent. But a mixture, though wrongful, which results in a separable product more valuable, will be separated proportionally if practicable.<sup>1</sup>

§ 48. The Same Subject; Mingling Funds in Breach of Trust, etc.—So, too, is it with one who has charge of another's property, and so confounds it with his own that it cannot be distinguished; for breach of trust could hardly be honestly committed, as justice views the situation. However extenuating the circumstances, the party here causing the confusion will lose his own property if he cannot identify and separate it from the mass; and if damages are given to the plaintiff for the loss of his property, the utmost value will be taken.<sup>2</sup> It is a cardinal duty of all trustees to keep the fiduciary property separate and distinct; and law and equity alike hold them strictly to its observance. But factors and other agents, in accordance with business usage and the nature of their agreements, and even trustees, are permitted to mingle the property of two or more for whom they act into one fund or mass, without incurring a personal liability.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Even where there was fraud upon creditors, there is no forfeiture if the goods are distinguishable and separable; for there is no actual confusion. 81 Iowa, 658; § 43. And see First Nat. Bank v. Scott, 36 Neb. 607, where wheat had been delivered at a mill and wrongfully converted into flour and stored with other flour of the miller; such portion of the flour as the wheat would probably produce went to the aggrieved party.

<sup>2</sup> Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 62; Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 Har. & G. 11; Brackenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackf. 377; Carlton v. Conroy, 21 Cal. 170.

<sup>3</sup> See Hamilton v. Cunningham, 2 Brock. 350; Sch. Dom. Rel. § 354; Hill Trustees, 379-384; Perry Trusts, § 447; Cook v. Addison, L. R. 7 Eq. 466. As to property taken by the partner of a firm, see White Mountain Bank v. West, 46 Me. 15. The rule of confusion applies to the partner of a dissolved firm who buys goods and allows them to be charged fraudulently to the old firm. Diversey v. Johnson, 93 Ill. 547.

The act of a fiduciary in mingling trust funds with his own, is often of great inconvenience to the cestui que trust; for if the means of identification fail, the latter must come in with general creditors. But the effort of the chancery courts is to avoid the results of confusion where justice demands it; other property into which the trust money has gone will, if possible, be impressed with the character of the trust; and equity will try to disentangle accounts and give to the beneficiary that which belongs to him. Hence, the mere mingling by a trustee, agent, or executor, of trust money with his own money, as by depositing in his individual name in a bank, does not necessarily prevent an identification of the trust

In the analogous case of chattels specifically pledged or mortgaged for a debt, confusion will sometimes effect an extension of the creditor's security, and sometimes impair or take it away altogether; for if the debtor, having possession, mingle the pledged or mortgaged goods with other goods of his own, they are all brought under cover of the original security because of his misconduct; while the secured creditor in possession, who is guilty of a corresponding intermixture, must bear the consequences of his folly.<sup>1</sup> So, too, would it be with specific property set aside by the agreement of debtor and creditor for a certain purpose, and then intermingled with other goods by the one or the other.<sup>2</sup> The burden of proof, at all events, to designate his own goods, rests upon the wrong-doer.

§ 49. Rule where Confusion was by Unintentional Error.—(3.) If the intermixture results from one's unintentional mistake of fact, there being no evidence of wilfulness, it seems to be now well settled, whatever doubts were formerly entertained, that the party causing the confusion will be protected in his rights, so far as the circumstances of the case may fairly permit. Even negligence, where the element of wilfulness or fraud is wanting, or at all events unless culpable, does not necessarily divest the careless owner of his property.<sup>3</sup> Such is the rule announced when one owner takes another's goods and confuses them with his own, thinking they are his, or believing that he has a right under a contract so to do; and, in general, wherever his mistake is an honest one.<sup>4</sup> And fund, according to the latest cases. Houghton v. Davenport, 74 Me. 590; 2 Perry Trusts, § 837; Hallett's Estate, 13 Ch. D. 696; National Bank v. Insurance Co., 104 U. S. 54; Van Alen v. American Bank, 52 N. Y. 1; Schouler Ex'rs, § 331.

<sup>1</sup> See M'Kean v. Wagenblast, 2 Grant, 462; Fuller v. Paige, 26 Ill. 358; Cook v. Addison, L. R. 7 Eq. 466; Willard v. Rice, 11 Met. 493; Webster v. Power, L. R. 2 P. C. 69; Dunning v. Stearns, 9 Barb. 630; First Nat. Bank v. Lindenstruth, 79

Md. 136; First Nat. Bank v. Kilbourne, 127 Ill. 573; Kreth v. Rogers, 101 N. C. 263; 10 Wash. 472.

<sup>2</sup> Huff v. Earl, 3 Ind. 306.

<sup>3</sup> But see the foregoing section. The question as to whether the mixture was wilful or innocent is one of fact for a jury. 85 Ga. 27. As to the lessee of a store stocked with goods who adds other goods, see 77 Ga. 748.

<sup>4</sup> Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333, per Redfield, J.; Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298, per Morton, J.; Hessel-

yet, while the courts show an obvious disposition to shield the unintentional trespasser from loss, they are not as yet bold in declaring the parties owners in common of the entire intermixture, — a consequence which would doubtless follow, were the equities of the two precisely alike : notwithstanding such must logically be the result, when all means of identification have failed. But to allow the unintentional trespasser a fair opportunity to point out and separate, if he may, his own portion of the mass, — which, in the case of solids brought together, might be possible, if he, though no one else, knew of distinguishing marks, — they certainly concede.<sup>1</sup>

Where the owner originally invaded has taken away the whole intermixture, it is said that he may be sued in assumpsit for the value of the innocent invader's goods, if he has sold them ; otherwise, in trover after a demand and refusal.<sup>2</sup> But it has been decided, that unless the invaded owner took away the whole intermixture as an intentional trespasser, or used goods knowing them to belong to the innocent invader, there should be a demand upon him, followed by refusal, before suit ; that an action of account at law is not the innocent invader's proper remedy in such a plight.<sup>3</sup> When it comes to a demand, and the holder of the intermixture, instead of refusing, tells the other party to point out his property, the latter is in an awkward dilemma. Plainly, then, the party already in possession has the decided advantage, — a rule which will always hold true of common ownership in chattels ; and that the common-law remedies can avail little for breaking up the mass, or dissolving the relation, we have elsewhere seen. Perhaps equity would decree a partition ;

tine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237 ; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311 ; Thome v. Colton, 27 Iowa, 425.

<sup>1</sup> See Chappell v. Cox, 18 Md. 513 ; Moore v. Bowman, 37 N. H. 494. See 30 N. J. Eq. 304, n., where numerous cases are cited to the effect that a confusion of goods by mistake creates no forfeiture. In case of innocent mixture, a proportionate part of the common mass or of the manufactured product is favored as far as practicable. Martin v. Mason, 78 Me. 452 ; 70 Mich. 309 ; § 43.

<sup>2</sup> Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. 298.

<sup>3</sup> Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333 ; Smith v. Morrill, 56 Me. 566 ; Chandler v. Graff, 25 Minn. 88.

and yet the practical difficulty is to make equitable partition at all. If the parties cannot agree upon a fair division of the bulk by measure or weight, a sale and distribution of the proceeds offer the most appropriate remedy; and perhaps a bill in equity would be entertained for that purpose.<sup>1</sup>

§ 50. Rule where Confusion is caused by a Stranger; Attaching Officer, etc.—(4.) Presumably, where the confusion of chattels is caused wholly by a stranger, the several owners of the ingredients, neither of whom is at fault, would become common owners of the intermixture; for, as their equities are the same, why should one be deprived of his property rather than another?<sup>2</sup> For the rule of comparative values seems never to have been applied to confused goods, as in products by accession, so as to give the whole to the owner of the most valuable portion, on due compensation to the other.

Between trespass by an entire stranger to the ingredients, and trespass by an owner thereof, we may reckon trespass by a third person to which this same owner is a privy or principal. It is, probably, because of the legal uncertainty as to how much blame should be imputed to him, or how far the intermixture was caused by his own direction, that we find courts laying down their rules rather cautiously as against the owner of goods which have become mingled with those of a debtor attached in controversies with a creditor. If one voluntarily suffers his goods to become so mingled, whether wilfully or only negligently, the burden of identifying his goods is thrown upon him, notwithstanding the act of confusion was that of another. So much the courts declare.<sup>3</sup> But is he punishable further? Most probably, if the wilfulness and wrong can be brought to his door, so as to make him substantially the aggressor of a third person's creditor, he will forfeit all title to his own goods; but not otherwise.

<sup>1</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 163, 166, where the remedies of co-owners are considered; Fobes v. Shattuck, 22 Barb. 568. In case of a careless intermixture by the life beneficiary of her own property with the trust fund, equity will follow the fund

after her death and impose the burden of separation upon her representatives. 49 N. J. Eq. 573; see § 48.

<sup>2</sup> See next section as to confusion by accident.

<sup>3</sup> See Beach v. Schmultz, 20 Ill. 185, and other cases, supra, § 47.

It is, at all events, the business of the owner, who, wilfully or carelessly, has allowed his goods to become confused with those of a debtor, to point out to the officer what belongs to him. And since his own duty is to attach the debtor's goods, whether so mingled or not, the officer is no trespasser merely for having attached, in good faith and with due care, those of another blended in the same mass; but if, after the attachment, the owner identifies his own goods and demands a re-delivery of them, the officer must surrender them, or else be held liable for their conversion.<sup>1</sup> In cases of doubt, the officer will be justified in delivering up on demand the least valuable articles corresponding to the claim.<sup>2</sup> But, in every attachment of goods found blended with those of a debtor, an owner's rights, if known, are to be respected; and, where unlawful motive for the intermixture is not known to exist, the officer should give every reasonable opportunity for a separation of goods; for if he covers by his attachment goods known to belong to another, and takes them with a determination to hold them fast, he is liable in trespass at the owner's suit.<sup>3</sup>

§ 51. Rule where Confusion is caused by Inevitable Accident, Vis Major, etc. — (5.) If confusion of chattels takes place because of inevitable accident or vis major, the rule is at length well established, that the parties whose goods have become intermingled shall own the mass in common; and this, too, whether the intermixture be of fluids or solids. Any other disposition of the title under such circumstances would be unreasonable; for, as both parties stand equally entitled to relief, the law may not assign the whole mass to one of them rather than the other. And if to neither, then the alternative presents itself, quite as repugnant to good sense, of treating the accidental intermixture as bona vacantia, and open to the public for appropriation.<sup>1</sup> For here, again, our law does not, as in accession, recognize that either party may take the whole mass and compensate the other.

<sup>1</sup> Treat v. Barber, 7 Conn. 275; Shumway v. Rutter, 8 Pick. 443; Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557; Roth v. Wells, 29 N. Y. 471; Taylor v. Jones, 42 N. H. 25. See also 30 N. J. Eq. n. And as to the officer's duty in such attachments, see Drake Attachment, § 199.

<sup>2</sup> Shumway v. Rutter, 8 Pick. 443.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Sanborn, 6 Gray, 134; Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494. If articles mixed together be capable of identification, there can be no attachment of the whole. 30 N. J. Eq. n. and cases cited; Drake Attachment, § 199; § 43.

It may be generally affirmed, that wherever the confusion is such that no blame can be imputed to any owner of ingredients, where it is solely the result of inevitable accident, or the invasion of some superior hostile force, or even, as it would appear, the wrongful act of any stranger to the goods, the result is not to deprive any one absolutely of his property, but to make the former proprietors owners in common of the solid or fluid intermixture : each according to his due share, if strict apportionment be practicable ; otherwise, in equal portions.<sup>2</sup> And, if a partial destruction has taken place, the loss should be proportionally shared.<sup>3</sup>

It follows that, if one co-owner of property thus thrown together into an undistinguishable mass gathers and takes possession of the whole, he is not usually liable as for conversion to another co-owner ; but his possession is to be regarded rather as rightful, and subject to the other party's right to appear and take out his own portion. He is entitled to compensation for his labor in protecting the whole ; and, even where he has consumed more than his rightful share, he is accordingly. Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427. And see Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 442 ; Buckley v. Gross, 3 B. & S. 574 ; Jones v. Moore, 4 Y. & C. 351. The same rule is recognized in this country. Moore v. Erie Railway Co., 7 Lans. 39. If confusion be caused by the action of a freshet, or by a tempest, or by the effect of a fire, or by any natural cause, there is no forfeiture of title to the mass. 30 N. J. Eq. 292, and cases cited ; State v. Burt, 64 N. C. 619 ; Buckley v. Gross, 3 B. & S. 566.

<sup>1</sup> The whole question was carefully considered in the recent case of Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427 ; a controversy having arisen over the title to cotton which belonged to different owners, but was shipped in the same vessel. Exposure in a sea peril had caused all the marks of identity to be effaced ; and in this state the ownership of the cotton was at issue. It was determined that neither the principle of wrongful admixture, nor that of goods without an owner, could apply ; that, as inevitable accident had caused the confusion, no owner could be said to have lost his own property ; but the title to the whole was vested in them together by way of ownership in common ; and an adjustment was ordered

<sup>2</sup> See remarks of Blackburn, J., in Buckley v. Gross, 3 B. & S. 566 ; Bryant v. Ware, 30 Me. 295.

<sup>3</sup> Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427.

held bound to make his co-owner whole and no more.<sup>1</sup> That the common law does not readily interfere with one co-owner's possession of chattels, has already been perceived; and yet, as to divisible chattels, like grain and timber, we apprehend that one's intent to appropriate exclusively to himself what he knows ought in fairness to be divided, may be inferred under suitable circumstances from his conduct, so as to render him liable in trover to his fellow-owners.<sup>2</sup>

§ 52. Roman Law of Confusion.—What was the law of confusion as expounded in the enlightened age of Roman jurisprudence, is not clearly ascertainable. Some have asserted that one rule of title applied to confusio, or the mixture of fluids; and another to commixtio, or the mixture of solids; that in the one case, whether the mixture were by accident or mutual consent, the whole substance was owned in common; while, in the other, mutual consent alone could confer such a title, the judge being left free to divide an accidental mixture or not, as he might prefer.<sup>3</sup> The reason of this distinction seems a fanciful one; namely, that in solids, but not in fluids, each particle remains the same, although it cannot be easily distinguished. But foreign jurists are by no means agreed that the Roman law ever made any such distinction between fluids and solids: illustrations are not at hand to support it. On the contrary, some assert that this alleged difference of principle between confusio and commixtio is altogether modern.<sup>4</sup> Certainly, no distinction, beyond a verbal one, between solids and fluids in a confused state, is recognized by English or American law; and our rule of confusion applies with the same force to timber, cotton-bales, and grain, as to wine and oil, as the cases already cited will amply show.

§ 53. Final Comparison of Doctrines of Accession and Confusion.—In many respects, the doctrines of accession and confusion are seen to be quite similar. Under whichever of these heads the question of title is presented, we find the

<sup>1</sup> Moore v. Erie Railway Co., 7 Lans. 39.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 165, 166.

<sup>3</sup> See Colquhoun Rom. & Civ. Law, §§ 988, 990.

<sup>4</sup> Gaius, by Poste, pp. 166, 167, 171; Story Bailm. § 40; Willes, J., in Spence v. Union Marine Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 427.

courts inquiring into the causes which led to the existing state of things ; ready to punish the wrong-doer or trespasser, if need be, and sedulous to protect the innocent owner at all hazards ; distinguishing, however, between wilful and unintentional trespass, in order that honest error may not be too severely punished ; and, in these later days, certainly, construing the rule as essentially one of necessity and convenience, with harsh remedies which should be invoked only when the opposing titles have become too closely and confusedly blended for the ordinary rule to work smoothly, that each shall enjoy his own. Nor has the physical condition of the product or mixture much to do with the issue of ownership, if the present drift of the decisions may be trusted, beyond determining whether it be practicable or not to distinguish and separate without injury what each has contributed.

But in one important respect the two doctrines widely differ. The law of accession takes into account, as we have seen, the relative value of components, and inclines to confer the title to the whole upon the greater contributor, leaving the lesser one to his suitable recompense rather than permit him to become a co-owner. Into the law of confusion, on the other hand, this element of relative value does not enter, so far as judicial precedents yet frame a rule ;<sup>1</sup> the contributor of a tenth part has as distinct a right as the contributor of nine-tenths ; and, instead of permitting the larger title to draw in the lesser, with a suitable recompense in the latter instance, the law remits both parties, all other things being equal, to their rights as owners in common, from which awkward relationship a partition or a sale of the whole property, with distribution of the proceeds, affords, as we have shown, the natural mode of escape.

This difference of principle, we conceive, is founded in convenience. For accession exhibits, as its usual product, something which cannot well be divided up,—a sort of integer for beneficial enjoyment,—while the proper result of confusion or intermixture would be a mass naturally and usually capable of fractional subdivision and beneficial ownership in the several portions. Again, the cloth into which another's wool has been woven, or the hoops wrought out of another's iron, derive their new value largely from the appliance of skilful labor ; so that one finds frequently, in the product of accession, something worth far more than any of the original materials which entered into its composition ; while from the confusion of goods comes a substance worth little or nothing beyond the value of its component parts, and to which the personal labor of mixing can hardly have contributed, unless it be to the injury of ingredients. The bestowal of useful labor should always strengthen one's title. And, once more, this same element of useful labor must render the adjustment of shares on an arithmetical basis far more difficult in the case of accession than in that of confusion. It is from the combination of these three considerations, we may conclude, that the law, working out the demands of natural justice, and at the same time regarding its own convenience, makes so marked a distinction between the results of accession and confusion.

<sup>1</sup> But see supra, § 47, notes.

PART V.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY GIFT.

---

CHAPTER I.

GIFTS IN GENERAL.

§ 54. Definition of a Gift.—To the voluntary transfer of a thing without consideration, the term “gift,” which in our law corresponds with the donatio of the civil law, is commonly applied; the word sometimes signifying, in common speech, the thing bestowed, and sometimes the method of bestowing.<sup>1</sup>

§ 55. Origin and History of such Transfers of Personal Property.—This mode of acquiring personal property has doubtless prevailed from the earliest ages; and, in the customs of all countries known in history, gifts from sovereign to subject in recognition of merit, from subject to sovereign to gain favor, and between rival potentates in furtherance of a special embassy, have borne an important part in ceremonial intercourse. Greece feared Pisistratus because of the presents he made to citizens, and despised Themistocles for those he took from them.<sup>2</sup> Under the Roman emperors, the custom of bestowing gifts was universally recognized; and a controversy arose among the lawyers as to whether the Institutes of Justinian were right in classing among the civil modes of acquisition what must have been good by the law of nature. Clients at Rome sent gifts to their patrons for managing their legal or other business; freedmen, by way of recompense for services; slaves, on the birthdays and other special festival occasions observed in their master's family. New-Year's gifts have been traced far back into the fabulous era of the imperial city's foundation; and at New Year's, it is said, the poorer classes were wont to make presents of sweet things of various kinds as a good omen, whence probably originated the modern practice of throwing sugar-plums about at the carnival celebration. The rich on such days would send gold and silver to the officers of state, and particularly to the emperors, who were wont to accept of magnificent New-Year's presents, from the time of Augustus downward; a practice which Tiberius and Claudius tried to check by edict, but with no real success. The Saturnalia afforded another occasion for promiscuous gift-making. Nuptial gifts, which largely stimulated fortune-hunters of a matrimonial bent; presents to strangers, presents to magistrates,—all of these, with other classes of gifts far more questionable, have come down in history illustrated by the learning of Justinian's age, to attest the prodigality and corruption of a declining empire.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. “Gift,” “Donation;” 2 Kent Com. 437; 1 Dom. Civ. Law, Part I. Book 1, Tit. X.

<sup>2</sup> See Smith’s Greece, B. 1, c. 11; B. 4, c. 22.

Gifts for benevolent purposes—to endow places of worship, seminaries, and hospitals, and for alleviating the sufferings of the destitute and deserving—were doubtless not unknown in the days of paganism among others of a less disinterested sort, which the law has better preserved; yet charity has borne its best fruit in these later centuries, and under the humanizing influences of the Christian religion. The desire, however, of power and influence, of esteem among men, of winning a friend or propitiating an enemy,—all these are among the active principles of our being; gratitude, too, the love of family, friendship, and that wider affection for humanity which prompts the generous possessor of goods to impart of his abundance to those who have not. Hence no artificial system of laws is needed, no social polish, to give easy play to machinery whose motive power lies deep in the human heart. So simple and natural is the legal transaction itself (and this is particularly true of chattel gifts), that the courts of England and America have hitherto elaborated the jurisprudence of the subject but little beyond the question of a suitable delivery, and never were perplexed for leading rules until the modern classes of incorporeal chattels came into existence. But the subject is one of growing importance, and deserves more than the meagre attention which our text-writers have hitherto bestowed upon it. Let us examine it somewhat in detail; confining ourselves, for the present chapter, to the more general features which this mode of transfer presents.

<sup>1</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, §§ 1050, 1051.

§ 56. Absence of Consideration as an Element in Gifts.—And, first of all, to look into the matter of consideration with reference to gifts. As a motive exists for every action, and human conduct is usually the result of a nice combination of motives, very little reflection should serve to convince us that what we call a gift is seldom made in the spirit of pure disinterestedness; and if self-examination will so often disclose the base alloy, how can such a transfer be deemed gratuitous or without consideration? But the law does not look so far below the surface for its reasons. When no pecuniary consideration passes back as an understood part of the transaction, nor any service is performed by way of an understood equivalent, the transaction, viewed from the legal standpoint, can hardly be otherwise than a gift. To call it bargain and sale would be to insult the parties. But the civil law of Justinian's age followed human nature rather more closely; for it classified gifts into simplices, or such as one makes of his own free will, and remuneratoriæ, or those implying some consideration. And such a division was apparent in gifts inter vivos, which might be of the remunerative sort, or absolute,—that is, made in the latter instance without special reason, or, as one might say, out of pure liberality.<sup>1</sup> But the legal rule did not even here undertake to dissect the inner motives closely; the Roman law differing from ours mainly in treating as an honorary gift what we should now claim as compensation for services rendered.

<sup>1</sup> Colquhoun Civ. Law, §§ 1050, 1051, 1059.

And yet so ready is our common law to sustain an agreement as such by finding a consideration to bottom it upon, that a mutual stipulation, or some detriment suffered at the promising party's instance, is legally construed into a valuable consideration, and not benefits alone actually gained or expected by the party promising. This anxiety of the law to find a consideration is not strange ; since consideration is said to be the very life and essence of a contract, so that a promise for which there is no consideration could not be legally enforced. And hence, notwithstanding the assertion constantly to be found in the cases which relate to gifts, that there exists an opportunity for repentance before one designing to make a gift has actually executed his intention, the courts not uncommonly hold one bound by his voluntary promise to give to some charitable object, wherever he has signed a subscription paper to that effect, and other parties have acted upon the faith of his promise.<sup>1</sup> In other words, a naked promise to give, without a stipulation for anything in return, would, standing independently, be deemed voluntary and not enforceable ; but the consequences flowing from such a promise to other parties concerned therein may give it mutuality, and raise such a consideration as to render it no longer gratuitous, but an enforceable contract.

A consideration, it is well understood, need not be adequate, nor stand as a full equivalent, in order to support a contract. The common law, too, has usually gone so far as to presume conclusively, wherever a seal is affixed to an instrument, that a valuable consideration has actually passed ; though time and again the man who executes a bond as surety does so from motives of friendship, and without the expectation of any recompense whatever.<sup>2</sup> And, under the designated when the funds were contributed. Downs v. Congregational Society, 63 N. H. 151.

<sup>1</sup> See Mirick v. French, 2 Gray, 420 ; Ives v. Stirling, 6 Met. 310 ; 9 Cush. 539. It is a question of intention whether property bought with funds raised by subscription remains in the subscribers or in the beneficiary

<sup>2</sup> The seal does not preclude inquiry as to a consideration. 24 Penn. St. 232.

Roman law, gratuitous promises were enforceable, when made with the observance of certain formalities which implied deliberate intention; a principle often observable in the codes of modern Europe, where certain instruments are to be solemnly executed before a notary, and in presence of several witnesses.<sup>1</sup> But friendship, good-will, or any merely moral obligation, cannot suffice as a consideration to support an unsealed contract at our law; nor even blood or natural affection between near relatives, though this might have technically supported a use or a trust executed in equity.<sup>2</sup> Yet marriage is a valuable consideration, and will sustain any reasonable family settlement made on the faith of it.<sup>3</sup> The fact, moreover, that the gift has induced the expenditure of money or labor upon the thing given may often render a gift irrevocable in equity.<sup>4</sup> All these are doctrines well established under the law of contracts, and of equity jurisprudence, which serve to indicate to what extent a promise may be pronounced gratuitous or without consideration; and hence appropriate to transfers by way of gift. A gift or gratuity may be delicately given, as though to indicate that it was in payment of some debt; and yet the transaction remains a gift.<sup>5</sup>

§ 57. Gifts to be classed with Contracts as founded in Mutual Undertaking. — Our earlier writers of the common law, so far as they have given the subject any attention, appear to have regarded gifts of personal property, because of this usual absence of a supporting consideration, and perhaps, too, because the mode of transfer was so simple, as a class of transactions quite distinct from contracts. And this might be proper enough, if Blackstone's definition of a contract be taken as strictly correct: namely, an agreement "upon sufficient con-

<sup>1</sup> 1 Pars. Contr. 6th ed. 427, 430.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 444, 445, n. by Chitty, &c.

<sup>3</sup> Magniac v. Thompson, 7 Pet. 348; Sch. Dom. Rel. § 173.

<sup>4</sup> This is a rule chiefly applied where real estate was given. See Hardesty v. Richardson, 44 Md. 617;

Neale v. Neale, 9 Wall. 1; Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34. And see Coles v. Pilkington, L. R. 19 Eq. 174, for a similar result, where the gift has induced a donee not only to occupy the premises, but to change his mode of life.

<sup>5</sup> Stevens Re, 83 Cal. 322.

sideration" to do or not to do a particular thing.<sup>1</sup> But Kent, while adopting this definition, is hardly satisfied with the alleged distinction. "Every gift which is made perfect by delivery, and every grant," he says, "are executed contracts; for they are founded on the mutual consent of the parties, in reference to a right or interest passing between them."<sup>2</sup> This proposition is undoubtedly correct; and the best authorities of the present day not only take the same view of perfected gifts, but have also enlarged the definition of a contract; and they treat the element of consideration as a non-essential for classifying, though practically an essential when it comes to the matter of legal enforcement.<sup>3</sup>

This question is not a purely abstract one, however; for, whether we use the term "contract" or "agreement" as legally appropriate, we should make sure of what is a fundamental fact, that gifts are in the nature of, or at least originate in, a mutual undertaking. This is not always perceptible at first sight, so quickly and simply is the undertaking usually carried out, and so little has the taker to do as compared with the giver. The idea inculcated in our old books is that "delivery" is what constitutes a gift. This is not true. The idea of gift embraces both giver and taker, or two parties meeting together. The very word "gift" is but one-sided in symbolizing the actual transaction. Where the gift is of something beneficial, the law is usually so well satisfied with scrutinizing the giver's acts, that acceptance by the taker will be readily presumed; yet not, we apprehend, against plain evidence to the contrary. It is not uncommon for one to decline a proffered gift of value from motives of delicacy, self-respect, regard for public opinion, the desire of personal independence as regards the giver, and the like. And if the gift to be made were to one's prejudice, as of a

<sup>1</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 442, 444.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 438, 449.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Pars. Contr. 6th ed. 6; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 197, per Marshall, C. J.; preceding section; 2 Steph. Com. 109. The mutuality of a contract is expressed in the best of the later legal definitions. For instance, see 1 Pars. Contr. 6th ed. 6: "A contract in legal contemplation is an agreement between two or more parties for the doing or not doing of some particular thing."

rattlesnake, a deadly poison, or some animal with an infectious disease, acceptance would hardly take place at all. Promise of a thing by way of gift, moreover, may be made to take full effect hereafter.

A gift, then, is a contract, or originates in a contract, according to the best legal definition, and at all events, imports an agreement, because it is founded in the convention of two or more parties ; executed so soon as the proper formalities — substantially a delivery and acceptance — have been complied with ; and until then executory from the time the promise to give (if any) was first made or the formalities of execution began. And whether the gift be executory or executed, the general law of contracts should be invoked to adjust the respective rights and obligations of the parties ; the element of consideration always bearing, however, as we have shown, on the question of legally enforcing an executory promise or undertaking.<sup>1</sup> Hence, the evidence, in cases thus arising, might show, on the giver's part, not a gift but only a promise or agreement to give on some later occasion.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Toullier and Barbeyrac are cited by Chancellor Kent among writers on the civil law who stand opposed to Puffendorf, in this same discussion, whether a gift is properly a contract ; the latter writer having excluded gifts from the class of contracts, out of deference to the Roman lawyers, who restrained the definition of a contract to engagements resulting from negotiation. 2 Kent Com. 437 ; Puff. Droit des Gens, liv. v. c. 3, § 10, n. 5. We should suppose that there might be negotiations for a gift, just as there are negotiations for the care of a chattel without reward ; a sort of gratuitous contract being presented in either case as the primary result, while the promise remains executory. And writers, whether of the civil or common law, who class all bailments, whether gratuitous or upon consideration, under the general head of Contracts, and yet refuse a place likewise for gifts, appear to us inconsistent. See Story Bailm. § 2 ; 2 Bl. Com. 446 ; 2 Kent Com. 558.

Bailment, as the term imports, is the delivery of a thing for a special purpose, &c. This delivery is in general (though not always) upon some contract express or implied. Schoul. Bailm. §§ 1, 2. Should no full delivery, no genuine bailment, take place, a contract for taking or receiving in bailment might nevertheless be relied upon in damages by the aggrieved party. So, too, if a gift proper be narrowed in definition to the corporeal transfer itself (i.e. by way of an executed contract), nevertheless questions may arise on the executory contract to give or receive in gift ; so that one would have to speak of the gift and the contract for a gift.

<sup>2</sup> Gammon Seminary v. Robbins, 128 Md. 85 ; 57 Hun, 229 ; 36 Ill. App. 77 ; § 65.

§ 58. Capacity of Parties and Good Faith in the Transfer.—As with contracts generally, so is it with a gift: the capacity of the parties and the substantial good faith of the transaction are material to its validity. This rule is universal.<sup>1</sup> Every transfer of property should be made in the exercise of an intelligent understanding and freedom of will suitable to the occasion.

§ 59. The Same Subject: Rule of Mental Capacity applied.—In the first place, there should be sufficient mental capacity. But the law presumes mental competency in every contract, though ready to receive proof to the contrary. The parties who are usually classed as incompetent to make contracts legally binding are married women, infants, and insane persons; and the law imposes some restrictions, beside, for the protection of seamen; while outlaws and aliens were formerly disqualified altogether, on grounds of public policy or expediency, with which we have little concern in this country. The disabilities of married women are rapidly disappearing under the influence of modern legislation and judicial decisions; and even as to infants and insane persons—classes which present every shade of mental incapacity, from mere immaturity of judgment to hopeless idiocy and utter imbecility—the law discriminates; rarely pronouncing a contract absolutely void, unless to the plain prejudice of the incompetent party, sustaining any contract for necessities as plainly intended for his benefit, and leaving doubtful contracts voidable at the option of the incompetent party so soon as he becomes sui juris. The appointment of a guardian, by which a sort of representative mental capacity is legally substituted for the incompetent person's ordinary business transactions of life, removes much of the uncertainty otherwise attending such contracts.<sup>2</sup>

Now to apply these principles to gifts. It is manifest that a beneficial gift, even to one mentally incapable of contract-

<sup>1</sup> Capacity was regarded in gifts under the Roman law. And a delivery by mistake gave a right to recall the gift. Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1060.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Pars. Contr. 293 et seq.; Sch. Dom. Rel., Parts II., IV., V., passim.

ing, could hardly be void under any circumstances; if voidable, he or his representative would be under the obligation of restoring if possible when avoiding; if consumable and actually consumed, meanwhile, for his benefit, it would most likely have been as valid per se as other contracts for necessities, with this very important difference in its favor, that the incompetent person's estate had nothing to pay for it. Quite consistently with this theory, the civil and common law presume acceptance in every beneficial gift; and this, notwithstanding the donee was an infant. But whether such gift might not be set aside afterwards as voidable, at the instance of the infant or his legal representatives, on restoration of the property still unconsumed, the courts do not seem to have had occasion to inquire.<sup>1</sup> It may fairly be inferred that the same presumption of acceptance would apply, and — mutatis mutandis — the same general rule in the case of an insane as an infant donee. From the mere exercise of dominion over the property, acceptance is usually inferred.<sup>2</sup>

But the very considerations which prompt the courts to sustain a beneficial gift on an incapable donee's behalf must induce them to break up the transaction, when the donor is the incapable party. For, of all property transfers, a gift should be made in the exercise of a befitting mental capacity, since the giver is to receive no kind of recompense or equivalent. The more liberal it is to the donee, the less is it to the donor. It is here that mental incapacity would doubtless afford a ready cause for rendering the gift voidable, or indeed for treating it as altogether null and void. At the same time, we should distinguish between gifts of one's whole estate and gifts of specific chattels. A will is frequently set aside for want of what is termed testamentary capacity; that is, a sound and disposing mind capable of appreciating one's own relation to the proper objects of his bounty, their needs, and the effect of his disposing act. Whether a test of this character might not be applied to a single sweeping act, by way of gift, in disposing of one's estate, should an extreme case arise, we will not inquire; but in the ordinary case of a specific gift, as manifested in a single act accompanied by delivery, the test of mental capacity would be that applicable to any other contract, and not testamentary capacity.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See De Levillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Rinker v. Rinker, 20 Ind. 185; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78. And see Sch. Dom. Rel. §§ 411-413, 446;

Parsons v. Hill, 8 Mo. 135; Turpin v. Turpin, 16 Ohio St. 270.

<sup>2</sup> See §§ 90-92.

§ 60. Rule as to Freedom of Will and Good Faith applied.—In the second place, freedom of will is essential to the validity of a gift, as in other contracts; and where a donor or donee has been imposed upon, by fraud or force, or there is palpable error, the party wronged can doubtless have the gift annulled on application to a court of equity.<sup>2</sup> As to donors, in fact, the rule extends much further. Actual fraud or force practised by the donee need not be shown, nor so great a degree of mental weakness on the donor's part as to amount to legal incapacity to contract or make a will, in order to set aside a gift which has been obtained from the donor by a donee standing in some confidential relation to him; such as that of attorney to client, trustee to cestui que trust, guardian to ward, medical or spiritual adviser to advisee or patient. For the presumption is, that where one party is so situated as to be able to exercise a controlling influence over another's person or property, any transaction, which is decidedly to his own advantage and to the other's disadvantage, must have been procured by the exercise of undue influence in accordance with the opportunity. Especially must this be true of a transfer by gift. And hence the rule well established by the authorities is, that gifts obtained by one standing in such confidential relation are primâ facie void, and the burden is thrown on the donee to establish to the satisfaction of the court, that the gift in question was the free, voluntary, unbiased act of the donor.<sup>3</sup> But as the

<sup>1</sup> See Crum v. Thornley, 47 Ill. 192; Van Deusen v. Rowley, 4 Seld. 358. But, as to gifts causâ mortis, see post. For a recent instance where an infant's gift has been sustained, where nearly of age and dying before majority, see Taylor v. Johnston, 19 Ch. D.

603. And see Buckinghamshire v. Drury, 2 Eden, 60; Story Eq. Jur. § 242.

<sup>2</sup> Samuel v. Marshall, 3 Leigh, 567; also Todd v. Grove and other citations, in next note.

<sup>3</sup> Todd v. Grove, 33 Md. 188, where requisite proof for overcoming so unfavorable a presumption is frequently attainable, gifts of this character may be sustained on proper evidence : they are not necessarily and invariably void,<sup>1</sup> especially if not improvident.

The character of such a gift — whether trifling or excessive in amount, and reasonably or unreasonably made under the circumstances — is material to the issue. Thus, a gift made to one standing in a confidential relation, of a sum sufficient to make up the latter's due share, under a will of the donor's deceased husband, whose inequalities of disposition the donor desires to correct, is from this point of view sustainable ; especially if the other parties interested have been consulted, and given their consent.<sup>2</sup> The next material inquiry concerns the influence actually exerted by the donee, whether habitually or on the particular occasion, as tending to bring about the present transfer in his own favor ; and here the physical health and mental vigor of the donor at and about the time of the gift, and his susceptibility to influence and importunity, are circumstances for consideration, as well as the character of the influence which the donee seemed dis-the whole subject is ably discussed ;

* 1 Story Eq. Jur. §§ 307-323, and cases cited ; Leddel v. Starr, 5 C. E. Green (N. J.) 274 ; Garvin v. Williams, 44 Mo. 465 ; Wright v. Vanderplank, 2 Kay & J. 1 ; Donnell v. Donnell, 1 Head, 267 ; Yosti v. Laughran, 49 Mo. 594 ; Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166 ; Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252 ; Taylor v. Taylor, 8 How. 183 ; Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. 772. As between parent and child, the presumption applies in cases of gift from the latter where the parental authority and dominion have not yet terminated ; see Wright v. Vanderplank and Taylor v. Taylor, supra ; Sch. Dom. Rel. § 270, and cases cited. A gift from father to child fully executed, the parent being of good capacity, and not superannuated nor unduly influenced, is upheld. Moore v. Moore, 67 Mo. 192 ; Kellogg v.

Adams, 51 Wis. 138. But the presumption is not favorable to the intention of a gift in doubtful cases of this sort. Sch. Dom. Rel. § 270. For the application of this rule of good faith to the several domestic relations, see generally Sch. Dom. Rel. §§ 184, 189, 193, 270. A gift from parent to child may under ordinary circumstances be presumed voluntary. 156 Penn. St. 600. But not where the parent was mentally weak and subject to undue influence from the donee. Parker v. Parker, 45 N. J. Eq. 224.

<sup>1</sup> Ib. ; Nesbit v. Lockman, 34 N. Y. 167. The question of undue influence is properly submitted to a jury. Woodbury v. Woodbury, 141 Mass. 329.

<sup>2</sup> Leddel v. Starr, 5 C. E. Green (N. J.), 274. See Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252.

posed to throw around him.<sup>1</sup> One may occupy a relation of peculiar confidence where undue influence might be exerted by him in a particular instance, though not usually or necessarily so placed.<sup>2</sup> In all gifts of this sort, equity scrutinizes the transaction with jealous care, on grounds of public policy, and will require satisfactory proof of equal and fair dealing.<sup>3</sup> And the fact that a sick donor does not appreciate the nature and effect of his action as irrevocable in contrast with one's gift causâ mortis may carry some weight.<sup>4</sup>

§ 60 a. Improvident Gifts not favored. — The improvidence and inequity of a gift, in cases where undue influence may perhaps have been exerted, or the donor's mind was not clearly of normal capacity, is a preponderating circumstance for doubtful issues.<sup>5</sup> Gifts exceeding a certain proportion of

<sup>1</sup> Todd v. Grove, 33 Md. 188.

<sup>2</sup> It is said, and truly, that there is nothing in the confidential relation of medical adviser to a patient that per se forbids the acceptance of a gift by him from his patient. Audenried's Appeal, 89 Penn. St. 114. And the same is observed as to ministers of the gospel, who doubtless are usually justified in receiving personal gifts from their parishioners or strangers, not to add gifts for religious and charitable objects. Greenfield's Estate, 24 Penn. St. 232. So might a domestic servant properly take perquisites and gratuities.

But the time and circumstances under which all such gifts are received becomes material; and here as elsewhere, according to the better opinion, a court of equity may, from the relation actually existing between a medical or spiritual adviser or a domestic, infer in many cases, especially where the donor was sick or feeble, and no others were present at the time of the transaction, a fair probability that undue influence was exerted. See Romilly, M. R., in Houghton v. Houghton, 15 Beav. 299; Hall v. Knappenberge, 97 Mo. 509. A spiritual or other adviser, or family attendant, is not justified, under such circumstances, in procuring gifts for himself, or even for charitable purposes, to the ignoring of the donor's natural obligations to his own family; as otherwise the gift may be set aside at their instance. Ford v. Hennessy, 70 Mo. 580.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Story Eq. Jur. §§ 307-323. In Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252, it is stated that the well-established rule of the English chancery courts is to set aside a gift made to one standing in a confidential relation to the donor, unless it can be shown that the donee had competent and independent advice; an exception arising where the gift was of no considerable amount. The American rule seems to be more flexible, and yet a stringent one. See Todd v. Grove, 33 Md. 188. And cf. 19 Ch. D. 603. Sums given away under the pressure of undue influence may be recovered even though the donees stood in no relation of confidence. Morley v. Loughman, [1893] 1 Ch. 736.

<sup>4</sup> See Yeakel v. McAtee, 156 Penn. St. 600; 137 Penn. St. 160.

<sup>5</sup> See § 60; 156 Penn. St. 600; Ford v. Hennessy, 70 Mo. 580; Morley v. Loughman, [1893] 1 Ch. 736.

the donor's estate are invalid, so as to permit of at least a reduction, under the policy of the civil law ;<sup>1</sup> while if all one's property is donated without the reservation of enough for the donor's support, the gift is null and void.<sup>2</sup>

§ 61. Gifts on Immoral Consideration. — While an immoral consideration can never support an executory contract, equity will not interfere at the donor's instance to annul an executed gift, on the ground that it was made in view of a past immoral consideration ; as, for instance, sexual intercourse with the donee.<sup>3</sup>

§ 62. Subject-matter of Gifts ; Rule as to Property or Persons not in Existence. — Any kind of personal property, whether corporeal or incorporeal, appears at this day capable of transfer by gift.<sup>4</sup> But the subject of gift should be certain. Hence a gift of property not in esse at the time of the alleged transfer does not take effect.<sup>5</sup> And a writing which purports to give to a certain person "all the money of which I shall die possessed," — there being no actual delivery of the money, — is only valid when it can be legally established as a will.<sup>6</sup> Nor can there be a direct and immediate gift of personalty to persons not in existence.<sup>7</sup>

§ 63. Gift as applied to Personal Property ; Gifts Inter Vivos and Gifts Causâ Mortis. — The modern tendency being plainly to confine the term "gift" to personal property, using such words as "grant," "voluntary conveyance," or "settlement," in preference, where real estate is made the sole subject of

<sup>1</sup> See 44 La. Ann. 1103.

<sup>2</sup> 44 La. Ann. 859 ; 45 La. Ann. 1135.

Our common law imposes no such restraints. See as to gifts causâ mortis, §§ 144-146. A man may divide personalty among his children by a gift inter vivos, even though the effect be to deprive his wife of property on his death. Samson v. Samson, 67 Iowa, 253.

<sup>3</sup> Gisaf v. Neval, 31 Penn. St. 354 ; Monat v. Parker, 30 La. Ann. 585 ; Carter v. Montgomery, 2 Tenn. Ch. 216. Such, too, was the doctrine of the Roman law. Monat v. Parker, supra.

<sup>4</sup> That gift may be made of a chattel real, such as a lease, see Mahon v. Baker, 26 Penn. St. 519. See further, next chapter.

<sup>5</sup> 2 Kent Com. 438 ; Butler v. Scofield, 4 J. J. Marsh. 139 ; Egerton v. Egerton, 17 N. J. Eq. 419. But see Whiting v. Barrett, 7 Lans. 107.

<sup>6</sup> Butler v. Scofield, 4 J. J. Marsh. 139 ; Busby v. Byrd, 4 Rich. Eq. 9. But see Hannon v. State, 9 Gill, 440.

<sup>7</sup> Hall v. Thomas, 3 Strobb. 101.

transfer, or included, we shall fairly cover the modern law of gifts by placing before the reader such of the court decisions only as come within the proper scope of this work. And, following the civilians in their mode of classification, we shall set forth two leading kinds of gifts in order : first, gifts inter vivos, under which are included the general gift transactions between man and man ; secondly, gifts causâ mortis, which have especial reference to the anticipated death of the giver, and are not to take effect if the peril passes him by.<sup>1</sup> Of the former kind, it might be said, that the transfer takes place solely by act of the parties, as in contracts generally ; while in the latter it assumes, in addition to this act of the parties, the actual termination of the transferring owner's natural life, leaving the transferee surviving him, and so presents a case of title somewhat like that of acquisition under a will.

It should be carefully borne in mind, in the course of the present investigation, that the contemplation of approaching death, as an essential element in the title, is that which especially distinguishes a gift causâ mortis from one inter vivos ; for a person may, and not unfrequently does, make an absolute and irrevocable gift while actually on his death-bed, not meaning that the issue of his illness shall affect the transfer at all ; in which case, if his mind were sound and clear, his will unconstrained, and the intention properly executed, the donation must stand on the footing of any other gift inter vivos, as an act of the parties unaffected by the fact of the donor's mortal dissolution soon after.

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 438 ; Bouv. Dict. " Donation," " Gift ;" also the following chapters.

CHAPTER II.

GIFTS INTER VIVOS; HOW EXECUTED.

§ 64. Gifts Inter Vivos defined; their Essentials.—Gifts inter vivos, or simple gifts, are such as one party makes to another without the expectation of approaching death as the moving cause.<sup>1</sup> And since the mutual intention of the parties to such a gift is properly carried out at once upon delivery and acceptance, or equivalent acts, the transfer will take place absolutely and irrevocably, as the executed act of the parties, upon the due observance of the requisite formalities.

Gifts inter vivos are commonly made where the giver is in his ordinary good health. But this need not be; for, however precarious might be the actual chances of prolonged existence, it is only when death appears imminent, and the prospect of losing for ever his hold upon his property leads the giver to decide that he will bestow a thing in a particular manner, that the law deems the gift he makes other than one inter vivos.<sup>2</sup> All gifts are inter vivos except those causâ mortis.

§ 65. Unexecuted Gift; whether Promise to give is enforceable.—So long as the gift inter vivos remains unexecuted, or rests on a mere executory contract to give, it has no legal validity; for a simple promise to give is without consideration and therefore unenforceable. Hence, one's parol promise to pay money as a gift does not bind him; but he may change his intention and revoke the promise at any time before completing the gift.<sup>3</sup> So, too, a parol promise to a trustee, that he shall have the trust property upon the death of the beneficiary, is revocable at pleasure.<sup>1</sup> And money paid into the hands of B., as trustee or attorney, for the benefit of a third person, is said to be countermandable so long as it remains in B.'s hands.<sup>2</sup> In short, the mere intention or naked promise to make a future gift, however worthy may have been the object, is ineffectual to pass the title to the property. Nor can the promisee under these circumstances maintain either a suit at law or a bill in equity to compel a full performance of the contract for his benefit.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 438; Bouv. Allen v. Polereczky, 31 Me. 338; Dict. "Gift." Cf. Gifts causâ mortis, Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Penn. St. 18. cs. 4-6, infra.

<sup>2</sup> Irish v. Nutting, 47 Barb. 370; Johns. 26; Pitts v. Mangum, 2 Bailey Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87; (S. C.), 588; Fink v. Cox, 18 Johns. 145; Noble v. Smith, 2 Johns. 52.

But since it is really the want of a consideration that prevents this promise to give from becoming obligatory, the case might sometimes present mutual promises of such a character, or such a detriment sustained by the promisee at the instance of the party promising, as to render the contract enforceable against the latter, on the ground that the transaction, taken as a whole, presented a sufficient legal consideration for compelling performance. On the ground of mutuality, voluntary subscriptions for charitable purposes are sometimes enforced against the several subscribers; for, though each for himself merely promises to give money voluntarily, they are all deemed to have signed relying upon the promises of one another.<sup>4</sup> But, in ordinary instances, the simple expression of a design, or even the promise, to make a gift for a benevolent object specified, is of no avail, unless the suitable act of transfer follows.<sup>5</sup>

§ 66. Such Promises distinguished from Contracts upon Consideration.—Contracts concerning chattels upon consideration should be carefully distinguished from contracts of mere gift, which they sometimes resemble. Thus, A.'s promise to give a foal to B. if certain services are rendered by the latter,

<sup>1</sup> Lee v. Luther, 3 W. & M. 519.

<sup>2</sup> Cotteen v. Missing, 1 Madd. Ch. 176; 1 Dyer, 49 a; 2 Kent Com. 439.

<sup>3</sup> Taylor v. Staples, 8 R. I. 170; Carpenter v. Dodge, 20 Vt. 595; Johnson v. Stevens, 22 La. Ann. 149; Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39; Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. 208; gives B. a right to the foal upon performing the stipulations on his part; and this because there is a contract upon mutual consideration, and not a voluntary promise.<sup>1</sup> A slight consideration may often suffice in such cases: nevertheless the mere consideration of love and affection does not render a promise to give enforceable.<sup>2</sup>

Donnell v. Wylie, 85 Me. 143; Gammonton Seminary v. Robbins, 128 Ind. 85.

<sup>4</sup> Watkins v. Eames, 9 Cush. 539; Mirick v. French, 2 Gray, 420; Ives v. Stirling, 6 Met. 310; 2 Bl. Com. 441, 442. And see supra, § 56.

<sup>5</sup> Phelps v. Pond, 23 N. Y. 69.

§ 67. Delivery with Suitable Intention requisite in Gifts.—What acts, then, are essential on the donor's part for completely executing a gift of personal property? Delivery of the property in question, first and foremost, with the corresponding intention to give, must be the answer. And the rule has long been maintained, that the owner must part with his dominion over the property before the gift can take effect; for so long as the gift remains incomplete, inchoate, and imperfect, there exists, it is said, the locus pœnitentiæ,—the opportunity for the giver to repent and change his purpose.<sup>3</sup>

But delivery, in order to effect the transfer, must be, here as elsewhere, according to the subject-matter. One mode of delivery applies to things corporeal; another to things incorporeal. Bulky goods may be delivered by handing a key or other symbol, so as to enable the donee to take possession, which possession he should acquire accordingly; while, with articles which readily pass from hand to hand, manual delivery constitutes the appropriate method of transfer. But, whether the possession given be actual or constructive, the donor must have thereby evinced an intention to part with the dominion of the property, as well as its possession, and to transfer that dominion and possession to the donee.<sup>4</sup>

§ 68. The Same Subject; Words of Gift, etc., not sufficient.—Nor is it enough to say, "I give you" a certain thing, and then withhold it; for a verbal gift without actual delivery transfers no title. Any parol declaration of gift will stand upon the footing of a mere promise to give; and, to complete

<sup>1</sup> Linnendoll v. Doe, 14 Johns. 222.

<sup>2</sup> See Schoul. Dom. Rel. § 270.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 438; Taylor v. Staples, 8 R. I. 170; Cox v. Sprigg, 6 Md. 274.

<sup>4</sup> 2 Kent Com. 438, 439; Hawkins

v. Blewitt, 2 Esp. 663; Noble v. Smith, 2 Johns. 52; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 87; Poullain v. Poullain, 79 Ga. 11.

the transfer, acts and words should harmonize in establishing the gift intent.<sup>1</sup> The circumstances must show that a present gift is intended; for words of future promise do not of themselves change the title.<sup>2</sup> Any chattel capable of delivery requires delivery to perfect a gift; and words with assent but no delivery are insufficient for transferring the title.<sup>3</sup>

But while delivery of possession is essential to a gift, whether inter vivos or causâ mortis, it is not necessary that delivery should be simultaneous with the words of donation.<sup>4</sup>

§ 69. The Same Subject; Delivery of Corporeal Chattels.—Corporeal chattels will, in general, pass by manual delivery.<sup>5</sup> And where the articles to be given are numerous, and not easily taken in hand, it may suffice for the donor to point them out generally, and allow the donee to take them.<sup>6</sup> Intention is to be regarded rather than formal procedure; and any clear expression of the donor's willingness that the donee shall take the property for his own, will suffice, on his part, when the chattel is present and in a suitable condition for the donee to avail himself of his opportunity.<sup>7</sup>

§ 70. Rule where Donee is Custodian, Bailee, etc.—Where personal property is already in possession of the donee as the donor's bailee or agent, there need be no formal delivery; it is enough for the donee to take or keep actual possession in his new character, and be ready to show that the donor

<sup>1</sup> Grangiac v. Arden, 10 Johns. 293; Wheatley v. Abbott, 32 Miss. 343; Kidder v. Kidder, 33 Penn. St. 268; Bourne v. Fosbrooke, 18 C. B. n. s. 515; Ewing v. Ewing, 2 Leigh, 337; Brewer v. Harvy, 72 N. C. 176; Sewall v. Glidden, 1 Ala. 52; Singleton v. Cotton, 23 Ga. 261. But see Allen v. Cowan, 23 N. Y. 502.

<sup>2</sup> Shower v. Pilck, 4 Ex. 478; Butler v. Scofield, 4 J. J. Marsh. 139; Egerton v. Egerton, 17 N. J. Eq. 419; supra, § 57; Spencer v. Vance, 57 Mo. 427.

<sup>3</sup> Cochran v. Moore, 25 Q. B. D. 57; Medlock v. Powell, 96 N. C. 499; Brantley v. Cameron, 78 Ala. 72.

<sup>4</sup> Carradine v. Carradine, 58 Miss. 286.

<sup>5</sup> "It may either precede or succeed the words. If it precede the words, so that the property is already in possession of the donee, no new delivery is necessary; if it succeeds the words, it makes perfect that which was before inchoate." Ib.

<sup>6</sup> Bogan v. Finlay, 19 La. Ann. 94.

<sup>7</sup> Allen v. Cowan, 23 N. Y. 502.

<sup>8</sup> Ib.; Caldwell v. Wilson, 2 Speers, 75; Winter v. Winter, 9 W. R. 747; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 55 Vt. 325.

has relinquished all dominion over the chattel in his favor.<sup>1</sup> Thus, if one has borrowed a book, and the owner afterwards says, "I make you a present of it," the borrower may become the new owner without having ever brought the book back. So is it where the owner of a boat, confined to his bed with sickness, tells the boatman who has had its charge and custody that he may have it for his own.<sup>2</sup> Or where a parent by suitable words makes a present to his married child of furniture in the latter's house.<sup>3</sup> Conversations and general conduct recognizing the gift, with or without writings, here establish a change of possession in effect; the law dispensing with all idle and useless formalities.

It is manifest, however, that where the evidence shows nothing more than a wish or direction that another should have the care of a certain chattel, or the permissive use thereof, no transfer of the owner's title is constituted, but a bailment rather, which is revocable at pleasure.<sup>4</sup> There may be a constructive delivery consistent with a gift; but doubtful cases should be construed to the contrary.<sup>5</sup> Some States in their policy distrust gifts founded upon delivery where donor and donee reside together; and at all events wherever both parties to the transaction are in combined possession, the intended divestment of a giver's title ought to be clearly shown.<sup>6</sup>

§ 71. Whether Delivery of Receptacle carries its Contents. — The delivery of a corporeal chattel of the receptacle sort — such as a desk, a box, or a trunk — will pass the chattel with all its contents, if such appears to have been the giver's intention. Thus, the delivery of the key of a chest, with words showing that the donor designed a constructive deliv-

<sup>1</sup> Winter v. Winter, 9 W. R. 747; Wing v. Merchant, 57 Me. 383; Tenbrook v. Brown, 17 Ind. 410.

<sup>2</sup> Winter v. Winter, 9 W. R. 947. And see Wing v. Merchant, 57 Me. 383; § 73.

<sup>3</sup> Kilpin v. Ratley [1892] 1 Q. B. 582.

<sup>4</sup> See Douglas v. Douglas, 22 L. T.

N. S. 127, where the heir designated one of the family to have charge of his father's sword; Willey v. Backus, 52 Iowa, 401.

<sup>5</sup> Ib.; Sheegog v. Perkins, 4 Baxt. 273.

<sup>6</sup> Rowe v. Marchant, 86 Va. 177; Bennett v. Cook, 28 S. C. 353.

ery of the chest and all it contained, would entitle the donee to money, jewelry, and other effects found inside of the chest.<sup>1</sup> An owner not unfrequently prepares a pleasant surprise in this manner for the object of his bounty. But, since the owner might have designed a gift of the thing apart from its contents, or supposing it empty, or under some misapprehension of what it actually contained, transactions of this character should be carefully scrutinized by the courts; especially if the giver were unable to inspect the property for himself at the time of delivery.

§ 72. Rule of Delivery as applied to Incorporeal Chattels. — Thus far we have dealt with principles well settled in their application to personal property of the corporeal kind, — chattels whose natural mode of transfer is that of literally changing hands. But how is it with gifts of incorporeal chattels; such as bills, notes, certificates of stock, and other money rights evinced by writing, and requiring, in theory at least, other formalities than a manual transfer to pass such right? It is here that the doctrine of the old common law fails us. No such gifts were contemplated by the early English jurists at all: their maxims were cut to a narrower pattern. Debts anciently were not assignable; hence they could not be the subject of gift or other transfer. But when bills and notes gained a footing in the courts, delivery of the writing, with or without indorsement, according to the tenor of the instrument, became the rule of transfer. Later still developed the important doctrine of assignment, whereby a creditor or claimant could pass over his money right for the substantial benefit of another, on delivery of a suitable formal document.<sup>2</sup>

If, then, the old essence shall infuse the new substance, the law may still demand, for gifts of incorporeal chattels, such delivery as the nature of the property admits: for bills and notes, delivery of the paper, with or without indorsement,

<sup>1</sup> Marsh v. Fuller, 18 N. H. 360; 45 Barb. 9. See post, c. 5, as to the Allerton v. Lang, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) gift causâ mortis under like circumstances. 362; Penfield v. Thayer, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.), 305; Cooper v. Burr,

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 72-86.

according to the tenor of the instrument; for negotiable bonds, corresponding formalities; for shares of stock, delivery upon a regular transfer; for chattel mortgages, insurance policies, and money rights generally, a formal assignment, together with the document, if there be one; in all cases requiring an intent to transfer the right thus evinced, and treating the gift as inchoate or imperfect and liable to be recalled, until the giver has handed over the original papers, and completed legal requirements to the last letter.<sup>1</sup> And in accordance with this view, consistently enough, was the law at first laid down. To use the words of Chancellor Kent: "If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion, of the property. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment, or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be actually executed."<sup>2</sup> ]

§ 73. The Same Subject; Earlier Application of the Rule. — Many cases have been decided in conformity with this rule. Thus, it has been held, that a certificate of bank-stock transferable, in terms, at the bank only, personally or by attorney, is not fully bestowed as a gift when delivered indorsed in blank by the donor; nor, indeed, sufficiently to entitle the donee to a transfer of the stock as against the donor's executor.<sup>3</sup> So, too, a promise, never performed, to execute an assignment, cannot be a gift by assignment.<sup>4</sup> Nor is a gift of privileges to subscribe to new stock effectual while the scrip is neither issued nor the price payable.<sup>5</sup> Delivery of the writing is a prerequisite, of course. And, since the debt

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. Part III. cs. 3–12, passim, as to the modes of transfer applicable to the various kinds of chattels incorporeal.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 439. And see Dilts v. Stevenson, 17 N. J. Eq. 407; Phipps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 586; Knott v. Hogan, 4 Met. (Ky.) 99; Carpenter v. Dodge, 20 Vt. 595; Taylor v. Staples, 8 R. I. 170; 48 N. J. Eq. 455.

<sup>3</sup> Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. 208. And see Kidder v. Kidder, 33 Penn. St. 268; Buschian v. Hughart, 28 Ind. 449.

<sup>4</sup> Hooper v. Goodwin, 1 Swanst. 485; Picot v. Sanderson, 1 Dev. (N. C.) 309.

<sup>5</sup> Egerton v. Egerton, 17 N. J. Eq. 419. And see Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474. But see Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227.

represented by a note is the principal thing in a mortgage transaction, while the security is only accessory, the delivery of a mortgage deed, duly assigned, is held to carry no title by way of gift, notwithstanding the giver's intention, unless the note was delivered likewise.<sup>1</sup>

On the other hand, the gift of a bill or note payable to bearer or suitably indorsed, will, doubtless, be good when the instrument is delivered in that condition; of stock, when the transfer is completed; of incorporeal chattels which pass by simple delivery, like bank-notes and lottery-tickets, or negotiable bonds, upon a mere delivery of the thing; of choses or rights in action requiring a written assignment, upon delivery of the assignment; in fine, when all has been done which satisfies the legal requirements of transfer and divestment of the donor's title, and the intention of making a gift appears to have been fully executed.<sup>2</sup>

Such property may be bestowed as a gift, where the donee was already a bailee or custodian, by suitable words or formalities, correspondingly to gifts of corporeal chattels.<sup>3</sup> And there may be a gift by way of forgiving a debt to the debtor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 74. The Same Subject; Gift of Sealed Instrument.—On the principle that a seal imports consideration, a voluntary <sup>1</sup> Wilson v. Carpenter, 17 Wis. 512; McHugh v. O'Conner, Ala. (1891). But, as to the technical effect of indorsing part payment on a mortgage note, see Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221. The parol gift of an account against a third person is not complete before notice to that person or payment. Chandler v. Chandler, 62 Ga. 612.

<sup>2</sup> See Wilde, J., in Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261; Van Deusen v. Rowley, 4 Seld. 358; Bedell v. Carll, 33 N. Y. 581; Grangiac v. Arden, 10 Johns. 293; Lemon v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 38 Conn. 294. A written assignment under seal of a life insurance policy is a valid gift upon delivery. Matson v.

Abbey, 141 N. Y. 179. A certificate of deposit may be indorsed over and delivered, or a third person's check. Wheeler v. Glasgow, Ala. (1893). Negotiable bonds or negotiable paper may be simply delivered with appropriate words; while registered bonds ought usually to be transferred. 48 N. J. Eq. 455; 137 Penn. St. 428; 113 N. Y. 560. As to a perfected gift of stock, see 47 N. J. Eq. 342. Savings bank deposits may be made or transferred by way of gift. See § 78.

<sup>3</sup> Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661; § 70; Providence Institution v. Taft, 14 R. I. 502.

<sup>4</sup> § 97.

bond is sustainable, both in equity and at law. And presents of sealed notes have been held valid in States where the ancient favor is still accorded to specialties over simple writings.<sup>1</sup> The gift of a specialty may also be good in law although the debt which it secures has not been legally transferred.<sup>2</sup>

[§ 75. Symbolical Delivery of Incorporeal Chattel. — Under suitable circumstances, too, the symbolical delivery of an incorporeal chattel or chattels might suffice] as in the case of transferring an attorney's receipt where the instrument is filed in court and out of the owner's custody; <sup>3</sup> of [by giving the key of a safe-deposit vault.<sup>4</sup>] But, when some other individual is custodian of the instrument, the owner's order of transfer should be acted upon, in order to complete the gift; for the general rule is to require the utmost delivery of which the thing is actually capable.<sup>5</sup>

§ 76. Imperfect Delivery supported at this Day on Equitable Grounds. — But the doctrine concerning gifts of incorporeal property does not always set so closely. Equitable assignments, as we show elsewhere, are becoming widely recognized in these later days; and the constant friction of equity upon the common law has already worn down the old, narrow, but uniform, doctrine of chattel transfer too far to leave any sure foothold among the older precedents.<sup>6</sup> That which would once have failed from imperfect delivery is now frequently upheld as a declaration of trust, or on the consideration that the donor had so far completed his gift that the donee might, as a matter of justice, come into a court of equity and get his title perfected.

There are various instances, accordingly, where a gift inter vivos has been latterly supported because of this equitable assignment principle, notwithstanding some actual imperfection in the legal transfer itself. Thus, the delivery, without <sup>1</sup> Mack's Appeal, 68 Penn. St. 231; Sherk v. Endress, 3 W. & S. 256, per Gibson, C. J.; Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261.

<sup>2</sup> Barton v. Gainer, 3 H. & N. 387; Hackney v. Vrooman, 62 Barb. 650.

<sup>3</sup> Elam v. Keen, 4 Leigh, 333.

<sup>4</sup> See 14 N. Y. S. 337; 55 Hun, 433.

<sup>5</sup> See § 87, post, as to delivery through some third party.

<sup>6</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 72-86.

indorsement or special writing, of negotiable paper payable to the donor's own order is upheld in various States, as an intended gift; and the donee may accordingly sue upon the instrument after the donor's death, in the name of his personal representatives.<sup>1</sup> In reply to the objection here urged, that there can be no valid gift of a chose in action inter vivos without writing, it is asserted that a good and effectual equitable assignment of a chose in action may, in connection with delivery of the instrument of title, be made by parol, to which courts of law now give full effect. Nor, in this respect, is the distinction between assignments for valuable consideration and assignments without consideration deemed a matter of consequence.<sup>2</sup> So has a gift of railroad shares been sustained, though assigned in blank and never recorded on the corporation books while the donor was alive.<sup>3</sup> In New York, the donee of a bond and mortgage acquires, on the same principle, a legal as well as an equitable title to the securities, by mere delivery of the original papers, without a new writing.<sup>4</sup> And, in other instances, the new rule has been pushed quite far enough to indicate [the judicial disposition to sustain whatever was plainly an intended gift, though unaccompanied by the full solemnities of transfer.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261; Wing v. Merchant, 57 Me. 383; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray, 382; Sessions v. Moseley, 7 Gray, 87; Hopkins v. Manchester, 16 R. I. 663. And see Snellgrave v. Bailey, 3 Atk. 214. The payee of a third party's note may thus give it to the maker himself without indorsing it. Hall v. Rice, 124 Mass. 292. A non-negotiable note is likewise the subject of a valid gift. Lee v. Magrath, 10 L. R. Ir. 45; Commonwealth v. Crompton, 137 Penn. St. 138. But see Hill v. Shelby, 64 Ga. 529, contra, decided under the code.

<sup>2</sup> Grover v. Grover, supra, per Wilde, J. And see Briscoe v. Eckley, 35 Mich. 112.

<sup>3</sup> Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227. But cf. 65 Md. 93.

<sup>4</sup> Hackney v. Vrooman, 62 Barb. 650. This was, however, an extreme case. See also Montgomery v. Miller, 3 Redf. 154. Cf. Wilson v. Carpenter, 17 Wis. 512, cited supra, § 73. Where a father, who held a bond and mortgage against his son, delivered to him a receipt for $2000 to apply thereon, this receipt containing a provision that the amount was to be indorsed on the mortgage, held, a valid present gift. Carpenter v. Soule, 88 N. Y. 251.

<sup>5</sup> Allerton v. Lang, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 362; Penfield v. Thayer, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 305.

The delivery of a life insurance policy under suitable circumstances may establish a gift as against the donor, notwithstanding the formalities of transfer with the company be § 77. Gift of One's own Check, Promissory Note, etc., not complete. — We speak thus of the gift of money rights where the primary obligation is that of some other party. The delivery of one's own check upon a bank payable at a future day is, however, no such immediate renunciation of title and control as to constitute an absolute and perfect gift; and if the drawer dies before the check becomes payable, the gift cannot take effect.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, any gift of one's own check leaves the gift incomplete until it has been paid or in some way recognized at the bank; and the drawer's death meanwhile defeats the gift so far as concerns the donee.<sup>2</sup> So, too, where one delivers, not a third person's promissory note, but his own, as a gift, this amounts merely to a promise on his part to pay a sum certain at a future day; he may retract that promise, and the payee, holding the instrument when the maker dies, cannot enforce it against the latter's estate if the obligation had not matured while the maker was alive.<sup>3</sup> In either instance, after one's check or note has been actually paid to the intended donee, the gift, as a gift of money inter vivos, takes effect of course.

incomplete. Crittendon v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 41 Mich. 442. But possession should usually be parted with; and the absence of an assignment or some equivalent instrument appears in some States regarded as conclusive of an incomplete gift, thus favoring the stricter and earlier common-law rule as to gifts. Bond v. Bunting, 78 Penn. St. 210. See former cases commented on ib., showing how contradictory are the precedents. At all events, in conformity with the modern equity rule of regarding the intention rather than observance of formalities, there may be, by delivery of the policy itself, so complete a gift that the donor may not get back the instrument, whatever be the rights enforceable under it. Rummens v. Hare, 1 Ex. D. 169.

<sup>1</sup> Such a check is similar to a bill of exchange payable at a given date, and the drawer thus retains a right to draw other checks and exhaust the fund meanwhile. Curry v. Powers, 70 N. Y. 212.

<sup>2</sup> Carr v. Silloway, 111 Mass. 24; Simmons v. Cincinnati Savings Society, 31 Ohio St. 457; Jones v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25; Zeller v. Jordan, 105 Cal. 143; 111 Penn. St. 130. As to checks given upon consideration, or held bonâ fide for value, the rule would be different. Ib. And see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 465-468. Where the banker is at fault in not honoring the check promptly, the effect may be different. Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6 Eq. 275.

<sup>3</sup> Blanchard v. Williamson, 70 Ill. 647; 114 Ill. 167.

See c. 5, post, as to the rule under corresponding circumstances, where the gift was causâ mortis. We do not here consider the effect where § 78. The Same Subject; Equitable Assignment of Deposit-book.—This doctrine of equitable assignment has likewise been successfully invoked in behalf of a donee, to sustain the gift by delivery of a savings-bank book which contains entries of deposits to the donor's credit.<sup>1</sup> For, though the legal title had not been completely transferred, and other formalities, perhaps, were needful at the bank under its own rules, for drawing out the money,<sup>2</sup> the delivery of the book with intent to give the deposits therein represented was here deemed sufficient. ] Again, the deposit of one's own money in a savings bank in the name or to the credit of a donee, the deposit book evincing the latter's beneficiary interest, and the donor's agreement with the depositary being substantially to the same effect, gives the donee a right to the money, notwithstanding the fact that the donor retains the deposit book.<sup>3</sup> Here, however, the legal aspect appears somewhat different: for, instead of a delivery without full solemnities, as in the preceding instance, appears a declaration of trust by the donor at the time of the deposit, the donor making himself thenceforward a sort of agent for the donee with reference to the book; the bank itself becoming a trustee, too, for carrying out the donor's purpose. Under circumstances which give such a character to the original deposit, any subsequent deposits made by the donor to the same account will partake of the same quality, and simply increase the fund for the donee's benefit.<sup>4</sup>

This rule of savings-bank books appears to be well settled in the courts of this country, so far as regards the completion of any gift by deposits made to the account of a designated donee, under circumstances which raise a presumption such check or note comes into the hands of a bonâ fide party for value without notice.

<sup>1</sup> Camp's Appeal, 36 Conn. 88. Semble, that in some States the doctrine would not be carried so far. See corresponding cases under Gifts causâ mortis; M'Gonnell v. Murray, 3 Irish Eq. 460; Ashbrook v. Ryon, 2 Bush, 228. But see Tillinghast v.

Wheaton, 8 R. I. 356; Hill v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 364.

<sup>2</sup> Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572.

<sup>3</sup> Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597; Blasdel v. Locke, 52 N. H. 238; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78; Kerrigan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78.

that the donee had accepted the gift, though he may not have received the deposit book. For the ordinary books of the bank afford evidence of such a declared trust or equitable assignment, besides the deposit book itself. Nor is it essential that acceptance takes place at the time of the deposit.<sup>1</sup> But we have here assumed that the deposit was no longer subject to the donor's own drafts. How is it, then, where the deposit is in terms under the donor's full control, and he retains the book besides; as in the familiar instance of a deposit made in the name of a donor as "trustee" or "attorney?" Here the rule is not so clear; and it is doubtful whether such a fund, still practically under the donor's dominion, can be deemed an absolute and perfect gift to any one. Yet, in a recent Connecticut case, the court (not without dissent) decided that a deposit made in the donor's own name, as trustee for a certain neighbor's child (the facts going to show a verbal acceptance, besides, on the donee's part), became a completed gift at the time of deposit, notwithstanding the donor kept the book, and the fund was held subject to her own drafts as trustee without reference to the donee. She had, in fact, drawn for her own use, and, as it would appear, repented of the gift altogether before her death.<sup>2</sup> There must be very little left of the old maxim which insists upon such delivery as the thing is capable of, if deposits like these are available to a donee as an executed gift.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See post as to Acceptance.

<sup>2</sup> Minor v. Rogers, 40 Conn. 512 (Carpenter and Phelps, JJ., diss.). See also Buckingham's Appeal, 60 Conn. 143. See corresponding cases under Gifts causâ mortis, c. 4, infra, for the rule of savings-bank books. Such cases turn somewhat upon the construction of the institution's by-laws; also upon local statutes relative to assignment. In some savings banks, the book must always be presented with a draft on account; but, in others, the deposits are made subject to the depositor's check, without presentation of the book, as in ordinary banks of deposit.

<sup>3</sup> There are numerous cases recently decided in our several State courts touching the validity of a gift of a savings-bank book. Ray v. Simmons, 11 R. I. 266, sustains the doctrine of Minor v. Rogers, supra; this being a case where one deposited moneys in his own name as trustee for A., and gave the book to A., who afterwards returned it to him, so that it remained in the giver's custody when he died. The New York Court of Appeals has affirmed it still more broadly in the recent case of Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134; the circumstances of deposit being similar and the right of the donee being likewise

§ 79. Imperfect Delivery supported as Declaration of Trust.

— The English courts appear to have less to say than our own of equitable assignments ; but, under the same moulding influence of equity, their later decisions frequently uphold gifts which are created by a donor's declaration of trust for the donee. The modern rule, with its limitations, sustained as against the administrator of the deceased donor's estate. Here, however, the book had never been possessed by the donee, nor did the donee know of the gift until after the donor's death. The declaration of the depositor that she wanted the account to be in trust for the plaintiff was relied upon, and subsequent conduct consistent with such declaration. Retention of control of the fund is here considered, on equitable grounds, a circumstance upon the question of intent, but not a decisive one. 113 N. Y. 560. See also Willis v. Smith, 91 N. Y. 297 ; Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572.

But in Massachusetts two cases where the facts were similar sanction a different doctrine, and one more consistent with the older common-law rule of gifts, and the requirement that the giver part with absolute control of the fund. See Brabrook v. Savings Bank, 104 Mass. 228 ; Clark v. Clark, 108 Mass. 522. Such, too, is the Maine rule ; the depositor retaining control of the book, and even drawing out some of the principal for her own use. Northrop v. Hale, 73 Me. 66 ; ib. 71 ; 75 Me. 29. The latest Maryland cases take a similarly conservative ground under corresponding circumstances. Murray v. Cannon, 41 Md. 466 ; Taylor v. Henry, 48 Md. 550. Where the expression of trust is vague and uncertain as to the beneficiary or intention to give, all the less readily should a gift with full intention be inferred ; so, too, secrecy in withholding knowledge from the beneficiary might well indicate an intention to make an ambulatory disposition of the fund.

The latest cases (1895), many of which were decided in Massachusetts, fluctuate somewhat. But at all events the fact that A. deposits in the name of B. — e.g. a father in the name of an infant child — does not conclusively show an intended and complete gift. Booth v. Savings Bank, 162 Mass. 455 ; Beaver v. Beaver, 137 N. Y. 59. Especially if A. survives B., who died without ever knowing of such a gift. Control of the fund continuously by the depositor without notice to the other party is inconsistent with a gift. Marcy v. Amazeen, 61 N. H. 131 ; 52 Conn. 398 ; Pope v. Savings Bank, 56 Vt. 284. The main question appears thus one of intent ; and distinguishing circumstances in each case should always be carefully considered. A deposit in the name of "A. B. or her daughter, C. D.," the book being kept by the daughter, does not avail clearly as a gift to C. D., when it appears that A. B. was infirm and found it convenient to send C. D. personally to deal with the bank. 136 N. Y. 177. Control of a deposit "in trust" or otherwise so far that the book was only to go to the other party after the depositor's death is not enough to vest a gift. 142 Mass. 1 ; 138 Mass. 581 ; Schollmier v. Schoendelen, 78 Iowa, 426. But cf. Alger v. Savings Bank, 146 Mass. 418, where though the deposit was "in trust" for C. D. and so controlled by A. B., the depositor said repeatedly to C. D. "it is yours."

was thus set forth by Lord Chancellor Cranworth in 1865 : No doubt any person sui juris and compos mentis may make a gift by delivery of a chattel ; and there is no doubt also that by some decisions—"unfortunate," he says, "I must think them"—a parol declaration of trust of personalty may be perfectly valid even when voluntary. If I give any chattel,—that, of course, passes by delivery ; and if I say, expressly or impliedly, that I constitute myself a trustee of personalty,—that is a trust executed, and capable of being enforced without consideration. The authorities turn upon the question, whether what has been said was a declaration of trust or an imperfect gift. "In the latter case, the parties would receive no aid from a court of equity if they claimed as volunteers. But, when there has been a declaration of trust, then it will be enforced, whether there has been consideration or not. Therefore, the question in each case is one of fact: Has there been a gift, or not? or has there been a declaration of trust, or not?"<sup>1</sup>

To apply this somewhat metaphysical rule. [The courts have permitted a complete assignment of personal property to prevail as a gift, notwithstanding a want of notice to trustees, or other acts usually necessary to a complete transfer by assignment; notwithstanding, too, a delivery of the property, such as bills and notes, without their legal indorsement.<sup>2</sup>] But, where the circumstances have shown no such present intention, a declaration of trust will not be inferred from language and conduct evincing an unsettled purpose, mere play-

<sup>1</sup> Per Cranworth, L. C.; Jones v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25.

<sup>2</sup> Kekewich v. Manning, 1 De G., M. & G. 176 ; Richardson v. Richardson, L. R. 3 Eq. 686. But see Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 464. Even the simple memorandum of a present gift of incorporeal property, handed over to the donee without delivery of the chattels designated, has been sustained likewise as a declaration of trust; the circumstances showing a present intention to divest ownership in favor of the donee, and the gift being a reasonable one. Morgan v. Malleon, L. R. 10 Eq. 475. And see Roberts v. Roberts, 15 W. R. 117. Morgan v. Malleon is justly regarded as an extreme case as to facts in support of a gift by declaration of trust. See Church, C. J., in Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134, one of the savings-bank book cases cited in preceding section. More clearly is Morgan v. Malleon, disapproved in 80 N. Y. 422. And see post, § 81.

fulness, an intent to postpone delivery, or, at most, a gift imperfectly executed.<sup>1</sup>

§ 80. Doctrines of Equitable Assignment and Declaration of Trust compared in this Connection. — The decisions of American courts concerning gifts with imperfect delivery are rested sometimes on this same rule of a declared trust,<sup>2</sup> though more commonly on that of equitable assignment. Perhaps the former rule is better asserted where possession still remains in the giver; and the latter, where he has delivered to the donee, and yet some further formalities remain to give that delivery the fullest effect. There is less difference in practice, nevertheless, between these two modern rules than would, from certain dicta and wire-drawn distinctions of the courts, appear at first likely; both serving to mark the steady advance of a flexible doctrine, peculiar to equity jurisdiction, which seeks to give effect to one's manifest intention, and secure its specific fulfilment, irrespective of all technical informalities attending the performance. Such complete delivery, therefore, as the thing admits of, though our traditional test, is by no means the sure criterion, in these later days, of a gift of incorporeal personalty; and less likely is it

<sup>1</sup> As in the case before Lord Cranworth, already referred to, where a father had put a check into the hands of a son, nine months old, saying, "I give this to baby, for himself," and then took back the check and put it away; afterwards expressing a similar purpose of giving, and yet keeping the check among his own effects, where it was found after his death. Jones v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25. Or where one hands over certificates of stock, saying, "These are yours;" for the design of making an immediate gift, as here manifested, is deemed incompatible with the theory of a declaration of trust; and the gift necessarily remains imperfect because the stock was never formally transferred. Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474. And see Heartley v. Nicholson,

L. R. 19 Eq. 233, where it is emphatically declared, but under similar circumstances, that it is not enough that the gift was intended inter vivos; for the court will not render that perfect which has been left imperfect, nor convert an imperfect gift into a declaration of trust. See also to the same effect Richards v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11; Re Breton's Estate, 17 Ch. D. 416. But cf. English cases of gifts causâ mortis, c. 5, post.

<sup>2</sup> See Fulton v. Fulton, 48 Barb. 581; Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422. Some of the latest American savings-bank cases (see § 78, supra) rely much upon the doctrine of a declaration of trust. See Alger v. Savings Bank, 146 Mass. 418; 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 147.

to prove serviceable in the future, unless the judicial precedents should take an entirely new direction.<sup>1</sup>

§ 81. The Same Subject ; Safer Opinion restrains the Operation of such Doctrines. — According to the safer opinion still, no valid and complete gift even of incorporeal chattels can be deemed established unless a delivery of the subject-matter of the gift be shown, either to the donee or to some person for him, so as temporarily, at least, to divest the possession and title of the donor ; and if the determining act remains in fieri, the attention to deliver does not execute the gift so as to make the giver a trustee for the donee's benefit.<sup>2</sup> Nor

<sup>1</sup> On this general subject, see analogous cases of gifts causâ mortis, c. 4, infra. That a gift of incorporeal chattels to an agent already in possession requires no formal surrender and resumption of possession, or transfer, see Wing v. Merchant, 57 Me. 383 ; supra, § 70.

<sup>2</sup> Bond v. Bunting, 78 Penn. St. 210 ; Trough's Estate, 75 Penn. St. 115. Except as to the matter of savings-bank deposits, considered supra, § 78, and to which, as will further appear presently, peculiar considerations apply, the latest New York decisions, like those of England, show a salutary disposition to restrain the construction of a complete gift inter vivos, where only some declaration of trust so called is set up. See particularly the decision in a case of coupon bonds, where, notwithstanding a writing upon the envelopes containing them, the owner retained control (though, semble, only for collecting interest) until his death. Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422. And see opinion of Rapallo, J., ib., approving statements in first edition of this chapter.

Here the English cases, Morgan v. Malleson and Richardson v. Richardson, cited § 79, supra, are deemed to be overruled. And in Moore v. Moore, 43 L. J. Ch. 623, Hall, V. C., says: "I think it very important, indeed, to keep a clear and definite distinction between these cases of imperfect gifts and cases of declarations of trust ; and that we should not extend beyond what the authorities have already established, the doctrine of declarations of trust, so as to supplement what would otherwise be mere imperfect gifts." See also, as to a gift of leaseholds, Bottle v. Knocker, 25 W. R. 209. So, where one retains a bond on which he indorses words of gift. Zimmerman v. Streeper, 75 Penn. St. 147, distinguishing 1 S. & R. 316. Aliter, where the bond is delivered. Bottle v. Knocker, 25 W. R. 209. And see Daubenspeck v. Biggs, 71 Md. 255. Equity, in short, should not lend its aid to perfect a defective gift or settlement made without consideration, nor favor the creation of such a transfer from any mere declaration of trust accompanied by inconsistent or equivocal acts.

But as to the effect of giving the donee a temporary control see Trowell v. Carraway, 10 Heisk. 104 ; Whitford v. Horn, 18 Kan. 455. In this latter case, the gift of a watch to a young person was sustained, although the donor received it back, to keep till the donee was older. See also, as to an imperfect gift of stock, on a declaration of trust, Jackson v. Street R., 88 N. Y. 520 ; 9 L. R. Ir. 121.

does the declaration of a joint or alternative possession of donor and donee avail as a gift while the donor retains at least a partial control.<sup>1</sup> Nor can an acknowledgment to the effect that an assignment is in trust for the assignor be construed into a gift.<sup>2</sup> This best supports public policy; for, upon any construction less rigid, courts are found giving their essential sanction to what are simply specific bequests made under circumstances where the usual and essential safeguards of a testamentary disposition in presence of witnesses are found wanting; and as a result of uncertainty concerning facts of an oral gift in some particular estate of a decedent, safe and economical administration must become impossible.

§ 82. Bailment of Incorporeal Property is no Gift. — A mere bailment of incorporeal personal property should not be construed into a gift. Thus, where bonds are delivered by one party to another with an agreement to return them when called for, there is no gift, but a loan.<sup>3</sup> Or where a stockholder lends his ticket of privileges to his wife or some member of his family or other person.<sup>4</sup>

This is a rule of universal application to chattels corporeal and incorporeal; for a gift must, by intendment, divest the donor of his title.<sup>5</sup>

§ 83. Delivery to Donee through some Third Party. — Delivery from donor directly to donee is not essential; for some third party will not unfrequently be made the medium of transfer.

§ 84. The Same Subject; where Third Party takes as Trustee for the Donee. — Hence the rule, that to render a gift inter vivos effectual, actual delivery must be made to the donee, or to a third person in trust for him; in which latter case the circumstances should show a full relinquishment of

<sup>1</sup> Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422;
<sup>2</sup> Redf. Sur. 251; 136 N. Y. 177.

<sup>3</sup> Stewart's Estate, Re, 137 Penn. St. 175.

<sup>4</sup> 107 Ill. 389. And see Trow v. Shannon, 78 N. Y. 239; supra, § 70.

<sup>5</sup> See Stevens v. Stevens, 2 Redf. 265. Peculiar restrictions have applied, of course, under our law of coverture to gifts as between husband and wife. See Breton's Estate, Re, 17 Ch. D. 416.

<sup>6</sup> Supra, § 70.

dominion by donor to trustee for the purposes of the trust.<sup>1</sup> In this sense, one may take a fund for a certain person's benefit; and when his possession is that of the contemplated donee, to whom he continues accountable for the fund, as agent or trustee, and not to the donor, the gift stands complete and irrevocable. Writings to this purport have been sustained in the courts as importing a gift, though drawn up unskilfully.<sup>2</sup> So, too, is it held that a trust of this kind may be good without any writing at all.<sup>3</sup> Corporeal chattels, such as coined money, may readily be delivered by way of gift for some third party, under the giver's oral directions.<sup>4</sup>

§ 85. The Same Subject; Rule where Custodian is to deliver. — One who is already the agent or bailee in charge of certain property for the owner may sometimes be required to hand the property to the donee; and here the gift becomes complete, when, in pursuance of the donor's instructions, he delivers the property to the donee, or so changes the character of his own possession as to become the donee's agent or trustee. But, until this agent has complied with the order, the property continues that of the donor, and the locus pœnitentiæ remains.<sup>5</sup> Nor can the agent go beyond the scope of his authority as to delivering possession, and so make the gift effectual; for the principal may repudiate the gift if made otherwise than according to his instructions.<sup>6</sup> If a formal act be still requisite on the principal's part, or final instructions should follow the preliminary expression of a purpose to give, the agent should postpone delivery. In general, where property is delivered to a third person by the donor, with authority to deliver it to the donee, such custo-

<sup>1</sup> Minchin v. Merrill, 2 Edw. Ch. 333; Neufville v. Thomson, 3 Edw. Ch. 92.

<sup>2</sup> Parker v. Ricks, 8 Jones L. 447; Rinker v. Rinker, 20 Ind. 185; Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 512; Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48; Wyble v. McPheters, 52 Ind. 393. In Hill v. Stevenson, 63 Me. 364, a deposit book for one's daughter was delivered to the donee's husband. And see Davis v. Ney, 125 Mass. 590.

<sup>3</sup> Bostwick v. Mahaffy, 48 Mich. 342.

<sup>4</sup> Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307. And such trustee may employ his own agent for custody. Ib.

<sup>5</sup> Picot v. Sanderson, 1 Dev. (N. C.) 309; Cotteen v. Missing, 1 Madd. Ch. 176.

<sup>6</sup> Berry v. Berry, 31 Iowa, 415.

dian is, and continues, the donor's agent until delivery to the donee has been consummated according to directions; and meantime the donor may revoke his authority, and take the gift back.<sup>1</sup> But the circumstances of a transaction might simply require the custodian to attorn over or recognize the transfer to donee and thereby complete the gift, while his possession continues.<sup>2</sup>

§ 86. The Same Subject; Revocation of Custodian's Agency; Death of Donor, etc., pending Delivery. — An agency is revoked by the principal's death: therefore, the agent of one who intends a gift inter vivos must have performed what was incumbent upon him to make the transfer complete during the donor's lifetime; otherwise the gift fails, as though the donor himself had failed to make a seasonable delivery.<sup>3</sup> Nor can a gift inter vivos be sustained which contemplates a postponement of delivery by the agent or bailee until the donor's decease; for a gift of personalty made after this fashion must stand, if at all, as a gift causâ mortis, or else on the footing of a testamentary disposition, with all the formalities of a will.<sup>4</sup> Delivery, then, in all cases of ordinary gift, must have been made during the donor's lifetime. But if the gift has been once completed, so as to fully transfer the beneficial interest from donor to donee, in accordance with their mutual intent, and so as to make any third party holding custody the trustee for carrying out the original purposes of the donation, or the donee's agent, the subse-

<sup>1</sup> Shaw, C. J., in Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87; People v. Johnson, 14 Ill. 342.

<sup>2</sup> See Cook v. First Nat. Bank, 83 Wis. 31.

<sup>3</sup> Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87; c. 5, infra; Allen v. Polereczky, 31 Me. 338; Phipps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 586.

<sup>4</sup> Craig v. Kittredge, 46 N. H. 57; Phipps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 586; Smith v. Ferguson, 90 Ind. 229; Busby v. Byrd, 4 Rich. Eq. 9; Knott v. Hogan, 4 Met. (Ky.) 99; Augusta Bank v. Fogg, 82 Me. 538; Williams

v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343. Ratification of instructions on the donor's death-bed will not help out such an attempted gift. 48 Ill. App. 536. The delivery of one's own check, drawn payable six months after death, to the payee thereof as trustee for another, does not constitute a gift inter vivos nor create a trust which equity will enforce. Waynesburg College's Appeal, 111 Penn. St. 130; § 77. See also 104 Penn. St. 593, where a certificate of deposit was indorsed over for delivery after one's death.

quent death of the donor, sooner or later, will leave the gift unimpaired.<sup>1</sup>

In special instances, a court might go still further, though trenching on strange doctrines; as where donor and donee had done all in their power to perfect the gift, and the complete transfer failed through the third party's remissness, or that of the fund holder.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, some cases in equity avoid the objections we have stated, by construing the transaction artfully as in effect a present settlement in trust for the contemplated donee, reserving a life estate to the donor, and thus obligating the trustee to turn the capital over upon the donor's death.<sup>3</sup>

§ 87. Declaration of Trust with Co-operation of Third Person.—While one's mere declaration of trust, unaccompanied with delivery of the property and a surrender of its control, ought not readily to be construed into a completed gift, a presumption favorable to such intended transfer is more readily established where the donor deliberately seeks the co-operation therein of some third person, before whom the declaration is made. As where, for instance, the owner requires his clerk or agent to make a transfer on the books or open an account with the donee accordingly, or, perhaps, to mark the package with the donee's name.<sup>4</sup> For though the custody of pending the delay. And the gift was accordingly sustained. Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6 Eq. 275. This decision, though just on its general merits, appears to be quite exceptional. It does not even appear certain that the banker was remiss in his duty: he might have been exercising reasonable prudence; for the check was in fact badly written, with an erasure in the signature, and therefore payment was delayed.

<sup>1</sup> See Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48.

<sup>2</sup> A recent English case is in point, where A. gave B. his check for money as a gift inter vivos, having sufficient funds on deposit, and B. presented the check to the banker in season. Now, had there been no sufficient funds of A. for paying the check, or had B. failed to present the check before A.'s death, it was admitted that the gift inter vivos would have failed for non-completion. Tate v. Leithead, Kay, 658; Jones v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25; supra, § 77. But it was held, that, as B. ought not to suffer for the banker's remissness, the latter's refusal to pay until he could ascertain whether the signature was genuine did not deprive B. of the advantages of a completed gift, though A. died

<sup>3</sup> See Green v. Tulane, 52 N. J. Eq. 169, and cases cited; Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & S. 517. And cf. § 131.

<sup>4</sup> See supra, §§ 79, 80. To some such theory it would appear that certain savings-bank deposit cases already cited, sustaining the gift as such third person may not thereby exclude the control of the principal, the latter may, nevertheless, be thought to have plainly constituted himself trustee for the donee. The presence of a third party, at the transaction, whose consent is requisite to complete the gift, may conclude him, where his sanction appeared to be given.<sup>1</sup> For any one may make a gift through his authorized agent

§ 88. Delivery by Written Instrument; Deed of Gift.—

Having gone over the oral means of transfer, as concerns the donor, there remains for consideration transfer by a deed of gift. Anciently, real and personal property were transferred with similar formalities; feoffment, with livery of seisin, conferring title to land by a sort of oral symbolical delivery. But a gift of land by word of mouth would be void at the present day; for modern legislation, both in England and America, requires a formal written conveyance in every transfer of land. Chattels personal, on the other hand, as we have seen, are still alienable by oral gift and delivery.<sup>2</sup> But deeds of gift are sometimes to be found, to say nothing of the voluntary family settlements by which property is so often transferred in the mass.<sup>3</sup> A deed imports consideration; and the presence of this implied consideration is said to render a deed of itself sufficient to pass the property in goods.<sup>4</sup> It would appear, then, that, in the absence of an actual corporeal delivery of the chattel itself, a gift can only be consummated by deed or other instrument under seal; not, in the latter instance, because the delivery of the deed is a symbolical delivery of the property, but on completed, should be referred. Ray v. Simmons, 11 R. I. 266; Minor v. Rogers, 40 Conn. 512; Martin v. Funk, 75 N. Y. 134. And see Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422, commenting upon Martin v. Funk, ib.; 1 Keen, 551. See supra, §§ 79–81, as against extending the doctrine of declaration of trust farther. Words importing a present intention to deliver over are inconsistent with an intention to retain as trustee. L. R. 18 Eq. 11.

In Kerrigan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17, a state of facts is disclosed conformable to the rule of the text.

<sup>1</sup> As where a wife, in her husband's presence and with his consent, delivered money belonging to him to a third party in trust for her children. Frazier v. Perkins, 62 N. H. 69.

<sup>2</sup> Rucker v. Abell, 8 B. Mon. 566.

<sup>3</sup> See Sch. Dom. Rel. §§ 184, 399.

<sup>4</sup> Wms. Pers. Prop. 33, 35; Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782, 788.

the principle of estoppel.<sup>1</sup> And here there should at least be a suitable delivery of the deed. Its mere execution cannot prevail to establish a donee's title; since the presumption must be, so long as the donor holds back the instrument, or if he destroys it, besides keeping possession of the goods, that there never was a perfected intention of giving at all.<sup>2</sup> Deeds of gift are not common in this country, and never were, except in some Southern States, as part of the machinery of a social system now eradicated.<sup>3</sup>

As every gift inter vivos ought to take immediate effect, whether the chattels or a deed of gift, or both, be delivered, any instrument must be invalid as a deed of gift which purports to convey a present interest in the chattels, to take effect hereafter, the possession being meanwhile expressly reserved to the donor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 89. Gift by Other Instruments in Writing; Statute Formalities, etc.—An ordinary writing of gift, not under seal, would, we presume, have the effect in most States, as in England, of a parol declaration of gift, agreeably to the usual statute provisions; and simply furnish more tangible proof than expressions by mere word of mouth that a gift had been perfected, yet nothing conclusive. Parol declarations of gift, without delivery of the chattel, amounted to nothing more at the old law than a promise to give, void for want of consideration; but in some of the later cases written memoranda are found of considerable importance in establishing such a declaration of trust as equity would now be disposed to carry into effect out of regard to the mutual intention of donor and donee.<sup>5</sup> But no writing which recites

<sup>1</sup> Hillebrant v. Brewer, 6 Tex. 45; McWillie v. Van Vacter, 35 Miss. 428; Connor v. Trawick, 37 Ala. 289; Baxter v. Bailey, 8 B. Mon. 336; McCutchen v. McCutchen, 9 Port. 656.

<sup>2</sup> Martin v. Ramsey, 5 Humph. 349; Reid v. Butt, 25 Ga. 28; Payne v. Powell, 5 Bush, 248; Warriner v. Rogers, L. R. 16 Eq. 340; Blakey v. Blakey, 9 Ala. 391. But see Sewall v. Glidden, 1 Ala. 52.

<sup>3</sup> As to local statutes which formerly required the registry of gifts and other transfers of slaves, see U. S. Eq. Dig. Fraud, IV. (c). The formalities had especial reference to creditors and other purchasers.

<sup>4</sup> McWillie v. Van Vacter, 35 Miss. 428. As to the effect of an unsigned postscript to a deed of gift, see Martin v. Youngblood, 8 Humph. 581.

<sup>5</sup> See supra, §§ 80-82; Bottle v.

a gift is effectual where neither the writing is delivered nor the property itself.<sup>1</sup>

Statutes requiring the observance of certain formalities of gift inter vivos, whether with reference to creditors and purchasers only, or to the parties themselves as well, are sometimes found; such legislation characterizing, however, rather the civil than the common law. Thus, under the civil code of Louisiana, donations inter vivos of incorporeal things, including bills and notes, — checks constituting an exception to the rule, — are a nullity, notwithstanding a manual delivery of the muniment of title, unless formally transferred in presence of a notary public and two witnesses.<sup>2</sup> And the registration of certain deeds of gift has been a requisite formality under some of our local statutes.

§ 90. Acceptance on the Donee's Part; how far presumable, etc. — And now, as to the essential acts on the part of the intended donee, to make the chattel transfer complete. Since all gifts are founded in mutual intention, a donor's act must be of itself insufficient to pass the title; though the burden of the transaction is generally his own, the donee having nothing more to do in most instances than to accept what is offered him.<sup>3</sup> To prove such acceptance, then, acts and conduct, on the donee's part, consistent with assuming the control and dominion, will suffice, without formal expression of his disposition. Less than this even will satisfy our law; for acceptance of a gift by the donee, Knocker, 25 W. R. 209. And see, for writings deemed insufficient, Breton's Estate, Re, 17 Ch. D. 416; Olney v. Howe, 89 Ill. 556; Douglas v. Douglas, 22 L. T. 127; Trough's Estate, 75 Penn. St. 115.

<sup>1</sup> Tozer v. Jackson, 164 Penn. St. 373. Taking possession of the writing after the death of the alleged donor is of no avail. Ib. Addressing directions on an envelope or wrapper containing the thing, to deliver to A., does not constitute a gift, where the owner keeps the same among his own papers. Ib. And any intention to thus override the provisions of law concerning the execution of testamentary writings is not to be favored. Warriner v. Rogers, L. R. 16 Eq. 340; Carr v. Silloway, 111 Mass. 24; Olney v. Howe, 89 Ill. 556.

<sup>2</sup> Succession of De Pouilly, 22 La. Ann. 97. One claiming a corporeal movable by virtue of a donation inter vivos must prove either that it was by act before a notary and two witnesses, or by manual delivery. Kirkpatrick v. Finney, 30 La. Ann. 223.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 57; Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302; Hill v. Wilson, L. R. 8 Ch. 888.

where it is for his advantage, is regularly presumed upon delivery, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.<sup>1</sup> Infants, both at the civil and common law, have received the benefit of such presumption, and on a principle not incompatible with the general law of contracts, which discriminates between beneficial and non-beneficial contracts in the case of those not sui juris, and, at most, would require an infant to disaffirm and restore the property on reaching majority.<sup>2</sup> And that the courts will carry this presumption strongly for any donee's benefit is illustrated in the recent case of a savings-bank deposit made by A. in B.'s name, where B. died first, and then A., who had kept the bank book all the while in his possession. It could not be here alleged (said the court), in the absence of other circumstances, that B. had no knowledge of the deposit, and did not accept the gift; for the presumption was that B. had such knowledge, and did accept the gift.<sup>3</sup> We presume, however, that if donor or donee die before completion of the gift by actual knowledge and acceptance, and the gift be strictly personal, the donation cannot take effect.<sup>4</sup>

§ 91. The Same Subject; Acts consistent or inconsistent with Acceptance.—But whatever might be said as to the general presumption, that a formal delivery on the one hand is followed by actual acceptance on the other, it is clear that the gift inter vivos must be perfected as a mutual contract, and on the footing of ordinary transactions. For where, under the circumstances, no formal delivery is called for,—as in instances previously noticed, where the donee is already in possession of the property as bailee or agent,—the donee's own subsequent acts and conduct, if not establishing a technical acceptance, should, at all events, be consistent with the intent of completing the gift; and he should exercise a con-

<sup>1</sup> De Levillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78; Rinker v. Rinker, 20 Md. 185.

<sup>2</sup> See Sch. Dom. Rel. §§ 432-448.

<sup>3</sup> Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597. See supra, § 78.

<sup>4</sup> This was the rule of the civil law. Colquhoun Roman Law, § 1060. But as to the case where there is a trustee, see post, § 92.

trol thenceforth over the property suitable to the new capacity of owner. For if the lender said to the borrower of a book, "You may keep it as a gift," and yet the borrower soon brought it back, any presumption of a gift would be rebutted by evidence going to show a non-acceptance on his part. The general disposition is to give the donee the benefit of all inevitable doubt; presuming the acceptance of a beneficial gift wherever there is no evidence to the contrary. But what is really called for is such action or course of conduct on his part, whether more or less demonstrative, as may properly correspond to the donor's own acts or conduct. Thus, once more, if the owner made a verbal gift, allowing the donee an opportunity of taking possession, the gift will become perfect, though the thing were not present nor actually delivered at the time, so soon as the donee obtains possession and dominion, unless the donor meanwhile recalls his permission, and revokes the verbal gift, as he has a right to do.<sup>1</sup> And here, it might be said, the burden of the transaction shifts from the donor to the donee, so that the latter is the active, and the former the passive, party; and, instead of delivery and acceptance, we seem to have rather permission and taking possession.<sup>2</sup> The donee may have his own agent or bailee.<sup>3</sup>

Where, on the other hand, chattels are delivered to a person under his written contract to redeliver them "whenever called for," this is inconsistent with the idea of their acceptance as an absolute gift.<sup>4</sup>

§ 92. Acceptance where there is an Equitable Assignment or Declaration of Trust. — Under the modern rule, which recognizes gifts by way of equitable assignment or a declaration of trust, it is sometimes incumbent upon the donee to institute proceedings by suit or bill, in order that his title may be upheld. Hill v. Wilson, L. R. 8 Ch. 888; Mellish, L. J., in ib.

<sup>1</sup> Whiting v. Barrett, 7 Lans. 107.

<sup>2</sup> No one is obliged to accept a thing as a gift. And where, upon an offer to thus transfer, the other party expresses his wish to hold the thing as a loan rather than a gift, the mutual intent of such a transaction must be legally perfected.<sup>1</sup> And where a gift is made of personal property in the alternative, — as, for instance, if the owner of two heifers tells A. that he may have as a gift whichever of the two he wants, — there can be no gift until A. has made his choice, and the transfer is completed accordingly.<sup>2</sup> The donee may doubtless accept a gift through his agent or trustee as well as in person; and whenever such agent or trustee has assumed dominion, with the donor's full knowledge and assent as evinced actively by delivery or passively by permission to take the chattel in question as a gift in such capacity, the transfer to the donee, or for his beneficial enjoyment, becomes at once completed; though it might be a later question whether the cestui que trust, when entitled to receive it from the trustee, refused or accepted the gift.

<sup>3</sup> Martin v. McCullough, 136 Ind. 331; § 85.

<sup>4</sup> Selleck v. Selleck, 107 Ill. 389. See § 129.

§ 93. Proof needful to establish an Executed Gift; Evidence of Intention, etc. — Before passing from the subject of perfecting gifts inter vivos, it may be useful to inquire what proof is requisite to show an executed gift. In general, it should be observed that the actual intention of the parties to the transaction is the main issue; and that whatever in the surrounding circumstances tends to throw light upon this intention should not be disregarded. Mere delivery and acceptance, or permission to take, followed by taking possession, do not per se constitute a gift; for similar formalities might attend a sale or loan; and as it is much more natural to suppose that an owner means to part with his property temporarily rather than forever, or for an equivalent rather than gratuitously, the language, the acts, the general conduct and mutual situation of the parties, and perhaps even the reasonableness of the gift in itself (though this last is rarely regarded save in imputed fraud), may all aid in resolving doubts as to the true character of the transaction, and determining whether a gift was or was not in fact intended.

That the transaction should be viewed in the full length and breadth of a rational purpose, and not with undue deference to words apart from acts, will appear from a passage which has been handed down from one of the ancient books, hardly comprehensive enough to be called a maxim, but suitable for illustration: namely, that if a man intending to give a jewel<sup>1</sup> to another say to him, "Here I give you my ring with the ruby in it," &c., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift, notwithstanding the gift bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom it is given.<sup>2</sup> For the giver's act showed what he meant, notwithstanding the lapsus lingue. And since intention is to be gathered from all the circumstances, the question of gift or no gift is usually left to the jury to be determined according to the evidence presented.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 78–81.

<sup>2</sup> Brink v. Gould, 7 Lans. 425.

§ 94. The Same Subject; Circumstances favorable to sustaining a Gift. — Among the circumstances favorable to sustaining a transfer as a gift are these: Near relationship between the parties; particularly as to transfers from parent to child.<sup>4</sup> Strong affection of the donor for the donee, and especially if the latter had rendered some service, and the gift was a proper mark of gratitude.<sup>5</sup> Reasonableness of the gift in amount as compared with the donor's other property, and the general consistency of the transaction.<sup>6</sup> The marriage of a daughter, whether the transfer be with special reference to the wedding, or to enable the wedded pair to set up house-keeping.<sup>7</sup> Leaving the property in one's possession for a long time, without demanding its return or an equivalent.<sup>8</sup> Declarations of intention to give, before the donee had possession, under the completed transfer.<sup>9</sup> So, too, as corroborative evidence, the donor's subsequent admissions, expressions, and

<sup>1</sup> Or rather, we should say, a certain jewelled ring.

<sup>2</sup> Bac. Max. 87; Bouv. Dict. "Gift."

<sup>3</sup> Boudreau v. Boudreau, 45 Ill. 480; Moore v. Gwyn, 4 Ired. 275; Carradine v. Collins, 7 S. & M. 428; Hackney v. Vrooman, 62 Barb. 650; Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 602; Nichols v. Edwards, 16 Pick. 62; Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 474; Helm v. Martin, 59 Cal. 57.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Montgomery, 5 Monr.

502; Hepworth v. Hepworth, L. R. 11 Eq. 10.

<sup>5</sup> Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Penn. St. 18; 64 Conn. 553.

<sup>6</sup> 81 Wis. 142.

<sup>7</sup> Betts v. Francis, 30 N. J. Law, 152; Carter v. Buchanan, 9 Ga. 539; Nichols v. Edwards, 16 Pick. 62.

<sup>8</sup> Carter v. Buchanan, 9 Ga. 539; M'Donald v. Crockett, 2 McC. Ch. 130.

<sup>9</sup> M'Cluney v. Lockhart, 1 Bailey, 117; Rhodes v. Childs, 64 Penn. St. 18.

general conduct.<sup>1</sup> Acts of dominion over the property exercised by the donee with the donor's manifest assent; such as cutting off coupons from bonds in the donee's custody, and regularly appropriating them. And, in general, the enjoyment of income by the claimant with the donor's approval;<sup>2</sup> or the donee's permitted use of the thing.<sup>3</sup> Ear-marks, registry, or other indications of title in the donee, and conduct generally consistent with the gift.<sup>4</sup> In some of the cases, too, may be traced a judicial partiality, perhaps not readily avowed, in favor of gifts as between the donee and the donor's creditors, over gifts in dispute between donor and donee;<sup>5</sup> or where the donee's claim is asserted simply against the estate of the deceased donor and not against a donor during his lifetime.

§ 95. The Same Subject; Circumstances unfavorable to sustaining a Gift.—On the other hand, such circumstances as the following are deemed unfavorable: Possession of the property by one who occupied some confidential relation to the owner, and had special means of access to it, without at least some more direct proof of a gift.<sup>6</sup> Possession without apparent consent.<sup>7</sup> Improvidence or folly in the gift itself.<sup>8</sup> Fraud and undue influence in general.<sup>9</sup> Giving some writing back in the nature of an obligation to pay, or to return, on receiving the property.<sup>10</sup> The owner's previous declarations and acts inconsistent with the purpose of giving.<sup>11</sup> Control and possession substantially retained by the alleged donor;<sup>12</sup> especially if the latter appropriates part of the property to his own use afterwards;<sup>13</sup> or, at least, want of possession by the alleged donor or some one in trust for him.

<sup>1</sup> Dean v. Dean, 43 Vt. 337; Prickett v. Prickett, 20 N. J. Eq. 478.

Burney v. Ball, 24 Ga. 505; Kerri-gan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17; Wam-bold v. Vick, 50 Wis. 456.

<sup>7</sup> Infra, § 100.

<sup>8</sup> See § 60 a.

<sup>2</sup> Bland v. Macculloch, 9 W. R. 65; Trowell v. Carraway, 10 Heisk. 104.

<sup>9</sup> Supra, § 60.

<sup>3</sup> Harris v. Hopkins, 43 Mich. 272; Whitford v. Horn, 18 Kan. 455; Martin v. McCullough, 136 Ind. 331.

<sup>10</sup> Roland v. Schrack, 29 Penn. St. 125; 107 Ill. 389; § 129.

<sup>4</sup> Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

<sup>11</sup> Ib.; Miller v. Eastman, 11 Ala. 609; Rich v. Mobley, 33 Ga. 85; Nichols v. Edwards, 16 Pick. 62.

<sup>5</sup> See Martrick v. Linfield, 21 Pick. 325.

<sup>12</sup> Supra, §§ 80-82; 2 Redf. 265; Daubenspeck v. Biggs, 71 Ind. 255.

<sup>6</sup> Grey v. Grey, 47 N. Y. 552;

<sup>13</sup> Northrop v. Hale, 73 Me. 66.

Ear-marks of original ownership retained in such property.<sup>1</sup> Circumstances favoring rather the idea of a loan or other bailment.<sup>2</sup> An attempt to make an informal testamentary disposition by such transfer.<sup>3</sup> Not even the favor with which gifts from a father to his marrying daughter are usually regarded can so prevail against proof of intention as to turn that into a gift which was manifestly designed as a loan or sale. It is to be observed, however, that while one's declarations before consummating a gift, in reference thereto, are under the general rules of evidence deemed corroborative testimony in connection with declarations at and about the time of delivery, as part of the res gestæ, a donor's declarations after the gift has been executed, for the purpose of affecting the transfer, or explaining what was meant, are not favored when they tend to disparage the donee's title, and import some change of mind.<sup>4</sup>

§ 96. The Same Subject; where a Deed of Gift is made.—

If the evidence relied upon to establish a gift be the delivery of a deed of gift, the written instrument explains itself, and parol evidence is not, on the usual principle, admissible to show an intent on the donor's part different from that which is manifested by the writing.<sup>5</sup>

§ 97. The Same Subject; where a Debt is forgiven.— A gift transaction is sometimes sustained on the ground of the forgiveness or discharge of a debt. Here the surrender of the note, or other evidence of debt; or, if there had been no such writing given, some instrument of discharge, or in general a receipt in full from the creditor, — would seem to

<sup>1</sup> 137 Penn. St. 23.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, §§ 70, 82.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 81; Carr v. Silloway, 111 Mass. 24; Warriner v. Rogers, L. R. 16 Eq. 340; Trough's Estate, 75 Penn. St. 115; Olney v. Howe, 89 Ill. 556.

<sup>4</sup> See Gillespie v. Burleson, 28 Ala. 551; Helm v. Martin, 59 Cal. 57; 40 Fed. 15; 22 S. C. 358. But later declarations and conduct of the alleged donor may help to determine his original intent in a doubtful case. Scott v. Savings Bank, 140 Mass. 157. As to gifts between husband and wife, the marital relation is so close that such gifts directly made were not formerly regarded with favor; though modern policy affects the old rule. See 17 Ch. D. 416; Schoul. Dom. Rel. §§ 189, 193.

<sup>5</sup> Pooser v. Tyler, 1 McCord, Ch. 18.

be the usual and proper means of evincing the act of donation. Indeed, the rule has long been that no merely oral declaration will transform a debt into a gift.<sup>1</sup> But, where one has delivered personal property under circumstances rendering it uncertain whether it was loaned or given, his subsequent distinct declaration that he meant it as a gift, is admissible to resolve the doubt.<sup>2</sup> And, in any event, the question should be one of intention, to be determined according to the particular circumstances. Thus, where the creditor receives one dollar from the debtor on an account, and balances the account by an entry, "Gift to balance account," and likewise gives the debtor a receipt for one dollar in full to balance all book accounts, this transaction is good as a gift, though it might not stand as an accord and satisfaction.<sup>3</sup> A gift pro tanto may arise from the indorsement of interest due or part payments on a note due, with the intent of forgiving so much.<sup>4</sup> And, according to the technical rule of the common law, the creditor's appointment of a debtor as the executor of his will, will operate, when duly carried into effect on the creditor's death, as a release or gift of the debt.<sup>5</sup>

§ 98. The Same Subject; Miscellaneous Points.—On the other hand, an actual gift is not to be construed into a sale or loan, because of the use of such expressions as "for value received" in the writing of transfer; for an actual gift stands on its own merits, notwithstanding any formal expressions resorted to for the purpose of giving effect to the mutual intention of the parties.<sup>6</sup>

To convert a loan into a gift, or finally effect a gift inter vivos by some roundabout process, the facts should show that <sup>1</sup> Brinkerhoff v. Lawrence, 2 Sandf. Ch. 400; Strong v. Bird, L. R. 18 Eq. 315; Plummer v. Rundlett, 42 Me. 365. A receipt given without being paid imports forgiveness of a debt. Fassett, Re, 167 Penn. St. 447. But not if such receipt is not delivered but kept in the creditor's own custody. In case of a mortgage debt forgiven, the mortgage should be discharged and the note given up.

See further, Albert v. Albert, 74 Md. 526; 68 Hun, 361.

<sup>2</sup> Doty v. Wilson, 47 N. Y. 580.

<sup>3</sup> Gray v. Barton, 55 N. Y. 68. And see Strong v. Bird, L. R. 18 Eq. 315.

<sup>4</sup> Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221; 139 Penn. St. 640.

<sup>5</sup> Strong v. Bird, L. R. 18 Eq. 315.

<sup>6</sup> Van Deusen v. Rowley, 4 Seld. 358. But see supra, § 97.

the original intent of the parties, inconsistent with the idea of giving, was superseded by a new and consistent gift intent, with a suitable transfer by delivery, actual or constructive, accordingly. Thus, where one loans money, taking back a note, and afterwards intends to give back the note, but dies without doing so, leaving the arrangement incomplete, and the case is not one of a declared trust or equitable assignment, there can be no valid gift, for there is no gift between the parties properly executed.<sup>1</sup> The gift of that which one already holds as a conditional buyer passes his own interest sufficiently, subject to the claims of his conditional seller.<sup>2</sup>

§ 99. The Same Subject; Mental Reservation does not prevent a Gift.— Finally, it may be observed that, as each party to a contract has the right to place a natural and reasonable interpretation upon the other's acts and words, no mental reservation can be permitted on either side, to the evasion of rights acquired under the contract in good faith. Not even a donor can defeat the true purpose of his transfer to the donee's prejudice. If the circumstances attending the transfer were such as ordinarily accompany a gift of the sort, thereby inducing the donee to take and accept, in the belief that a gift to him was intended, the title to the property will pass, even though the donor had secretly intended not to make a gift.<sup>3</sup>

§ 100. Gift not sustainable where Possession is without the Owner's Consent.— Not only does fraud or coercion of the owner militate with the idea of a gift, but in general no gift takes place where possession was procured and kept without the owner's consent; and this even though the latter used words importing an intention to give the thing, and then failed to deliver it.<sup>4</sup>

§ 101. Summary of the Law of Execution of Gifts Inter Vivos.— The law as to the execution of gifts inter vivos, or ordinary gifts of personal property, may be thus summed up: Such gifts are incomplete and ineffectual so long as they rest

<sup>1</sup> Henderson v. Henderson, 21 Mo. 379.

<sup>2</sup> Hatch v. Lamos, 65 N. H. 1.

<sup>3</sup> See Betts v. Francis, 1 Vroom (N. J.) 152, per Whelpley, C. J.

<sup>4</sup> Hatton v. Jones, 78 Ind. 466.

in the donor's unfulfilled intention, or mere promise, to give in the future : and promises of this kind are usually, though not invariably, without legal consideration ; in which case they cannot be enforced in law or equity. But [when the present intention to give has once manifested itself in acts, words, and conduct, amounting, on the donor's part, to delivery, or a permission to assume dominion, as the case may be, and, on the part of the donee, to acceptance, or some other corresponding assumption of dominion, the gift becomes complete, and fully executed.] Full delivery, or at least a full transfer according to the subject-matter, has been the usual requisite of such gifts ; but under the influence of modern equity rules, applicable more especially to incorporeal chattels, a transfer without full formalities, but with the present intent to give, or even a simple declaration of trust for the donee, has in numerous instances, and especially if made with the intervention of others, and not in a secret manner and with control secretly retained by the so-called giver, been supported as a gift so completely executed as to enable the donee to have his title and beneficial enjoyment perfected. Gifts may be executed through the medium of trustees or agents, as well as by donor or donee in person, and on the usual principles. Deeds of gift, too, with suitable formalities, sometimes operate by way of estoppel. And whether a full transfer has actually been made in any case, and, if so, whether it were by way of gift or not, is a question of mutual intent, to be determined according to words, acts, general conduct, and the surrounding circumstances.

---

CHAPTER III.

GIFTS INTER VIVOS ; EFFECT OF EXECUTION.

§ 102. Effect of Execution to be viewed in Two Aspects.—We have seen by what formalities gifts inter vivos, or general gifts, are fully perfected. And now as to their effect when completely executed. This subject is to be viewed in two aspects: first, as concerns the parties themselves; second, as concerns third persons.

§ 103. First Aspect as concerns the Parties themselves; Gift cannot be revoked by Either. — First, as concerns the parties themselves. A gift fully performed, and absolute in its nature, being in effect an executed contract, which carries the property with full right and title, it follows, as a rule, that neither donor nor donee can revoke it without the other's consent. The language of the courts and text-writers is clear on this point, though usually open to criticism in ignoring the donee's status. Thus says Blackstone of an executed gift: "It is not in the donor's power to retract it, though he did it without any consideration or recompense."<sup>1</sup> The rule of equity is the same, — that [a voluntary gift, though it be to trustees instead of directly to the beneficiary, will be regarded as valid when fully executed, and its provisions will be enforced and carried into effect against the parties themselves and their representatives.<sup>2</sup> In general, it may be said of gifts inter vivos, in the language of (an American court) "A gift is no more revocable in its nature than a conveyance or transfer of property in other modes. The possession being given with the intent to part with the property in the thing, the right of dominion for all purposes goes with it."<sup>3</sup> ]

[An executed gift of personal property, inter vivos, is not then revoked or annulled by one's subsequent declarations that no gift was intended.<sup>4</sup> ] Nor by his inter vivos transfer of the property to another; nor by his release to the debtor of the bond or note he had already given away.<sup>5</sup> Nor by any subsequent will or codicil of the donor, which purports to

<sup>1</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 441. And see 2 Kent Com. 442; Faxon v. Durant, 9 Met. 339; Kerrigan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17.

<sup>2</sup> Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227; Sanborn v. Goodhue, 8 Fost. 48.

Absolute gifts are here regarded. As to recalling gifts made under an express reservation, see next chapter.

<sup>3</sup> Parker v. Ricks, 8 Jones L. 447.

<sup>4</sup> M'Kane v. Bonner, 1 Bailey, 113; High v. Stainback, 1 Stew. 24. Evidence of such declarations is not favored. § 95.

<sup>5</sup> Fleshman v. Hoylman, 27 W. Va. 728.

dispose of the same property;] and this even though the effect of the gift were to deprive the donor's wife of her full share in his property after his decease.<sup>1</sup> [And it makes no difference that the property given was already bequeathed otherwise in the donor's will; since one's will is revocable at pleasure while he lives, and its execution does not debar him from exercising afterwards the usual rights of transfer.<sup>2</sup> [Nor, it is held, can the person assured annul an executed gift of his life-insurance policy, by having it cancelled, without the knowledge and consent of the beneficiary, and another policy substituted payable to a different party, in consideration of such cancelled policy; but the result will be to give the former donee an equitable right to the benefit of the new policy.<sup>3</sup>]

Furthermore, as a gift is not revocable in toto, after once taking full effect, neither can a party revoke it in part; for it is not in his power to diminish what has once been given and accepted.<sup>4</sup> All this accords with the general rule, that the subsequent words, acts, and general conduct of either party to a contract which has once been executed cannot avail to the prejudice of the other party's rights thereunder.

§ 104. The Same Subject; Trustee under a Gift should carry out the Trust. — A trustee or third party through whom a gift

<sup>1</sup> Marston v. Marston, 1 Fost. 491; Sanborn v. Goodhue, 8 Fost. 48. And see Trowell v. Carraway, 10 Heisk. 104.

<sup>2</sup> Parker v. Ricks, 8 Jones L. 447.

<sup>3</sup> Lemon v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 38 Conn. 294. Here the former policy was taken out for the benefit of a party to whom the assured was engaged, and was placed in the hands of the donee's depositary; and the assured party afterwards got possession of the instrument surreptitiously, and procured cancellation as above. It might be questionable how far any life-insurance policy may be deemed an executed gift at all during the life of the assured, especially if yearly premiums are payable; how far, too, one may make a present of such risks by way of pure gratuity. But see vol. i. Sch. Pers. Prop. § 547; Crittenden v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 41 Mich. 442.

Where the parol gift is that of an account on a third person, notice to that person not to pay cannot be disregarded by him where he has not already committed himself to the donee. Chandler v. Chandler, 62 Ga. 612.

<sup>4</sup> Minor v. Rogers, 40 Conn. 512. Two judges dissented from the opinion delivered in this case; not, we presume, because of any doubt on this point, but because, under all the circumstances, it was questionable whether the gift had ever been fully executed at all. See reference supra, § 78.

has been made is liable to the beneficiary therein designated if he fails to execute the trust properly; where, for instance, he makes delivery to some one else, or gives it back to the donor or to the donor's estate, or keeps it for himself.<sup>1</sup>

§ 105. The Same Subject; Gift how upheld after Donor's Death.—Controversies as to gifts frequently arise after the donor's death. And the considerations which applied to the party himself apply likewise to his legal representatives and those who claim the benefits of transmission by his death, as a surviving husband, widow, or kindred; they cannot revoke the gift once completely executed. Hence the property donated forms no part of the deceased donor's estate, and his executor or administrator cannot intermeddle with it, unless, perchance, the donor died insolvent.<sup>2</sup> Thus, where a deposit has been made with a banker, so as to constitute a complete gift, and both donor and donee have since deceased, the banker is not bound to pay the sum over to the donor's representatives, but rather to those of the donee.<sup>3</sup> And the trustee or custodian under a completed gift, or his sub-agent, should act as the donee's right of dominion requires.<sup>4</sup>

Again, supposing the gift of a note payable to order is treated as sufficiently executed on delivery and acceptance of the note without indorsement, it follows that the donee may not only sue upon it in the donor's own name, while he lives, but, after the donor's death, bring his action in the name of the executor or administrator, even though it be, as a matter of fact, against such representative's express consent.<sup>5</sup> And where a gift had been executed to trustees, to be managed as their own for a certain purpose, they were permitted to retain the property, as against the donor's exec-

<sup>1</sup> Wyble v. McPheters, 52 Ind. 393, and cases cited.

<sup>2</sup> Van Deusen v. Rowley, 4 Seld. 358; Gilleland v. Failing, 5 Den. 308; Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78; Jewell v. Porter, 11 Fost. 34; Marsh v. Fuller, 18 N. H. 360; Barton v.

Gainer, 3 H. & N. 387. For the exceptions of insolvency, see infra, § 121.

<sup>3</sup> Howard v. Savings Bank, 40 Vt. 597.

<sup>4</sup> Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307.

<sup>5</sup> Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray, 382.

utor, upon giving bond to execute the trust.<sup>1</sup> Some cases, on the principle of an equitable assignment, go so far as to require the personal representative to complete the final formalities of a transfer of incorporeal property which the donor had left unfinished.<sup>2</sup>

But the delivery of property by one's executor or administrator, under a mistaken supposition that it had been conferred by gift before the donee's decease, will not estop him from suing to recover it again for the benefit of the estate.<sup>3</sup> Nor, on the other hand, will the donee's right be prejudiced where he delivers the thing to the executor or administrator upon demand without admitting the latter's right to it.<sup>4</sup>

§ 106. The Same Subject; Avoidance for Mental Incapacity or Fraud.—The mental incapacity of a party to the gift may be, however, under the circumstances, a suitable reason for declaring the gift null and void; and so, too, may a gift be set aside, on the ground of fraud or force, at the instance of the party who was entrapped into the transaction. These exceptions, which are found chiefly available to a donor, have already been set forth in detail.<sup>5</sup>

§ 107. The Same Subject; Parties may rescind or modify by Mutual Consent.—Still another course is always open to the parties, provided they can agree to it: namely, to rescind or modify the gift by mutual consent. This is a general characteristic of all transfers by contract, — they may be opened for adjustment and readjustment at pleasure; but with this express limitation, that all whose rights have once vested concur in the change. Accordingly, where A. makes a gift to B., A. and B. may afterwards agree to rescind the gift; but

<sup>1</sup> Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48.

<sup>2</sup> Allerton v. Lang, 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 362.

<sup>3</sup> Phipps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 586. As to the right of a deceased donor's representative to impeach for fraud, see Hunt v. Butterworth, 21 Tex. 133.

<sup>4</sup> 66 Hun, 632; Clinton v. McKeown, S. C. (1893), 17 S. E. 504.

<sup>5</sup> See c. 1, supra, §§ 58–60. And see 2 Bl. Com. 441; 2 Kent Com. 440. As to the proper parties to bring an action to set aside a gift made by a person since deceased, on the ground of undue influence, see Ford v. Hennessy, 70 Mo. 580. The actual beneficiary is the person to be thus sued. Ib.

where A. completes a gift to B., for the benefit of C., it does not lie in the power of A. and B. to change the effect of the transaction without C.'s assent.<sup>1</sup> Where, too, an absolute gift was made, the parties may subsequently agree that the gift shall be for life only,<sup>2</sup> or under some other qualification.

§ 108. New Dealings with the Property based upon Mutual Assent. — Any new contract made by the parties, with reference to property once given, is to be construed according to its true intent and purpose ; and hence a gift of a chattel is not annulled where the donee gives it back to the donor on some special bailment or trust ; as, for instance, to collect what is due, if the property be of an incorporeal sort, or generally to keep it until the donee shall call for it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 109. The Same Subject ; Revocation of Parental Gifts. — We have seen that a beneficial gift, even to an infant, is presumed to have been accepted by the latter. And that parents can make gifts to their children, there is no doubt whatever. Gifts of this character, then, should constitute no exception to the general rule which excludes the donor's right to revoke at pleasure. And hence it is held, as between parent and child, that, where a father presents an article of dress or ornament, — such as a watch to his young son, — he cannot afterwards reclaim the gift without the son's consent.<sup>4</sup> And in the case of a piano given in good faith to one's daughter, fourteen years of age, the gift has been supported against the father's creditors, there being no fraud upon them in legal contemplation.<sup>5</sup>

But, from the language used in some cases, it would appear that, out of deference to the right of parental control, the parental gift to one's minor child might be treated as capable of resumption by the giver ; the more so, if the child's subsequent conduct proved undutiful and ungrateful.<sup>6</sup> This last seems to us an illogical view of the subject ;

<sup>1</sup> Plummer v. Rundlett, 42 Me. 365.

<sup>2</sup> Harper v. Parks, 63 Ga. 705.

See next c.

<sup>3</sup> Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261 ;
supra, §§ 70, 82 ; Marston v. Marston, 64 N. H. 146.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Smith, 7 C. & P. 401.

<sup>5</sup> Pierson v. Heisey, 19 Iowa, 114.

See also Kellogg v. Adams, 51 Wis.
138 ; Whitford v. Horn, 18 Kan. 455 ;
Sch. Dom. Rel. § 270.

<sup>6</sup> Cranz v. Kroger, 22 Ill. 74 ;

and the better opinion must be, in the light of English and American authorities, that the child's right fails only where no gift was purposed, or where under the circumstances the intended parental gift failed of a suitable delivery and acceptance, or, indeed, the intention to give was never carried out. But, when the child lives under the parental roof, a transfer of the property to be held under the child's sole and exclusive possession, free of all parental control, cannot always be safely inferred; the fact being, doubtless, that a parent often clothes, feeds, and furnishes articles for his children's comfort without designing to confer an absolute gift at all.<sup>1</sup>

§ 110. The Same Subject; Civil Law of Revocation.—In respect of revocation, as concerned the parties, the civil law differed from our own. For the Code of Justinian and that of some modern nations of Continental Europe have expressly permitted the revocation of a gift for ingratitude in the donee; if, as in the instances especially commented upon, the receiver should grievously defame the donor, or lay violent hands upon him, or injure his estate, or lie in wait to take away his life. But the right of revocation for these and analogous causes has been treated as personal to the donor: if he forgive the injury, the gift still prevails; and, at all events, his heirs have no such right of action, nor can they set up ingratitude to themselves as a cause of revocation.<sup>2</sup> Other special causes for revoking a gift are enumer-

Johnson v. Stevens, 22 La. Ann. 144; Stovall v. Johnson, 17 Ala. 14. And see Fleshman v. Hoylman, 27 W. Va. 278.

<sup>1</sup> It is said, in Pierson v. Heisey, 19 Iowa, 114: "While a father must be just before he is generous, he may make a valid gift to his child, and if made in good faith, if possession of the property shall be taken by the child, it is held as exclusively hers, and under her sole and exclusive control. It will not become liable to the father's debts subsequently contracted by the simple fact that it was kept in his house with his other furniture." But this favorable rule was asserted in a case where property was claimed by a subsequent attaching creditor of the father. In a suit between parent and child, on the other hand, the rule must be applied with great delicacy. And see Jones v. Lock, L. R. 1 Ch. 25, where the court was evidently reluctant to sustain the gift of a large sum of money to a baby, on scanty evidence of the parent's intention to execute it.

See further, Sch. Dom. Rel. §§ 270-273, as to gifts, advancements, &c., between parent and child.

<sup>2</sup> See Colquhoun Roman Law, § 1065.

ated in the Civil Code. Thus, the unexpected birth of a child to the donor, subsequently to the gift; this seemingly, however, on the ground of a presumed condition of this character at the outset.<sup>1</sup> And again, where the gift is so large as to bring the giver to indigence if carried into effect; a feature which is found preserved in the Louisiana Code.<sup>2</sup>

§ 111. Effect of Executed Gift as concerns Third Persons; Generally conclusive.—Second. As concerns third persons, an executed gift of personal property may be in general pronounced conclusive.

§ 112. The Same Subject; Exceptions; Bonâ Fide Purchasers, etc.—The sole exception commonly made in the books is in favor of creditors of the donor whose rights are thereby prejudiced.<sup>3</sup> But others whose rights may have been prejudiced deserve a passing notice. Thus, stolen goods—personal property, in fact, to which the giver has no transmissible title—cannot be the subject of a valid gift as against the true owner.<sup>4</sup> And bonâ fide purchasers without notice are here as well as elsewhere to be respected. Upon common-law principles a voluntary conveyance of personal property is void as against any subsequent bonâ fide purchaser thereof without notice of the gift; a doctrine which will be found clearly embodied in most of the American statutes concerning fraudulent conveyances,<sup>5</sup> and applicable usually where the donor appears still as owner by his possession of the thing. But, if such subsequent purchaser had notice of the previous transfer and yet completed his purchase, he cannot disturb the donee's rights.<sup>6</sup> The English policy is similar to our own: for the act of 27 Eliz. c. 4, which was passed not long after the famous statute against fraudulent conveyances, distinctly avoids all conveyances of land made with the intent to defraud purchasers; a provision which would doubtless

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Code, Lib. 8, 56.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Lagrange v. Barrè, 11 Rob. (La.) 302; 2 Kent Com. 440. See § 60 a.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 441; 2 Kent Com. 440.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, §§ 18–20; infra, § 113.

<sup>5</sup> Anderson v. Green, 7 J. J. Marsh. 448; Black v. Thornton, 31 Ga. 641.

<sup>6</sup> Ib.; Chaffin v. Kimball, 23 Ill. 36; Aiken v. Bruen, 21 Ind. 137; Gregory v. Haworth, 25 Cal. 653.

have extended to chattels, had such property been deemed at that day of sufficient consequence.<sup>1</sup>

So long as the formalities of corporeal delivery were pursued to the letter in order that any gift of personal property might take full effect, a careful man was not easily entrapped into a subsequent purchase of the thing from the donor. But now that the rule of delivery has become so greatly relaxed, instances may more readily occur. And wherever a deed of gift requiring registry is the recognized symbol of corporeal delivery; or if, as in the case of a ship or a mortgage, similar formalities are regularly prescribed out of regard to the specific nature of the property, — then it would appear that a gift might be made, without registry, so completely executed as to carry the title to the donee, and yet so incompletely that the transaction might be impeached by a subsequent purchaser from the donor who had not that actual or constructive notice which the law requires.<sup>2</sup> A pledgee of the donor or other lender, upon security of the thing donated, has a corresponding benefit, if bonâ fide advancing money without notice of the gift.

§ 113. Main Exceptions as to Prejudiced Creditors of the Donor; Legislation against Fraudulent Transfers. — But the long-recognized exception to the validity of executed gifts of chattels has been that made in favor of the donor's creditors, whose right to have the transfer set aside wholly or in part, on the ground of prejudice to themselves, we proceed to consider more at length.

The broad ground on which a creditor seeks to reopen transactions of this character is that of practical fraud. And under the general head of fraudulent conveyances may be classed all conveyances, whether of real or personal property, whose object, tendency, or effect is to defraud one of his legal

<sup>1</sup> 4 Kent Com. 463; Sch. Dom. Rel. § 185; infra, § 113.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 305, 425, as to the registry requirements in the case of ships and mortgages; also cases supra. In Black v. Thornton, 31 Ga. 641, it is stated, that, as a general principle, a party who claims title to property by deed of gift is a volunteer; and a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice of the voluntary conveyance, is preferred in law to the volunteer; but, if he had notice before he purchased, the volunteer will be preferred over him.

rights. The decisions which relate to this subject are very numerous and quite conflicting : chiefly, perhaps, for the reason that various minds seeking to enforce the rule of common honesty will yet differ in their views of what constitutes an essentially honest transaction ; an inquiry which must in every case depend more upon the bearing of special facts than arbitrary rules.

English legislation recognized at a very early period the injustice of permitting gifts and grants to prevail to the injury of a grantor's or donor's creditors. Soon after the ecclesiastics had introduced into England the Roman law of uses, debtors who were heavily involved began to give lands and chattels to their friends by collusion, in trust, to have the profits at their will, and would then flee to privileged places, forcing their creditors to unfavorable terms of settlement. To stop this growing evil the statutes of 50 Edw. III. c. 6, and 3 Henry VII. c. 4, were enacted, which declare void all fraudulent gifts of goods and chattels made in trust for the donor, and with intent to defraud creditors.<sup>1</sup> Most likely it became uncertain what was the real meaning of statutes which seemed so comprehensive, or else there was found a lack of vigor in enforcing them ; for at length came the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5, which is at the basis of our modern legislation on the whole subject. By this carefully drawn statute all gifts of goods and chattels, as well as conveyances of land, by writing or otherwise, made with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud creditors, are rendered void as against the persons so prejudiced, notwithstanding any pretended consideration for the transfer between the parties. But estates and interests in lands or chattels lawfully conveyed or assured upon good consideration and bonâ fide, without notice of fraud or collusion, are expressly excepted from its operation.<sup>2</sup>

The statute 13 Eliz. c. 5 (which was extended to Ireland in the reign of Charles I.), has been in substance re-enacted in most of the United States ; perhaps in language less tautological, and yet with a design to carry out the same ultimate results. In other States it might be claimed as part of the common law brought over by the early colonists. And there are States, like New York, whose legislation expressly favors purchasers in good faith as well as creditors having rights prejudiced by the transfer, supplying other needful checks upon fraud likewise.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Reeves Hist. 143.

Conv., Appx., which gives all these

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 440 ; Bump Fraud. statutes at length.

§ 114. The Same Subject. — All of this legislation is founded in common reason ; and since fraud is a cause for the avoidance of transactions independently of all legislation, on general principles of jurisprudence, it might be said that these modern statutes are little more than declaratory of the common law.<sup>2</sup> The general object is to do justice, and the interpretation should be liberal, not literal. The precedents, already immense in number, covering other transactions than gifts, and embracing real as well as personal property, need not be here reviewed ; moreover, the want of uniformity in the legislation of our States on this subject, as touching rights and remedies, besides the want of a sure test for honest transactions, must present obstacles almost insuperable to their exact legal classification.

It may be said, however, that gifts to strangers, and gifts to one's own wife and children not founded upon the consideration of marriage, stand alike subject to the creditor's right of avoidance ; since the claims of justice should precede those of affection.<sup>3</sup> The fraud which vitiates must be directed against lawful creditors, not those who are without a status in the courts, nor the general public ; but the creditor's demand need not yet be due, so long as the claim is a lawful one and not illegal or pretended ; and the statute language will, besides, suffice to bring in others than technical creditors who have suffered injury.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ib.

<sup>2</sup> Twyne's Case, 3 Co. 80 ; Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall. 299 ; Bump Fraud. Conv. 58 and Appx.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 441, 442 ; Sch. Dom. Rel. § 185 ; Caswell v. Hill, 47 N. H. 407. There may be a transfer by way of an honestly intended family arrangement, not strictly to be considered a gift, and not executed with the object of defeating creditors. Johnson, Re, 20 Ch. D. 389.

<sup>4</sup> See Bump Fraud. Conv. 65, 484, 485 ; Feigley v. Feigley, 7 Md. 537 ; Griffin v. Stoddard, 12 Ala. 783.

§ 115. The Same Subject; whether such Legislation extends to Incorporeal Personality. — Whether the statute of 13 Eliz. extends to choses in action, so called, and other kinds of incorporeal property, has been in dispute. The language of this act makes express reference to “goods and chattels;” a term certainly comprehensive enough, in the modern sense, to include the several species which have come into existence since the act was passed, though not at that day looked for. But some of the early writers denied the application of the statute to such property as a creditor could not reach by legal process; the consequence being that a voluntary settlement of choses in action, stock, and the like, might stand against creditors even if made by an insolvent debtor, inasmuch as that species of property could not be taken on legal execution for the payment of debts.<sup>1</sup> In this country the rule is not positively settled, but most of the later statutes against fraudulent conveyances make express mention of “choses in action.”<sup>2</sup>

The question is one which relates to the remedy as affected by the character of the property; and, wherever local practice permits incorporeal chattels to be reached by legal attachment or execution, the creditors’ right to impeach the transfer of such chattels ought to prevail.<sup>3</sup> In the United States, the tendency of legislation is to extend the usual legal remedies to incorporeal chattels; and the example of New York is followed by many other States, in giving jurisdiction to the courts of equity, by a proceeding somewhat in the nature of a “creditor’s bill,” to lay hold of things in action, property held in trust, and equitable interests generally, after the legal remedies have been exhausted.<sup>4</sup> Even

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 442. The question does not arise concerning leases, which are expressly named in the statute.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 443 n.; Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311; Spader v. Davis, 20 Johns. 450; contra, Donovan v. Finn, 1 Hopk. 59; Statutes of New York, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, &c., cited in Bump Fraud. Conv., Appx.

<sup>3</sup> Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538; Warden v. Jones, 2 D. & J. 76; Pinkerton v. Railroad, 42 N. H. 424; Bump Fraud. Conv. 264; Cook v. Johnson, 1 Beasl. 51; Kerrigan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Statutes of New York, Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Georgia, Pennsylvania, and other States noted, 2 Kent Com. 443, n.

on the general principle of enforcing justice and suppressing wrong, equity might well set aside fraudulent transfers of incorporeal property not liable to legal process ; but, though some American courts favorably incline to this opinion, the English courts appear to have settled down into the strict rule of leaving creditors free to disturb only transfers of property which might be taken in execution for the payment of debts.<sup>1</sup>

§ 116. The Same Subject; Fraudulent Purpose under such Acts. — The rule has been often declared, that a fraudulent purpose must be shared by both grantor and grantee to make a conveyance of property fraudulent as to creditors.<sup>2</sup> This doctrine, if applied to all transactions irrespective of consideration, would make a gift unimpeachable unless both donor and donee had participated in the fraud. No such favor extends, however, to these gratuitous transfers ; for a voluntary conveyance without consideration is held to be void against defrauded creditors, though the grantee were not privy to the fraud.<sup>3</sup>

Cherishing a fraudulent intent relates, of course, to the time of the transfer, not to a subsequent period. This plain rule is sometimes lost sight of by creditors who attack a gift or voluntary settlement because of the donor's or settlor's insolvency. But in practice there is found some obscurity in cases where embarrassment and inability to pay actually existed when the settlement was made, but utter and notorious insolvency did not follow until some time later.<sup>4</sup>

In applying the statutes against fraudulent conveyances,

<sup>1</sup> Ib. ; McMechen v. Marman, 8 Gill & J. 58 ; Chittenden v. Brewster, 2 Wall. 191 ; Abbott v. Tenney, 18 N. H. 109 ; Green v. Tantum, 4 C. E. Green, 105 ; contra, Pool v. Glover, 2 Ire. 129 ; Scott v. Scholey, 8 East, 467 ; Otley v. Lines, 7 Price, 274 ; Mathews v. Feaver, 1 Cox, 278 ; Crozier v. Young, 3 Mon. 157 ; Bump Fraud. Conv. 269, 510, 514.

<sup>2</sup> Partelo v. Harris, 26 Conn. 480 ; Leach v. Francis, 41 Vt. 670 ; Foster

v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89 ; Steele v. Ward, 25 Iowa, 535 ; Splawn v. Martin, 17 Ark. 146 ; Brown v. Foree, 7 B. Mon. 357 ; Weisiger v. Chisholm, 28 Tex. 780.

<sup>3</sup> Clark v. Depew, 25 Penn. St. 509 ; Mohawk Bank v. Atwater, 2 Paige, 54 ; Marden v. Babcock, 2 Met. 99.

<sup>4</sup> Leavitt v. Leavitt, 47 N. H. 329. See Mackay v. Douglas, L. R. 14 Eq. 106 ; Parish v. Murphree, 13 How. 92 ; Phillips v. Wooster, 36 N. Y. 412.

much stress has been laid on what are called badges of fraud, among which that of retaining possession of personal property which has been nominally transferred is, perhaps, the most important. Possession raises the presumption of ownership, especially in the case of corporeal chattels; and hence the continued possession of a transferring owner, with its incidental advantage of business credit, is presumptive evidence in a creditor's favor that the transfer was fraudulent and a mere sham. But such possession is not, according to the later and better authorities, conclusively fraudulent, though the cases are somewhat conflicting; and it is now held competent in most sale transactions to show that the transfer was made in good faith, and that there were good reasons for leaving the property afterward in the original owner's hands.<sup>1</sup> But, in the case of a gift, — a mode of transfer altogether gratuitous, which usually requires delivery and acceptance in the first place, — it would be almost impossible to rebut the unfavorable presumption of a donor's fraudulent intention, where he was found in possession at or soon after the alleged transfer.<sup>2</sup>

§ 117. The Same Subject; Fraud a Question of Fact; Presumptions. — Fraud is a question of fact, to be inferred from the facts attending the particular transaction; and whether the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud, under statutes against fraudulent conveyances, has actually existed, must usually be open to free inquiry. But judicial investigation is aided by certain presumptions which the law has applied, with more or less rigor, according as the claimant is an antecedent or a subsequent creditor.

§ 118. The Same Subject; Presumption as to Antecedent Creditors. — (1.) As to antecedent creditors, the position taken in the early New York case of Reade v. Livingston was strongly against the donor; and the doctrine there maintained, upon an elaborate review of the English authorities, was that every voluntary settlement or gift is absolutely fraudulent and void with respect to existing creditors; the presumption being here a conclusive one, no matter what the circumstances attending the transfer or the amount of the donor's indebtedness. This plain and positive rule, under the weighty sanction of Chancellor Kent, has been recognized in other parts of this country, and in several States may still be pronounced the settled law.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bullis v. Borden, 21 Wis. 136; Forkner v. Stuart, 6 Gratt. 197; Shepherd v. Trigg, 7 Mo. 151; Marden v. Babcock, 2 Met. 99; Mayer v. Clark, 40 Ala. 259; U. S. Dig. 1st Series, Fraud. Conv. I.; Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538; Bump Fraud. Conv. 151, with numerous citations.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Little v. Willets, 55 Barb. 125, with Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261.

But this doctrine was soon found too stern and inflexible to meet the actual statute requirements; and in New York the courts began to relax, and then the legislature abrogated the rule.<sup>2</sup> Vermont, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Massachusetts were among the earliest States to dissent; at least to the extent of shielding all donors from the conclusive presumption of fraud upon antecedent creditors, who were not deeply indebted at the time of making the gift, and favoring, in the main, a consideration of the circumstances actually attending the transfer.<sup>3</sup> A like indulgence was found to be extended by the later English cases.<sup>4</sup> And the better opinion is at this day, that a gift is presumably valid and not fraudulent as to creditors, notwithstanding the donor's actual indebtedness at the time, if he retained property reasonably sufficient to meet all demands upon him; though an actual fraudulent intent on his part may, of course, be shown.<sup>5</sup> And his gift or voluntary conveyance with intent to defraud must fail.

<sup>1</sup> Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. 481; Den v. De Hart, 1 Halst. 450; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. 229; 2 Kent Com. 441; Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 602; Belford v. Crane, 1 C. E. Green, 265; Miller v. Desha, 3 Bush, 212; O'Daniel v. Crawford, 4 Dev. (N. C.) 197; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 37.

<sup>2</sup> Jackson v. Seward, 8 Cow. 406; Van Wyck v. Seward, 6 Paige, 62; 2 N. Y. Rev. Stats. p. 137, § 4; 2 Kent Com. 441, n.

<sup>3</sup> Brackett v. Waite, 4 Vt. 389; Chambers v. Spencer, 5 Watts, 404;

Howard v. Williams, 1 Bailey, 575; Parkman v. Welch, 19 Pick. 231.

<sup>4</sup> Shears v. Rogers, 3 B. & Ad. 362.

<sup>5</sup> Cases supra; 2 Kent Com. 441, 12th ed., n.; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 37; Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538; Babcock v. Eckler, 24 N. Y. 623; Thacher v. Phinney, 7 Allen, 146; Hinde v. Longworth, 11 Wheat. 199; Woolston's Appeal, 51 Penn. St. 452; Kent v. Riley, L. R. 14 Eq. 190; Thompson v. Baker, 141 U. S. 648. The commonly prevailing doctrine as to the effect of gifts and voluntary settlements of personal property with reference to antecedent creditors, under the statutes against fraudulent conveyances, may be thus summed up : (1st.) Where there is clear proof that the gift was actually intended to defraud creditors, the transaction will not stand against them. (2d.) In absence of such direct proof, a mere indebtedness on the donor's part will not defeat the gift where the donor has retained enough property to reasonably meet all demands. (3d.) The mere fact that the gift has in the event prevented an existing creditor from obtaining payment of his debt will not enable him to set the transfer aside; as the cause may have been beyond what prudence and sagacity could foresee, or perhaps the blame is imputable to the creditor himself. Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538; Brackett v. Waite, 4 Vt. 389; Bump Fraud. Conv. 300; Wilson v. Buchanan, 7 Gratt. 334. But see Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G., J. & S. 293. Creditors are not, however, to take the risk of the donor's speculations. Mackay v. Douglas, L. R. 14 Eq. 106; Parish v. Murphree, 13 How. 92. (4th.) But if the donor takes from his own property, or that which the law treats as the proper fund for the payment of one's debts, more than would leave, after making the gift, a sufficient amount for settling all demands against him, the intent to defraud existing creditors is conclusively presumed, without proof of actual fraudulent intent; for hinderance, delay, or fraud is here the necessary consequence of the gift. Freeman v. Pope, L. R. 5 Ch. 538. And it would appear that indebtedness, amounting to embarrassment, on the debtor's part, at the time of the transfer, not legal insolvency alone, will vitiate the gift against his existing creditors, on the same conclusive presumption. Parish v. Murphree, 13 How. 92; Worthington v. Bullett, 6 Md. 172; Bump Fraud. Conv. 292, 293, 295. A scanty provision for creditors, or a mere nominal amount to meet the indebtedness, will not suffice. Parish v. Murphree, 13 How. 92; Churchill v. Wells, 7 Cold. 364.

In short, there may be a legal or constructive fraud practised upon antecedent creditors sufficient to defeat the gift as to them, however bond fide the intent or meritorious the true object of the transfer; for the law knows of no generosity which can rise superior to the justice of meeting one's honest debts. But if the debts are ultimately paid, or the donor accumulates other property for meeting them as judgments are obtained, the gift will generally stand.<sup>1</sup>

§ 119. The Same Subject; Presumption as to Subsequent Creditors. — (2.) As to subsequent creditors, the authorities are well agreed that the question of fraudulent intention is one of fact, with little or no conclusiveness of presumption against the gift. Thus, says Chancellor Kent, whose inclinations, we have seen, were strongly to the side of creditors :

<sup>1</sup> Davis v. Herrick, 37 Me. 397; Bump Fraud. Conv. 294, 295; Kuhn v. Stansfield, 28 Md. 210; Smith v. Reavis, 7 Ire. 341.

"A voluntary conveyance, if made with fraudulent views, would seem to be void even as to subsequent creditors; but not to be so, if there was no fraud in fact."<sup>1</sup> And the settled rule, as to subsequent as contrasted with antecedent creditors, is, that the gift to be void must have been made with actual fraudulent intent<sup>2</sup> and as a cover for future schemes of fraud.<sup>3</sup>

But, though the burden of proving a voluntary settlement fraudulent is thus placed upon a subsequent creditor, proof of an actual intent to defraud, hinder, and delay such creditor would suffice for setting the transaction aside. And that any subsequent creditor has a right to attack the gift or settlement on the ground that the transfer was designed to defraud him, even though it might not have been fraudulent as to existing creditors and others, is plain upon reason and authority, notwithstanding some dicta to the contrary.<sup>4</sup>

As to fraud of a miscellaneous character, available to subsequent creditors, instances are not unknown. Thus there may be some secret trust or concealment in the gift, or the omission to give some requisite notice of the transfer.<sup>5</sup> Per-

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 442; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. 501, 502.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 602; Damon v. Bryant, 2 Pick. 411; Benton v. Jones, 8 Conn. 186; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. 229; Mattingly v. Nye, 8 Wall. 370; Bump Fraud. Conv. 324; Caswell v. Hill, 47 N. H. 407; Phillips v. Wooster, 36 N. Y. 412; Place v. Rhem, 7 Bush, 585; Belford v. Crane, 1 C. E. Green, 265; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 40; Kerrigan v. Rautigan, 43 Conn. 17; Davidson v. Lanier, 51 Ala. 318.

<sup>3</sup> Schreyer v. Scott, 134 U. S. 405.

<sup>4</sup> 2 Kent Com. 442, Holmes' n.; Case v. Phelps, 39 N. Y. 164; Bump, 320, 332; contra, 3 Co. 80; Thacher v. Phinney, 7 Allen, 146. The English rule as to this class of creditors was laid down by Lord Chancellor Westbury, in Spirett v. Willows, as follows: "If a voluntary settlement or deed of gift be impeached by subsequent creditors whose debts had not been contracted at the date of the settlement, then it is necessary to show either that the settlor made the settlement with express intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, or that after the settlement the settlor had no sufficient means or reasonable expectation of being able to pay his then existing debts; that is to say, was reduced to a state of insolvency: in which case the law infers that the settlement was made with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, and is therefore fraudulent and void." Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G., J. & S. 293; 2 Kent Com. 441; Mackay v. Douglas, L. R. 14 Eq. 106. This suggests that the donor's actual insolvency may avail a subsequent creditor, likewise actual fraud of a miscellaneous character.

<sup>5</sup> Parkman v. Welch, 19 Pick. 231; Clark v. French, 23 Me. 221; 1 Am.

haps the transfer is simply an artifice to keep one's property out of his creditors' hands in case of future insolvency, while he uses it in trade or hazardous speculations.<sup>1</sup> And it is a well-settled rule, that if one makes a voluntary settlement or gift with the direct and fraudulent purpose of becoming subsequently indebted, and then contracts debts in accordance with this purpose, they who are made creditors under these circumstances may avoid the settlement or gift, although their claims had not, at that date, even a contingent existence; and this too without reference to the question of the debtor's insolvency, provided his design to hinder, delay, and defraud was thus apparent.<sup>2</sup>

§ 120. General Considerations of Fraud upon Creditors.—Where a man is solvent at the time of settlement, and remains so reasonably long afterwards, and had contemplated doing nothing which was likely to lead to insolvency, the settlement is good.<sup>3</sup> But it is well for the cause of upright and fair dealing, that so many of the later cases are still found adhering to the wholesome doctrine that a settlement made just before entering on a new business, and with a view of providing against its disastrous contingencies, is unavailing against new creditors as well as old ones.<sup>4</sup> Still, it may be assumed, that, even here, the question of fraud is an open one, however strong might be the presumptions against the donor; and where it appears that some other adequate provision was made by the donor, or that the subsequent creditor, in point of fact, gave credit with full knowledge that the transfer had been made, the creditor will be ruled out of court.<sup>5</sup>

Lead. Cas. 40; Bump Fraud. Conv. 322; National Bank v. Sprague, 5 C. E. Green, 13; Lyman v. Cessford, 15 Iowa, 229.

<sup>1</sup> Case v. Phelps, 39 N. Y. 164; Mackay v. Douglas, L. R. 14 Eq. 106; Mullen v. Wilson, 44 Penn. St. 413; Beeckman v. Montgomery, 1 McCart. 106.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 41; Parish v. Murphree, 13 How. 92; Howe v.

Ward, 4 Greenl. 195; Thomson v. Dougherty, 12 S. & R. 456.

<sup>3</sup> Holloway v. Millard, 1 Madd. 414.

<sup>4</sup> Mackay v. Douglas, L. R. 14 Eq. 106; Mullen v. Wilson, 44 Penn. St. 413; Beeckman v. Montgomery, 1 McCart. 106; Churchill v. Wells, 7 Cold. 364.

<sup>5</sup> Snyder v. Christ, 39 Penn. St. 499; Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198; Johnson v. Zane, 11 Gratt. 563; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 41.

As to the donor's insolvency at the time of the gift, the cases show a manifest reluctance to let a voluntary settlement stand, even as against subsequent creditors, wherever the donor or settlor was largely indebted or practically insolvent at the time of the transfer. In English and American practice, subsequent creditors, not antecedent creditors alone, are here allowed relief; their right depending, however, upon the proof of pre-existing debts.<sup>1</sup> As to the conclusiveness, however, of any presumption on their behalf from the fact of the donor's insolvency, apart from the rights of antecedent creditors, there may be reasonable doubt, so far as American courts, at least, are concerned. But it should be remembered, that subsequent creditors do not stand alone in attacking such transfers; so they may well give antecedent creditors the first chance at presumptions; for there still remains the benefit of that general rule of equity which allows subsequent creditors to participate in the fund whenever the transfer has been set aside for fraud at the instance of the prior creditors.<sup>2</sup>

§ 121. Rule as to setting aside Gift where Donor has died Insolvent. — Whether the executor or administrator of a donor who has died insolvent can set aside any voluntary settlement or gift made during the donor's life in fraud of creditors is disputed; but it is clear that the creditors can pursue their own remedies, under circumstances of fraud, in which case the personal representative of the deceased donor would well be made a party, so that the property when recovered could go in a course of administration.<sup>3</sup> But as concerns a gift of personal property inter vivos made near the time of the donor's death, our local practice has in some instances followed the course so frequent in the essentially distinct case

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 442, n.; Churchill v. Wells, 7 Cold. 364; Huggins v. Perrine, 30 Ala. 396; Crossley v. Elworthy, L. R. 12 Eq. 158; Jenkyn v. Vaughan, 3 Drew. 419; Holloway v. Millard, 1 Madd. 414; Lush v. Wilkinson, 5 Ves. 384.

<sup>2</sup> Bump Fraud. Conv. 329; Ammons' Appeal, 63 Penn. St. 284;

Richardson v. Smallwood, Jacob, 553; Churchill v. Wells, 7 Cold. 364; Thomson v. Dougherty, 12 S. & R. 448; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. 499; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 42.

<sup>3</sup> See 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 43; Dorsey v. Smithson, 6 Harr. & J. 61; Brockman v. Bowman, 1 Hill Ch. 338.

of a gift causâ mortis: namely, to permit the administrator, as quasi representative of the creditors, to recover the property or its value in a suit at law against the donee. The money thus recovered is dealt with as assets for debts and charges of administration.<sup>1</sup> But if any balance is left over, it goes, as a matter of course, not to the next of kin, but to the donee; for the revocation of any gift for the benefit of creditors is only pro tanto.<sup>2</sup> And so long as there remain legacies under a will for abatement, or assets generally, the gift cannot be disturbed at all.<sup>3</sup>

§ 122. Rights of Creditors lost by Laches, etc. — A creditor who has long slept on his rights cannot be permitted to assail the validity of a gift; especially if the donee has meanwhile enhanced the value of the gift by his own labor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 123. Concluding Remarks as to the Doctrine of Fraudulent Transfer. — These fundamental doctrines of fraudulent transfer are to be gathered from a multitude of precedents, which relate chiefly to large dispositions of real and personal property in the mass, and not to those single chattel transfers of comparatively small consequence to which the term "gift" is most commonly applied in familiar intercourse. But whatever presumptions of fraudulent intent may avail in the former instance, are as a rule likewise available in the latter, though probably with more, and certainly not less, indulgence to proof tending to rebut a dishonest purpose. Another thought is suggested: that as these decided cases almost invariably deal with voluntary settlements which a debtor has made upon his wife and children, or others closely allied by blood and affection, it might be found, on the other hand, that the presumptions of fraudulent intent would be more readily applied where such a settlement or a gift was made

<sup>1</sup> Abbott v. Tenney, 18 N. H. 109. And see Marsh v. Fuller, 18 N. H. 360; Gilleland v. Failing, 5 Den. 308; McLean v. Weeks, 65 Me. 411. In the absence of intended fraud on the part of the insolvent person who made a chattel gift during his life, the gift is valid as against heirs or subsequent creditors. McLean v. Weeks, ib.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. 481.

<sup>3</sup> Biddle v. Carraway, 6 Jones Eq. 95.

<sup>4</sup> Allen v. Knowlton, 47 Vt. 512; 96 Penn. St. 388.

to a mere stranger. The dicta in some of the cases do certainly give some color for such a supposition ; laying, as they do, much stress upon this so-called consideration of blood and affection ;<sup>1</sup> and yet, so far as the current of decisions goes, there is nothing to justify a difference in this connection between gifts to relatives and gifts to third persons. But should the courts ever seek to raise such a distinction, gifts of gratitude, though not to members of one's immediate family, would deserve their high favor.

§ 124. Donee takes the Gift subject to all Equities existing at the Time of Transfer. — It follows from what we have said that a mere donee, or voluntary transferee of personal property, takes it subject to all equities and infirmities affecting the title at the time of the gift, and cannot claim that protection which is accorded in various instances to the bonâ fide purchaser for value of a thing without notice of prior equities or infirmities.<sup>2</sup>

§ 125. Summary of Law as to the Effect of Executed Gifts. — The doctrine of executed gifts appears, on the whole, to be this : That a gift once executed is irrevocable and binding as concerns the parties thereto, and executors, administrators, heirs, and others who derive title through either of them, or who stand as mere representatives, unless such mental incapacity, fraud, force, or utter error may be set up, on behalf of donor or donee, as will usually invalidate contracts, or the parties concerned subsequently rescind or modify the transfer upon mutual agreement. ~~That~~ the gift is in general irrevocable and binding against the world. But that, as concerns the donor's creditors, and subsequent bonâ fide purchasers for value without express or implied notice of the gift, or in the case of a gift of that which one does not own, the transfer cannot operate to the extent of defrauding one whose right is thus justly paramount to that of the donee ; and such persons, under suitable limitations, may impeach the gift accordingly. That which underlies this whole doctrine of revocation of gifts, against the mutual consent of the parties thereto, is that one who suffers wrong in respect of his own property because of the gift is allowed to impeach the transfer.

<sup>1</sup> See Lerow v. Wilmarth, 9 Allen, 382.

<sup>2</sup> Beall v. McGehee, 57 Ala. 438 ; Powell v. Eckler, 96 Mich. 538.

---

CHAPTER IV.

QUALIFIED OR CONDITIONAL GIFTS INTER VIVOS.

§ 126. Gifts may be under Reservation, etc., instead of Absolute.—In the foregoing pages the subject of gift has been considered in the sense of absolute and simple gifts between man and man. But gifts may be, and frequently are, bestowed with some condition or reservation imposed by the giver; in which case the transfer is sometimes to be upheld as a qualified gift, and sometimes fails altogether, according to circumstances. A few words, then, as to these qualified gifts.

§ 127. Successive Expectant Interests by Way of Gift.—We have elsewhere shown that, in modern times, expectant interests are sustained in personal to much the same extent as in real property; that such interests may now be created by deeds of trust, and not by will only; that, while perishable chattels constitute a necessary exception to this rule, those of the more durable sort, and especially capital invested in incorporeals, like stock, bonds, and mortgages, may be limited over by way of remainder, some intermediate party receiving the income as a particular interest.<sup>1</sup> We have shown, too, that every interest in personal property, which is provided to take effect in futuro, is of an indestructible nature, and will take effect in its own proper turn, so long as there has been no violation of the rule against perpetuities.<sup>2</sup> Nor, as we have seen, is the rule an invariable one, that the property shall be bestowed to trustees named; inasmuch as equity reluctantly suffers any trust to fail for want of a trustee, and will, under suitable circumstances consistently with the intent of the transfer, compel the party in possession to execute it faithfully.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 135-140.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 152.

A gift of personal property may therefore be made inter vivos in trust, for specified objects or to specified parties ; for beneficial enjoyment in succession, or under various qualifications. These are elementary features of the voluntary settlements so common in English practice, but comparatively rare in our own. And common prudence suggests that any trust of personalty inter vivos which contemplates long delay before the vesting of the remainder, a succession of expectant interests, or peculiar limitations in the gift, should be expressed by some formal instrument in writing, with the qualifications clearly set forth. Yet trusts of a simple character are sometimes attached to gifts by word of mouth at the time of delivery, and these the courts will sustain on proof of mutual intention.<sup>2</sup>

§ 128. Gift in the Alternative ; Conditions Precedent and Subsequent. — A gift may be made in the alternative, or so as to put the donee to his choice ; in which case such choice must be made by him before delivery and acceptance can take effect.<sup>3</sup> And as to conditions in general, the usual rules would apply. Thus, any lawful condition precedent imposed by the giver cannot be repudiated by the donee ; nor will the latter's title vest until he has performed the condition.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, where a father gave his grown daughter a calf, provided she would bring it up, and she has brought it up accordingly, the gift becomes complete through compliance

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 139. And see Harper v. Parks, 63 Ga. 705.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, where the father of an illegitimate child delivered to his brother (who afterwards became the executor of his will) promissory notes, under a verbal trust that the amount collected upon them should be appropriated to the child's support and bringing-up, the trust was sustained to that extent. And the child having died before the fund was exhausted for that purpose, it was further held, in accordance with the donor's obvious intent, that the residue did not belong to the child's estate. Marston v. Marston, 1 Fost. 491. And see Brummet v. Barber, 2 Hill (S. C.), 543.

<sup>3</sup> Brink v. Gould, 7 Lans. 425.

<sup>4</sup> Berry v. Berry, 31 Iowa, 415 ; The Lucy Ann, 23 Law Rep. 545 ; Eskridge v. Farrar, 30 La. Ann. 718.

with the condition.<sup>1</sup> If the condition of the gift fails, the thing may, as a rule, be recovered either from the donee or his transferee.<sup>2</sup> And it is an equity rule, though put in practice as to bequests rather than gifts, that where there is an absolute gift with some illegal condition or limitation annexed, the limitation fails, and the donee may retain the whole.<sup>3</sup>

§ 129. Gift with Resulting Trust in Donor's Favor.—An implied resulting trust, in the donor's favor, arises in equity where personal property which is transferred by way of gift purports to have been made upon trust, and yet no distinct use or trust is stated. Here the question of title is, to be sure, open to proof; but the onus is on the donee to prove that a beneficial gift to himself was intended, otherwise the gift must fail.<sup>4</sup>

But whenever a transfer of personal property is made from parent to child, with no declared trusts, the presumption is, that an absolute, not a qualified, gift was intended.<sup>5</sup> And, leaving family settlements out of view, the presumption is doubtless a general one, if the circumstances show a gift at all, that this gift was designed as absolute; for chattel qualifications or reservations are not to be favored, and should only subsist on proof, as exceptions to the rule of simple transfer. And where no circumstances exist for raising a resulting trust by implication, a transfer once perfected will be regarded as a beneficial gift.<sup>6</sup> So, too, where there is an absolute, and, to all appearances, a beneficial gift, with an ineffectual or partial trust ingrafted on it, the property, or so much as is unexhausted by the partial trust, will remain in the donee.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Martrick v. Linfield, 21 Pick. 325.

<sup>2</sup> Eskridge v. Farrar, 30 La Ann. 718.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Spence Equity, 23, 80, 229; Smith's Equity Manual, 157; Crow v. Bell, 2 Brev. 140. And see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 560; 2 Redf. Wills, 294 et seq. As to legacies, the rule seems the same, whether the condition be precedent or subsequent; but qu. whether a gift inter vivos can take effect if the illegal condition be a condition precedent.

<sup>4</sup> Story Eq. Jur. §§ 1197, 1199; 2 Spence Eq. 80; Briggs v. Penny, 3 Mac. & G. 546.

<sup>5</sup> Hepworth v. Hepworth, L. R. 11 Eq. 10; Sayre v. Hughes, L. R. 5 Eq. 376; Whitfield v. Whitfield, 40 Miss. 352.

<sup>6</sup> Story Eq. Jur. §§ 1197, 1199.

<sup>7</sup> 2 Spence, 23, 80; Smith Equity, 157.

§ 130. Gift subject to Donee's Discretion.—A gift may be made subject to the donee's discretion. Here, if the discretion conferred be so large as to practically confer dominion, the gift is to be regarded an absolute, not a qualified one; as where a gift is made with an uncontrolled power in the donee to bestow the property upon such persons and for such purposes as he shall see fit. On the other hand, if the donee's discretion is limited to certain general purposes designated by the donor, though they may be too general to be enforced, the gift cannot be regarded as absolute to the donee.<sup>1</sup>

§ 131. How far the Donor may give under Reservations in his own Favor.—Where the gift is made subject to certain qualifications or reservations to the donor himself, it is not always easy to determine with precision whether there has been a valid gift or not. Doubtless, the true principle is, that the donor should have parted with all dominion over the property to the donee; and that, thus much being accomplished, he may yet reserve some right or interest to himself not inconsistent with the immediate vesting of a beneficial title to the property in the donee; but, on the other hand, that any reservation which in effect takes back all that was given, or postpones the vesting of title to the future, is no gift at all. Any lawful condition precedent would be, before fulfilment, an obstacle, of course, to the vesting of the gift; but in such case, the donee could proceed to fulfil the condition and make his title complete; nor would it be out of place for the donor to impose some condition subsequent, on the happening of which the title, in whole or in part, to the property or its proceeds or income, should revert to himself. But in the present lax state of transfer requirements, the difficulty is to determine what is and what is not a consistent reservation.

Qualifications or reservations on a donor's behalf relate frequently to the increase, use, or income of the property bestowed. Any gift of chattels, which expressly reserves the free use and custody of the property to the donor, for a certain period, or (as commonly appears in the cases which the courts have had occasion to pass upon) as long as the donor shall live, is ineffectual.<sup>1</sup> This doctrine we conceive to be universal, as founded in common reason;<sup>2</sup> for what does such a mock transfer amount to beyond a promise to give in the future? The owner is seeking to make another grateful for that which he wants to keep beneficially still to himself; and the result must be a drawn battle between generosity and selfishness, leaving the situation much as before. And yet there may be a present gift of the corpus with valid reservation of increase or usufruct under certain circumstances. Thus, the gift of a mare, with the stipulation that if she should prove to be with foal, the offspring should be the donor's, is a gift with a perfectly valid reservation to the giver; for such a reservation is not inconsistent with a present and complete beneficial interest in the mare in the donee.<sup>3</sup> One might give, perhaps, reserving to himself part of the proceeds or income for life; or he might annex to the gift some provision of benefit or support for himself; especially if the gift were of a considerable part of his whole property.<sup>4</sup> And so, too, one might give away only the use or income of a thing, and not the thing itself; though this would be, logically speaking, a loan, rather than a gift. If the giver delivers to a third party in trust for the successive benefits of himself and his donee the trust may receive some support in equity.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Spence, 199, 225; Smith Equity, 158.

Still less effectual should be a gift which contemplates not only the reservation of present enjoyment, but the right of disposing besides, leaving only the future residue undisposed of to the donee. Thus, the assignment of a certificate of deposit by way of gift to a party in trust for the donor's son, is of no avail when coupled with a reservation to the donor of the

<sup>1</sup> Lance v. Lance, 5 Jones L. 413; Pitts v. Mangum, 2 Bailey, 588; Withers v. Weaver, 10 Penn. St. 391. But see equity doctrine of Green v. Tulane, 52 N. J. Eq. 169, and cases cited; Hope v. Hutchins, 9 Gill & J. 77; § 86.

<sup>2</sup> That donations are invalid under the civil code of Louisiana, when the usufruct of the property donated is reserved to the donor, see Tillman v. Mosely, 14 La. Ann. 710.

<sup>3</sup> Wolf v. Esteb, 7 Ind. 448.

<sup>4</sup> Hackett v. Moxley, 65 Vt. 71; 11 Penn. Co. Ct. 243.

jus disponendi and beneficial enjoyment to himself for life, the residue only to be paid at his death to the son.<sup>1</sup> And there are numerous decided cases of transfers which, from a certain standpoint, resemble gifts causâ mortis more than gifts inter vivos, but which certainly fail as gifts under the latter designation, because the purpose manifested by the giver is to retain the present dominion, subject only to the future contingency of his death.<sup>2</sup>

§ 132. The Same Subject. — On the other hand, there are numerous instances in which certain reservations annexed to a gift by the donor have been deemed quite consistent with the purpose of gratuitous transfer. Thus, there may be a gift, notwithstanding the donor reserves the right to borrow, or receive some kind of personal profit out of the transfer.<sup>3</sup> As in the instance of a gift of money, with the reservation of a sum by way of interest.<sup>4</sup> And where a man gives money to his betrothed for her wedding preparations, there is an implied condition that the gift fails if she refuses to marry.<sup>5</sup> And delivery of a thing may be made with an intended transfer of title only upon some contingency which never happens; thus leaving the possessor a bailee and not a full donee.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Withers v. Weaver, 10 Penn. St. 391.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, if one going to the seat of war as a soldier, or setting off upon some hazardous journey, hands personal property to a friend, to belong to the latter, or by him to be delivered to some third person, if the giver never returns, but otherwise to be reclaimed by the giver, — here is no valid gift inter vivos; for the property is taken under a trust for the donor himself, whose real purpose is clearly to retain the dominion while he lives. Walden v. Dixon, 5 Monr. 170; Trow v. Shannon, 78 N. Y. 446; Linsenbigler v. Gourley, 56 Penn. St. 166; Irish v. Nutting, 47 Barb. 370; Smith v. Dorsey, 38 Ind. 451. See Baker v. Williams, 34 Ind. 547. The judicial expression used in some of these decisions is

(and, as it seems to us, inaccurately), that the gift is coupled with a condition, upon the happening of which the owner is to resume possession. If it were a complete gift, with condition subsequent, why should it not vest? See Irish v. Nutting and Walden v. Dixon, supra. As to whether such transactions can be sustained as gifts causâ mortis, see c. 5, infra.

<sup>3</sup> Doty v. Wilson, 47 N. Y. 580; M'Kane v. Bonner, 1 Bailey, 113; High v. Stainback, 1 Stew. 24.

<sup>4</sup> Doty v. Wilson, 47 N. Y. 580. This case does not decide whether such reservation for interest is enforceable, but that the reservation does not invalidate the gift.

<sup>5</sup> Williamson v. Johnson, 62 Vt. 378.

<sup>6</sup> Marston v. Marston, 64 N. H. 146.

For such reservations or conditions appear to have only the effect of making the gift a qualified or partial one, instead of an absolute or full one. The transaction would stand, at all events, were we to regard it as a mutual contract, on very slight consideration, rather than as a pure gift. Some of the latest cases certainly carry the donor's right of reservation very much farther; and to the extent, as it would appear, of not requiring him to totally exclude the power or means of resuming possession.<sup>1</sup>

§ 133. Gift for One's Own Beneficial Use cannot exclude One's Creditors.—Personal property, under the operation of ancient acts and our modern statutes against fraudulent conveyances, cannot be conveyed in trust for the donor's own use, so as to avoid the demands of his creditors, and yet enable him to enjoy it as his own.<sup>2</sup> Nor can a donor bestow chattels upon another so that the latter shall have the beneficial use, and, at the same time, defy his creditors; but, in order to exclude creditors, the property should be expressly given upon some limitation over in the contingency of the donee's bankruptcy or insolvency, thereby determining such donee's interest, and carrying the gift over to some one else.<sup>3</sup>

§ 134. How to determine whether Gift is Qualified or Absolute.—In determining whether or not any qualification was annexed to the gift, the transaction is to be viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances. And if a deed of gift or other writing be relied upon, the different expressions therein contained are to be construed together for gathering the donor's full intent. It matters not that the gift is first made in absolute terms, and the language of condition or reservation follows subsequently; for if from the construction of the whole instrument there appears to be a condition or reservation, consistent with the purpose of giving, the transfer stands as a qualified and not as an absolute gift.<sup>1</sup> Any gift which is qualified for some particular use or purpose must be applied accordingly, and neither trustee nor beneficiary should divert it.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As in a Massachusetts case, where a transfer on trust was upheld as a qualified gift, notwithstanding the donor had expressly retained a right to modify the uses and revoke the trust,—a right of which, however, he never availed himself. Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227. And see Cooper v. Burr, 45 Barb. 9. On equity principle it would appear that a power of revocation is quite consistent with the creation of a valid trust, and does not affect the legal title to the property. This rule is sometimes asserted as to voluntary settlements. 1 Perry Trusts, 2d ed. § 102.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, §§ 117–120; Bump Fraud. Conv., Appx., showing that English and American legislation is quite explicit on this point; 3 Co. 80.

<sup>3</sup> Mebane v. Mebane, 4 Ired. Eq. 131; Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 66. But a gift of property may be made to B. on condition that specified debts of A. shall be paid from the proceeds; and in such case, if the gift were originally valid and not fraudulent as against the donor's creditors (upon which point see c. preceding), the unspecified creditors can assert no claim upon the fund. Riegel v. Wooley, 81* Penn. St. 227.

---

CHAPTER V.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; PRELIMINARIES.

§ 135. Gift Causâ Mortis; its Nature; Definition.—The gift inter vivos, or ordinary gift, already described, differs from that which now remains to be considered, in this very marked respect,—that it is the pure act of the parties themselves, with the manifest intention, on the part of the donor, to divest himself at once, absolutely or conditionally, of a title which he might have longer retained, and with a delivery, either by way of trust or directly to the donee, for the latter's benefit; whereas the gift causâ mortis is executed in view of death, and with the expectation of being parted from one's worldly goods altogether. Hence the latter transaction, instead of being a merely gratuitous transfer as between two parties, adds death as a necessary party, and amounts, in the light of the donor's intent, to little more than a designation of the person who shall take the property when his own term of beneficial enjoyment must needs expire. Yet this kind of transfer, though hardly to be deemed free, willing, and generous, is a gift, and in many respects is subject to the same rules as ordinary gifts; but, at the same time, akin to legacies, and with decided testamentary features. Some of the gifts inter vivos already considered are found to have been made when death was near in fact; but expected death made no ingredient of the transfer.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Knott v. Hogan, 4 Met. (Ky.) 99; Pitts v. Mangum, 2 Bailey, 588. tract for re-delivery "whenever called for" cannot be an absolute

<sup>2</sup> Delivery upon a written con- gift. Selleck v. Selleck, 107 Ill. 389.

The most appropriate definition of a gift causâ mortis, at our law, seems to be, according to the tenor of the decisions, that it is a gift of personal property, made by a party in the expectation of death then imminent, and upon the essential condition that the property shall belong fully to the donee in case the donor dies as anticipated, leaving the donee surviving him, and the gift is not meantime revoked, but not otherwise.<sup>2</sup> There is difficulty, however, in framing an exact and comprehensive definition, from the discrepancies which have developed between the common and civil law on the subject,

<sup>1</sup> See Gilligan v. Lord, 51 Conn. 562.

<sup>2</sup> A gift causâ mortis is defined in Bouvier's Dict. as one made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another, the possession of any personal goods, to keep as his own in case of the donor's decease. This definition comes from Blackstone. See 2 Bl. Com. 514. Woodward, J., in Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59, says: "Donatio causâ mortis is a gift of a chattel made by a person in his last illness, or in periculo mortis, subject to the implied conditions that if the donor recover, or if the donee die first, the gift shall be void;" and this is substantially the definition formerly given by Tilghman, C. J., of Pennsylvania, which was later criticised by Gibson, C. J., in Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 22, who, in his turn, is overthrown by this latest decision. Judge Redfield's definition is that of "a gift of personal estate, made in prospect of death at no very remote period, and which is dependent upon the condition of death occurring substantially as expected by the donor, and that the same be not revoked before death." 3 Redf. Wills, 2d ed. 322. Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Story, 755, says, that to constitute a donation causâ mortis there must be a transfer of property in expectation of death from an existing illness dependent on the condition of death resulting therefrom.

The chief difficulties found in reducing the body of our decisions to a concise definition appear to be these: (1st) that the essential conditions to such gifts are not always clearly seen; (2d) that uncertainty has always prevailed as to how far the gift must be in expectation of death. As much of the confusion grows out of decided differences between our English and American gifts causâ mortis and the old donatio causâ mortis of the Romans, it would be better for our courts to designate these transfers as gifts and not donations, and thus aid in working clear of all attempts to borrow an English definition from the Institutes of Justinian.

and a corresponding want of uniformity in our modern local decisions; the regret being sometimes expressed that such anomalous transfers were ever admitted into our jurisprudence at all.

§ 136. Origin and History of Gifts Causâ Mortis.— Yet so simple and natural are these death-bed gifts, accompanied as they usually are with the formalities of corporeal delivery which must have prevailed from an early period of history, that we may well believe this mode of transfer far antedated the solemn testamentary dispositions which belong to a more enlightened age of jurisprudence, when the facilities for reading and writing are multiplied, learning flourishes, and property law has taken a strong root. Instances of gifts causâ mortis are found among the traditions of savage tribes, and in the earliest records of authentic history; and the student of the oldest Greek classical poems becomes readily familiar with them.<sup>1</sup> Testamentary bequests in an unlettered age could hardly have been made, in fact, in any other manner.

Our own law on the subject has been traced back more immediately to the Roman jurisprudence, whose doctrines we have in the main adopted, but with some important qualifications. The equity courts of England took such gifts early under their special protection, our first reported cases being decided in chancery about 1710.<sup>2</sup> In 1751 Lord Hardwicke reviewed the subject at length, and traced for the first time in English judicial history the vital connection between the common and civil law of such transfers. It would appear that Bracton and Swinburne, of the early writers, had made the civil law of donations, as laid down in the Institutes, somewhat familiar to the English lawyers; and that this kind of gift was not altogether new in practice even at that early period. But the clear-headed Chancellor, referring to a description of these Roman gifts in Swinburne, since admitted to be inaccurate, as consisting of three several kinds, showed here a determination to found an independent English law of gifts causâ mortis; they were not, he said, to be allowed in England farther than the civil law on that head had been received and allowed. And admitting that the civil law might sometimes dispense with delivery in gifts of this description, he laid down the English rule as one which required delivery throughout. "The consequence is," he says, "that by the civil law, as received and allowed in England, and consequently by the law of England, tradition or delivery is necessary to make a good donation mortis causâ."<sup>1</sup> So this mode of transfer came into our law with the gift qualities quite prominent.

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Bl. Com. 514. Blackstone thinks the civilians borrowed the law of gifts causâ mortis from the Greeks. And in his note ib., instances of such donations are referred to, in the Odyssey, b. 17, v. 78, from Telemachus to Piræus, and from Hercules, in the Alcestis of Euripides, v. 1020. But such gifts were probably made much earlier. See Gen. xlviii. 22; Plutarch's Solon; Schoul. Wills, § 6. See also author's article Law Quarterly Review (English), October, 1886.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514; Jones v. Selby, Prec. in Ch. 300; 2 Kent Com. 445. And see Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404; Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 440. Kent takes Jones v. Selby, supra (A.D. 1710), as the earliest English case. But in 1708, Hedges v. Hedges (Prec. in Ch. 269) was decided, wherein the Lord Chancellor, though not passing upon the doctrine specially, was led to point out the difference between a legacy and donatio causâ mortis, in accordance with a rule already admitted to exist.

§ 137. Gifts Causâ Mortis contrasted with Ordinary Gifts, Legacies, etc. It might not be easy to say with precision whether a gift causâ mortis is an imperfect gift, to take effect only on a condition precedent; or a vested gift, defeasible on subsequent conditions: it appears to be regarded now in the one aspect, and now in the other; but the latter aspect is the better one.<sup>2</sup> At all events, such gifts are distinguishable on vel si eum donationis pœnituisset, aut prior decesserit is cui donatum sit."

<sup>1</sup> Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 436. How far delivery is still to be deemed essential is considered, post. The correctness of the following Latin definition, and the inaccuracy of Swinburne, pt. 1, § 7, pl. 2, in setting forth three species of donations, is noticed by Lord Loughborough in Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 119. This Latin definition is from the Institutes of Justinian, lib. ii. tit. § 1: "Mortis causâ donatio est, quæ propter mortis fit suspicionem; cum quis ita donat ut si quid humanitûs ei contigisset, haberet is, qui accipit; sin autem supervixisset is, qui donabit, reciperet;

<sup>2</sup> See Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602. A gift causâ mortis must be completely executed, precisely as required in the case of gifts inter vivos, subject to be divested by the happening of any of the conditions revocable; that is, upon actual revocation by the donor, or by the donor's surviving the apprehended peril, or outliving the donee, or by the occurrence of a deficiency of assets necessary to pay the debts of the deceased donor. These conditions are the only qualifications that distinguish gifts principles from legacies. For that title which passes on delivery is so far perfected in the donee before the donor's death, that the property does not become liable to contribution with legacies in case the assets prove insufficient for the settlement of debts, but is only subject to creditors on the broader principle that perfected gifts must not prevail to the extent of defrauding persons with prior rights.<sup>1</sup> Nor, upon a like reasoning, can the requirements of the statutes of wills, regarding formalities of execution and probate, the appointment of a legal representative, or the common incidents of administration, have any application to this class of transfers. The will which gives a legacy, too, may have been made long before the testator apprehended death; but the gift causâ mortis springs out of the peril as really apprehended.

On the other hand, a gift causâ mortis, even after passing the formalities of delivery, differs from gifts inter vivos at our law, not only in setting up the condition of death, but in further being subject to revocation by the donor himself, and requiring that the donee actually survive him. Kent says that it was a disputed point with the Roman civilians whether such donations resembled a proper gift or a legacy; but that the correct opinion finally established was, that while a gift was irrevocable, a gift causâ mortis was conditional and revocable and of a testamentary character, and made in apprehension of death.<sup>2</sup> In the early opinion of the English chancery courts, the gift causâ mortis was regarded as a mere testamentary disposition.<sup>3</sup> Blackstone has ranked these transfers, together with legacies, under title by will and administration; and our later elementary writers on these subjects usually treat of gifts causâ mortis in the same connection.<sup>4</sup>

§ 138. The Same Subject. — The truth is, that gifts causâ mortis occupy a middle ground between ordinary gifts and

mortis causâ and inter vivos. Mr. Justice Matthews, ib. 609.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 448, n.; Marshall v. Berry, 13 Allen, 43, 46; Bouv. Dict. "Gifts;" Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517. And see supra, § 113 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 444.

<sup>3</sup> See Jones v. Selby, Prec. in Ch. 300 (A.D. 1710).

<sup>4</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514; 1 Wms. Ex'rs, pt. 2, bk. 2, ch. 2, § 4; 3 Redf. Wills, 2d ed. 322 et seq.

legacies; in some respects they partake of the nature of a contract transaction, in others they are testamentary. And so was it with the Roman donation. The civilians have pointed out no less than eight points of similarity which such donations bore to legacies, and four points in which they were quite dissimilar, in some of which respects the gift causâ mortis of our law presents a parallel.<sup>1</sup> Nor have our writers and the courts failed to enlarge upon the particulars which on the one hand clearly distinguish such transfers from legacies, and, on the other, from gifts inter vivos.<sup>2</sup> In no respect is the gift causâ mortis so closely allied to the former species of property as in the incomplete, ambulatory, revocable character of the transfer while the donor lives; while its chief characteristic as a gift at English and American law must be seen in the delivery formalities which attend its due execution.

Whatever is designed to take effect as a gift causâ mortis must be carefully distinguished from intended testamentary dispositions. Thus, if a person, with a view to approaching death, should make a will which fails of complete execution under the statute, this abortive testamentary act cannot be construed into a valid gift causâ mortis.<sup>3</sup> For the formalities attending a will are one thing, and the formalities of a gift causâ mortis quite another. Nor can instruments in writing utterly wanting the mutual formalities and the binding consideration which should attend contracts be sustained as enforceable contracts after the death of the party executing, when the design was manifestly that of making a voluntary gift to take effect after death.<sup>4</sup> Any promise to give, which

<sup>1</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1072.

<sup>2</sup> In 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 781, the differences are thus pointed out: I. Unlike a legacy, because (1) probate is unnecessary; (2) executor's assent is unnecessary. II. Unlike a gift inter vivos, because (1) it is revocable under circumstances; (2) it may be made to donor's wife; (3) it is liable to legacy duty; (4) it is liable to debts of testator on deficiency of assets. But this analysis is far from satisfactory.

<sup>3</sup> Miller v. Jeffress, 4 Gratt. 472; Stone v. Gerrish, 1 Allen, 175; Grattan v. Appleton, 3 Story, 755; Mechling's Appeal, 2 Grant Cas. 157; Hamor v. Moore, 8 Ohio St. 239.

<sup>4</sup> Stone v. Gerrish, 1 Allen, 175; Hamor v. Moore, 8 Ohio St. 239. In Stone v. Gerrish a person executed and delivered an instrument under is meant to take effect only after the decease of the party promising, and is unaccompanied by that mode of delivery recognized in gifts causâ mortis, must be regarded as nudum pactum and unenforceable; unless some legally binding consideration interposed may support it as a contract, or a solemn execution bring it up to the footing of a will.<sup>1</sup>

So, too, should an intended gift causâ mortis be distinguished from that which was meant to be a gift inter vivos. For the requisities of these gifts and the consequences of a transfer are not identical, and circumstances which could not affect the one might utterly invalidate the other. Thus, one might make a gift which if inter vivos would be irrevocable, but if causâ mortis might be revoked. As controversies of this character will frequently arise after a donor's death, the formalities in either case being usually slight, it is often hard to say to which class, upon defects presented, the gift should be appropriately referred; but where delivery was made under such near approach of death as consists with the supposition that the giver contemplated it, a gift causâ mortis will be presumed rather than the ordinary gift inter vivos.<sup>2</sup> Under such circumstances the giver need not expressly declare that his gift is accompanied by the condition of death from the existing peril, for the law will infer it for him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 139. Gift Causâ Mortis; distinguished from a Contract or Transfer upon Consideration. — A gift causâ mortis is, like any other gift, substantially a gratuitous transfer. Nor does gratitude, family affection, or other like motive prompting the donor to its execution render it otherwise. Yet services might be rendered by a party in the expectation of just compensation from the estate, or even upon some distinct understanding that a legacy would be bestowed in return. And seal, purporting to direct his administrator to pay a certain sum to A. The payment directed was by way of gratuity, and the deed was not witnessed by as many persons as the statute required for testamentary writings.

<sup>1</sup> See Frost v. Frost, 33 Vt. 639; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602.

<sup>2</sup> Merchant v. Merchant, 2 Bradf. (N. Y. Surr.) 432; Delmotte v. Taylor, 1 Redf. (N. Y. Surr.) 417; 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 772.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184; Staniland v. Willott, 3 Mac. & G. 674, 675. Aliter, where a gift inter vivos was plainly intended. Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & Cr. 226.

here, once more, the idea of a gratuity should be separated from that of legal and binding consideration, in case a claim is brought against the estate of the deceased party who has received benefits by the party who rendered them. The mortuary gift may fail for informality; not so, however, the mutual contract for recompense. Hence, if a gift causâ mortis were promised, partly from motives of affection and partly upon consideration of services rendered, and the gift failed for want of formality, the question would be not so much what was the amount of the gift per se, as what was the understood amount of recompense.<sup>1</sup>

The transfer of property in one's sickness may be by way of recompense, payment, or sale on sufficient consideration, and not by way of gift at all.<sup>2</sup>

§ 140. General Division of Subject for this and Succeeding Chapters.—The peculiar features of these death-gifts at our law, and the modifications under which the Roman doctrine of donations causâ mortis has been admitted into the jurisprudence of England and America, will further appear in the course of this and the succeeding chapters. The law of gifts causâ mortis will be treated at length under the following heads: (1.) the capacity of parties to the gift; (2.) the property which may be given; (3.) expectation of death; (4.) the method of executing the gift, including delivery; (5.) the effect of execution as between donor and donee, including revocation of the gift; (6.) the effect of execution as to third persons, including the donor's creditors; (7.) qualified gifts causâ mortis; (8.) general policy of such gifts.

§ 141. As to Capacity of Parties to the Gift; Donor's Testamentary or Contract Capacity.—(1.) As to the capacity of parties to the gift. Of the general rules of mental incapacity and fraud as applicable to gifts we have already spoken, the usual standard being that of contracts.<sup>3</sup> But gifts causâ mortis present some singular aspects; and it might be a fair

<sup>1</sup> Frost v. Frost, 33 Vt. 639. Semble that this principle might have availed the claimant in Stone v.
Gerrish, 1 Allen, 175.

<sup>2</sup> McCarty v. Kearnan, 86 Ill.
291.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, §§ 58, 59.

question whether the mental test should not be testamentary rather than contract capacity. By the imperial law of Rome, whoever would make a donation in contemplation of death must have been capable of making a testament; and Ulpian has noted various classes of persons — such as those deaf and dumb, Christian apostates, and so on — who could contract, and yet were disqualified from making a donatio causâ mortis, for want of testamentary capacity.<sup>1</sup>

But as the formalities attending the execution of the Roman donation causâ mortis partook far more of the testamentary character than the corresponding gifts of our law, — certain writings in presence of witnesses being required, — the two cases cannot be deemed quite analogous. Our gifts inter vivos certainly rank with contracts. And while wills are usually made with reference to a general disposition of one's whole estate, real and personal, gifts causâ mortis are still for the most part, and some will say altogether, solitary and exceptional transfers, with the formalities attendant upon gifts inter vivos. And, from another point of view, there is a decided difference between wills and gifts; for a testamentary disposition may be planned and executed whenever the owner of property sees fit to do so in the exercise of a sound and disposing mind and memory; whereas the gift causâ mortis should, properly speaking, be made in the closer contemplation of approaching death, often, too, under circumstances when the mind is little likely to be clear and the will unfettered. Why might it not be said, then, in the absence of positive adjudication, that the test of mental capacity here is essentially that of mental capacity for the gift causâ mortis; and not, as an arbitrary test, either that of testamentary capacity or ordinary contract capacity?

Any such gift so far as it largely diminishes the giver's general estate, or any number of such gifts made contemporaneously to different parties, would seem, then, to call for evidence of that sound and disposing mind capable of appreciating one's full relation to the proper objects of his bounty, which is the usual testamentary test. But otherwise, and especially where some trifling memento is given accompanied by delivery, the test of ordinary gifts or contracts might fairly suffice.<sup>1</sup> That gifts causâ mortis ought under all circumstances to be jealously scrutinized, and set aside without hesitation in every case of doubt, since the opportunities are peculiarly favorable for one in attendance upon a dying man to influence unduly the disposition of his effects, and even to appropriate without permission what one might afterward claim as a gift, the decisions abundantly show.<sup>2</sup> The absence of other persons adversely interested under such circumstances makes it the more incumbent upon the claimant to show the bonâ fides of the transfer.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Pand. 39, 5, 7, § 6; Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1069.

§ 142. The Same Subject.—To confine, however, our discussion more closely to the classes of persons absolutely disqualified by the law, it would appear that, with reference to gifts causâ mortis, the principles which regulate testamentary capacity rather than contract capacity are favored in some of our States, as under the Roman law. But the inclination of the courts in other States is precisely opposite. Thus, in New Hampshire, it is held that the wife's gift causâ mortis is, like her will, valid only by the husband's consent.<sup>4</sup> In Massachusetts, on the other hand, the sweeping language of the married women's acts, which allow the wife to bargain, sell, and convey, and enter into any contracts with reference to her separate property, in the same manner as if she were sole, is held quite sufficient to empower her to make a valid gift causâ mortis, independently of the statute of wills.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See opinion in Crum v. Thornley, 47 Ill. 192.

<sup>2</sup> Shirley v. Whitehead, 1 Ired. Ch. 130; Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166; 19 Ch. D. 603; Thorp v. Amos, 1 Sandf. Ch. 26; supra, § 60. And see post as to delivery.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. The transaction should be scrutinized carefully to ascertain whether it was freely and intelligently performed, because there is much room for fraud and mistake. See Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185. In this case the opinion of the court favors the policy of such gifts more highly than might be elsewhere conceded.

<sup>4</sup> Jones v. Brown, 34 N. H. 439; Sch. Hus. & Wife, §§ 441, 469. See Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517.

<sup>5</sup> Marshall v. Berry, 13 Allen, 43. Says Wells, J., of the gift causâ mortis: "Although it is of a testamentary character in some of its incidents, . . . yet, inasmuch as, by our law, an actual delivery, or some equivalent act, by the donor, in his lifetime, is necessary to its validity,

§ 143. The Same Subject; Other Questions of Capacity as to Parties. — Other questions of capacity have arisen respecting the parties who occupy the marital relation, and their gifts causâ mortis. Thus, the validity of such a gift to the donor's wife has long been set forth by common-law writers, as an incident which quite distinguishes this kind from gifts inter vivos.<sup>1</sup> The incident now survives the distinction; for, doubtless, a gift causâ mortis from husband to wife is as good as before, while such gifts inter vivos are to be deemed no longer inevitably void.<sup>2</sup> Nor, in a case free from fraud or undue influence, does there appear any good reason why a wife may not make her own husband the donee causâ mortis of property belonging to her separate use.<sup>3</sup> Gifts of this character, like those inter vivos, may, of course, be made from parent to child; and so, too, from a child of suitable capacity, acting freely and voluntarily, to his parent.<sup>4</sup>

§ 144. As to the Property given; whether Gift may embrace Donor's Whole Property. — (2.) As to the property which may be given. At the outset, it should be asked whether a gift causâ mortis may embrace the whole of the donor's property.

The Roman law in this respect was changed by legislation from time to time, for the protection of the heir as against excessive dispositions, whether by legacy or gift. By the Twelve Tables, the power of an unlimited disposition had been conceded; and that the heir might not be stripped of his patrimony, the Furian law was enacted (about B.C. 183), which made a thousand asses the maximum that any legatee or donee causâ mortis could take. According to Gaius, this law failed, because a testator with five thousand asses might distribute the whole property among five legatees or donees, we think it must be regarded as, in its essential character, a gift."

<sup>1</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 781; 2 Kent Com. 445; Bouv. Dict. Donatio Mortis Causâ. See Sch. Hus. and Wife, §§ 370, 384, as to the modern rule of gifts inter vivos from husband to wife; also ib. § 441, as to the husband's gift causâ mortis.

<sup>2</sup> Gardner v. Gardner, 20. Wend.

526; Turpin v. Thompson, 2 Met. (Ky.) 420; Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591.

<sup>3</sup> Caldwell v. Renfrew, 33 Vt. 213. And, as to the wife's gift causâ mortis, see further, Lawrence v. Bartlett, 2 Allen, 36; Sch. Hus. and Wife, § 469.

<sup>4</sup> Baxter v. Bailey, 8 B. Monr. 336; Thompson v. Thompson, 12 Tex. 327.

and leave the heir empty-handed. Next came the Voconian law (about B.C. 169), which declared that no such legatee or donee should take more than the heir; but this likewise failed, because the ancestor might distribute the estate among such a multitude of legatees, that the heir's portion would be too small to justify him in undertaking the burden of succession. Finally, the Falcidian law (B.C. 40) was passed, which prohibited giving away, in legacies and donations causâ mortis, more than three-fourths of one's entire estate, whereby at least one-fourth of the property was secured to the heir; and that collar, once slipped on, held fast.<sup>1</sup>

This curious contest between State and citizen, in which the latter, aided no doubt by the cunning of legal advisers, contrived so long to evade the spirit while conforming to the letter of the law, is not without its lesson for modern legislators. Our own statutes appear less solicitous for the heir; but provisions, somewhat resembling those of the Falcidian law, are sometimes introduced into our legislation for the benefit of husband or wife.<sup>2</sup> And, while it would be difficult to say just how large a proportion of one's estate might or might not be bestowed by a gift causâ mortis, independently of positive legislation, the doctrine has been sometimes maintained of late that gifts causâ mortis cannot prevail to the extent of an utter disposition of all the donor's personal property, since the effect might be to set at naught the wholesome provisions of our statutes of wills.<sup>3</sup>

§ 145. The Same Subject. — This is certainly a strong position for general policy; but only tenable in the legal sense on the assumption that it is best to make a final stand against these informal death-bed dispositions, regardless of all precedent. For, as it has been contended, on the other hand, no English or American case can be found up to 1851, where any attempt has been made to limit the operation of a gift causâ mortis on account of the comparative or absolute extent of

<sup>1</sup> Gaius, §§ 224-227.

<sup>2</sup> See Sch. Hus. and Wife, § 464.

<sup>3</sup> Headley v. Kirby, 18 Penn. St.

326. And see Wells, J., in Marshall

v. Berry, 13 Allen, 43; Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 412; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462.

the property disposed of; and if a man of great worldly possessions may hand over, in his last illness, securities to the amount of thousands of dollars, and so far modify his will, it is not easy to say, with our eyes open to the decisions, that an humble laborer, having only a hundred dollars laid by in his strong-box, may not deliver his money as well.<sup>1</sup> And if such a gift of one's whole personal property is void, what exact proportion thereof will be transmissible?

§ 146. The Same Subject; Conflicting Decisions considered.

— But the two modern cases which thus antagonize in principle differed considerably in fact. Both were American cases, and decided at about the same time: the one, in 1851, in Pennsylvania;<sup>2</sup> the other, soon after, in Vermont, in 1852.<sup>3</sup> In the Pennsylvania case, the disposition set up as a gift causâ mortis was to a sister-in-law, as against the next of kin, and consisted of clothing, various articles of jewelry, trunks, teaspoons, a promissory note, and a bank book; all of which a dying woman was claimed to have fully given by merely handing over keys, and saying to this donee, "All that I have is here, and all is yours;" or other words to that effect. The attempt to establish a will utterly disinheriting kindred by little else than a donor's word of mouth could hardly have been more palpable. On the other hand, the Vermont case presented a disposition from husband to wife, which was clearly evidenced by a deed of gift carefully expressed and executed in a most deliberate manner; and there are intimations in the opinion that the delivery was yet more formal. These cases might, perhaps, be reconciled, as concerns the present inquiry, by the suggestion that distinct articles of value and distinct species of personal property, requiring in themselves different modes and acts of delivery, are not to be considered as embraced in one single contemporaneous disposition by way of gift causâ mortis, where the evidence of perfect and deliberate intention on the donor's part, accompanied by suitable delivery, is not conclusive; that, as a general rule, complex dispositions by a gift causâ mortis,

<sup>1</sup> Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591.

<sup>3</sup> Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591.

<sup>2</sup> Headley v. Kirby, 18 Penn. St. 326.

whether of various distinct species of property made all to a single person, or of sundry chattels made among various individuals, on a single occasion, are not to be favored, because too closely resembling informal wills, especially if the effect be to greatly prejudice the rights of widow, husband, and next of kin; and that such involved and sweeping gifts, if sustainable at all, are only so on clear and consistent evidence of a sound and disposing mind and memory in the donor amounting to testamentary capacity, of freedom on his part from fraud and undue influence, considering all the surroundings, and of suitable acts of delivery, applied according to the subject-matter to the several species of property and the several donees. For gifts causâ mortis, if admissible to the extent of disposing of the whole or the greater part of one's personal estate, are accompanied by legal formalities so slight at the best that they call for little favor when they purport to dispose in the mass of that which should either be specifically separated and delivered, or else bestowed by a will duly executed.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In thus intimating the opinion that a gift causâ mortis may be good in some cases, notwithstanding it in effect disposes of all one's personal property, we do not mean to sustain the views of Chief Justice Redfield in Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591 (which presents some peculiar aspects for consideration elsewhere), utterly, and without qualification, as against those very clearly and sensibly expressed in Headley v. Kirby, 18 Penn. St. 326; but rather to reconcile the cases, if possible, hold fairly to the authorities of the past, and treat the question as one which has not yet been passed upon by the courts in all its bearings. One great objection to such gifts is, that where they amount to a full disposition they are apt to be complex, as was certainly true of Headley v. Kirby, which we believe to have been rightly decided on its general merits. But is a gift causâ mortis of the whole necessarily more complex than of part of one's property? A man owning a large fortune might give away mortgages, notes, bonds, and furniture, amounting to perhaps a quarter part of what he owned, and yet the gift would be quite as complex as in that before the Pennsylvania court. On the other hand, if the dying woman had there deliberately handed her clothing to A., her jewelry to B., the promissory note to C., and so on, with appropriate acts of delivery in each case, on what principle could it have been asserted that A., B., C., and the rest had not each a valid gift causâ mortis? or that A.'s gift, B.'s gift, or C.'s gift would have been valid, if nothing had been given to D.? or if, again, the donor had held back the teaspoons, and given the rest of the things, one by one, to A.?

But as to the general impolicy of sustaining these extensive dispositions, or perhaps gifts causâ mortis

The fact, then, that such gift constitutes the principal part, or, indeed, almost the whole, of the donor's property, will not, it is held, necessarily prevent it from taking effect.<sup>1</sup> Only perhaps the improvidence or injustice of some gift of this kind might be a strong circumstance tending to show undue influence exerted or a want of mental capacity in the giver;<sup>2</sup> and a delivery suitable to the character of each item of property should be made.

§ 147. Gift Causâ Mortis is confined to Personal Property; Corporeal and Incorporeal Kinds included.—A gift causâ mortis is confined to personal property, and, from the nature of the transfer, cannot extend to real estate.<sup>3</sup> It embraces, of course, every species of corporeal personal property, — such as furniture, books, money, gold-dust, and the like.<sup>4</sup> But, as to incorporeal personal property, the law has undergone changes. Originally a gift causâ mortis could only be made of chattels which passed by manual delivery; then bank-notes, lottery-at all, without the solemnities attending wills, that is a different matter. And on this issue the language of the court in Headley v. Kirby is well worth quoting: "The gift in the case before us professes to embrace all the donor's property, and to be made in prospect of death, and is therefore a will, if it receive the sanction of law. . . . This case is so entirely peculiar in its character, that if we take our statute of wills as the general rule for such dispositions, as we are bound to do, and treat the cases of donationes mortis causâ as exceptions which are not to be extended by way of analogy, then we are clear of all embarrassment as to the principle on which the case is to be decided. It is not pretended that any gift like this has ever been held good; and it may be safely declared that no mere gift made in prospect of death, and professing to pass all one's property to another, to take effect after death, can be valid under our statute of wills, no matter what delivery may have accompanied it. If this is not true, then it is plain that the statute of wills, so far as it is intended to exclude all modes of disposing of personal property at death, which it does not provide for, is repealed by the decisions of the courts." And see § 197, post.

<sup>1</sup> Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59. This case tends to limit the doctrine of Headley v. Kirby, 18 Penn. St. 326. And see 158 Mass. 592; Thomas v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1; Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 481; Hatch v. Atkinson, 66 Me. 327.

<sup>2</sup> See § 60 a.

<sup>3</sup> Bouv. Dict. Donatio Mortis Causâ; Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591. But one might make a gift or transfer inter vivos of real estate by a suitable voluntary conveyance; and real and personal property may be given together inter vivos. Gilligan v. Lord, 51 Conn. 562.

<sup>4</sup> Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59.

tickets, and notes regularly indorsed or payable to bearer, were added by the decisions; still later, on the principle of assignment, bonds and choses in action generally; and at length, consistently with the liberal doctrines of equity elsewhere noticed, various kinds of incorporeal chattels, where the written muniment of title was passed over with the intention of transfer, though without full legal formalities,—as in the case of bills, notes, certificates of deposit, or bonded securities wanting a legal indorsement.<sup>1</sup> It would be useless to attempt to reconcile the earlier and later authorities in this respect; for in the matter of delivery there has been a steady progression in favor of aiding a donation intent imperfectly executed, whether the gift be inter vivos or causâ mortis.<sup>2</sup>

So great is the change which the influence of equity has wrought in the law of delivery, that a bond or note secured by mortgage, which formerly could not be the subject of a gift causâ mortis at all, is now, by the law both of England and America, held to be transferable in this manner, notwithstanding the non-observance of full formalities.<sup>3</sup> And so may a policy of insurance on the donor's life be given away causâ mortis.<sup>4</sup> Also shares of stock; though not, according to some authorities, without a regular transfer before the donor's death.<sup>5</sup> Also, subject to possible formalities of delivery, a savings-bank deposit;<sup>6</sup> also a banker's certificate of deposit, although purporting to be not transferable.<sup>7</sup> Our <sup>1</sup> Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497; Rankin v. Weguelin, 27 Beav. 309; McConnell v. McConnell, 11 Vt. 290; Southerland v. Southerland, 5 Bush. 591; 2 Kent, 447; Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray, 418, per Shaw, C. J.; Waring v. Edmonds, 11 Md. 424; Lee v. Boak, 11 Gratt. 182; Gardner v. Gardner, 20 Wend. 526; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray, 382; Westerlo v. De Witt, 36 N. Y. 340. But see Overton v. Sawyer, 7 Jones L. 6.

<sup>2</sup> See cases as to delivery, supra, c. 2, and infra, c. 6; Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602.

<sup>3</sup> Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497, overruling s. c. 1 Sim. & Stu. 239; Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 410; Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 351; Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray, 418; Kiff v. Weaver, 94 N. C. 274. Where the donor delivers the mortgage but not the bond, a perplexing question may arise. 75 Hun, 541.

<sup>4</sup> Witt v. Amis, 1 B. & S. 109.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Lambert v. Overton, 13 W. R. 227; Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474; with supra, c. 2; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17; Morse v. Mes-ton, 152 Mass. 5.

<sup>6</sup> See next c.

<sup>7</sup> Dillon, Re, 44 Ch. Div. 76.

modern rule, in these gifts as well as those inter vivos, tends decidedly to support delivery with suitable intent and no further formalities, in the case of incorporeal property with its written muniment.

The obligation of the donee himself is, like that of any stranger, a suitable object of gift; such gift amounting to a forgiveness of the gift.<sup>1</sup> In short, any chose in action, or chattel incorporeal, short of the donor's own obligation, appears now capable of being made the subject of a gift causâ mortis.<sup>2</sup>

§ 148. Exception as to Gift of Donor's own Promissory Note, Contract, etc. — But this limit is placed to gifts causâ mortis of incorporeal chattels, that the donor's own promise, whether in the shape of promissory note, unaccepted bill, or contract generally, given in the prospect of approaching death, and only to take effect at or after his death, is not a valid gift causâ mortis. This point is at last settled by numerous authorities.<sup>3</sup> For the practical result of sustaining such an executory contract would be to enable a dying man to make informal disposition of his estate by creating in favor of his friends, at pleasure, debts, without a shadow of legal consideration to uphold them. Nor is a draft or check on his own funds, unaccepted and unhonored by the person or depositary upon whom it is drawn, any more than would be a delivery-order upon an agent who failed to deliver before his authority was revoked, a valid gift causâ mortis; and this, no matter what bank book or other voucher may have accompanied such draft or check as a mere accessory and not the principal thing.<sup>4</sup> In other words, the only kind of incorporeal prop-

<sup>1</sup> Lee v. Boak, 11 Gratt. 182; Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517; Darland v. Taylor, 52 Iowa, 503; Gardner v. Gardner, 22 Wend. 525; c. 6, post.

<sup>2</sup> As the gist of the rule lies in the capability of the thing for a complete delivery by way of gift, we shall recur to this subject more in detail under methods of execution.

<sup>3</sup> Flint v. Pattee, 33 N. H. 520; Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198; Raymond v. Sellick, 10 Conn. 480; Brown v. Moore, 3 Head, 671; Smith v. Kittridge, 21 Vt. 238; Starr v. Starr, 9 Ohio St. 74; Harris v. Clark, 3 Comst. 93, overruling Wright v. Wright, 1 Cow. 598; Gough v. Tindon, 8 E. L. & Eq. 507; Holmes v. Roper, 141 N. Y. 64.

<sup>4</sup> Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282; Beak's Estate, In re, L. R. 13 Eq. 489; Harris v. Clark, 3 Comst. 92; McKenzie v. Downing, 25 Ga. 669.

erty which a donor may thus give away is that which subsists at his death, as in some sense a third party's obligation to the donee, or perhaps the donee's own obligation, which the donor meant to surrender, but never the mere obligation of the donor himself.<sup>1</sup> Nor is such an intended gift helped in effect because the delivery of his own note or check is entrusted to some third person for such a delivery after death.<sup>2</sup>

§ 149. The Same Subject ; English Cases. — Let us examine this doctrine, with its reasons, somewhat in detail, since the occasion for any such exception to the general rule of gifts causâ mortis is not at first glance apparent. Lord Loughborough, in Tate v. Hilbert, appears to have led the way; deciding that where a person, in his last illness, gave to one donee his promissory note for a sum of money, and to another a check on his banker, payable to bearer, which was not realized before his death, neither gift was good.<sup>3</sup> For the one, he held, was no transfer of property, but a promise ; while the other was meant to take effect presently through an agent whose authority was revoked by the giver's death. Though Lord Loughborough held to old-fashioned views concerning the delivery of negotiable paper, this decision would still be justified, and fairly too, upon these grounds. And to much the same purport is the language of Romilly, M. R., as recently as 1868, in Hewitt v. Kaye, where the principle is more fully elucidated, with references to later

<sup>1</sup> This doctrine has not always prevailed, however. In the early New York case of Wright v. Wright a precisely opposite view was entertained. Wright v. Wright, 1 Cow. 598. But in one State after another that decision has since been questioned, and Harris v. Clark, decided in 1849 by the New York Court of Appeals, upsets it entirely. Harris v. Clark, 3 Comst. 93 ; Flint v. Pattee and other cases cited supra. The English cases now fully establish the same rule ; not, however, without bringing into discredit the early case of Lawson v. Lawson, which sustained as a gift causâ mortis a bill drawn upon a goldsmith by a dying husband, to pay £100 to his wife to buy her mourning, — Lord Loughborough's later suggestion, that the drawing of the bill was in the nature of an appointment, being hardly satisfactory. See Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441, as explained in Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111, 121.

<sup>2</sup> Sanborn v. Sanborn, 62 N. H. 631. See § 176.

<sup>3</sup> Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111. And see Holliday v. Atkinson, 5 B. & C. 501.

English cases : "When a man on his death-bed gives to another an instrument, such as a bond or promissory note, or an I. O. U., he gives a chose in action, and the delivery of the instrument confers upon the donee all the right to the chose in action arising out of the instrument. But a check is nothing more than an order to obtain a certain sum of money, and it makes no difference whether the money is at a banker's or anywhere else. It is an order to deliver the money; and if the order is not acted upon in the lifetime of the person who gives it, it is worth nothing."<sup>1</sup> Here a testatrix had given a check at night, and died in the course of the night, and before the check could be presented for payment. And the same rule as to checks and drafts is reaffirmed in a later case, where a donor in his last illness accompanied the gift by a delivery of the banker's pass book.<sup>2</sup>

§ 150. The Same Subject; American Cases.—Turning to the American decisions, we find this later doctrine asserted with more positiveness; indeed, vigor and breadth of application usually distinguish the American decisions on this whole subject of modern incorporeal gifts from those more tentative and cautious of the English equity courts,—their judges, with an inborn reluctance to cut loose from the old precedents, seeking too often to reconcile the irreconcilable, while ours overturn whatever precedents are in the way, and

<sup>1</sup> Hewitt v. Kaye, L. R. 6 Eq. 198.

<sup>2</sup> Beak v. Beak, L. R. 13 Eq. 489.

We are not to understand the language of Romilly, M. R., above quoted, concerning bonds, promissory notes, and I. O. U.'s, as tending to sustain a donor's own obligations, as distinguished from his checks; for this would be contrary to the current of authorities; it means obligations of third parties, such as constitute assets of the donor. Cf. Hewitt v. Kaye, supra, with Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111; Gough v. Tindon, 8 E. L. & Eq. 507; Holliday v. Atkinson, 5 B. & C. 501. Nor does 1 B. & S. 109, where the delivery of a banker's deposit-note was upheld, militate against the general principle that a donor's own promissory note or bare promise, by whatever writing evidenced, cannot be the subject of his gift causâ mortis. And see Dillon, Re, 44 Ch. Div. 76. So that the latter continues, doubtless, the law of England, although the recent English decisions bear more directly upon the validity of a donor's checks and drafts.

The gift of a check upon a banker payable on so many days' notice, and in fact after the donor's death, is not a good gift causâ mortis. Mead, Re, 15 Ch. D. 651.

press steadily forward. The Massachusetts case of Parish v. Stone is a leading case to the point that a donor's own promissory note, payable to the donee's order, cannot be the subject of a gift causâ mortis; for it was not, in effect, as the court reasoned, a gift of the money represented by the writing. And it made no difference that the donor intended a death-bed gift; nor even that his object was the praiseworthy one of equalizing the distribution of his estate.<sup>1</sup> And the courts of Connecticut and Vermont were prompt in pronouncing against the same dangerous donations.<sup>2</sup> For, as was urged by Judge Waite, as early as 1835, in Raymond v. Sellick, putting the decision on the vantage-ground of public policy, if notes executed by a man in his last illness, and without consideration, were binding upon his estate, a new method would be devised of disposing of estates without the formalities of wills; and serious consequences might follow.<sup>3</sup> In the later Vermont case of Smith v. Kittridge, the court, upon full deliberation, refused to sustain a promise to pay to one's order so much money, "to be paid out of my estate after my decease." For it was in no sense a gift causâ mortis; nor could it be supported as a contract between the parties, or a debt against the testator; the intention of the dying man was to make it a legal claim in another's favor against his estate, on the mere consideration of love and affection, which is not enough to create a valid obligation, either at law or in equity.<sup>4</sup> Later American decisions are to the same effect.<sup>5</sup>

So with a giver's unaccepted checks and drafts, the present drift of the American decisions is equally plain. Harris v. Clark is a leading New York case on this point. A draft was made upon parties in a distant city, who had funds of the donor in their hands; the donee indorsed it, but, before the drawees had accepted, the donor died. The intention being that the gift should take effect only in case of the

<sup>1</sup> Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198. And see Carr v. Silloway, 111 Mass. 24; Warren v. Durfee, 126 Mass. 338.

<sup>2</sup> Raymond v. Sellick, 10 Conn. 480; Holley v. Adams, 16 Vt. 206.

<sup>3</sup> Waite, J., in Raymond v. Sellick, 10 Conn. 480.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Kittridge, 21 Vt. 238.

<sup>5</sup> Holmes v. Roper, 141 N. Y. 64; 41 Ill. App. 659; Sanborn v. Sanborn, 62 N. H. 631.

donor's death, the transaction could not be upheld as an ordinary gift; nor, being a sort of executory promise, would the court sustain it as a gift causâ mortis.<sup>1</sup> The same rule was applied some fifteen years later, in a Michigan case, where one in extremis drew his check upon a bank, with directions to the payee to defray the drawer's funeral expense out of it, and to pay the balance to his heirs. The check had not been accepted at the bank when the drawer died. Says Christianity, J.: "Without acceptance by the bank, or some special undertaking on its part, we do not think the bank could be held liable upon a check, as such, to the payee. There is no privity of contract between the payee and the drawee; and if the money is not paid upon the check, the drawee is only accountable to the drawer."<sup>2</sup>

§ 151. Such Gifts sustained where Drawee accepts the Instrument, etc.—But as to bills of exchange, drafts, checks, and orders generally, acts tantamount to the acceptance of the instrument by the drawee or fundholder give the transaction a new character; and as it might then be said that the agent had completed the required transfer for his principal, or that there was an obligation of a third party, as in a chose actually delivered before the donor's death, or, in other words, that the drawee had become liable as a trustee to carry out the donor's intention. Any such instrument thus accepted before the donor's death, becomes the valid subject of a gift, and goes into effect under the usual conditions.<sup>3</sup> But if such acceptance be not made until after the donor's death, it should not in reason suffice; though there are exceptional instances, as it appears, where the gift would not be suffered to fail through the default of the drawee or third party, when the donor and donee had done all that was needful on their part to enable the gift to take effect.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Harris v. Clark (A.D. 1849), 3 Comst. 93. The principle is, that a check upon a bank account is not of itself an equitable assignment of the fund. Bank of Republic v. Millard, 10 Wall. 152.

<sup>2</sup> Bank v. Williams (A.D. 1865), 13

Mich. 282, 291. See also Trust v. Board of Publication, 8 Lea, 552.

<sup>3</sup> See Harris v. Clark and Bank v. Williams, supra; Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6 Eq. 275; Boutts v. Ellis, 17 Beav. 121; s. c. 4 De G., M. & G. 249.

<sup>4</sup> See Bromley v. Brunton, L. R. 6

What we have said applies, of course, to transfers by way of gift of one's own note, check, or other promise, and not where the instrument is intended to discharge one's legal obligation.<sup>1</sup> And this whole question is discussed with reference to the alleged donee's rights and not as concerning those of a bonâ fide holder for value by transfer of negotiable paper thus improperly issued.

§ 152. As to Expectation of Death; Civil and Common Law Doctrines.—(3.) As to expectation of death. Here has been found some conflict of opinion; but the English and American authorities, on the whole, appear to have settled down to a clear, uniform, and reasonable doctrine. Whatever discrepancy may have existed in the past, is to be attributed mainly to an attempt to conduct the broader analogies of the Roman law into our own jurisprudence. The Institutes of Justinian did not regard it as necessary that the donor should be in imminent danger of death: it was enough if he were moved by the general apprehension of death, as the common lot of humanity. Hence was it said that the intention should be expressed in such gifts; "as that the donor is sick, about to travel, or engage in war, or at a time of epidemic or general pestilence, or on account of the general frailty of human nature."<sup>2</sup> But while motives so liberal might have influenced the donor, the donation, at the

Eq. 275; Boutts v. Ellis, 17 Beav. 121; s. c. 4 De G., M. & G. 249. It is intimated in Harris v. Clark, 3 Comst. 93, that a draft accepted before or after the donor's death would have operated. As concerns acceptance in the latter contingency, this dictum seems to be an incorrect one. See supra, §§ 77, 86, as to gifts inter vivos under similar circumstances, where Green v. Tulane, 52 N. J. Eq. 169 and other cases are found suggesting an idea inter vivos which could hardly avail in a gift causâ mortis. Rolls v. Pearce, 5 Ch. D. 730, favors the idea that if the check has been negotiated during the donor's lifetime, the gift holds good, notwithstanding presentment upon the drawee is not made until after the donor's death. Here the check was drawn by one resident in Italy upon his banker in London, and was deposited by the donee in a foreign bank. See also Beals v. Crowley, 59 Cal. 665.

<sup>1</sup> See Warren v. Durfee, 126 Mass. 338; 108 Mass. 242. The promissory note of a husband given by him causâ mortis to his wife has no such consideration as will sustain the transaction. Whitaker v. Whitaker, 52 N. Y. 368.

<sup>2</sup> See Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1071; Inst. lib. 2, tit. 7.

civil law, became ipso facto void, if the donor was fortunate enough to escape the anticipated danger.<sup>1</sup>

In this last respect we indeed follow the civil law; but, according to the decided weight of authorities, no such wandering and indefinite expectation of death is available for gifts causâ mortis in the law of England and America. This will appear from a rapid review of the authorities.

The early inclination of the English courts was plainly to treat the gift causâ mortis as a strict death-bed disposition. "Last illness" is the expression of the older cases; and in Blackstone this death-bed disposition is spoken of as made by "a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near."<sup>2</sup> In one of the early cases, Eyre, C. B., seems to have gone so far as to declare that there must be positive evidence that the gift was made in the last illness: this, however, is too broad a statement.<sup>3</sup>

"Peril of death" is another expression, favored apparently at a somewhat later period,—this suggesting an enlargement of the old doctrine: that one need not be literally on his death-bed, but might make the gift whenever in extremis; as, for instance, if exposed to death by shipwreck, or an approaching battle. So, too, came into later use such expressions as "expectation of death" or "contemplation of death."<sup>4</sup> But as the idea of such a donation expands, the question presses: Is it the actual circumstance of approaching death, or the donor's own apprehension of death which seems to approach, that shall most truly determine the character and validity of the gift? That the circumstance of approaching death alone is insufficient, a moment's reflection will show. Intention enters as an element into every transaction. And a gift should not be other than of the ordi-

<sup>1</sup> Ib.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514. And see Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184; Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441.

<sup>3</sup> Eyre, C. B., as reported in Blount v. Burrow, 1 Ves. Jr. 546. But this dictum is not found in the other report, 4 Bro. C. C. 72. See 1 Wms. Ex'rs, pt. 2, bk. 2, c. 2, § 4, n.

<sup>4</sup> Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 606, 607; Roper Legacies, 26; 1 Wms. Ex'rs, pt. 2, bk. 2, c. 2, § 4; Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497, 530; Tate v. Leithead, Kay, 658; Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184.

nary kind, if made by a man well, and fearing nothing, though a shot from an assassin's pistol might send him into eternity a moment later.

§ 153. The Same Subject; American Cases.—As the law stood early in this century, there was too much inclination, among eminent jurists, to react, so as to specially favor the donor's apprehension in gifts causâ mortis; and it had become clear by this time that the Roman law contemplated not only one's illness, but his infirmity or old age, or external or anticipated danger, as conditions which admitted of such donations. Hence Chancellor Kent's statement of the law of gifts causâ mortis was loose. "It is essential to them," he says, "that the donor make them in his last illness, and in contemplation and expectation of death, and with reference to their effect after his death;" and he then proceeds to point out the conditions above noticed, under which an apprehension of death might arise, in accordance with the Roman law.<sup>1</sup> A reader might have thus supposed — whether the learned instructor so designed it or not — that either (1) a circumstance, — namely, last illness, — or (2) a general contemplation of death, was, of itself, unaided by the other, enough to clothe a transfer with the incidents of a gift causâ mortis, — a position which is certainly incorrect.

About the time Kent's Commentaries became the recognized standard of American jurisprudence, was decided, in Pennsylvania, the case of Nicholas v. Adams, wherein the law of gifts causâ mortis was ably reviewed by Chief Justice Gibson, and at a period favorable to ranking this among the American leading cases on the subject.<sup>2</sup> Here the issue with the older decisions is fairly met, and the time-honored opinion refuted, that gifts causâ mortis have exclusive reference to death-bed sickness. The definition of Justinian's Institutes, he observes, is, "quæ propter mortis fit suspicionem,"<sup>3</sup> — not a word about sickness. It is indifferent, he proceeds to say, whether the peril of death be induced by sickness, or any other cause. Thus, the peril past, the gift of a soldier or malefactor might be retracted, though made in perfect health, when going to battle or to execution. So far the Chief Justice had reasoned well; but in the next statement he conveyed a misapprehension, which later courts have been put to some pains in rectifying. "A groundless apprehension of death," is his language, "is necessarily as operative to make a gift conditional as if the danger were real." "I would, therefore," he adds, "briefly define a donatio causâ mortis to be a conditional gift, dependent on the contingency of expected death."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 444, 2d and 3d editions. And see Roper Legacies, 26.

<sup>2</sup> Nicholas v. Adams (A.D. 1836), 2 Whart. 17.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 137.

§ 154. The Same Subject.—In a number of late American cases, where the attempt was made to push the doctrine of Nicholas v. Adams to its legitimate consequences, the element of death has been restored by the courts to its proper place. Thus, a soldier going to the front, and with that general foreboding of the uncertainties of life to which an active campaign may expose him, puts a sum of money or some other chattel into the hands of a friend, saying, "I

<sup>1</sup> See remarks by Woodward, J., in Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59, criticising Nicholas v. Adams, supra. It is not so much with regard to the facts on which the court passed in the foregoing case,—for the gift in question had been made only some three weeks before his death, by one laboring under a complication of consumption and paralysis, from which he died,—as in the loose views enunciated by one so eminent as Chief Justice Gibson, concerning the expectation of death essential to a gift causâ mortis, that later American courts have felt compelled to review the decision and pronounce it unsatisfactory. For if the only requisite be that the donor has some vague and groundless apprehension of death in mind at the time of giving, how many gifts inter vivos might afterwards be recalled by the giver, on the plea that a condition had been annexed which failed. Or, if he died at last, how often would a simple resulting trust for the donor have to be turned into a gift causâ mortis by construction, merely because of that general contemplation of death, accompanying the transfer, which prompts any prudent man to sit down and pen his will, while hoping and meaning to enjoy his worldly goods many years longer. The drift of argument in this case was to set up that one may, under a misapprehension of approaching death, or with a general reference to some hazardous exposure, make a gift causâ mortis; and though he recover from that attack, or escape from that peril, and die afterwards from another cause, or in some manner but dimly apprehended as possible when he made the gift, the exit of life shall so relate back to the donor's misapprehension, or imperfect apprehension, as to make the transfer a good one causâ mortis.

give you this ; it is your own in case I never return ;” or, “Give it to A. as hers if I never return ;” or using some other expression of like purport. This comes within the rule of an enlarged peril of death, to be sure. But is any such twilight expectation of death, between dawn and day, enough to base a gift causâ mortis upon ? The soldier may come home safely, or he may die a natural death while away ; the seeds of disease may already be in his system, and the fatal malady that which he would never have contracted in the service ; even if killed, it may be from an accidental discharge of his own gun, or in a railway car, and not necessarily from wounds received in battle, or even from an enemy’s gun. Rightly, then, is it determined that such transfers cannot stand as gifts causâ mortis ; but that the giver should have the particular cause of death clearly at hand, and make his gift with an especial reference to its mortal issue.<sup>1</sup> And the same principle applies where one makes a transfer in contemplation of a hazardous journey.<sup>2</sup>

But an apprehension of approaching death from old age and failing health may, under strong circumstances, justify a gift causâ mortis. A transfer of this kind was sustained in a recent New York case, where the giver, a man about <sup>1</sup> Gourley v. Linsinbigler, 51 Penn. St. 345 ; Dexheimer v. Gautier, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 216 ; Irish v. Nutting, 47 Barb. 370 ; Smith v. Dorsey, 38 Ind. 451 ; Linsinbigler v. Gourley, 56 Penn. St. 166 ; Craig v. Kittredge, 46 N. H. 57. The opinion of the court in Irish v. Nutting, supra, is full and exhaustive. Here it was said, by Bacon, P. J. : “In view of the decisions, and the principle which runs through them all, I think it is impossible to maintain the gift in this case as a donatio mortis causâ. The element of illness, in any degree, does not enter into the case, nor does it come within the category of the conceived near approach of death from an impending or apprehended peril.”

So in Gourley v. Linsinbigler, 51 Penn. St. 345, Read, J., says (1865) :

“It is evident that the language used by the authorities in speaking of ‘in contemplation of death,’ ‘in expectation of death,’ or ‘in apprehension of death,’ — applies to the cases of illness ending in death, the last illness which makes it a death-bed disposition.”

But see contra, Gass v. Simpson, 4 Cold. 288 (1867), which appears to have been wrongly decided on the facts. Milligan, J., dissents. Even here it is admitted that “a general apprehension of death from the mortality of man will not be sufficient.”

<sup>2</sup> Walden v. Dixon, 5 Monr. 170. That such transactions cannot stand as irrevocable and absolute gifts inter vivos has already been seen, supra, § 131.

eighty years old, was in failing health, and so continued until he died from the cause apprehended.<sup>1</sup> Apprehension of death, where it fairly exists under an immediate danger, is not to be defeated in such transfers because the giver died during that danger of something else; as where one gave, apprehending death from a surgical operation and died of some other disease before recovering fully from the operation, though not from the apprehended cause.<sup>2</sup> But in general the gift should be made during some illness or peril, and in apprehension of death from that illness or peril, and death must ensue therefrom, or in close connection with it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 155. The Same Subject; English Cases.—While the English cases seem never to have dwelt upon that extension of the causes of death which the phrase “peril of death” would seem to imply, but rather to have viewed gifts causâ mortis as made in sickness, they certainly justify no such gifts when made under a vague and uncertain apprehension of death. These two ideas are kept together as coexistent, by the best of the later judges,—extremity of sickness, and contemplation of death therefrom.<sup>4</sup> Says Lord Eldon, in 1827: “Nothing can be more clear than that this donatio mortis causâ must be a gift made by a donor in contemplation of the conceived approach of death.”<sup>5</sup> Lord Cottenham, in a later case, would not sustain a gift causâ mortis where the evidence did not show that the transaction took place while the donor was in such a state of illness or expectation of death as would warrant a supposition that the gift was made in contemplation of that event.<sup>6</sup> And in 1852 a gift

<sup>1</sup> Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17.

<sup>2</sup> Ridden v. Thrall, 125 N. Y. 572. So, where one has had a paralytic stroke, he may readily be presumed to apprehend another which will result in death. Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343.

<sup>3</sup> Parcher v. Saving Institution, 78 Me. 470; 105 Cal. 143.

<sup>4</sup> See Sir John Leach, in Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 185; Duffield v.

Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497; Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & Cr. 235; Staniland v. Willott, 3 Mac. & G. 664.

<sup>5</sup> Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497.

<sup>6</sup> Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & Cr. 235. And see the language of Tate v. Leithead, Kay, 658 (1854): “A donatio mortis causâ can only be established by a necessary implication, or an expressed intention that the

made by one in the apprehension of death from epilepsy was decided not to remain subject to the further uncertainties of precarious health following the attack, after the immediate peril which occasioned the transfer had passed away.<sup>1</sup>

It is true, however, in a certain limited sense, that a groundless apprehension of death may render a gift conditional on death; the situation thus offered being that one in immediate danger of death gave with this particular exigency in view; and as a consequence of his recovery therefrom, the gift causâ mortis is defeated by the condition of death not happening. Such being the case, and the original apprehension proving groundless, it is immaterial that death follows sooner or later from a cause not proximately regarded in the gift. Thus was it in the English case of Staniland v. Willott, where the gift causâ mortis was made when the donor was in peril, and apprehended death from an epileptic attack; and then failed, because he had recovered, after a month's illness, sufficiently to manage his affairs and go abroad, though fairly insane by the time the property was reclaimed on his behalf from the donee.<sup>2</sup>

§ 156. Proofs, Presumptions, etc., as to Expectation of Death.

— Whether a gift was made under such circumstances of expected death, as to bring it within the rule of gifts causâ mortis, is mainly a question of fact to be determined by the proof. But so far are the courts indulgent, that wherever the gift was made in the donor's last illness, and a few days or weeks before his actual death, it will be presumed a gift causâ mortis, and not inter vivos.<sup>3</sup> But this presumption is gift should not take effect except in the event of the death of the donor."

<sup>1</sup> Staniland v. Willott, 3 Mac. & G. 664.

<sup>2</sup> Staniland v. Willott, supra. Some ten years earlier it was decided in this country, upon a like principle, that where the moving cause of such a gift is consumption at a certain critical stage, and this crisis passes away so as to enable the giver to attend once more to his ordinary business, for several months, there is a gift causâ mortis, which fails, notwithstanding the giver dies of consumption afterwards. Weston v. Hight, 17 Me. 287. The court inaccurately observes, "This is not a case of donatio causâ mortis." It was, however, a gift causâ mortis, failing because of the primary condition annexed to all such gifts. § 154.

<sup>3</sup> Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184; Lawson v. Lawson, 1 P. Wms. 441.

not conclusive, and cannot prevail against manifest intention to the contrary.<sup>1</sup> Where the gift was actually made in the giver's last illness, its conditional character will be taken for granted; and it is for those who would dispute that character to show that, on the contrary, something was said or done to indicate that it should become absolute and irrevocable without reference to death.<sup>2</sup> In various doubtful cases it has been found unnecessary to consider whether the gift was causâ mortis or inter vivos.<sup>3</sup>

In determining issues of this kind, the surrounding circumstances will afford much aid as to the donor's intention. Thus the gift causâ mortis should have been contemporaneous with the peril; and a dying man's statement that he has made a gift on some former occasion, which he does not specify, is insufficient to establish such a gift.<sup>4</sup> Nor can directions given by a person in rapidly failing health, which substantially amount to the substitution of an agent to collect and manage in his stead so long as his condition continues unfavorable to the regular transaction of business, be subverted into a gift causâ mortis to the agent, the principal dying shortly after: first, because no gift was intended; and, next, because the contemplation was sickness and disability, not death.<sup>5</sup>

§ 157. General Conclusion as to the Element of Expectation of Death.—The general conclusion reached as to the element of expectation of death in gifts of personal property causâ mortis is this: It is not enough that the peril of death be near, nor that the giver make the transfer under some general misapprehension, or vague and imperfect apprehension, of approaching dissolution. The special circumstance and its apprehension by the donor himself as a condition must coexist. But if, being in immediate peril of death,—we

<sup>1</sup> Thompson v. Thompson, 12 Tex. 327; Candor's Appeal, 27 Penn. St. 119; Allen v. Polereczky, 31 Me. 338.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, pt. 2, bk. 2, c. 2, § 4; 3 Redf. Wills, 2d ed. 326; Gardner v. Parker, supra.

<sup>3</sup> See Taylor's Estate, 154 Penn. St. 183.

<sup>4</sup> Hebb v. Hebb, 5 Gill, 506. And see Thompson v. Thompson, 12 Tex. 327.

<sup>5</sup> First Nat. Bank v. Balcom, 35 Conn. 351.

should say from any cause, though the English decisions seem to be thus far confined to cases of sickness,—one makes a gift under the apprehension that such peril will fatally terminate, the gift is causâ mortis; and hence, following the rule of such gifts, if he recovers from that peril the gift is void, while if he dies in consequence the gift is complete,—subject, of course, to other conditions, to be noticed elsewhere.

In other words, and to recur to our original definition, the gift causâ mortis must be made by a party in the expectation of a death then imminent.<sup>1</sup> But, as we have also shown, while the peril and the apprehension of death from the peril are coessential, the courts will presume the latter, or the conditional intent, from the former, or the peril, under suitable circumstances, though not in the face of opposing testimony. And the peril and the apprehension fairly existing together, death from such peril is a condition to be liberally construed.

CHAPTER VI.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS ; HOW EXECUTED.

§ 158. Method of executing Gift considered in this Chapter.—(4.) As to the method of executing a gift causâ mortis. To this important topic the present chapter will be devoted.

§ 159. Execution requires Delivery on Donor's Part; Uninterrupted Change of Possession, etc.—Directing our attention first to the requisite acts on the part of the donor, we come at once upon the essential of delivery. That no gift causâ mortis can take effect without delivery, our courts and writers have strongly insisted upon, ever since Lord Hardwicke first declared emphatically for the principle as a cardinal one in English law, whatever might have been the practice under the Roman emperors.<sup>2</sup> Blackstone says that in this species of gifts the giver "delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession."<sup>1</sup> "To substantiate the gift," are the words of another, "there must be an actual tradition or delivery of the thing to the donee himself, or to some one for the donee's use."<sup>2</sup> Story says there can be no valid donation unless there be an actual delivery of the subject of the donation.<sup>3</sup> And the courts quite frequently instance delivery as one of the leading qualities wherein our gifts causâ mortis differ widely from the corresponding donations of the civil law.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 135.

<sup>2</sup> Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 436.

Again, it seems to have been steadily insisted that delivery once given by the donor, the donee's possession and control, or that of the person vested with the title for his use, must go on uninterrupted to the donor's death; since the presumption would be, if the donor afterwards resumed possession, that he had revoked the gift during his life, as any donor causâ mortis has a right to do.<sup>5</sup>

§ 160. Element of Delivery associates Gift Causâ Mortis with other Gifts. — Now this element of delivery, which we are to consider at length, takes the common-law gift causâ mortis quite away from legacies, and associates it with the ordinary gift. Of the many decisions, often contradictory, which are embraced under the present head of delivery, there are few that might not interchange with gifts inter vivos; the requisites of execution correspond; similar windings are traceable in the law; the ancient stiffness for manual delivery likewise yields place for the modern equitable assignment; and to elaborate this chapter is like running a parallel with a former one.<sup>6</sup> But while the analogies might serve for mutual aid in legal investigation, it is better, on the whole, for gifts causâ mortis and gifts inter vivos to be treated separately.

§ 161. Mere Promise to give is ineffectual. — Here, as in the

<sup>1</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 774; Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404; Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & Ald. 551.

<sup>3</sup> Story Eq. Jur. §§ 611-613.

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., the opinion in Irish v. Nutting, 47 Barb. 370.

<sup>5</sup> Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 431; Irish v. Nutting, supra; Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324.

<sup>6</sup> Supra, c. 2, § 67 et seq.

case of a gift inter vivos, promises to give are to be disregarded for the want of consideration; and a promise on one's death-bed to give at his death confers of itself no legal right or title.<sup>1</sup>

§ 162. Delivery by Donor as to Corporeal Chattels; Manual, Symbolical, etc. — For corporeal chattels, manual delivery is required. The money, the jewel, the watch, the goods generally, should be handed over by the donor to the donee, or other person for him, — the method of delivery varying somewhat, according to the subject-matter.<sup>2</sup> And as bank-notes circulating as cash are in effect substantial corporeal property, like money, a gift causâ mortis of such chattels has from an early period prevailed when accompanied by the usual manual delivery.<sup>3</sup>

When the property, from its peculiar nature or situation, does not admit of corporeal delivery, — as in the case of bulky articles, or goods stored away, — the delivery of a symbol may suffice for a gift causâ mortis, if such delivery be otherwise consistent with the owner's intention to give. Thus, the delivery of a key to a wine-cellar may amount to delivering possession of the wines, "because it is the way of coming at the possession, or to make use of the thing;" in other words, such a delivery is tantamount to actual delivery, for the purpose of a gift.<sup>4</sup>

§ 163. The Same Subject; Delivery of Receptacle and Contents. — But the rule of delivery is not so readily applied where the gift is of the receptacle sort. In cases so simple as a box of jewelry or a purse of money, to be sure, delivery of the thing could hardly fail to carry the contents.<sup>5</sup> But an intention of giving is not so readily manifested when the dying owner delivers the key of some trunk or wardrobe

<sup>1</sup> Chevallier v. Wilson, 1 Tex. 161; Chapman, 2 Bro. C. C. 612; 1 Sch. Coleman v. Parker, 114 Mass. 30; Pers. Prop. § 351.
106 Ill. 476.

<sup>2</sup> Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 431; Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 443; Jones v. 2 Bl. Com. 514; Westerlo v. De Selby, Prec. Ch. 300; Smith v. Smith, Witt, 36 N. Y. 340; Michener v. Str. 955; 7 Taunt. 224.
Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59.

<sup>3</sup> Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404; 59.
Miller v. Miller, 3 Atk. 356; Hill v.

which yet remains standing near his bedside, and within his control; though it would be different if the receptacle were on other premises. And the rule of chancery appears to be well settled, that there can be no sufficient delivery of one thing causa mortis solely as the symbol or representative of another; of a key, for instance, in the place of the receptacle to which it belongs, and which itself might have been handed over.<sup>1</sup>

The real question is, whether the donor has by such transfer both intentionally and practically parted with his dominion of the property; and we must view his acts accordingly.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 446; Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 443; Powell v. Hellicar, 26 Beav. 261. Unless the things were too bulky for actual delivery and the delivery was as perfect as circumstances allowed. § 162.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, in Powell v. Hellicar, the dying person told A. to take the keys of a dressing-case and box containing a watch and trinkets, and immediately on her death to deliver the watch and trinkets to B.; and it was decided that there had been no complete gift; for, though A. immediately took the keys and kept them in her sole custody, as requested, the box and dressing-case remained under the alleged donor's control. Powell v. Hellicar, 26 Beav. 261. So was the delivery with intent to give wanting in Reddel v. Dobree, — another English case, — there being much roundabout over a locked money-box, the alleged donor keeping control of the key all the while, and only letting the party to whom he delivered the box keep it subject to his occasional orders. This was, at best, but a gift of what might happen to be in the box when the donor was done using it; or, as Vice-Chancellor Shadwell observed, the transaction from beginning to end was nothing more than putting one to a certain extent in possession of the box, while retaining the power over the contents. Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244. And see Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. 356.

The same principle has been recognized in the courts of this country. Thus, in a Maine case, where the gift claimed was of money and public securities contained in a trunk; and the owner, instead of handing the property over, locked the trunk and kept it in his own closet until his death, — the donation was held to have been imperfect. Nor was the delivery of the key to the trunk allowed under such circumstances to carry the contents as symbolical or constructive. "It is well settled," observed the court, "that delivery of the key of a trunk, chest, or box, in which valuable articles are kept, which are capable of being taken into the hand, and may be delivered by being passed from hand to hand, is not a valid delivery of such articles. The rule is, that the delivery must be as perfect and complete as the nature of the articles will admit of." Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324. And see Headley v. Kirby, 18 Penn. St. 326. But cf. Cooper v. Burr, 45 Barb. 9, where the court appears to have strained the facts somewhat to support the gift. In Coleman v. Parker, decided in Massachusetts in 1874, the facts showed that the dying person did not give up the control and actual

And where a key is delivered and yet the donee does not take nor attempt to take possession thereupon, the delivery is not complete enough to effect the transfer of the receptacle.<sup>1</sup>

§ 164. Instances of Insufficient Delivery of Corporeal Chattels. — It is not enough to mark packages with the name of an intended donee, and give directions for their delivery to him after the donor's death. Thus, where one had written upon parcels containing the property the names of the parties for whom they were intended, and had requested C. to see that they were properly delivered to them after his death, it was held that the facts showed no sufficient gift causâ mortis.<sup>2</sup>

§ 165. There must be Intention to give, and Act of Delivery. — A gift causâ mortis of corporeal chattels cannot, then, be founded upon words of permission to take, or even of bestowal on condition of death, if unaccompanied by acts which go to divest the owner of control and dominion. Even a manifest intention requires actual delivery to give effect to the donor's purpose.<sup>3</sup>

§ 166. Donor's Delivery of Incorporeal Chattels; Rule radically changing. — As to incorporeal personal property, there is still confusion among the authorities, owing to the long-continued conflict between common-law and equity rules of dominion either of the trunk or the key, nor make any genuine change of possession. The evidence established that A., who was at the point of death, asked B. to take some dresses out of the closet and put them in her trunk, and to lock the trunk and put the key in a washstand she used; this was done; and A. told B. that she wanted C. to have the trunk if she died, and wanted B. to see that C. got it. The words would seem to have indicated the purpose of making a gift causâ mortis; yet the gift necessarily failed for want of a correspondent delivery to or for the donee. Coleman v. Parker, 114 Mass. 30. And see Goulding v. Horbury, 85 Me. 227; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462; 81 Ky. 425. In Debison v.

Emmons, 158 Mass. 592, the receptacle was in the immediate presence and control of both donor and donee, in a room occupied by both, and the delivery was held complete by delivery of the key.

<sup>1</sup> Even though the box was in another room and in control rather of another member of the family than of the dying person. Keepers v. Fidelity Co., 56 N. J. L. 302.

<sup>2</sup> Bunn v. Markham, 7 Taunt. 224; Hawkins v. Blewitt, 2 Esp. 663.

<sup>3</sup> See Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147; Emery v. Clough, 63 N. H. 552. Statute making mere possession at place of a joint residence insufficient proof of a gift, held to apply to gifts inter vivos only. 89 Va. 1.

transfer, to which we have already adverted. The steady progress which the courts have made in favor of sustaining transfers evidenced by writing, halting for a while at transfers made with the full solemnities peculiar to that class; then advancing once more towards the delivery of muniments as the sole and sufficient test, and still onward, — all this has been observed in a former chapter.<sup>1</sup> The same progress is traceable in gifts causâ mortis; consequently, the same jarring of the earlier and later authorities, and the same uncertainty of our present foothold.

§ 167. Gift Causâ Mortis of Bond, Mortgage, etc. — Any bond not the donor's own obligation may now be the subject of a gift causâ mortis by delivery of the instrument, with or without assignment in writing. Such is the current of the English and American decisions at this day.<sup>2</sup>

Debts secured by bond and mortgage, — as is the practice in England and some parts of this country, — or by the promissory note and mortgage more familiar in other States, are best delivered upon a regular assignment, with transfer of the securities; and it was long thought that they could not be given in any other way. But Duffield v. Elwes settled the law otherwise for England, and firmly established there that a bond and mortgage would pass as a gift causâ mortis on a mere delivery and verbal declaration of gift, without any further assignment in writing; this, on the ground that while the donor's interest has not completely passed, such delivery of the instruments operates, by way of declaring a trust, far enough to enable the donee to come into equity and perfect his title.<sup>3</sup> An unindorsed promissory note, it will be presently seen, passes by mere delivery likewise; and hence the same rule will naturally prevail where the mortgage is secured by note.<sup>4</sup> Indeed, the principle has been extended so

<sup>1</sup> Supra, c. 2, § 72, under gifts inter vivos.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, pt. 2, bk. 2, c. 2, § 4; Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184; Waring v. Waring, 11 Md. 424; Lee v. Boak, 11 Gratt. 182; Wells v.

Tucker, 3 Binn. 366; Kiff v. Weaver, 94 N. C. 274.

<sup>3</sup> Duffield v. Elwes, before Lord Chancellor Eldon, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497; 1 Sim. & St. 239. And see Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 351.

<sup>4</sup> Veal v. Veal, 27 Beav. 303.

far, in a Connecticut case, that the donor's executor was not permitted to foreclose a mortgage of real estate, given to secure a promissory note, although the note alone had been delivered to the donee by the dying owner, while the mortgage deed, never mentioned in the transfer, remained in the giver's hands until he died.<sup>1</sup> But as to the donee's rights under such circumstances as these last, there might be some question; and in most parts of this country exist local statutes concerning deeds and their registry, which operate as a restriction upon such transfers, notwithstanding the English rule.<sup>2</sup>

§ 168. Gift Causâ Mortis of Bills, Notes, or other Negotiable Instruments.—The celebrated case of Duffield v. Elwes, decided by Lord Eldon in 1827, on appeal, which reversed the decision of one so eminent as Sir John Leach in favor of the older, more conservative doctrine, appears to have been the turning-point in the English law of delivery. Upon the principle therein set forth, gifts causâ mortis of bills of exchange, promissory notes, certificates of deposit, coupon bonds, and negotiable instruments generally, are now upheld almost universally in England and America, even without an indorsement, provided only the instrument itself be delivered to the donee or some one in his behalf, with the suitable intention of transfer.<sup>3</sup> So far as Miller v. Miller, and other earlier cases, hold to the contrary doctrine, they must now be regarded as overruled;<sup>4</sup> and Lord Hardwicke's distinction between the delivery of property and the delivery of its evidence has assuredly lost its point.<sup>5</sup> Of the modern doc-

<sup>1</sup> Brown v. Brown, 18 Conn. 410.

<sup>2</sup> In Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray, 418, a gift causâ mortis of notes and real-estate mortgages was sustained on proof of delivery of the notes with proper assignments of the mortgages to the donee. Assignments of mortgages made on one's death-bed in favor of one, while the rest of the kindred are absent, should be suspiciously regarded, and the beneficiary has the burden of showing their fairness. Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166; supra, § 141.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 776; Ashton v. Dawson, 2 Coll. 363; Ashbrook v. Ryon, 2 Bush, 228; Bates v. Kempton, 7 Gray, 382; Westerlo v. De Witt, 36 N. Y. 340.

<sup>4</sup> Miller v. Miller, 3 P. Wms. 440; Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 111; Bradley v. Hunt, 5 Gill & J. 54.

<sup>5</sup> See Lord Hardwicke, in Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 443; 2 Kent Com. 447.

trine, Chief Justice Shaw has said: "These cases all go on the assumption, that a bond, note, or other security is a valid subsisting obligation for the payment of a sum of money, and the gift is in effect a gift of the money, by a gift and delivery of the instrument, that shows its existence and affords the means of reducing it to possession."<sup>1</sup>

Among the later negotiable instruments, which are held to pass by delivery as a gift causâ mortis, are those known as deposit notes and certificates of deposit.<sup>2</sup> These should always be carefully distinguished from one's own unaccepted checks; for here the donor gives to the donee a document, by which the depository acknowledges that he holds so much money belonging to the donor at his disposal.<sup>3</sup>

§ 169. Gift Causâ Mortis of Insurance Policy.—It is held in England, that where one delivers a policy of life insurance, saying, "This is yours," that alone will operate as a gift causâ mortis of the money due on the policy.<sup>4</sup> The rule is doubtless to be confined to policies expressed for the donor and his legal representatives: it cannot extend to policies taken out for the benefit of other parties; nor, perhaps, would such gifts be allowed to take effect at all upon mere delivery of the document against plain language introduced into the contract of insurance, declaring all assignments void unless made in writing and assented to by the insurance company.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Shaw, C. J., in Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198. But that such gifts must be confined to obligations of a third party, save where the donor means to forgive the donee his debt, and cannot embrace the donee's own simple promise to pay, or unaccepted bill, check, draft, or order, we have already shown. Supra, §§ 148-151. And any instrument in the nature of a draft or order upon some depository or third party, by whatever name we may call it, requires, usually, and unless in extreme exceptions, that party's acceptance, before the donor's delivery can become operative. See Harris v. Clark, 3 Comst. 93; Bank v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282; Hewitt v.

Kaye, L. R. 6 Eq. 198; supra, § 151; Jones v. Weakley, Ala. (1893).

<sup>2</sup> Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474; Amis v. Witt, 33 Beav. 619; Westerlo v. De Witt, 36 N. Y. 340; Brooks v. Brooks, 12 S. C. 422; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602.

<sup>3</sup> Romilly, M. R., in Hewitt v. Kaye, L. R. 6 Eq. 198. But see Taylor's Estate, 154 Penn. St. 183, where a check so called, in full of a deposit, was regarded rather as an assignment of the fund.

<sup>4</sup> Witt v. Amis, 1 Ell., B. & S. 109; Amis v. Witt, 33 Beav. 619.

<sup>5</sup> There seem to be no important American decisions in point. But see Trough's Estate, 75 Penn. St. 115;

§ 170. Gift Causâ Mortis of Stock.—In view of the requirements of a transfer on the books of the company, the courts in England and some parts of this country are disinclined to sustain gifts of stock upon a mere delivery of the certificate to the donee, without the pursuance of other legal formalities of a transfer.<sup>1</sup> Nor, according to the latest New Jersey decisions, can there be a valid gift causâ mortis of stock privileges, the price not being payable nor the stock issuable till after the donor's death.<sup>2</sup> But in New York a looser rule prevails; for it is quite settled by a recent case, as the law of that State, that where the owner of stock assigns absolutely in writing certain of the shares represented by the certificate, an equitable title to the stock passes by the assignment, under circumstances otherwise favorable for treating the transaction as a gift causâ mortis, so that the donor's legal representative becomes a trustee for the donee by operation of law to make the gift effectual.<sup>3</sup>

Yet even in this last case, the certificate of stock was not handed over as the sole act of delivery. On the other hand, there was a formal assignment made, carefully executed, and witnessed; and this was delivered, though not, as it appears, the certificate. By the rules of the corporation, such assignments of stock were to be in writing, and transferable on the company's books, upon surrender of the certificate.<sup>4</sup> That a gift causâ mortis of stock in a bank, railroad, or other chartered company, can take effect upon the mere manual delivery of the certificate, without transfer on the books and without an assignment, does not as yet appear to have been clearly affirmed in any English or American court of last appeal; but the Supreme Court of New York has so ruled it also supra, § 76, as to such gifts inter vivos. In Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343, the delivery of a policy of insurance on one's own life with accompanying instrument in the form of a bill of sale is assumed as sufficient for a gift causâ mortis.

<sup>1</sup> Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474; Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. 208.

<sup>2</sup> Egerton v. Egerton, 17 N. J. Eq. 419.

<sup>3</sup> The court here ordered that the executor of the donor should produce the certificate, and cause a transfer of the donated shares to be made accordingly. Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17.

with disrelish, and on the evident assumption that the authorities had left no halting-place.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, it is the English chancery doctrine, that, where one gives shares, the gift is not perfected until the transfer is made; and the death of the donor meantime prevents his donation from taking effect, notwithstanding any directions he may have sent to the officers of the corporation for a transfer to the donee, which fail to reach them in season.<sup>2</sup> But of course if bank stock is delivered as already standing in the donee's name before the donor's death, the gift is a good one.<sup>3</sup>

§ 171. Indorsement, Assignment, etc., expressive of Intent.—Indorsement or assignment, in accordance with the tenor of the instrument, shows, doubtless, the gift intention more conclusively. But, assuming that the chattel may be sufficiently given by manual delivery of the muniment alone, the evidence of an actual gift should, nevertheless, be clear and consistent throughout. Hence, an indorsement or assignment without parting with the thing appears too equivocal to establish delivery; and if, on the other hand, indorsement or assignment of the instrument be begun and not completed by the donor, the presumption should be that the gift is insufficiently executed.<sup>4</sup>

§ 172. Gift Causâ Mortis of Savings-Bank Deposit.—The gift causâ mortis of a savings-bank deposit presents much difficulty; for though such a gift may undoubtedly be made by a draft in full, accompanied by the deposit book, and seasonably presented at the bank counter, it is by no means settled that anything short of this would constitute a delivery so complete as to debar all participation of the donor's representatives in the fund. That a very fine line separates gifts of

<sup>1</sup> Walsh v. Sexton, 55 Barb. 251 (1869). Says Peckham, J.: "In my judgment, this doctrine is fraught with the greatest dangers. It leads into temptation, from which we all pray to be delivered, and it greatly facilitates frauds. The whole thing is wrong. But it is settled by authority, and we are not at liberty to reverse it." See supra, § 76, showing that such gifts inter vivos are sustained.

<sup>2</sup> Lambert v. Overton, 13 W. R. 227. And see Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J: 208.

<sup>3</sup> Hatcher v. Buford, 60 Ark. 169.

<sup>4</sup> Dunne v. Boyd, 8 Ir. Eq. 609; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602; McGrath v. Reynolds, 116 Mass. 566.

deposits, must have been perceived already ; for, as we have shown, the check drawn by a dying donor is invalid until the banker accepts or becomes a privy to the transfer ; while the banker's certificate of deposit, or deposit note, on the other hand, which admits an existing indebtedness to the donor or his order, can be sufficiently donated by delivery of the writing. Now, as to any savings bank, something should depend upon the mode of doing business under its charter and by-laws ; for, though the usual course is, to furnish each depositor with a book wherein credits and debits are regularly entered, and the true balance, less accruing interest, appears on inspection, and then to require the presentation of this book for each payment, either by the depositor in person or by some one who brings the book and a draft payable to himself, yet there are many savings banks in this country whose business is done essentially like ordinary banks of deposit, except as to allowing interest, whose pass books exhibit deposits only, except as periodically balanced, and whose custom it is to honor checks without requiring any special presentation of the book. As to savings banks of the latter description, there seems to be no reason for regarding the mere check of the donor as a good gift causâ mortis, before presentation at the bank, — nor even the delivery of that accessory voucher, the pass book, with or without such check.<sup>1</sup> Concerning the former kind, however, it might be argued that the deposit book is something analogous to a certificate of deposit, and hence that the simple delivery of the book ought to give the donee an equitable title to the deposit therein represented ; and seemingly, on some such ground, certain courts uphold so off-hand a transfer. This is a conclusion which ought not to be hastily adopted, leading as it does so readily to frauds upon an institution and its depositors. For a certificate of deposit is primarily designed to facilitate the business of the holder, who expects to indorse it over to pay his own debts instead of retaining it ; whereas savings-bank deposits are put at interest, the book representing a sort of convenient permanent investment by instalments, and the main design of the institution, at least with banks of the former description, being rather to put away carefully the customer's surplus moneys for his benefit, than to aid him in carrying on a brisk traffic on the credit of his balances. If a draft in full in the donee's favor, or an assignment of the fund, accompany the delivery of such a book, the case is stronger, though a draft without the book is open to the objections already stated.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Beak v. Beak, L. R. 13 Eq. 489 ; supra, §§ 148-151.

§ 173. The Same Subject.— That the delivery of the depositor's book in a savings bank is not a sufficient delivery to constitute a gift causâ mortis of the money deposited, is distinctly held in a well-considered Irish equity case, where the English authorities bearing upon this point are brought together; the question being treated as a novel one, and the evidence showing that the savings bank in question did business as one of the former class above noticed.<sup>2</sup> This is likewise the declared rule in Kentucky and in Pennsylvania.<sup>3</sup> And that there cannot be a valid gift causâ mortis of a savings-bank book by word of mouth, when the book is not in the donor's possession, nor so situated as to be actually delivered before his death, is indisputable law.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, it is held in Rhode Island, that the gift causâ mortis of a savings-bank deposit is sufficiently completed on delivery of the pass book; the court, however, treating the case as one without precedent.<sup>5</sup> Still later the same rule is upheld in Massachusetts.<sup>6</sup> It would appear that this is also the doctrine in some other States.<sup>7</sup>

§ 174. Gift of Voucher, Receipt, etc.— There are certain miscellaneous vouchers for money, such as due-bills, receipts, <sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 148-151; Pierce v. Five Cents Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425, and cases cited.

<sup>2</sup> M'Gonnell v. Murray, 3 Irish Eq. 460. And see Beak v. Beak, L. R. 13 Eq. 489; Mead, Re, 15 Ch. D. 651.

<sup>3</sup> Ashbrook v. Ryon, 2 Bush, 228; Walsh's Appeal, 122 Penn. St. 177; Jones v. Weakley, Ala. (1893); 89 Va. 1. And see Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175; 75 Cal. 548.

<sup>4</sup> Case v. Dennison, 9 R. I. 88; French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623.

<sup>5</sup> Tillinghast v. Wheaton, 8 R. I. 536.

<sup>6</sup> Pierce v. Five Cents Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425.

<sup>7</sup> See supra, § 78; Camp's Appeal, 36 Conn. 88, an analogous case of gift inter vivos; Curtis v. Portland Savings Bank, 77 Me. 151.

acknowledging a loan or deposit, sometimes of a promissory character, the delivery of any one of which, under suitable circumstances, is held to constitute a valid and sufficient gift causâ mortis of the money-right represented, in conformity with the modern doctrine relating to incorporeal chattels personal.<sup>1</sup>

§ 175. Delivery of Receptacle containing Incorporeal Chattels.—Of the delivery of a receptacle, as carrying what it contains, we have spoken, with reference to corporeal chattels.<sup>2</sup> The rule ought to be even more stringent as concerns incorporeal than corporeal property; and yet in some States it appears that the delivery of a box and key, with intent to donate the contents, carries not only such promissory notes or coupon bonds payable to bearer as the box may hold, but even a certificate of stock which happens to be there, without any other special delivery.<sup>3</sup> This is a dangerous doctrine to develop far.

But, on the other hand, pursuing our analogies, we find that the gift of a chose in action, or incorporeal chattel, cannot take effect if the instrument be put into an envelope, with directions for delivery indorsed upon it, and then retained by the donor under his control and dominion until his death.<sup>4</sup> And the tenor of some late decisions is to discourage all doubtful gifts causâ mortis which rely upon symbolical and incomplete delivery for carrying a title to incorporeal chattels.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517; Champney v. Blanchard, 39 N. Y. 111.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 163.

<sup>3</sup> Walsh v. Sexton, 55 Barb. 251. In Thomas v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1, it was held (with strong dissent) that the gift, among other things, of the keys of a box deposited in the vaults of a bank, containing bonds, stocks, etc., was a sufficient constructive delivery of the contents of the box, notwithstanding a duplicate key was in the hands of a trusted friend. In Pierce v. Five Cents Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425, the delivery of a sealed package to a certain person, containing money and savings-bank books, was held a valid gift causâ mortis, for the purposes designated by written directions contained in the package. The practical result was to constitute a testamentary disposition of the donor's estate without the formalities of a solemn will. Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185, favors such a result still more strongly, under startling circumstances.

<sup>4</sup> Phipps v. Hope, 16 Ohio St. 586; Trough's Estate, 57 Penn. St. 115; Zimmerman v. Streeper, 57 Penn. St. 147; Mitchell v. Smith, 10 L. T. N. S. 801; Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. 356.

<sup>5</sup> Gans v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462; 2 Con. (N. Y.) 286.

§ 176. Gift Causâ Mortis to a Third Person for Donee.—There can be no doubt that a delivery of the property to a third person for the donee constitutes as good a gift causâ mortis as though delivery had been made directly to the donee; the ordinary rules of delivery and incidents of the gift still applying. And upon this principle have such gifts, when made through the medium of friends, relatives, and even strangers, been sustained, from the earliest known period of our law on this subject.<sup>1</sup> “Delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another,” is Blackstone’s expression.<sup>2</sup> In Drury v. Smith,—one of the first among the English reported cases,—the gift sustained was of property handed to a third person, to be delivered to the donee if the giver died of his disorder.<sup>3</sup> And a late American decision supports a gift which was made by a miner, dying on board a steamer, who handed a bag of gold dust and coin to a sailor attending him, and told him to deliver the property to the purser, who then came, after receiving it, and took the giver’s last message as to its disposal.<sup>4</sup> Obviously the wishes of a donor in peril of death would be constantly thwarted if the rule were otherwise.

And here is sometimes noted a difference between gifts inter vivos and those causâ mortis: namely, that, as to the former class, the authority of one who takes from the giver to deliver to the donee is revoked by the giver’s death; whereas, in the latter kind of gift, the thing may be delivered to the donee, and accepted by him after the giver’s death.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404; Boutts v. Ellis, 17 Beav. 121; Borne-man v. Sidlinger, 15 Me. 429; Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59; Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17; Southerland v. Southerland, 5 Bush, 591; Kemper v. Kemper, 1 Duvall, 401; Kilby v. Godwin, 2 Del. Ch. 61.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514.

<sup>3</sup> Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 404.

<sup>4</sup> Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59.

<sup>5</sup> Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87, per curiam.

This is illustrated by the English case of Farquharson v. Cave, where the Vice-Chancellor said: “I had some doubts, at first, whether the transaction might not be considered to amount to a donatio mortis causâ; but, to arrive at that conclusion, I must be satisfied that there was a complete delivery in such circumstances as the law requires for that purpose. A mere delivery to an agent, in the character of agent for the giver, would amount to nothing.” 2 Coll. 356.

This distinction possibly proceeds, however, from a narrow view of the subject. For the death-bed delivery to a third person for the donee, which takes effect, is essentially a delivery, not to any agent of the donor, but to a trustee for the donee. It is of the essence of such gifts that the giver part with all control and dominion over the property for the time being; for though, doubtless, a gift causâ mortis once made is revocable, it cannot be considered as ever made at all, so long as the delivery is to one who takes only as the donor's agent, and whose custody continues that of the dying man. It must be, therefore, a delivery to the donee, or to some one for the donee.<sup>1</sup> Even gifts inter vivos, as we have seen, may be executed by delivery to a third person as trustee for the donee.<sup>2</sup>

§ 177. Intervention of Trustee distinguished from Agency.— That the ordinary rules of agency apply to gifts causâ mortis to much the same purport as in gifts inter vivos, may be inferred from the rule of one's checks, already considered.<sup>3</sup> And it may be assumed, that, where the dying owner gives directions to a person to get property which is in some agent's or bailee's hands for the purpose of fulfilling a gift causâ mortis, and the directions do not reach that agent or bailee so as to enable him to attorn, so to speak, before the donor's death, the gift fails; just as a check, draft, or order upon a depositary drawn causâ mortis is unavailing before it could be accepted. And hence there is no gift with delivery where a dying person simply requests A. to get certain property in possession of B., and, in case of death, settle bills,

<sup>1</sup> Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. 356. And see Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48; Southerland v. Southerland, 5 Bush. 591. Delivery held incomplete to the agent in 104 Mo. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 86. The gifts we are now considering, when made by delivery to a third person, usually contemplate a further delivery by the latter to the donee, if the donor dies, in pursuance of a peculiar trust. Devol v. Dye, 123 Ind. 321; 117 N. Y. 343; Shackelford v. Brown, 89 Mo.

546. Whereas, in a gift inter vivos once made to the donee's trustee, the transfer generally becomes complete without reference to any such contingency. But a gift inter vivos may contemplate a delivery by the trustee after the donor dies. See e.g., Meriwether v. Morrison, 78 Ky. 572. And such gifts are subject to conditions imposed by the donor. See supra, § 127 et seq.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 77, 86; also §§ 148–151.

and divide the residue among C., D., and E.<sup>1</sup> In short, the custody of an agent for the donor should become a custody during the donor's life, as agent for the donee, or as trustee for his benefit, in order that the gift may take effect. And as the donor may have an agent to make delivery for him, so, too, may the donee causâ mortis have his agent duly empowered to fully accept on his behalf.<sup>2</sup>

§ 178. Miscellaneous Instances of Gift through Third Person; Residuary Legatee, etc.—Where a testator expressly directs his residuary legatee to deliver an article to an individual, and the legatee promises to do so, chancery will hold the legatee a trustee, and enforce delivery accordingly; the principle being, that one interested in the estate cannot be allowed to receive more than he would have had, except for the reliance placed by the testator upon his assurance, and a consequent omission to make or alter his own will, as he might have done to accomplish the desired purpose. But it would appear that this rule cannot be extended to promises made by parties having no interest under the will to be affected by any such gift.<sup>3</sup>

Under somewhat peculiar circumstances of a third party's intervention, a gift causâ mortis was sustained in Boutts v. Ellis. Here a man, on his death-bed, gave his wife a crossed check, and afterwards, remembering that it was crossed, asked a friend, as a matter of convenience, to take it and give the wife another in its stead. This was done; but the friend's check was post-dated. The testator's check was paid before he died to his friend, who subsequently gave a check to the widow in place of his own post-dated check. It was held, in the English chancery courts below, and on appeal, that the gift was good.<sup>4</sup>

§ 179. Gift Causâ Mortis by Instrument in Writing; Deed of Gift, etc.—Now as to delivery by a deed of gift, or other

<sup>1</sup> Case v. Dennison, 9 R. I. 88.

<sup>2</sup> See Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517.

<sup>3</sup> Sims v. Walker, 8 Humph. 503; Williams v. Fitch, 18 N. Y. 546. So may the gift causâ mortis of money placed in the hands of one's intended executor, for a specific purpose be good. Barclay's Estate, 11 Phila. 123.

<sup>4</sup> Boutts v. Ellis, 17 Beav. 121; s. c. 4 De G., M. & G. 249.

instrument in writing. The Roman law was quite explicit on this point in the time of Justinian, for it required every donatio causâ mortis to be executed in the presence of five witnesses ; thus getting rid of dangerous abuses which had long been felt to exist, and placing such donations on a like sound footing with general testamentary dispositions.<sup>1</sup>

These wholesome restraints upon a mode of transfer peculiarly liable to fraud have never been incorporated with the English law. Our gifts causâ mortis, on the contrary, may be established upon the oral testimony of a single unimpeached witness as to slight words and acts amounting to delivery; and this same delivery has been our boasted safeguard. But the question arises, Would our courts recognize a gift of this description, by deed of gift or other writing, without delivery? We think they would not, as a rule, unless the writing were executed with such formalities that it could be set up as a testamentary instrument, and regularly admitted to probate. And such appears to be the settled conclusion in England, though the precise point appears never to have been directly passed upon.<sup>2</sup> Deeds of gift, we have shown elsewhere, were always uncommon in most parts of the United States; while in States where they were formerly sanctioned, the practice has lost much of its old significance.<sup>3</sup> A deed of gift, it is true, will sometimes accompany delivery of possession, in a death-bed disposition; and so, too, have assignments, letters, and memoranda been found useful in a number of cases: all this, however, not, we presume, for affecting a transfer independently of delivery, but as clearly

<sup>1</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1070; 2 Kent Com. 444. Under Mexican law, gifts causâ mortis, require substantially the same formalities as wills. 66 Tex. 189.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 780; Thorold v. Thorold, 1 Phillim. 1. Lord Hardwicke and Lord Rosslyn appear to have thought otherwise, according to certain dicta in Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 440; Tate v. Hilbert, 2 Ves. Jr. 120.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 89. In a recent Massachusetts case it is clearly ruled that the delivery of an instrument will not operate as a gift causâ mortis where the property described fails of suitable delivery. McGrath v. Reynolds, 116 Mass. 566. And see Mr. Justice Matthews in Basket v. Has-sell, 107 U. S. 602; Barnum v. Reed, 136 Ill. 388.

evidencing the gift which took effect because of a legally sufficient delivery.<sup>1</sup> In general, to execute and deliver a deed of gift, without delivering the thing itself,—unless, indeed, it were the true means of yielding possession of or “delivering” an incorporeal right,—would seem hardly to come up to the standard of our law of gifts causâ mortis; and a deed of gift found among the maker’s papers after his death, and never delivered during his life at all, most assuredly confers no title whatever to the property described, if not duly executed as a last will and testament according to the statute.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Kemper v. Kemper, 1 Duvall, 401; Blake v. Lowe, 3 Desaus. 263; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Wms. Ex’rs, supra; Smith v. Downey, 3 Ired. Eq. 268; Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Humph. 597; Martin v. Ramsey, 5 Humph. 349; Gibson, C. J., in Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 17, 24.

The only case, English or American, which appeared to view deeds of gift causâ mortis differently, when the first edition of this work was prepared, is that of Meach v. Meach, decided in Vermont in 1852; and even here it is by no means certain that the chattels continued in the donor’s sole possession till his death. In this exceptional case, a man in peril of death executed one deed of all his real estate, and another of all his personal property, in favor of his wife,—both of which instruments were duly recorded a month before he died. Upon a bill for specific performance brought after his death against the heirs and next of kin, together with the personal representative, it was held that the deed of real estate could not be upheld, whether as a post-nuptial settlement, a gift causâ mortis, or a testamentary disposition; but the deed of personal property, which comprehended stock on his farm and choses in action, and, as it would appear, purported to carry all the estate of which the donor should be possessed at his death, was sustained as a good gift causâ mortis. Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591. The opinion of Redfield, C. J., in this case is remarkable for the boldness with which it applies equity remedies in aid of a donor’s purpose, and for its vigorous opposition to attempts, elsewhere noticed, to put limits to the amount capable of transfer by a gift causâ mortis. But in seeking to commend, rather than deplore, the policy of such gifts, the learned Chief Justice was not in true accord with the times. It is not unlikely that his views there set forth concerning deeds of gift causâ mortis have since undergone a change; for, according to 3 Redf. Wills, 2d ed. 339 (1870), this eminent writer restates the decision so as to show distinctly that the donee continued to have the control and management of the estate after the execution of the instrument,—a very important fact; and besides, in a note, he admits that the view may ultimately prevail that the deed of the donor merely is no sufficient delivery to create a good gift causâ mortis.

We have seen that a deed of gift inter vivos is upheld by way of estoppel against the donor. But qu. whether an estoppel should operate in the case of gifts like these, which

A deed of gift or formal assignment expressed absolutely, and as if to go into immediate effect, may be presumed to be intended as a gift inter vivos rather than causâ mortis, and, in the absence of special circumstances attending delivery, should be construed accordingly. There is an English case in point, where Lord Cottenham held that an assignment made by A., upon a bond purporting to "hereby assign and transfer the within bond or obligation," and all her "right, title, and interest thereto," to B., followed by the usual power-of-attorney clause, evinced no gift causâ mortis, though executed and delivered five days before her death, but an immediate and irrevocable gift.<sup>1</sup>

§ 180. Whether Delivery is dispensed with where Donee or Trustee is already in Possession. — While our decisions proceed, then, upon the apprehension that all gifts causâ mortis require delivery, they yet leave some room for inquiry as to whether there may not be circumstances which would dispense with the formal act of delivery; the donee taking control as such by virtue of some permission, and so making the transfer complete. That gifts inter vivos admit of such transfer cannot be disputed; and, on principle, the same privilege should extend to those of the present class.<sup>2</sup> Thus, if the dying donor wished to give causâ mortis that which the intended donee had already in possession, on some bailment or trust, — as a borrowed book, or a boat under his supervision, — might he not say, "I give you, to keep in case of my death," the book, or the boat, as the case might be, without requiring the thing to be brought to his bedside, and going through a pantomime of delivery usually deemed superfluous? And if, in pursuance of such a gift, the donee thereupon assumed and continued control, in the capacity of donee, the donor is permitted to revoke whenever he likes.

It should be added that a later American case, Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185, sustains a written declaration of trust without accompanying delivery, by way of gift causâ mortis.

We regard that decision as open to the gravest criticism.

<sup>1</sup> Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & Cr. 226. But cf. Meach v. Meach, 24 Vt. 591; Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17, as indicating that such a presumption should not be deemed conclusive.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 70.

would not the transaction be complete? There is a Kentucky case which bears in favor of such a gift causâ mortis; the circumstances showing, as it would appear, that a gift was made by a husband's relinquishing to his wife all claim on his part to a buggy and horse which she had in her possession.<sup>1</sup> But decidedly against such a doctrine is a recent Maine decision, which rests upon the impolicy of all gifts causâ mortis from the temptation they afford to perjury and fraud.<sup>2</sup>

To go a step farther: might not a gift causâ mortis be made by directing such borrower, bailee, or agent of the donor, to hold the property in case of death as a gift to a certain-named donee; and so carrying out, by the donor's words and the custodian's acts, an effectual gift to a third person for the donee, without an actual primary delivery by the donor? Even to this extent would the principle appear to be carried in the same Kentucky case; a gift to the wife being likewise sustained of certain promissory notes which were held by another, upon directions given the latter by the donor.<sup>3</sup> There are, on the other hand, cases which, without being quite explicit, have a decidedly opposite leaning, as though it might be ruled as before, that gifts causâ mortis really deserved, in this respect, less favor than gifts inter vivos, and ought to depend for their validity upon a strict delivery of possession by the donor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 181. How far Chancery aids Informal Delivery. — Notwithstanding the aid which chancery so readily affords for com-

<sup>1</sup> Southerland v. Southerland, 5 Bush, 591. And see Stevens v. Stevens, 2 Hun, 470.

<sup>2</sup> Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231. The doctrine, as plainly stated in the opinion, is to refuse to dispense with corporeal delivery in gifts causâ mortis, because such gifts ought to be restrained. For this author's view that all oral death-bed gifts are impolitic, see post, § 197.

<sup>3</sup> Southerland v. Southerland, supra. But the real facts of the case do not clearly appear from the report; while the decision, so far from being rested on the ground we have suggested, seems to have turned chiefly upon the meritorious character of the gift in that particular instance.

<sup>4</sup> See Walsh v. Studdart, 4 Dru. & War. 159; French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623; Miller v. Jeffress, 4 Gratt. 472; Fearing v. Jones, 149 Mass. 12; Smith v. Ferguson, 90 Ind. 229; Case v. Dennison, 9 R. I. 88, — none of which decisions need rest upon such a ground.

pleting informal delivery, and carrying one's intention into effect, it is doubtless the rule, that, if anything remains to be done by the donor which a court of equity would not have compelled him to do during his life, the gift causâ mortis cannot be a good one.<sup>1</sup>

§ 182. Part Delivery where the Gift was entire.—Where the gift causâ mortis purported to be entire, a delivery of part of the property will not suffice; though it would be otherwise if part delivery was distinctly made in the name of the whole.<sup>2</sup>

§ 183. Execution on Donee's Part; Acceptance and Continuous Possession.—We now come to the acts requisite on the part of the donee to complete a gift causâ mortis. Acceptance corresponds to delivery, and is doubtless, in most cases, if not altogether, the rounding act of the donation. And while, in all such death dispositions, the acceptance of what has been beneficially bestowed is often lost sight of, or rather will be taken for granted, no such presumption can here prevail against plain evidence to the contrary, any more than in gifts inter vivos. By acceptance is here meant acceptance in the character of donee; or, it may be, of a trustee with control for the intended donee; not simply the taking possession. That acceptance is meant which harmonizes with the donor's purpose of giving, as evinced by his own acts and conduct.<sup>3</sup> Acceptance is presumed in all beneficial cases unless the contrary appears.

But it should be further observed that gifts causâ mortis admit of an acceptance by the real beneficiary after the donor's death, in certain instances; any intermediate acceptance by one for another's benefit meanwhile being preliminary rather than final. The gift causâ mortis directly to a donee requires, at least, the acceptance conditional upon ensuing death (which is always appropriate to such transfers) to render it complete ; and acceptance in trust upon a like condition must attend the donor's delivery to any third person for the donee ; but when such third person receives possession, as often happens, to give to the donee only in case of the donor's death the acceptance which gives final and full effect to the gift necessarily awaits the issue of the peril, and is postponed to the donor's death.<sup>1</sup> A gift causâ mortis is valid even though the intended beneficiary knew nothing of it until after the donee's death, provided nothing appears to repel the presumption that the donee then accepted;<sup>2</sup> but otherwise, if he then refused.

<sup>1</sup> See Lord Eldon, in Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n. s. 497. Cf. opinion in Dillon, Re, 44 Ch. Div. 76.

<sup>2</sup> McGrath v. Reynolds, 116 Mass. 566.

<sup>3</sup> Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244; Delmotte v. Taylor, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 417; Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147; supra, §§ 90-92.

Such acceptance, however, as completes the gift causâ mortis in its conditional character, and corresponds strictly with a donor's act of delivery, must be followed by continuous possession and control of the property till the donor's death ; and this for reasons which will more fully appear when we come to consider the revocability of such gifts.<sup>3</sup> And if a gift causâ mortis is through some third person or trustee, the gift is not completed unless such third person accepts accordingly or takes possession of the thing before the donor dies.<sup>4</sup> But equivocal acts by the donee or trustee after a full delivery and acceptance are not to be deemed a redelivery or refusal of the gift.<sup>5</sup>

§ 184. Proof of Execution to sustain a Gift Causâ Mortis. — A few words as to the proof of execution needful to sustain a gift causâ mortis. The same general principles, mutatis mutandis, which establish delivery in gifts inter vivos, will hold good here ; with this consideration always kept in view,

<sup>1</sup> See Sessions v. Moseley, 4 Cush. 87, per curiam.

<sup>2</sup> Dunlap v. Dunlap, 94 Mich. 11 ; 123 Ind. 321.

<sup>3</sup> Reddel v. Dobree, 10 Sim. 244 ; Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324 ; Borneman v. Sidlinger, 15 Me. 429, § 188 ; 80 Me. 152.

<sup>4</sup> Wilcox v. Matteson, 53 Wis. 23. Here the dying person desired his nurse to take a pocket-book from under the bed and give it to A. when she came. Nothing more being done till after his death, the gift causâ mortis failed of execution.

<sup>5</sup> Corle v. Monkhouse, 50 N. J. Eq. 537. Here the husband handed money to the wife, intentionally giving, and she took it, intentionally accepting, and then put the money back in his desk, which both controlled. Cf. Woodburn v. Woodburn, 123 Ill. 608.

that fraud casts its most alluring looks towards a dying person's bedside, and tempts the by-stander to lay hold of what he may, before a probate court can take jurisdiction, and to appropriate, on the plea that he who shall never return to claim his own had turned it over to him as a farewell gift. Possession being once in his favor, time and stealth, he thinks, will do the rest.

Nothing, then, can be plainer than that possession of the thing alone does not establish delivery as a gift causâ mortis; and this more especially where the claimant had opportunity of obtaining wrongful possession before or just after the owner's decease;<sup>1</sup> or where the evidence consists with the idea that possession was given for some different purpose.<sup>2</sup> On the contrary, the title being impeached by the proper party in interest, the possessor should show satisfactorily: first, that the property was suitably delivered to or for his use; next, that this delivery was by way of gift; lastly, so far as this be needful to the title, whether the gift was a gift causâ mortis, or a gift inter vivos. Upon him who claims as donee is the burden of proof.<sup>3</sup> And yet as to such a gift, under our present practice the testimony of one credible, competent, and unimpeached witness, is sufficient to establish it.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Lounsbury v. Depew, 28 Barb. 44; Cutting v. Gilman, 41 N. H. 147; Delmotte v. Taylor, 1 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 417; Kenney v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 319.

<sup>2</sup> As, to take the instrument and place it among the dying person's papers. 152 Mass. 5; Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 412.

<sup>3</sup> See Hebb v. Hebb, 5 Gill, 506; Cosnahan v. Grice, 15 Moore P. C. 215; Walter v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 92; Hayslep v. Gymer, 1 Ad. & Ell. 162; Conklin v. Conklin, 20 Hun, 278; 136 Ill. 388; 64 Cal. 346; Yancey v. Field, 85 Va. 756. The surrounding circumstances are material to the issue, wherever the donor's intention is obscure. And, among those worthy of especial mention in the present connection are these: that the donor was or was not under some moral obligation to the donee for services rendered; that, supposing he was, the gift was or was not altogether disproportioned to those services. Smith v. Maine, 25 Barb. 33; Westerlo v. De Witt, 35 Barb. 215. For the mutual relations of the parties go far towards explaining their transactions; nor is it certain that what one receives from a dying man may not stand on the footing of sale, which is stronger than that of a gift. McCarty v. Kearnan, 86 Ill. 291. It is error to charge that a gift causâ mortis must be proved "beyond suspicion." Lewis v. Merritt, 113 N. Y. 386.

<sup>4</sup> Thomas v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1.

The words accompanying the act of delivery are an important element in determining the quo animo of the donor. And since the circumstances of a last illness will raise the presumption that the gift contemplated was causâ mortis rather than inter vivos, a dying donor need not expressly declare that the gift is conditional upon his death from the existing disorder ; for the condition will be presumed, though only words of gift were used, unless the evidence negatives such an implication.<sup>1</sup> No particular form of words is necessary to give effect to a gift causâ mortis.<sup>2</sup> And all questions relating to the fact of delivery, as well as of the capacity in which the person who receives the thing holds it, are usually to be left to a jury.<sup>3</sup>

The alleged donor's declaration of intention previous to the gift is admissible where the language used at the time of delivery was ambiguous. And his subsequent declarations, after delivering possession, that he had so given the property, are also sometimes admissible as against individuals who claim to hold by a privity of interest with the donor.<sup>4</sup> But such delivery cannot be established by his subsequent declarations, shortly before dying, to a person not connected with the gift.<sup>5</sup> And on the issue of gift causâ mortis, statements of the donor showing a previous and continuous purpose inconsistent with the alleged gift are admissible to contradict the donee's testimony.<sup>6</sup>

§ 185. How the Issue of Gift is determined in Practice.—It is the modern practice of the chancery courts of England, where any doubt exists, whether in point of fact there was that which would constitute a good gift causâ mortis of property legally subject to such gift, to direct an issue to try that fact.<sup>7</sup> A bill of equity, moreover, affords often the suitable course for testing title in the courts of this country, especially where the property in question is incorporeal.<sup>8</sup> But

<sup>1</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 772 ; Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 184.

<sup>2</sup> Kenistons v. Sceva, 54 N. H. 24.

<sup>3</sup> Dunn v. German-American Bank, 109 Mo. 90 ; 52 N. J. L. 215.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Maine, 25 Barb. 33.

<sup>5</sup> Rockwood v. Wiggin, 16 Gray, 402.

<sup>6</sup> Whitney v. Wheeler, 116 Mass. 490.

<sup>7</sup> 1 Wms. Ex'rs, 7th Eng. ed. 783.

<sup>8</sup> Rockwood v. Wiggin, 16 Gray,

the issue is quite commonly raised in a suit at law brought against the donee in possession, or the donor's representatives in possession, as the case may be, to recover the property improperly withheld from the party entitled to it.<sup>1</sup>

§ 186. Gift constituted by the Forgiveness of a Debt.—It is well settled that a gift causâ mortis, as well as a gift inter vivos, may consist in the forgiveness of a debt; this, however, being a matter for evidence.<sup>2</sup> But a loan cannot be construed into a gift causâ mortis upon evidence of some imperfect arrangement between donor and donee which was never carried out.<sup>3</sup>

CHAPTER VII.

GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; EFFECT OF EXECUTION.

§ 187. Effect of executing Gift as between Donor and Donee.—(5.) Having shown how gifts causâ mortis are executed, we proceed next to notice the effect of their execution as between donor and donee.

§ 188. The Same Subject; Gift Causâ Mortis is revocable.—The leading characteristic of executed gifts causâ mortis is revocability. An ordinary gift once completed by competent parties is, we have seen,<sup>4</sup> absolute and irrevocable as concerns 402; Southerland v. Southerland, 5 Bush, 591; Pennington v. Gittings, 2 Gill & J. 208.

<sup>1</sup> Grymes v. Hone, 49 N. Y. 17; Case v. Dennison, 9 R. I. 88; French v. Raymond, 39 Vt. 623.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, a gift of the present class was held established, where, upon a loan, the borrower had given the lender the following paper: "Received of D. £500, to bear interest at £4 per cent per annum;" and it was shown that this receipt was given to the borrower's servant by the dying creditor, saying that she wished the debt cancelled. Moore v. Darton, 4 De G. & Sm. 517. And, again, where a creditor declared that the money was the debtor's, and destroyed the bond or other security, which constituted the evidence of the debt. Gardner v. Gardner, 20 Wend. 526. And see Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 351; Meredith v. Watson, 23 E. L. & Eq. 250; Darland v. Taylor, 52 Iowa, 503; Lee v. Boak, 11 Gratt. 182.

<sup>3</sup> Henderson v. Henderson, 21 Mo. 379.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, § 103.

the donor, unless procured by fraud ; but so wavering is the title acquired by such a transfer causâ mortis, until fully confirmed by the donor's death as contemplated, that the gift is held specially revocable in three distinct instances,—(1st) by the donor's recovery from the particular peril ; (2d) by the death of the donee before him ; or (3d) by his own act revoking the gift.<sup>1</sup> All of these principles we have adopted from the civil law, which pronounces the donation causâ mortis conditional and ipso facto void if the donor escapes the supposed danger, or the donee dies before him, or the donor repents of the gift.<sup>2</sup> Of these three methods of revocation in their order.

§ 189. Revocation by Donor's Recovery from the Peril.—First. Revocation by the donor's recovery from the particular peril has been established in well-considered cases, English and American. Thus, in the English case of Staniland v. Willott, where the donor recovered from a paralytic stroke, which at the time threatened death, so as to be able to take a foreign journey, and, besides, to manage his affairs.<sup>3</sup> And, again, in Weston v. Hight, decided in Maine, where one dangerously ill with consumption so far escaped the peril contemplated as to attend to his ordinary business for eight months, though he finally died of the same disease.<sup>4</sup> Or where the apprehension arises from an intended perilous journey, and the giver returns in safety from that journey.<sup>5</sup> But the question may sometimes be a nice one ; for the mere rallying of one's faculties, followed soon by a relapse, and finally death, from the sickness originally contemplated, would hardly suffice for such a revocation. As Chief Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, has said, a transfer of this kind ought not to be disturbed “by the alternation of hope and

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. Donatio Causâ Mortis ; 2 Bl. Com. 514 ; 2 Kent Com. 444.

<sup>2</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1071. There might be a refusal of the gift by the donee, or his own voluntary redelivery by way of revocation and a gift back. But this cannot be inferred from doubtful circumstances. See § 183.

<sup>3</sup> Staniland v. Willott, 3 Mac. & G. 664.

<sup>4</sup> Weston v. Hight, 17 Me. 287. See also Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175.

<sup>5</sup> 18 Ill. App. 167. See § 154.

despair, dependent on the doubtful spinning of the die, but only by the turn-up of life.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 190. Revocation by Donee's Death before the Donor.—Second. Revocation by the donee's death before the donor is a principle which seems to be taken for granted at the English law, both from the reason of the thing and because it was the plain doctrine of Justinian's age.<sup>2</sup> The rule of lapsed legacies is quite analogous, though a gift causâ mortis is probably to be deemed more strictly personal to the donee than any legacy.<sup>3</sup> But the prior death of the third person charged with delivery to the donee after the donor's death would not, we suppose, invalidate the gift to the donee, if the latter himself survived the donor.<sup>4</sup>

§ 191. Revocation by Donor who repents of the Gift.—Third. Revocation by the donor's own act, or where, as the civilians would say, he repents of the gift, is established at our law by numerous decisions. As early as 1710 it was ruled by the Lord Chancellor that a gift causâ mortis is revocable during the donor's life, just as much as a will.<sup>5</sup> And by directing a return of the donated property, and resuming its possession as owner, the donor necessarily revokes and annuls his gift.<sup>6</sup> Nor is his declared intention to repossess himself of the property as his own, and his demand for the same, to be thwarted at any time by the custodian's unwillingness to surrender.<sup>7</sup> The property thus resumed by the original owner by revocation of his gift causâ mortis may be given away afterwards to some one else, or otherwise disposed of at the owner's pleasure.<sup>8</sup>

It is sometimes asked whether a gift causâ mortis would be revoked per se by the donor's subsequent will. It appears

<sup>1</sup> Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 17. But see supra, § 153, as to expectation of death, where this case is criticised.

<sup>2</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, §§ 1070, 1071.

<sup>3</sup> See Merchant v. Merchant, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 432.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. But see Borneman v. Sidlinger, 15 Me. 429.

<sup>5</sup> Jones v. Selby, Prec. Ch. 300.

<sup>6</sup> Bunn v. Markham, 7 Taunt. 230; Merchant v. Merchant, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 432; Wigle v. Wigle, 6 Watts, 522; Parker v. Marston, 27 Me. 196.

<sup>7</sup> Merchant v. Merchant, supra; Doran v. Doran, 99 Cal. 311.

<sup>8</sup> Parker v. Marston, 27 Me. 196.

that it would not; and for this technical reason, that a will does not operate until after the testator's death, at which precise point of time the gift would, from its very nature, become irrevocable.<sup>1</sup>

§ 192. Other Special Causes of Revocation; Fraud, Force, etc. — To the above enumerated special causes of revocation may perhaps be added in certain instances another, — the subsequent posthumous birth of a child to the donor. Under the French code, ordinary donations are absolutely revoked by the birth of children. And it is held in New York, that where the local statute causes the revocation of one's will by the subsequent birth of a child, the same consequence would follow a gift causâ mortis.<sup>2</sup>

Concerning revocation, it need hardly be added that on the ground of mental incapacity, or fraud, force, or palpable error, gifts causâ mortis might be annulled like ordinary gifts; nor that it is in the power of the parties concerned in the donation, by their own mutual assent, properly manifested, to put an end to the transfer.<sup>3</sup> But there appears to have been a peculiar class of cases recognized by the Roman law: namely, where a donor makes his donation causâ mortis, and engages specially not to revoke it, the effect of which was to render the gift irrevocable.<sup>4</sup> Our post obit deeds are somewhat of this description; but any ordinary stipulation not to revoke a parol gift causâ mortis at our law would not strengthen the donee's title, since, after all, gifts are without consideration, and such a stipulation is nudum pactum.

§ 193. Controversies between Donee and Donor's Representatives. — The donee of a gift causâ mortis derives his title directly from the donor, and not from the donor's executor or other personal representative. The assent of such representative, therefore, after the donor's death, is not in any way essential to the donee's title; nor has the executor or ad-

<sup>1</sup> Jones v. Selby, Prec. Ch. 300; 140 Ind. 455. But see 31 Ill. App. Hambrooke v. Simmons, 4 Russ. 25; 28.

Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. 17; <sup>2</sup> Bloomer v. Bloomer, 2 Bradf. Merchant v. Merchant, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 339; 2 Burge, 205.

Surr. (N. Y.) 432; Brunson v. Henry, <sup>3</sup> Supra, § 60.

<sup>4</sup> Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 1070.

ministrator any claim whatever upon the property for the ordinary purposes of administration and the claims of distributees.<sup>1</sup> If the donor's executor or administrator receives the thing and converts it, the donee may sue him in assumpsit.<sup>2</sup> And where the donee in possession gives up the property under a misapprehension of his rights, and acting with the advice of counsel, he is not debarred from recompense on making his title good under a suit brought to recover.<sup>3</sup> So, too, if the gift be of a promissory note or some other negotiable chose evidenced by a voucher, which the donee possesses, the latter may sue the party liable thereon, though such party has already settled with the donor's representative without requiring the voucher to be produced.<sup>4</sup>

The executor or administrator of an alleged donor has corresponding rights against all persons retaining property of the deceased under the fictitious claim of donees causâ mortis; and it is his duty to dispossess them.<sup>5</sup>

§ 194. Effect of executing Gift as concerns Donor's Creditors, etc. — (6.) We come now to the effect of the execution of a gift causâ mortis as to third persons, including the donor's creditors. The leading principle to be here applied differs not from that already considered under gifts inter vivos; though, the issue being practically postponed until after the donor's death, the discussion takes a narrower range. A gift causâ mortis cannot be allowed to defeat the just claims of creditors; and as to existing creditors, at least, it cannot avail an insolvent's estate that fraud was not actually intended. Such is the rule of civilized Europe and America, of both the civil and common law.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gaunt v. Tucker, 18 Ala. 27; Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59.

<sup>2</sup> Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59. Local statutes regulate these matters in various respects.

<sup>3</sup> Westerlo v. De Witt, 36 N. Y. 340.

<sup>4</sup> House v. Grant, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 296.

<sup>5</sup> Thus, where, in a case of stock privileges, which were incorrectly deemed a subject of gifts causâ

mortis, the executor had paid for the new scrip after the testator's death, and directed an issue of the same in the name of the supposed donee, the payment was afterwards disallowed in his probate accounts. Egerton v. Egerton, 17 N. J. Eq. 419.

<sup>6</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 514; Dig. 39, 6, 17; 2 Kent Com. 448, citing Voet Com. ad Pand. 39, 5, § 20, and Pothier Traité des Donations, sec. 3, art. 1, § 2. And see supra, §§ 118-120.

Upon an utter deficiency of assets, then, to pay the lawful claims of creditors from the donor's estate, and the exhaustion of funds for legacies and distributive shares, any gift causâ mortis must give way, so far as may be requisite to discharge lawful demands; in which case the executor or administrator may sue to recover the gift, or its value, on behalf of creditors, and the donee must respond accordingly.<sup>1</sup>

---

CHAPTER VIII.

QUALIFIED GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS; CONCLUDING OBSERVATIONS.

§ 195. Special Qualifications or Conditions annexed to Gifts Causâ Mortis. — (7.) As to qualified gifts causâ mortis. Besides the condition of expected death, and the general revocable character of such gifts, there may be special qualifications annexed to the gift; though instances of the kind rarely occur in practice. Thus it is held that a gift causâ mortis may be good, even when coupled with the trust that the donee shall provide for the donor's funeral.<sup>2</sup> Such a gift, too, may be conditioned to be in full of the donee's share in the donor's estate; in which case the donee cannot claim a distributive share without surrendering or accounting for the donation.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Drury v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 406; Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 434; Michener v. Dale, 23 Penn. St. 59; Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray, 418; Borneman v. Sidlinger, 15 Me. 429; Dunn v. German-American Bank, 109 Mo. 90. But as to thus obstructing the donee causâ mortis who is himself a creditor, see Pierce v. Five Cents Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425. It is held that an executor or administrator, who has admitted claims made against his intestate's estate before they were barred by the special statute of limitations provided for such cases, and has agreed with the creditors to bring a suit for their benefit to recover a gift causâ mortis, may sue after the expiration of such statute of limitations; and that, having brought a bill in equity for that purpose, he may likewise recover his costs and the incidental administration expenses, if the donee, instead of admitting a liability for such debts, had undertaken to oppose the suit. Chase v. Redding, 13 Gray, 418.

<sup>2</sup> Hills v. Hills, 8 M. & W. 401.

<sup>3</sup> Currie v. Steele, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 542.

But a qualified gift causâ mortis is not sustainable as such, where, by its express terms and conditions, no control of the fund is conferred until after the donor's death.<sup>1</sup>

§ 196. Trusts or Conditions coupled with a Gift Causâ Mortis must be contemporaneous, certain, etc.—Any trust or condition coupled with a gift causâ mortis must be contemporaneous, or so incorporated with it as to form part of the donation.<sup>2</sup> And in order that the gift causâ mortis in trust be valid, the persons who are to take, and also their respective portions, must be clearly designated.<sup>3</sup> But such a gift is valid, although taken by the trustee for beneficiaries upon a trust, the terms and limitations of which are prescribed by the donor, and may vary according to subsequent events.<sup>4</sup> Wherever, in fine, a trust or condition is annexed to the gift causâ mortis, the usual tests as to the validity of a trust should be applied;<sup>5</sup> and yet trusts of this kind which aim to substitute oral for written testamentary directions in settling and distributing an estate ought not to be encouraged far.<sup>6</sup>

§ 197. Concluding Observations; Impolicy of Informal Gifts Causâ Mortis.—(8.) As to the general policy of gifts causâ mortis little need be added. The courts have in some instances spoken favorably of such transfers. Thus, Sir John Romilly, M. R., in recognizing that modern doctrine, not as yet hedged within sure limits, under which is sanctioned the gift of incorporeal debts by the manual delivery of unindorsed

<sup>1</sup> Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 614. Such a delivery, reserving the control to the donor himself during his life, is inconsistent with the intention of a gift, and is available to the donee, if at all, only as a testamentary disposition. Ib. And see supra, §§ 131, 161.

<sup>2</sup> Dunne v. Boyd, 8 Ir. R. Eq. 609.

<sup>3</sup> Sheedy v. Roach, 124 Mass. 472; Gano v. Fisk, 43 Ohio St. 462; McCord v. McCord, 77 Mo. 166; 89 Mo. 546; Smith v. Ferguson, 90 Ind. 229; Barnum v. Reed, 136 Ill. 388. Where the trust fails by being ineffectually declared, the trustee cannot claim the gift for his own benefit. 124 Mass. 472.

<sup>4</sup> Clough v. Clough, 117 Mass. 83.

<sup>5</sup> A qualified gift causâ mortis is not sustainable as such when the property is bestowed as a trust fund for benevolent uses at one's unlimited discretion. Dole v. Lincoln, 31 Me. 422.

<sup>6</sup> Gano v. Fisk, and other cases, supra. But a trust as simple as to bury decently, place a headstone, pay debts, and keep the balance as a gift, has been sustained. Curtis v. Portland Savings Bank, 77 Me. 151. Cf. 90 Ind. 229.

and unassigned securities perhaps of immense value, says : "It does seem to be a more healthful state of the law, that the question whether it is a good donatio mortis causâ should not depend upon a mere technicality ; namely, upon whether a deceased person has actually written his name upon the back of a promissory note when he intended the donee to have the full benefit of it."<sup>1</sup> But the later experience of the courts with this same subject must tend to convince the thoughtful that we are driving upon breakers which threaten to make utter wreck of our legislative barriers against informal testamentary dispositions. In fact, gifts causâ mortis should constitute an exception, and not the rule. We should feel that statutes of distribution offer primarily the simplest and wisest disposition of a dead man's wealth ; that the policy of those statutes should hardly be disturbed, when death confronts the owner, save by his carefully written, carefully executed, and carefully witnessed last will and testament ; that nothing beyond this, except it be the bestowal of sundry trifling keepsakes and farewell tokens among friends and dependants, ought to disturb the sanctity of an occasion when worldly possessions are but dross to the owner.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Veal v. Veal, as reported 6 Jur. n. s. 528 ; s. c. 27 Beav. 303, 309.

<sup>2</sup> If more than this favor should be extended to gifts causâ mortis (we are now speaking of policy, and not of legal precedent), then those same safeguards, which the law has wisely thrown about testamentary dispositions, — safeguards not even sufficient in these days to prevent the reckless and greedy from seeking to set up against the living the gifts they have wrested from the enfeebled and dying, — are the least which representatives and those rightfully interested in the estate can demand in their own behalf. For the latter might by agreement, if so disposed, carry out the donor's last wishes to the utmost, however informally expressed ; and if their good-will cannot be depended upon, in furtherance of the design, what course can be more appropriate than to accompany the gift by a written instrument, signed and duly witnessed, such as Justinian decreed for the Romans ? Pens, ink, and paper are almost always at hand ; and in this age of popular education, the means of applying them should not often be thought difficult. But if time presses, then let an act which of itself calls for deliberation fail, rather than hastily set up strangers against those nearest allied by blood or marriage, and run the risk of alienating one's own kindred, whose claims are first, for the sake of earning after death the uncertain gratitude of some stranger. Secrecy in extensive gifts of this kind is never desirable ; the worthy recipient must take an unpleasant onus in a title likely to be assailed and of doubtful proof ; while

Since the first gap was made in the law of delivery on behalf of incorporeal property gifts, the dangers attending these death-bed dispositions have constantly grown. The courts say they must extend the path, yet they regret its direction. Lord Eldon himself, even in the act of clearing away, on equitable considerations, the most formidable barrier to such gifts which common-law conservatism had left standing, said: "Improvements in the law, or some things which have been considered improvements, have been lately proposed; and if, among those things called improvements, this donatio mortis causâ were struck out of our law altogether, it would be quite as well."<sup>1</sup> And, at the present day, when the effort to carry out a giver's intention has resulted in encouragement to a giver to leave his deliberate intention in lasting doubt, where legal consistency seems to require reluctant courts to uphold a nurse in sole attendance upon some foolish person in carrying off unassigned stock, bonds, and promissory notes, with little more ado than floor-sweepings or waste paper, utterly regardless of equal claims of kindred, and where one with opportunity of secret access to a dying person's effects or trusted with their custody, has strong inducement to perjury, it is no wonder that we find the reports full of judicial regrets that the gift causâ mortis was ever admitted into our law at all.<sup>2</sup>

§ 198. The Same Subject; Legislative Restraints upon Such Gifts desirable.—A leaf from the Roman history of donations

the deceitful one takes too easy risks with the heirs whom he means to defraud. See, further, this writer's article on "Oral Wills and Death-Bed Gifts" in English Law Quarterly Review, October, 1886.

<sup>1</sup> Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Bligh, n.s. 533.

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., Walsh v. Sexton, 55 Barb. 251; Tillinghast v. Wheaton, 8 R. I. 536. Pierce v. Five Cents Savings Bank, 129 Mass. 425, appears to sanction the delivery of a sealed package containing money, bank books, and securities, together with a donor's written directions, as tantamount to constituting one his executor, under a regularly executed will, in favor of certain legatees; and this though the person receiving the package had no definite knowledge of its contents. If Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185, be regarded as affording a correct precedent (which, semble, it does not), still more completely may the statute of wills be nullified by a dying person. And see (1895) Thomas v. Lewis, 89 Va. 1 (with a minority dissent), which is perhaps the harshest instance of gift causâ mortis as yet afforded.

may well serve us at last. The legislature may in time, and should, extend to gifts causâ mortis the solemnities requisite for the execution of wills; or if these transfers are to be still kept up without such solemn execution, — as they might properly be for slight keepsakes and memorials, from one both just and generous with his goods, — then there should be provision that no gift causâ mortis, resting upon mere delivery, and without such execution, should operate to deprive those legally entitled in case of intestacy, beyond a certain proportion of the donor's entire estate.<sup>1</sup> Until public policy works up to this point, the courts may well apply the maxim put forward in one of our late American decisions: "It is far better that occasionally a gift of this kind fail, than that the rules of law be so relaxed as to encourage fraud and perjury."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See supra, §§ 144, 179.

<sup>2</sup> Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 324.

PART VI.

TITLE TO PERSONAL PROPERTY BY SALE.

---

CHAPTER I.

LEADING ESSENTIALS OF A SALE.

§ 199. General Observations as to the Law of Sales of Personal Property.—Title by sale, now to be discussed for the remainder of this volume, is by far the most important, besides being the most difficult, subject for treatment under the head of Personal Property. Transfers of this character, beginning in simple barter or exchange for mutual convenience and profit; next, with the substitution, as civilization goes forward, of a local money standard; lastly, spreading out, under the influence of the commercial spirit, into a universal interchange, upon principles still deeply rooted, but ramifying in all directions, and demanding the world's medium of exchange as the standard of price,—these constitute the mainspring of worldly business activity and worldly prosperity. Here is a method of acquisition existing by pure act of the parties; founded in contract; applicable to every species of property, and to property alone; commended to all conditions of mankind by the requirement of a substantial equivalent, or quid pro quo, so that, unlike the case of gift, each party may hope to gain, and neither expect to lose, by the transaction. All nations and all mankind are found within the range of this law of sales in the course of each individual experience.

But the law of sales, technically speaking, may fairly be thought, in these days, to embrace personal property alone; for though one in common phrase talks of real as well as personal estate sales, lawyers now incline to confine the term to personal property alone, classing the corresponding real-estate cases under the less obvious but fairly equivalent title of “venders and purchasers.” It is well that the legal transfers of property under these two grand divisions should be kept apart; for the law, in truth, treats them very differently the one from the other. Sales, in the technical or more limited sense of personal property transactions, must be, at all events, the subject of exclusive attention in these pages.

§ 200. Definition of Sale; its Main Characteristics. — A sale is a present transfer by mutual agreement of the absolute or general title to certain property, — that is to say here, to certain personal property, — for a certain price.<sup>1</sup> That it is a transfer of the absolute or general title should distinguish it from loan, hire, and the taking of property by way of bailment or trust generally; a matter, however, not always of easy discrimination, as we shall take occasion to show hereafter.<sup>2</sup> That the transfer is by mutual agreement, indicates clearly enough that sales are a species of contract, and require, like other contracts, to be executed by competent parties; not by those who, from immaturity or incapacity of mind, or other legal disability, are unable to make a binding agreement.<sup>3</sup> That the transfer is essentially upon consideration distinguishes it from gifts, which are voluntary and without consideration, as we have seen.<sup>4</sup> And, once more, that there is a price, shows, as some of our later writers earnestly insist, that by sales the courts refer, at the present day, to transactions conducted on a money basis.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 1; Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 496; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1; 2 Kent Com. 468; Bouv. Dict. “Sale.” It is a matter of regret that Mr. Benjamin, in his excellent work on Sales, to which we shall frequently have occasion to allude, did not, in the earlier editions prepared by himself, see fit to make permanent subdivisions of his text by running sections or star pages, so as to allow of a more precise citation applicable to all editions alike. The 1883 edition is published, however, with section divisions.

<sup>2</sup> Sch. Bailments, § 7; supra, § 38.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 58, 59; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 2; Mackaness v. Long, 85 Penn. St. 158.

<sup>4</sup> § 56; Commonwealth v. Packard, 5 Gray, 101.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1; Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 496; Story Sales, § 216.

§ 201. Barter or Exchange distinguished from Sale.—A word, however, as to barter, which may be taken as the germ of our modern sale. The contract of barter is that by which parties exchange goods for goods, or one thing for another. Barter prevails in a rude age. It was the old primitive trade of England, and likewise of her colonies; and it still continues between Indians and backwoodsmen. The large trade of furs in exchange for the necessities of life, on the Canadian and Mississippi frontiers, during the last century, serves as a memorable example of this sort of transfer. Each party to a barter doubtless has his mental standard of value; but it takes a positive law, fixing money rates, which is mutually recognized, and to which both parties may readily refer from familiarity with the standard, to bring sales proper into their rightful place. When this is accomplished, the old barter becomes thenceforward commonly resolved into two separate transfers, each with its declared or implied price; and every transfer for value may stand by itself, with no need at all of a corresponding one to balance; while, if there be such corresponding one, the legal inclination is to treat them as independent and not mutual transfers. Thus does barter or exchange sink out of judicial contemplation, such traffic rather anticipating the reports than keeping along with them.

Blackstone, who had little space to bestow upon the law of sales, is rather indifferent to distinctions between sale and exchange, following the fashion of his time; and, declaring that there is no difference between them in law, he treats of them both under the general denomination of sales.<sup>1</sup> Kent enlarges more on the subject, as had then become needful; but in defining a sale as a transfer “for a valuable consideration,” he, too, uses language broad enough to include barter.<sup>2</sup> Our prevailing disposition at this day seems to be, however, to regard barter or exchange as an analogous, rather than identical, topic with sale.<sup>3</sup> And yet, after all, the rules of

<sup>1</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 446, 447.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 468.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1;

Sheldon v. Cox, 3 B. & C. 420;

Hands v. Burton, 9 East, 349; Story

Sales, § 216; Bouv. Dict. “Sale.”

law applicable to a sale and exchange are substantially the same ; the only point of difference worth noticing appears to lie in the form of pleading where suit is brought for a breach ;<sup>1</sup> and it may well be assumed that any act of legislation which applies to sales would not by inference exclude a barter.<sup>2</sup>

So, too, should it be added, irrespective of barter, that sales are not universally made for a strict money payment ; for, to say nothing of payment in commercial paper, a purchase is sometimes made of articles of a certain kind, at a price payable in articles of another certain kind, — a transaction which cannot be deemed an exchange of goods, or even a purchase of the latter kind of articles.<sup>3</sup>

§ 202. Sales classified ; Absolute or Qualified, Executed or Executory, of Things Specific or not Specific, Legal or Illegal, Private or Public. — Sales may be variously classified, according to the aspect from which the particular transfer is regarded. There are absolute sales, or those which are made and completed without qualification of any kind ; and there are qualified or conditional sales, which depend for their validity upon the fulfilment of some condition. There are executed or complete sales, whereby the property to the thing sold becomes vested in the buyer, because the sale is concluded ; and there are executory sales (or rather sales resting in executory agreement), in which the property has not yet passed from the seller, because something yet remains to complete the sale. There are sales of specific things, where the chattels are at once identified and appropriated to the contract ; and there are sales of things not specific, or a sort of contract for the supply of chattels answering a particular description, but not yet identified and appropriated. There are legal sales ; and there are sales illegal or fraudulent. There are private sales, which is the usual case of sale transactions between man and man ; and there are public sales,

<sup>1</sup> Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457 ; Mitchell v. Gile, 12 N. H. 390.

<sup>2</sup> Howard v. Harris, 8 Allen, 297, per Bigelow, C. J. And see Straus v. Herman, 45 Ga. 222 ; Carey v. Guillow, 105 Mass. 18 ; Bixter v.

Saylor, 68 Penn. St. 146, as to rescinding a barter for fraud.

<sup>3</sup> Herrick v. Carter, 56 Barb. 41 ; Hale v. Hays, 54 N. Y. 389. And see § 56.

where the property is put up at auction, to go to the highest bidder, — the ordinary law of sales being here subjected to some striking modifications. All of these classes will claim attention as our investigation proceeds, and the distinctions they suggest should never be lost sight of.

§ 203. Sales classified; Involuntary or Judicial Sales. — And, once more, though most sales are to be deemed voluntary, there exists (independently of all questions of fraud in a bargain) a class of involuntary sales. Such sales are made without the owner's consent, theoretically speaking; in other words, not by himself, but by some officer of the law, such as a marshal or sheriff, who acts in obedience to the mandate of the court, and on behalf of creditors; or, perhaps, as in the instance of a mortgagee with power of sale, by the creditor himself on his own behalf; all these by auction usually, the auctioneer being employed by the seller. To the class of involuntary sales should be referred all sales on execution or in bankruptcy, and, in short, whatever are termed forced sales. The term "judicial sale" is well applied to transfers of this description, so far as they have the characteristic of a court's direction or approval; and, indeed, the same term might likewise extend to some others not so clearly involuntary or forced; such as sales by executors or administrators, guardians, and trustees. To examine at any length sales of this description — which, indeed, are not quite homogeneous — would seem hardly appropriate to this treatise. The usual principles of the law of sales largely apply, and more particularly those of public or auction sales; beyond which there is little room for generalizing, without entering into details of local practice. The law of judicial sales, too, concerns real far more than personal property. But there is this peculiarity about such sales: that, unlike ordinary sales of chattels carrying an implied warranty of the seller's title, these involuntary or judicial sales have the effect, by a sort of quitclaim, of transferring possession with whatever right and title the holder may have had, and, beyond this, insuring to the purchaser only a jurisdiction in the premises, or authority to make the sale.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. "Judicial Sale."

§ 204. Parties to a Sale; Bargain and Sale; Sales of Corporeal or Incorporeal Things. — To every sale there are two primary parties: one, the seller, or vendor; the other, the buyer, vendee, or purchaser, — a sale being sometimes conducted for one or both principals, however, through agents, such as brokers, factors, or commission merchants. A third party will sometimes intervene as valuer or tester. The transaction, though with reference more appropriately to the details of agreement than to the final result, is often known as a bargain; the full expression, in the old books on real property, being “bargain and sale,” which modern usage extends to chattels.<sup>1</sup>

The legal doctrines of sale are discussed more with reference to corporeal than incorporeal property, — to goods, wares, and merchandise particularly; but there is no leading difference between our two classes, save so far as might arise from the peculiar nature of the property in question, which, if founded in a money right, or debt or claim of some sort, brings a third party, namely, the primary debtor or fundholder, within view of the transfer, and so may call for additional rules.

§ 205. Three Leading Essentials; Thing to be sold, Price, Mutual Assent, etc. — Waiving any special inquiry as to parties competent to contract, we lay down at the outset these three leading essentials to every sale: (1st) a thing to be sold; (2d) a price; (3d) mutual assent to the transfer of the thing at the price. These three essentials may be separately treated, after the traditionary custom with writers on sales; who, however, in trying to keep the thing, the price, and the mutual assent quite apart, in abstract contemplation, have sometimes caused confusion to themselves and their readers, — the fact being that this contract idea permeates the whole substance, making the question not alone of a thing and a price and a mutual assent, but, further, of the particular thing and the particular price, and of mutual assent as applicable to both.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. “Bargain.”

<sup>2</sup> Kent Com. 468; Gardner v. Lane,

2 See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1; 12 Allen, 39; Story Sales, § 1.

§ 206. A Thing to be sold is essential to Every Sale. — (1st.) There must be a thing to be sold. For though a sale is a transfer founded in contract, the transfer must operate upon property, — and, here, upon personal property, — the suitable subject of transfer. What is not in existence, as property, when the title passes, cannot be sold, though it has previously existed, or may come into existence hereafter; and whatever might be said of executory contracts of sale to take full effect hereafter, a sale, as such, stops not short of full execution, of delivery and acceptance as a finality, of at least an ideal passage of title in something definite and identical. And while there might be the complete sale of something only constructively in the seller's possession, there can be no sale of that which it is logically impossible that any one at the time owns.<sup>1</sup>

§ 207. Sale of a Thing which has ceased to exist. — An instance of that which was the subject of property, but continues such no longer, is that of a horse which I undertake to sell to-day, but which, as it appears after the bargain is made, died yesterday. The sale is void, for the transfer of title contemplated cannot possibly occur, though if the contract intended the sale of a dead animal's carcass, that would be another subject-matter. And so would it be with the sale of goods in some warehouse, which prove to have been already burnt up. Nor would it avail the seller that he had bargained in good faith, believing that the thing really existed. The civilians agree with us on these points.<sup>2</sup> But the further legal question arises, whether, if the thing be partially and not totally destroyed and out of existence, the sale of the whole can carry the residue. The better opinion is, that the question of sale or no sale should here be left to the buyer's option; for while he ought to be allowed what is left, on a reasonable abatement of the original price, if he desires to stand to the bargain, yet he ought not to be forced, since the partial destruction of the thing may materially have affected the original inducement to its purchase. But the question, as one of common law, is not settled by authority.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 468; Story Sales, house, 7 East, 558; Thompson v. § 184; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 4. Gould, 20 Pick. 139; Franklin v.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 468; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 4; Hinde v. White- Long, 7 Gill & J. 407.

So, too, the sale of an annuity dependent on a certain life is null, when it turns out that the life had already expired.<sup>2</sup> And a contract having been made for selling a specific future crop from a specific piece of land, the seller is excused from completing the bargain if the crop afterward perish without his fault so as to render execution by delivery impossible.<sup>3</sup> In short, the nullity of such a sale would operate the same if the thing ceased to exist at any time before the contract was to be actually executed.<sup>4</sup>

§ 208. Sale of that which some one else Owns.—A cargo of corn loaded on a vessel not yet arrived in port was sold May 15th. It proved afterwards that the corn had become heated, and was discharged by the master at an intermediate port, and there properly sold on the 21st of April. The court held, therefore, that the later sale of May 15th could be repudiated by the purchaser. The decision was correct; for, so far as the parties to the later bargain were concerned, there had been no subject-matter of sale whatever.<sup>5</sup> Even supposing one may quitclaim an uncertain interest or an imperfect title to a thing, he cannot make a valid bargain and sale of that thing as his own, whose title has already passed out of him.<sup>6</sup>

§ 209. Sale of what has not yet come into Existence.—Again, the sale of that which has not come into existence as property at the date of transfer is null. But with the growth of equity jurisprudence, and the legal recognition of incorporeal rights as a subject of transfer, has come a decided change in the old rule; and that in which one has a poten-

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 468, 469, citing Papinian and Pothier, of the civilians.

<sup>2</sup> Strickland v. Turner, 7 Ex. 208.

<sup>3</sup> Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 462; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826. And see Conditions, infra, c. 5.

<sup>4</sup> Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62.

<sup>5</sup> Couturier v. Hastie, 9 Ex. 102; 5 H. L. Cas. 673, reversing 8 Ex. 40. See Warranty, infra, c. 6.

<sup>6</sup> See Thrall v. Hill, 110 Mass. 330.

tial interest may now be sold, though not a mere possibility coupled with no interest whatever, potential or actual. Such prospective interests as freight or wages to be earned on a certain voyage, the reversionary rights of heirs, and future earnings on some existing contract of service, are suitable subjects of sale and assignment.<sup>1</sup> So, too, is the sale good of all the year's wool on one's own sheep; of all the milk his own cows will yield for such a period, or of the next season's crop from his own farm or orchard; each of these sales contemplating in effect the product of something which the seller already owns.<sup>2</sup> So, there may be a valid sale of the future offspring of an animal.<sup>3</sup> But, on the other hand, the sale of the crops on somebody else's farm would not be good; nor the milk of another's cows, nor the wool from another's sheep; nor, in a word, the profits, income, or increase of that which is not yet the subject of one's ownership, either as income or capital, even though a future ownership therein be contemplated.<sup>4</sup> A mere possibility, too, without any present interest, which grows out of no present property in the seller nor an existing contract to which he is a party, cannot be the subject of actual sale.<sup>5</sup>

It must be confessed, however, that the line of distinction is not always clearly kept between salable and unsalable interests in things with a potential existence. Thus it is in accordance with our rule to hold the sale by a pearl fisherman good of any pearls that may be found in oysters he owns. But the civilians, followed by Mr. Story, have further said, upon the strength of this illustration, that an expectation dependent upon a chance may be sold, — a proposition which is not readily taken into the mind, nor, as it seems, true in

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 72-86.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Bellows v. Wells, 36 Vt. 599; Jones v. Richardson, 10 Met. 481; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 4; Story Sales, § 186; Robinson v. Macdonnel, 5 M. & S. 228; Dickey v. Waldo, 97 Mich. 255; Sanborn v. Benedict, 78 Ill. 309; Stephens v. Tucker, 55 Ga. 543; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 78.

<sup>3</sup> Hull v. Hull, 48 Conn. 250; McCarty v. Blevins, 5 Yerg. 195; Sawyer v. Gerrish, 70 Me. 254; 1 Murph. (N. C.) 389; Allen v. Delano, 55 Me. 113; Buckminster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203.

<sup>4</sup> Reed v. Blades, 5 Taunt. 212.

<sup>5</sup> Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 181; Hartley v. Tapley, 2 Gray, 565.

any comprehensive sense.<sup>1</sup> On the contrary, the sale in advance of all the fish that may be caught by the master and crew of a vessel upon an intended voyage is held to be void, for want of a vested interest in the possibility.<sup>2</sup> And yet the sale of the "lay" or profits of whaling voyages have been upheld: this, on the ground, as it would appear, that such a share in profits accrued as wages to the seaman.<sup>3</sup> It is well settled that the sale of future wages, unconnected with some actual contract of service, is invalid for want of a subject-matter.<sup>4</sup> So, too, would be the transfer by a professional man of all the prospective fees to be made by him for a specified future period; the hope or expectation not being here founded upon a right in esse.<sup>5</sup> And yet a transfer of future book debts, though not limited to book debts in any particular business, receives the highest sanction as applicable to the debts of a business subsequently undertaken.<sup>6</sup>

§ 210. The Same Subject; Transfer of Potential Rights.—

The best that can be said of the sale of possibilities or contingencies, uncoupled with an interest in or growing out of property, is, that where the transaction is not designed as a positive sale to take immediate effect, it may be regarded in the light of an executory bargain of the parties, to become executed as soon as the vendor actually acquires a title; or, in other words, when the property shall come into existence. On this ground the transaction may stand; namely, as a valid agreement to sell, but not as an actual sale.<sup>7</sup> If the seller, not owning the property at the time the agreement is made, yet clearly evinces the intention of giving the agreement effect, after he has acquired title, and the property, so to speak, has come into existence, or if at that later period

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 185; 2 Kent Com. 468, n.; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1; Dig. l. 8, § 1; Pothier Vente, No. 6.

<sup>2</sup> Low v. Pew, 108 Mass. 347.

<sup>3</sup> Tripp v. Brownell, 12 Cush. 376; Gardner v. Hoeg, 18 Pick. 168.

<sup>4</sup> See Hartley v. Tapley, 2 Gray, 565; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 75, 76.

<sup>5</sup> Skipper v. Stokes, 42 Ala. 255.

<sup>6</sup> Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523.

<sup>7</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 4; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 76; Story Sales, § 186; Lunn v. Thornton, 1 C. B. 379; Head v. Goodwin, 37 Me. 182; Hamilton v. Rogers, 8 Md. 301; Bel- lows v. Wells, 36 Vt. 599; Moody v. Wright, 13 Met. 17; Calkins v. Lockwood, 16 Conn. 276.

the buyer obtains possession under authority to take the property, the transfer at length becomes complete. A new intervening act after the thing is acquired by the seller thus gives the sale full effect.<sup>1</sup> It is doubtful whether the law of executory bargain would go further at law than this; though equity regards such sales or assignments with more favor, apparently, and to the extent of making the beneficial interest in the thing sold vest immediately in the buyer as soon as the seller acquires title and the thing can be identified, unless the contract has meantime been repudiated.<sup>2</sup> But whether some new act or recognition on the seller's part is or is not requisite when the thing comes into existence, seems to depend on the mutual intention of the parties; all this being a matter of contract, and the transaction, where the rule is applied, amounting frequently not to a sale, but a pledge or mortgage, of after-acquired property.<sup>3</sup> This whole doctrine of sustaining transfers of after-acquired property is a liberal extension of equity, rather than of the law; and regarding an executory contract for such future interests as having been entered into, its recognition is chiefly in controversies as between the parties themselves; for with regard to defrauded general creditors and to the attaching creditors of the selling party, and to bonâ fide purchasers and others

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Brown v. Bateman, L. R. 2 C. P. 272; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Pennock v. Coe, 23 How. 117; Lowell, J., in Brett v. Carter, 2 Low. 458.

<sup>2</sup> Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191; Bolding v. Reed, 34 L. J. Ex. 212; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 4; Frazier v. Hilliard, 2 Strobb. 309; Blackmore v. Shelby, 8 Humph. 439; Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 382; Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523.

<sup>3</sup> Statute regulates this difficult subject in some States. 53 Ala. 8; 52 Iowa, 581. The latest English doctrine appears in Lazarus v. Andrade, 5 C. P. D. 318; Tailby v. Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523.

But cf. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43, §§ 5, 6; Benj. Sales, 4th Am. ed. § 82; also, as to mortgages, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 420, 421. As to pledges of this character see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 395, 396; Sch. Bailm. § 175.

See further, c. 17, post, as to illegal sales, where one makes a bargain to sell "futures," or chattels of a specified kind which do not belong to him,—such transactions being colorable devices for gambling in the rise and fall of prices. But the purchase or sale of a commodity to be delivered at a future time is a proper contract, as distinguished from that where the intention is merely to settle differences of price. Bartlett v. Smith, 13 Fed. Rep. 263.

who advance money on the after-acquired thing without notice of such a contract, their equities may prove greater than that of the buyer who has not already taken possession of the thing since it came into existence.

§ 211. The Essential of a Price.—(2d.) There must be a price. By price is to be understood a money valuation applied to the thing sold; and it is an old maxim, that no sale can take place without its price. But this means not necessarily a money sale. Even they who find fault with Kent and others for using the expression “valuable consideration” to designate this essential, thereby bringing barter and sale into the same general category, show their own inconsistency by asserting that a sale must be, not for money alone, but for money or its negotiable representative.<sup>1</sup> If, then, as every day’s experience shows us, bills and notes may be taken, not alone by way of postponing settlement until reduced to money, but as the very payment of price, why not other incorporeal chattels, such as stock or bonds? And if other incorporeal chattels, why not corporeal chattels? So may a sale be good, though on credit, and not for cash at all. Indeed, it would appear to us that a sale is good for money’s worth, and not necessarily for money alone; that it is enough to say that there must be, by way of price, a money standard mentally applied to the thing sold, in consideration of the transfer; that the transaction must be conducted on a money basis, and brought to such calculation, whether payment be made in money or not, before the sale is complete.

It has been ruled that the seller may sue and recover the purchase-money, where the sale was of dry goods, which the buyer agreed to pay for in nails at a certain price, to be delivered on or before a certain day specified.<sup>2</sup> The principle here is, that, the price being mentally fixed, the sale is good, whether the consideration be made payable in money or anything else : the point of distinction between this and a barter or exchange being, that in the latter case the parties are supposed to have completed the transfer with no distinct apprehension of a money standard applicable to the one article or the other.<sup>1</sup> A money price may be fixed with mutual reference to fluctuations in the gold standard as compared with paper or silver.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 201. Cf. Story Sales, §§ 216-218, Williamson v. Berry, 8 How. 495, Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1, with 2 Kent Com. 468, 2 Bl. Com. 446, 447.

<sup>2</sup> Herrick v. Carter, 56 Barb. 41. And see South Australian Ins. Co. v.

Randell, L. R. 3 P. C. 101; Flanagan v. Hutchinson, 47 Mo. 237; Hale v. Hays, 54 N. Y. 389. Humaston v. Am. Telegraph Co., 20 Wall. 20, is the case of a sale of property to be paid for in stock.

§ 212. Price imports the Application of a Money Valuation.— On the whole, then, we conceive that, in the mental application of a distinct money valuation to the transfer, the requirement of a sale is satisfied, whether payment be made in money or anything else. And with this qualification may be applied the rule as defined by Benjamin, who excludes from the law of sales all goods given in exchange for goods (or barter); goods given in consideration of work and labor done; goods given for rent, or for board and lodging, or on any valuable consideration not money. These, he says, are all contracts for the transfer of the general and absolute property in the thing, but not sales of goods; admitting their legal effect, however, to be generally, but not always, the same as in sales.<sup>3</sup> We should say that all these are not sales, as simply balanced off against one another by way of mutual consideration; but that the rule of the transaction would be otherwise, were a price distinctly put upon the goods, even though the seller further agreed to take his pay in rent, labor, board, or other goods. As the civil law tersely expressed it; Non enim pretii numeratio, sed conventio, perficit emptionem.<sup>4</sup>

§ 213. Price must be fixed or ascertainable.— The price entering as an essential element into every contract of sale, it must be fixed, or else ascertainable from reference to the contract.<sup>5</sup> Leases of land, it is well known, have often been <sup>1</sup> But where a sale was in consideration of standing timber to which the seller proved to have no title, the sale was held to fail for want of consideration. Peckham v. Peckham, 13 R. I. 354.

<sup>2</sup> See Ames v. Quimby, 96 U. S. 324.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 1; Ib. bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 5; Keys v. Harwood,

2 C. B. 905; Hands v. Burton, 9 East, 349; Sheldon v. Cox, 3 B. & C. 420. See supra, § 201; 60 Cal. 383.

<sup>4</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 216–218.

<sup>5</sup> 2 Kent Com. 447; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 5; Story Sales, §§ 216–218; Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; McConnell v. Hughes, 29 Wis. 537.

made with a rental payable regularly in corn, — a commodity convenient for a standard, as retaining for long periods the same relative purchasable value. The market value of this and other products is ascertainable, at a given time, by reference to prices-current; nor is the rule of fixing a price essentially different, in a sale of goods for gold, at a time when depreciated legal-tender notes are in circulation; and yet a sale expressly payable in gold is doubtless a good sale.<sup>1</sup> So, too, sales between merchants residing in different countries are carried on with reference to the rates of foreign exchange, the money standard of one country differing from that of another. In all of these cases there is a price sufficient to sustain the transfer as a sale, because, if not fixed, it is readily ascertainable from the contract. And where the contract furnishes a true test of the price, without the need of further negotiations between buyer and seller, the present requirement of law is fulfilled.<sup>2</sup> It is not essential that a time of payment be agreed on.<sup>3</sup>

§ 214. Where Something remains for ascertaining Price, Sale is not complete. — But where the contract of sale does not furnish the true criterion of price, and something remains to be done between buyer and seller for its ascertainment, there is no present sale, but, at most, only an executory agreement for a sale. Thus, in a sale of a hog on credit, to be kept by the seller until the buyer shall call for it, and then paid for

<sup>1</sup> See Ames v. Quimby, 106 U.S. 324.

<sup>2</sup> A striking illustration of the rule as concerns an ascertainable price is furnished by the Wisconsin case of McConnell v. Hughes. Here a quantity of wheat was bargained for at a price ten cents per bushel less than the Milwaukee price should be on any day thereafter that the seller should name, and delivery was made in pursuance of the bargain. The wheat was afterwards destroyed by fire, before the seller had named the day. The court held that the sale was nevertheless complete, that the property had passed to the buyer, and that the seller might name the day later and claim payment of his price accordingly. The option thus given to the seller was doubtless a large one, and objection had been taken at the trial that the contract specified neither a particular date nor a particular period for fixing the price. But the court replies: "The contract furnishes a criterion for ascertaining the price of the wheat; leaving nothing in relation thereto for further negotiation between the parties." McConnell v. Hughes, 29 Wis. 537. And see Cunningham v. Brown, 44 Wis. 72.

<sup>3</sup> For the law implies payment on delivery. Lamont v. Le Fevre, 96 Mich. 175.

at its market price, according to what it shall then weigh, there is no sufficient passing of property.<sup>1</sup> Other instances might be cited, of contracts to put chattels into a marketable condition and then weigh to ascertain the price, of agreeing to send something to the purchaser to take what he likes of it, and so on, where the test of price appears to have been postponed so as to render the sale for the time being an imperfect one.<sup>2</sup> If parties leave the price to be fixed afterwards, and they finally fail to agree thereon, there is manifestly no complete sale of the chattel, especially if delivery has not meanwhile taken place.<sup>3</sup> The legal result is not reached without a just view of the whole transaction and its import; the want of delivery being a prominent, though not conclusive, circumstance against regarding the transfer of property as complete, pending the final acts for definitely determining the price.<sup>4</sup> Although acts remaining to be performed between buyer and seller, such as weighing and measuring the goods to ascertain the full price, commonly prevent the property from passing at once to the buyer, the rule is not invariable in this respect; and where, in fact, the goods are already separated and delivered upon fixed terms by a weight to be subsequently ascertained without further reference to the parties themselves, the sale will not fail for want of a price. Thus, the sale of an entire drove of cattle, at so many dollars per hundred weight, to be delivered and killed and weighed by the buyer, may take effect on delivery as an executed sale before the cattle have been actually weighed.<sup>5</sup> And a price may be sufficiently fixed upon to support the sale, notwithstanding the need of further arithmetical calculation.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rourke v. Bullens, 8 Gray, 549. Where price is to be according to an inventory, there is no sale before the inventory is made out. Sherwin v. Mudge, 127 Mass. 547.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 220; Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 832; Andrew v. Dieterich, 14 Wend. 31.

<sup>3</sup> Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451; Greene v. Lewis, 85 Ala. 222; Bigley v. Risher, 63 Penn. St. 152.

<sup>4</sup> See further, cs. 2, 3, infra.

<sup>5</sup> Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Comst. 258. See Story Sales, § 220; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 20; Blackburn Sales, 152; Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. 404; Bigley v. Risher, 63 Penn. St. 152; Gray v. Millay, 61 Me. 327.

<sup>6</sup> Tansley v. Turner, 2 Scott, 238.

§ 215. Price sometimes left to a Third Party's Adjustment.— Sometimes the price is left by the parties to the decision of some third party ; and if that party accepts the trust, and actually performs it in good faith, the essential of a price is fulfilled. But until the third person or valuer has fixed the price in accordance with such agreement of the parties, the contract of sale is not perfect. Even though buyer or seller should himself prevent the valuation by prevailing upon the designated valuer not to accept the duty, there is, nevertheless, no sale.<sup>1</sup> But to obstruct or render impossible the valuation does not relieve the buyer from the obligations of the contract while affording him the advantages of a purchase ; and where goods are delivered in pursuance of the original understanding, at a price to be fixed by valuers, and the valuers disagree, and the buyer consumes the goods, he is liable to the seller for such value as a jury may estimate reasonable.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, a valuer, having once accepted the trust, is liable in damages to the bargaining parties for default or neglect of duty, on the general principle of bailment.<sup>3</sup> Our law conforms, in respect of price to be fixed by a third person, to that of the Roman empire, as definitely established by Justinian himself, after a long period of controversy among the jurists ; and in some of the modern Continental codes the same doctrine is clearly set forth.<sup>4</sup>

§ 216. Price may be implied from Circumstances.— A purchase is frequently made without distinct mention of a price ; as where one goes into a store, points out an article, and says he will take it, and possession is given accordingly. The transaction is a sale, nevertheless ; for what was implied on delivery and acceptance was doubtless, on the buyer's part, a promise to pay what the thing was reasonably worth. The

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 5 ; Story Sales, § 220 ; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. 179 ; Vickers v. Vickers, L. R. 4 Eq. 529 ; Hutton v. Moore, 26 Ark. 382 ; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H. 304.

<sup>2</sup> Clarke v. Westroppe, 18 C. B. 765.

<sup>3</sup> Jenkins v. Beetham, 15 C. B. 189. If recompensed he is held to a higher standard of diligence than if not recompensed. That such valuation is not "arbitration," see Bos v. Helsham, L. R. 2 Ex. 72.

<sup>4</sup> Dig. l. 3, tit. 23, § 1 ; Code Napoleon, arts. 1591, 1592 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 5. See further, Easterlin v. Rylander, 59 Ga. 292.

seller's regular price would, if fair, settle the question; otherwise not, unless the buyer had clearly meant to put himself into the seller's hands. To shield both parties in such mutual transactions, the law will usually regard the market price, and determine from all circumstances the reasonable worth of the thing sold, so that the seller may have his rights, but gain no unfair advantage. While, then, a price is essential to a sale, it may be implied as well as expressed. And that the reasonable worth of the property sold will be implied in every contract of sale where no price has been definitely fixed, is a rule now well settled, both with reference to goods already delivered and accepted, and goods ordered from the seller, and by him tendered for acceptance.<sup>1</sup> In this respect we appear to differ from the Roman law, which, it is said, made no inference of a reasonable price in absence of express agreement.<sup>2</sup>

§ 217. Price should be Bonâ Fide; Need not be Adequate.—By price is, of course, understood that the consideration computable on a money reckoning shall be in truth a valuable one. To sell for a nominal price, and, at the same time, absolve the buyer from payment, is but a sham sale: it is properly a gift. But in cases free from fraud, force, or palpable error, and with especial reference to the bargaining parties, and not to the creditors of either, the common law deems any sale for a price good, notwithstanding mere inadequacy. An equivalent for the thing is not needful; it is

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 221; Acebal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376; Hoadly v. M'Laine, 10 Bing. 487; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 5; James v. Muir, 33 Mich. 223; Joyce v. Swann, 17 C. B. n. s. 84; McCandlish v. Newman, 22 Penn. St. 460; Taft v. Travis, 136 Mass. 95; McEwen v. Morey, 60 Ill. 32. And see 89 Ill. 566. As to what is meant by a reasonable price, it is said in Acebal v. Levy, supra, that the reasonable price may or may not agree with the current price; for the current price might be highly unreasonable, from accidental circumstance. And see Kountz v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Penn. St. 376. But usually the current market price at time and place of delivery is the reasonable price. 60 Ill. 32, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Dig. 18, I. De Contrah. Empt. 7. §§ 1, 2; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 7. Where the evidence shows a conflict as to the price agreed upon, the real value may be shown as tending to prove which party is right. Saunders v. Clark, 106 Mass. 331; Johnson v. Harder, 45 Iowa, 677; 79 Ind. 180. But cf. Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough, 91 Ill. 63.

enough that there has been an actual price put upon it.<sup>1</sup> The Roman law appears, however, to have been different, in permitting any sale for one-half of the value of the property, or less, to be impeached as inadequate in price.<sup>2</sup>

§ 218. The Essential of Mutual Assent to the Transfer of the Thing at the Price. — (3d.) There must be mutual assent to the transfer of the particular thing at the particular price. This brings us at once to the point, that mutual assent must apply to the particular subject-matter of a sale, so as to make it not an existing thing alone, but the same existing thing as viewed by buyer and seller alike. If, then, the buyer contracts for one thing, while the seller understands quite another, a prime essential to a valid sale is wanting. Thus, if “long-staple Salem cotton” be the thing ordered, there is no mutuality in subject-matter, and, consequently, no sale, where the seller supposes the order different, and supplies instead “western Madras cotton,” — a species of cotton inferior, of less value, and requiring different machinery for its manufacture.<sup>3</sup> Where an unexpired lease of eight years is bargained for, and the lease, though of the premises in question, proves, when produced, to have only six years to run, the bargain is, likewise, void for the same reason.<sup>4</sup> Again, where a buyer orders three rifles, and, through a mistake, for which neither he nor the seller is responsible, the seller assents to the sale as one of fifty rifles, there is a want of mutuality in the contract.<sup>5</sup> And while, as will more fully appear hereafter, a mere failure in quality of the subject-matter contracted for would not vitiate the sale, anything bargained and sold as being of a particular description implies a contract between the parties that the

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 223, 224.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Dom. Civ. Law, pt. 1, bk. 1, tit. 2, § 3, art. 1; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 20. See, as to fraudulent and illegal sales, post, cs. 16, 17.

<sup>3</sup> Azèmar v. Casella, L. R. 2 C. P. 431. And see Thornton v. Kempster, 5 Taunt. 786.

<sup>4</sup> Farrar v. Nightingale, 2 Esp. 139.

<sup>5</sup> Henkel v. Pape, L. R. 6 Ex. 7; Smith v. Lewis, 40 Ind. 98. See also Harvey v. Harris, 112 Mass. 32; Sheldon v. Capron, 3 R. I. 171; Hills v. Snell, 104 Mass. 103. Where one sells a certain chattel, he does not sell valuables which, unknown to him, were secreted therein. Huthmacher v. Harris, 38 Penn. St. 491; Ray v. Light, 34 Ark. 421.

subject-matter answers that description, both as to kind and quantity.<sup>1</sup>

If one purchases as a "perpetual-motion machine" something valuable to him only because affording what he supposes the solution of a puzzling problem, the sale fails, though the identical machine be delivered, on proof that the pretended mechanical effect is a mere trick of hidden clock-work.<sup>2</sup> In general, since the principle of a product is an object of sale, apart from the product itself, there should be mutuality in transfers of either; for the sale of a patent-right or a copy-right is quite different from the sale of a machine, or a load of books embodying the ideas.<sup>3</sup> But it is a general rule, that, in the absence of special warranty by the seller, or actual fraud, a bargain is binding, notwithstanding the want of mutual assent upon some matter of collateral description not vital to the contract. The sale, strictly according to a sample, is good, though the sample shown was believed by the buyer to represent a kind or quality which it did not; a corresponding rule applying sometimes to the seller's disadvantage. For if the parties are ad idem on the subject-matter sold and the price, the self-deception of one concerning the thing's intrinsic value, unless induced by the other's fraud, cannot impair the obligations of the contract.<sup>4</sup>

§ 219. The Same Subject; Fraud or Force or Error in Essentials; Genuine Intention.—The employment of fraud or force would render the sale voidable on the ordinary principle; as to error, this must go to the essentials. The misunderstanding of words and their import, as where the buyer is a foreigner, and unfamiliar with the language spoken by the seller, may prevent the aggregatio mentium needful for mutual assent; and so sometimes material mistake as to the identity of the party bargained with, though such error could hardly be deemed fundamental unless the sale were on credit, nor is a case readily supposable at all, without imputing either

<sup>1</sup> See Barr v. Gibson, 3 M. & W. 390; and as to warranty, post, c. 6.

<sup>2</sup> Kendall v. Wilson, 41 Vt. 567.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 528.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 579; Scott v. Littledale, 8 E. & B. 215; Ollivant v. Bayley, 5 Q. B. 288.

fraud to the one or gross carelessness to the other party.<sup>1</sup> Where a contract of sale was made with one party alone, another cannot force himself in for its execution to the disadvantage and against the consent of such contractor.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, there must be a genuine intention to bargain and sell, not mere banter or jest or loose conversation, nor a colorable or pretended purchase;<sup>3</sup> and we need hardly add that there should be mental and legal capacity as in contracts generally.<sup>4</sup>

In repudiating transactions of this character, — especially those which display, not the element of fraud and force, but rather that of honest mutual error, — the courts frequently take the position that the sale contract in question contained an implied condition which has failed, or an implied warranty of the thing's existence, and title in the seller, or a failure of consideration in the contract of sale.<sup>5</sup> Yet the preferable and quite sufficient ground of repudiation appears to be, that an essential element in the sale was wanting; namely, a subject-matter, or at all events the particular subject-matter; a mutual assent between buyer and seller. Instead of pronouncing, then, that an executed contract of sale had thus failed, the courts might better say that no contract was ever really executed.<sup>6</sup> A bargain or sale may be void and unenforceable for utter uncertainty as to what was meant.<sup>7</sup>

§ 220. The Same Subject; Mutuality as to Price. — The next

<sup>1</sup> Boulton v. Jones, 2 H. & N. 564; Phillips v. Bistolli, 2 B. & C. 511; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, §§ 137, 138; 135 Mass. 278, 283; Barker v. Dinsmore, 72 Penn. St. 427.

<sup>2</sup> Boulton v. Jones, supra; Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28.

<sup>3</sup> Bruce v. Bishop, 43 Vt. 161; Thruston v. Thornton, 1 Cush. 89; 97 U. S. 237. But it is a general rule of contracts that one who manifests an intention which induces another to act upon it seriously, may be estopped to deny a genuine intention on his own part. Doe v. Oliver, 2 Smith, L. C. 671.

<sup>4</sup> A contract of sale entered into by one too drunk to know what he was about is voidable at his instance; and when he becomes sober he may repudiate or ratify the transaction. Matthews v. Baxter, L. R. 8 Ex. 132; Carpenter v. Rogers, 61 Mich. 384.

<sup>5</sup> See post, c. 16, as to fraudulent sales.

<sup>6</sup> Mr. Benjamin is of this opinion, and cites Lord Kenyon and Pothier in its support. Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 4; Farrar v. Nightingale, 2 Esp. 139; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 4.

<sup>7</sup> Whelan v. Sullivan, 102 Mass. 204.

point noticeable is, that there must be not only a price, but a particular price, to which both seller and buyer assent. It is too clear for argument, that if the one says, "I will sell you these goods for one hundred dollars," and the other responds, "All right: I will take them for eighty dollars," — there is no mutuality in price, and consequently no sale. And where, in the absence of a price expressly named, the law infers, as we have seen, a contract for a reasonable price, this is out of deference to the presumed mutual intention of the parties; for should the evidence in any case rebut such a presumption, the rule would doubtless fail of application.<sup>1</sup>

Where the minds of parties do not meet on the price, the contract of sale does not take effect; as where the seller's foreman gave the wrong price by an error of computation and the buyer accepted with full knowledge of such mistake.<sup>2</sup>

§ 221. Mutual Assent in General; how expressed. — And now concerning mutual assent to a sale, in its more general aspects. Mutual assent enters as an element into every contract. There need be no particular form of assent; it may be express or implied. Among different nations, and in different stages of society, peculiar solemnities of ratification have attended sale transactions. Thus, among the Jews a bargain was confirmed by taking off the shoe and handing it over. The Romans used to interchange a ring for the same purpose. Shaking hands on a bargain, and crossing the palm with a coin, were Anglo-Saxon customs, once honored, and not even yet forgotten; while the Statute of Frauds embalms that old-fashioned ceremony of giving a piece of money as earnest of a bargain, now fallen into general disuse.<sup>3</sup> Any sign which is intelligible to the parties concerned — a pantomime among the deaf and dumb, a nod or gesture between buyer and seller by way of expressing yes or no — may serve as the undoubted expression of mutual assent. A man goes into a shop, takes up an article from the counter, and walks out with it, — nothing more passing between him and the shop-keeper than a glance of mutual recognition; and yet upon such slight circumstances depend the validity of numberless transactions of our every-day life. Mutual assent, then, in sales, is a matter of inference from the conduct of parties and the surrounding circumstances; usually expressed by both acts and words, it is true, but not necessarily.

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 216; Felthouse v. Bindley, 11 C. B. n. s. 869.

<sup>2</sup> Everson v. Granite Co., 65 Vt. 658, citing Harraan v. Foley, 62 Wis. 584; Griffin v. O'Neil, 48 Kan. 117.

<sup>3</sup> See Story Sales, § 125; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 341; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; 2 Bl. Com. 443; Bach v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409.

§ 222. Negotiation of a Bargain; Proposals, etc.—Negotiations are often conducted in writing; besides which there have been solemnities peculiar to the transfer of lands and of certain kinds of personal property, particularly incorporeal chattels. But as to most corporeal chattels, such as goods and merchandise, the law of bargain and sale requires no writing whatever to complete the contract between the parties, except so far as may be found necessary for legal compliance with the Statute of Frauds.<sup>1</sup> The writings, if any, which are otherwise pertinent to the transaction, are those only upon which the bargain and transfer of property were based; and all subsequent memoranda or bills of sale, though bearing, it may be, testimony of a contract already executed, cannot annul or vary the bargain. For our law contemplates no act or ceremony for ratifying and confirming these common sales of personal property: the expression of mutual assent to the thing at the price affording its own ratification, so that bills of sale are often like receipts, open to explanation, and by no means conclusive as to the terms of a bargain.<sup>2</sup>

A bargain, when reduced to its simplest elements, is found to consist of a proposal, or offer, made on one side, and accepted on the other. The proposal as made should be distinct and clear and genuine, and its acceptance should be correspondingly clear, full, and unequivocal. If the offer comes first from one desiring to purchase, who has inquired the quantity on hand and price, and received a reply, the seller's acceptance is needed to complete a bargain.<sup>3</sup> If the acceptance falls short of the offer, or seeks to expand it, negotiations may continue; but there is as yet no mutual assent and no bargain.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where A. offers to buy a mare if warranted "sound, and quiet in harness," and B. sends the mare with a warranty that she is "sound and quiet in double harness," the sale is incomplete.<sup>2</sup> And even a proposal to sell a lot of "good barley" is held to be insufficiently accepted as a lot of "fine barley and full weight;"<sup>3</sup> this, however, out of regard to the significance of commercial terms denoting different species of the same article; for a slight variance in words is of little consequence, provided the two parties clearly refer to the same subject-matter in the same sense.<sup>4</sup> But, as with other contracts, so is it with bargain and sale,—an acceptance, so soon as it is communicated to the purchasing party, which exactly closes at all points with the offer, and brings both parties to a mutual assent upon one and the same set of terms, renders the contract complete and binding upon both of them.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As to this subject, see post, cs. Gatzweiler v. Morgner, 51 Mo. 47; 9-11. McCrae v. Young, 43 Ala. 622.

<sup>2</sup> Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. <sup>3</sup> Smith v. Gowdy, 8 Allen, 566. 359; Terry v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y. 520; But acts may constitute acceptance

§ 223. The Same Subject.—All bargains, to be complete, are mutual and reciprocal; both parties must be bound, and not one alone. All this is implied in the act of mutual assent, which, however grudgingly given on either side, must be pronounced voluntary, if given understandingly. A mere mental assent, however, neither communicated nor manifested by subsequent action is no legal assent;<sup>6</sup> nor is any notice of assent which comes unreasonably late. And the contract of without requiring formal writing; as where something is ordered. See § 232 a. A written contract may thus be unilateral; and in some bargains it should be said that after correspondence, the contract is still held in suspense until some oral act operates mutual assent. Deyo v. Vaughn, 97 Mich. 1.

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, § 125; Carr v. Duvall, 14 Pet. 77; 2 Kent Com. 477; 1 Pars. Contr. 399, 400; Minneapolis R. v. Rolling Mill, 119 U. S. 149; Johnson v. Stevenson, 26 Mich. 63.

<sup>2</sup> Jordan v. Norton, 4 M. & W. 155.

<sup>3</sup> Hutchinson v. Bowker, 5 M. & W. 535. And see Chicago, &c. R. R. Co. v. Dana, 43 N. Y. 240.

<sup>4</sup> Hartford & N. H. R. R. Co. v. Jackson, 24 Conn. 514.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, § 125; 2 Kent Com. 447; 1 Pars. Contr. 399, 400.

<sup>6</sup> Brogden v. Metropolitan R., 2 App. Cas. 266; White v. Corliss, 46 N. Y. 467; 29 Penn. St. 358; Jenness v. Iron Co., 53 Me. 20.

sale once completed, it is out of the power of one party to change or rescind it thenceforth, without the consent of the other.<sup>1</sup> Nor after an absolute and unqualified acceptance, will mere expressions of hope or desire on either side vary the bargain.<sup>2</sup>

But negotiations which terminate in a complete bargain and sale often consist of a series of proposals and counter-proposals, whose final result must be gathered from an examination of the whole transaction, from beginning to end. Here the points embraced under a mutual assent must be brought together, however scattered, and the meeting of the minds on each will establish the contract in its full import. And the rule is, that if the party to whom an offer is made adds a condition, or modifies the proposal in any way, this amounts in law to a new proposal, which must be in turn accepted by the party previously proposing, before the bargain can stand complete.<sup>3</sup> So, too, if the offer leaves something to be settled by a future arrangement the agreement remains incomplete.<sup>4</sup> But a mere inquiry of the proposer whether he will modify his offer is not in effect a rejection of it and a new proposal.<sup>5</sup> One who orders goods is not bound to accept more or less than he has ordered.

It is also a rule that one who makes a proposal may withdraw it at any time before the other party has accepted the offer and communicated such acceptance to him, or to whatever party the law would denominate his agent.<sup>7</sup> But such

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. 359; Joyce v. Swann, 17 C. B. N. s. 84; Gowing v. Knowles, 118 Mass. 232; Abbott v. Shepard, 48 N. H. 16; Utley v. Donaldson, 94 U. S. 29. See also Stagg v. Compton, 81 Ind. 171; Cheney v. Trans. Line, 59 Md. 557.

<sup>2</sup> Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Champion v. Short, 1 Camp. 63; Chaplin v. Clarke, 4 Ex. 403; Jackson v. Turquand, L. R. 4 H. L. 305; MacLay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525; Potts v. Whitehead, 8 C. E. Green, 512; 1

Pars. Contr. 400. See Stevenson v. McLean, 5 Q. B. D. 346.

<sup>4</sup> Lyman v. Robinson, 14 Allen, 242.

<sup>5</sup> Stevenson v. McLean, 5 Q. B. D. 346.

<sup>6</sup> Bruce v. Pearson, 3 Johns. 534; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327. But if more were sent bonâ fide, it would be fair to require the ordering party to take his proper quantity and send back the excess.

<sup>7</sup> Hebb's Case, L. R. 4 Eq. 9; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1. This right of retraction before a com-

withdrawal should be duly communicated to the other party before the latter accepts the offer.<sup>1</sup>

§ 224. Bargain, how concluded by Mail Correspondence.—Bargains are frequently concluded by written correspondence: this method being found almost indispensable for facilitating business between parties who are far apart, and generally convenient as a means of preserving in a permanent form the exact terms of any contract. Now, it may tend to simplify the question, as to letters transmitted by mail, to consider the post-office as the common agent of the parties, though not without making allowance for the peculiar mode of negotiation thus adopted by them.<sup>2</sup> An offer having been made, then, through the mail, the proposing party may be regarded as tendering by implication the post-office, through that particular mail, his own messenger, to be used as the common agent for a response, and hence as awaiting a reply by bearer. If the party making the offer desires afterwards to retract or modify it, he may overtake his messenger, that is, mail another letter of suitable tenor, which letter must be regarded, with reference to the party addressed, as postponed to the former letter, and the effect made to depend upon its reaching him in due course before he has transmitted his reply to the former letter through the agent; for an authority revocable in itself is not revoked without notice to the other party. Let us now turn to the party to whom the proposal was made. The first letter comes to him in due course through the sender's agent,—the post-office,—and he becomes at liberty to accept or decline seasonably through the same agent. If he posts his reply of acceptance accordingly with proper care, the buyer's agent receives it as the common agent; and whether the letter finally reach the proposer or not, the mutual assent has been given, and the bargain is struck. But if the correspondent delays, and meantime communicated acceptance is broadly recognized. We shall see it applied in auctions, where one may retract his bid before the hammer falls and the goods are struck off to him. § 634.

<sup>1</sup> Byrne v. Van Tienhoven, 5 C. P. D. 344; 5 Q. B. D. 346; 2 Ware, 344; Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99.

<sup>2</sup> See Romilly, M. R., in Hebb's Case, supra.

notice of retraction of the offer reaches him before his own reply has been posted, the withdrawal takes effect, and there is no bargain between the parties. The principle upon which bargains by correspondence are decided, is, however, usually stated rather differently: namely, in effect, that the law infers a continuing offer on the part of him who first posts his proposition until it shall have reached the correspondent, to be by him in due time accepted or rejected; and that on the part of the correspondent there is an overt act amounting to acceptance or rejection when he has within due time placed his reply in the mail.<sup>1</sup>

The necessity of the case, in either view, justifies the rule as a sound one; for, as it has been well observed, "In all cases of contracts entered into between parties at a distance by correspondence, it is impossible that both should have a knowledge of it the moment it becomes complete. . . . The negotiation being carried on through the mail, the offer and acceptance cannot occur at the same moment of time; nor, for the same reason, can the meeting of the minds of the parties on the subject be known by each at the moment of concurrence. The acceptance must succeed the offer after the lapse of some interval of time, and if the process is to be carried further, in order to complete the bargain, and notice of the acceptance must be received, the only effect is to reverse the position of the parties, changing the knowledge of the completion from one party to the other."<sup>2</sup>

§ 225. The Same Subject. — A bargain carried on by correspondence is, therefore, struck, when the party receiving the proposal by mail, in due season, and before receiving any notice withdrawing the proposal, posts his letter of acceptance.<sup>3</sup> The posting of a letter, under such circumstances,

<sup>1</sup> See Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681; Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. Cas. 381; Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390. As to proposals requiring answer by return of mail, see Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525. Negligence of a party's own agent in mailing proposal or acceptance must fall upon the party. Ib.

<sup>2</sup> Nelson, J., in Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., supra.

<sup>3</sup> The English law is now in full accord with the American on this point. Byrne v. Van Tienhoven, 5 C. P. D. 344.

binds the proposer at once ; and it binds the accepting party as well, who is, consequently, not at liberty to retract the assent thus given, whether his own letter has already reached the proposer or not.<sup>1</sup> In fact, the tenor of this reply settles for the time the question of acceptance or rejection. Accident or delay of transmission in the post-office, whether as to the offer or the reply, does not affect the right of the one to duly consider and accept the proposal made, or of the other to profit by such acceptance ; and if, through a misdirection by the proposing party, the letter with its offer fails to reach the correspondent in due course of mail, the latter may promptly return his reply, having as yet received no notice of the proposer's withdrawal. The mailing of a second letter by the proposing party, retracting his proposal, cannot avail him, if in due season after receiving the first letter and before receiving the second, the party to whom the proposal was addressed has mailed his letter of acceptance.<sup>2</sup> Nor, as some cases hold, would any detention or loss of the letter of acceptance in the mails, if it be through no misdirection or other fault on his part, affect the bargain once concluded.<sup>3</sup>

But the question still remains open, how far the party proposing is allowed to overtake the letter he first mailed, and, by bringing his retraction of the offer to the notice of the other party before the latter has mailed an acceptance, prevent the bargain from taking place. Leaving out mail deten-

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1 ; Story Sales, § 129 ; Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681 ; Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. Cas. 381 ; Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390 ; Mactier v. Frith, 6 Wend. 103 ; 2 Kent Com. 477 ; 1 Pars. Contr. 404-408 ; Harris' Case, L. R. 7 Ch. 587 ; Averill v. Hedge, 12 Conn. 436 ; Abbott v. Shepard, 48 N. H. 14 ; Vassar v. Camp, 1 Kern. 441 ; Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99 ; Potts v. Whitehead, 8 C. E. Green, 512 ; Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525 ; 61 N. Y. 362. Contra, M'Culloch v. Eagle Ins. Co., 1 Pick. 283, now repudiated.

<sup>2</sup> Harris' Case, L. R. 7 Ch. 587 ; Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., and other cases supra.

<sup>3</sup> Vassar v. Camp, 1 Kern. 441 ; Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681 ; Hallock v. Commercial Ins. Co., 2 Dutch. 268 ; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362. This under some circumstances might expose the other party to great hardship. Might not negligent transmission of an acceptance through the mail, now the common agent of the parties, afford reason for balancing the equities in an extreme case ? As where the proposer hears nothing within a reasonable time and sells to another.

tions, through the fault of the one or the other, we should say, that, wherever the proposing party can thus anticipate his correspondent's act of acceptance, the proposal fails. Our courts do not seem to have met the question openly as yet, though they intimate as much.<sup>1</sup> As to the accepting party, however, the reason of the rule would put it out of his power to recall the terms of his acceptance once confided to the post; and such is declared to be the English and American doctrine.<sup>2</sup> But there is an extreme case, reported among the Scotch decisions, where, in accordance with civil-law principles, a majority of the court held that, the acceptor having mailed a later letter recalling his acceptance, and both letters reaching the original proposer at the same time, the latter could not be forced to perform the bargain.<sup>3</sup>

§ 226. The Same Subject; Rule of Civil Law.—The civil-law rule as to bargain by correspondence appears to be different from ours; for, according to Pothier and others, if the person making the offer retract it before the letter of acceptance is placed in the post, the retraction failing, however, to reach the acceptor until afterwards, no binding contract would arise. But to save the acceptor from disastrous consequences, the further rule prevailed, that, if loss or injury should arise from the acceptor's acting under the contract as a completed one, he might claim indemnity from the party making the offer. This doctrine, though praised by Mr. Story as the fairest and most intelligible rule that can be found, has never been put, in England or America, to practical test; and if it were, serious objections would probably be found to its operation, inasmuch as it renders the bargain itself too uncertain of execution, besides sacrificing, for the acceptor's benefit, the rights of one who certainly ought not,

<sup>1</sup> See Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681; Harris' Case, L. R. 7 Ch. 587; Nelson, J., in Tayloe v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. 390; Mactier v. Frith, 6 Wend. 104.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Hallock v. Commercial Ins. Co., 2 Dutch. 268, per Vredenburg, J.; Harris' Case, L. R. 7 Ch. 587, criticising British, &c., Tel. Co. v. Colson, L. R. 6 Ex. 108, which last is overruled by Household Fire Ins. Co. v. Grant, 4 Ex. D. 216.

<sup>3</sup> Dunmore v. Alexander, 9 Shaw & Dunlop, 190; Merlin Repert. Vente, § 1, art. 3, No. 11; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 2.

in withdrawing his offer for good cause, to stand worse off than though his offer had been accepted.<sup>1</sup>

§ 227. Bargains by Messages other than through the Mail; Telegrams, etc.—The rule as to bargains by messages sent through some other channel than the post-office would probably be substantially the same as that of mail correspondence. Thus, if an express or special messenger bore the proposal, it would be for the proposer to overtake his own agent in season with a retraction of the offer, or a revocation of authority; while, as may well be presumed, the bargain would stand complete the moment a reply of acceptance had been placed in the messenger's hands by the party addressed; the latter, however, in case he returned answer by some other medium, being viewed by the law as a principal sending back his own agent.<sup>2</sup>

The telegraph, which in this later day is so available for bargains, introduces some novel considerations into the law of correspondence, by bringing distant parties as it were face to face in the execution of their mutual contracts. A reply sent by telegraph to an offer received by telegraph, or even to a proposal requesting a telegraphic response, closes the bargain if it signifies acceptance; no matter when the message reaches the proposer himself. But when either party selects mail or telegraph on his own responsibility, with no previous authority from the other, the consequence may be different; for, on the principle of agency, one ought to be allowed to overtake his own messenger before the message is delivered. For a proposing party to revoke by telegram an offer on its way by mail, is like sending a swift agent to catch up with and outstrip a slow one; and notice of revocation thus sent is doubtless available if it anticipates the reply first invited.<sup>3</sup> In all this, the general law of correspondence

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 130; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 32. Mr. Benjamin has put the objections strongly, in Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 2.

<sup>2</sup> See Hebb's Case, L. R. 4 Eq. 9; Story Agency, § 470.

<sup>3</sup> See Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y.

307; Hallock v. Insurance Co., 2 Dutch. 268, 281, per curiam; Duple v. Batts, 28 Tex. 312; Robinson Machine Works v. Chander, 56 Ind. 575; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Holton v. McPike, 27 Kan. 286. Telegrams are to be considered in is amplified, not altered. The agency, moreover, which a telegraph company furnishes when employed is not so complete as to bind the sender by the terms of a message which he never authorized, and which, through the mistake of the transmitting telegraph operator, reaches the party addressed in the shape of an offer quite different from that really made; the substantial effect being no bargain for the want of an aggregatio mentium as to the parties, but remedies against the telegraph company for any injury suffered by its carelessness.<sup>1</sup>

§ 228. Limitations as to Place and Time of accepting Proposal.

— Limitations as to place and time of acceptance are sometimes imposed by the party who makes a proposal; and to these, like all other terms embraced by an offer, the party addressed is expected to conform. Any qualification of or departure from these terms invalidates the offer, unless in turn accepted by the party first proposing; such acceptance being, however, inferable from circumstances.

Thus, as to place: if the proposing party direct an answer to be communicated to him at a particular place, an acceptance communicated to him by address sent elsewhere imposes per se no obligation.<sup>2</sup>

As to time, there is always a legal limit; and where nothing is expressed, it is to be understood that the proposal requires an acceptance within a reasonable time to make the bargain binding. Usage of trade, and the circumstances and situation of the parties, as being near or far apart, will determine how long a time should be considered reasonable. An offer not withdrawn is to be deemed a continuous one for a reasonable time. Ordinarily, however, a seller's proposition made in presence of the buyer should be accepted by the latter on the spot or at the same interview; though their mutual acts and conducts might raise the presumption that a longer period was given for the buyer to decide.<sup>3</sup> connection with mail correspondence, &c., in determining the nature and terms of the bargain.

<sup>1</sup> Henkel v. Pape, L. R. 6 Ex. 7; Leonard v. New York Tel. Co., 41 N. Y. 544. For a similar Scotch decision, see Verdin v. Robertson, 10 Sess. Cas. 3d series, 35.

<sup>2</sup> Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. 225; Carr v. Duval, 14 Pet. 77.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 126; Craig v. Harper, 3 Cush. 158; Beckwith v.

§ 229. Whether Offer may be withdrawn where Time was given for Assent.—Whether the cardinal principle that one may withdraw his offer at any moment before its acceptance—a principle not essentially varied, even in the case of negotiations by letter—should extend to cases where the proposer has left a definite time open for the acceptance of his proposal, has been a matter of much controversy. One who leaves his offer to be thus accepted does a gracious thing by the other party; and most assuredly, when the time has elapsed without bringing an answer, he is free to consider the offer withdrawn, and discard any later acceptance.<sup>1</sup> But is he hampered at all, beyond the moral obligation of making good his word? For there can be little mutuality in a contract which restrains one from selling his wares to the next customer at his own price, and yet permits the former party, after trying to make a cheaper bargain elsewhere while keeping this as his last resort in case he decides to purchase at all, to leave the seller in the lurch altogether. Now, upon this want of mutuality, and the gratuitous nature of the contract, rests a rule of the courts, which refuses to hold the proposer bound to any stated limit of time, except so far as the offer may remain in law a continuous one, and as such be accepted within the period and before notice of its final withdrawal.

Cooke v. Oxley, the leading case on the subject, which was decided before Lord Kenyon, presented a somewhat singular state of facts. A. had proposed to sell and deliver specific goods to B. on certain terms, if B. would agree to purchase on these terms, and would give notice thereof to A. before four o'clock in the afternoon of the same day. B. agreed to this, and gave notice before the time had elapsed; but A.

Cheever, 21 N. H. 41; 4 Dill. 31; Martin v. Black, 21 Ala. 721; Judd v. Day, 50 Iowa, 247; Chicago R. v. Dane, 43 N. Y. 240. Where a proposal by letter is in such terms as to require an answer by return of mail or promptly, the offer can only endure for a correspondingly limited time. Maclay v. Harvey, 90 Ill. 525, and cases cited. So, too, where a telegram requires a reply sent immediately. See Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327.

<sup>1</sup> See Potts v. Whitehead, 5 C. E. Green, 55, 59, per curiam; 8 ib. 512.

would not carry out the agreement; and in this the court sustained him.<sup>1</sup> The principle of the decision in Cooke v. Oxley is followed in later English and American cases, where the actual retraction of a continuous offer on time by the proposer within the period stated has been upheld so as to defeat subsequent acceptance and a bargain; as where wool is offered at sale on three days' option to purchase; or a party looking at a house has been promised by the owner six weeks to make up his mind.<sup>2</sup> "Unless both parties are bound," says Bailey, J., "neither is."<sup>3</sup> We here assume that the withdrawal of an offer is seasonably communicated to the other party before acceptance is announced, since otherwise such withdrawal would fail.<sup>4</sup>

§ 230. The Same Subject.—The brunt of a vigorous attack by certain writers upon the rule, now well fortified, which protects a proposer in withdrawing his time offer before its actual notified acceptance within the period agreed upon, has been borne by Cooke v. Oxley, a case whose facts might well be misapprehended; for had there been proof of an offer left open which the buyer before four in the afternoon accepted, and the seller, having already the opportunity to withdraw, had not previously withdrawn, the decision in question might have been different. In fact, the notified acceptance of a time offer within the time, and before retraction, makes a complete bargain.<sup>5</sup> We need hardly add that

<sup>1</sup> Nothing, said Chief Justice Kenyon, could be clearer than that the engagement was all on one side, the other party not being bound; and hence the agreement was nudum pactum. Judge Buller adverted to the circumstance that here was neither a damage to the one, nor an advantage to the other. The further suggestion was thrown out by certain of the judges, that at a certain point of time—say at four o'clock—the parties might have come to an agreement of sale, in which case the later agreement, and not that really sued upon, would have been the decisive one; but of this no evidence was furnished. Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, § 126; Head v. Diggon, 3 M. & R. 97; Larmon v. Jordan, 56 Ill. 204; Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653; Humphries v. Carvalho, 16 East, 45; Eskridge v. Glover, 5 Stew. & Port. 264; Faulkner v. Hebard, 26 Vt. 452; Beckwith v. Cheever, 21 N. H. 41; Chicago R. v. Dana, 43 N. Y. 240.

<sup>3</sup> Head v. Diggon, 3 M. & R. 97.

<sup>4</sup> Stevenson v. McLean, 3 Q. B. D. 346, 351.

<sup>5</sup> See Boston & Maine R. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. 224.

any supposed discrepancy between Cooke v. Ozley and the post-office cases is quite fanciful ; it was really upon the lack of proof before the court that the plaintiff there failed beyond a peradventure.<sup>1</sup> And on this ground, meeting Mr. Story, Toullier, Bell, and other writers who stand opposed to the English judicial doctrine of offers on a specified time, one may answer their legal objections.<sup>2</sup>

§ 231. Death or Refusal revokes an Offer. — The death of either party to the negotiation for a sale revokes a pending offer.<sup>3</sup> One's proposal, moreover, is exhausted by the other's rejection of it ; and a definite refusal ends the negotiation.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Adams v. Lindsell, 1 B. & Ald. 681, as explained by Best, C. J., in Routledge v. Grant, 4 Bing. 653.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Story suggests that a consideration sufficient to sustain such a promise may be found either in the expectation or hope on the part of the proposer that his offer will be accepted, or in the inconvenience which is occasioned to the other party, if betrayed into a loss of time or money by the inducement given him to make examination and to inquire into the value of the goods offered. Story Sales, § 127, citing 6 Toullier Droit Civil Français, p. 33, No. 30 ; 1 Stair, 3, 9 ; 1 Duer Ins. 118 ; Bell Sales, 27. See Comments in Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1. But, as to the first, any such expectation or hope of the proposer must be the offspring of his own fancy, since the other party does not really undertake to gratify any expectation of the sort, and, on the contrary, need never seriously turn the offer over in his own mind ; and, secondly, as to the possible damage caused the other party by inducing him to examine and inquire, that could only apply, if at all, to cases where the damage thus induced could be actually shown. If, too, the latter party is not sufficiently warned against incurring loss by his knowledge that any offer made on time may nevertheless be withdrawn and has no legal force, and if the damage incurred by him, being more than a possibility and something actual, could in truth furnish a legal consideration so as to bind the bargain, why, on the other hand, might not a proposer, who had incurred expense on the supposition that his proposition would be accepted, hold the other party bound for inducing the expectation of acceptance, whenever that party had, though promising to consider the offer, let it drop without further thought ? Hope and inducement, indeed, are not all on one side in a bargain ; and that is worth remembering when the further objection of encouraging bad faith is imputed to the courts. The assailable part of this doctrine is undoubtedly in its denying the legal force of a moral promise ; but to undertake enforcing contracts which rest upon moral and not legal consideration has ever been beyond the province of tribunals with imperfect means of gauging human motives.

<sup>3</sup> Blades v. Free, 9 B. & C. 16 ; Campanari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 400.

<sup>4</sup> See Honeyman v. Marryat, 21 Beav. 14.

§ 232. Mutual Assent to a Bargain inferable from Circumstances.

— Since a contract of sale may be implied from the conduct of the parties, as well as expressed, it follows that mutual assent to a first proposal or its subsequent modifications, is inferable from circumstances. Thus, if one thing is ordered and another sent, or part only of the quantity ordered is sent, and the party who gave the order takes and consumes the article delivered instead of promptly rejecting and sending it back, the bargain becomes complete, on the presumption that there arose a contract growing out of subsequent mutual assent to the sale of what was actually supplied. Wherever it is incumbent upon a party to express his dissent, his silence will not prevent the incurring of an obligation; and, be it as an honest buyer or an embezzler, he ought to be held responsible for property of another which he has knowingly suffered to remain thrown upon his hands as though accepted for his own.<sup>1</sup>

But the rule of New York is thought to be somewhat different, going to the extent of maintaining that where a party delivers part only of what he has agreed to deliver for a certain price by a given time, he cannot sue and recover pro rata for that portion, though the other party uses and consumes it.<sup>2</sup> This, however, would appear to be on a principle, reasonable in itself, and elsewhere recognized, that what one contracting party has suffered by the default or breach of the other is a proper subject of set-off in suit brought by the latter to recover; and, indeed, a sufficient cause of action on his own part.<sup>3</sup> That a buyer who, by his acts and conduct,

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 126; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; Richardson v. Dunn, 2 Q. B. 222; Hart v. Mills, 15 M. & W. 85; Bowker v. Hoyt, 18 Pick. 558; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307. If A. sends goods and an invoice to B., without an order, B. should return the goods or notify A. that he will not accept them; and if, instead, he exercises ownership or permits a third person to take and use them, he will be held liable as a purchaser. Bartholomae v. Paull, 18 W. Va. 771; Wellaner v. Fellows, 48 Wis. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550, 555, per Church, C. J.; Tipton v. Feitner, 20 N. Y. 423.

<sup>3</sup> See Horn v. Batchelder, 41 N. H. 86; Bowker v. Hoyt, 18 Pick. 555; Harralson v. Stein, 50 Ala. 347; Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452. And see remedies, post, cs. 12, 15.

accepts delivery of a part for the whole, or of one thing in place of another ordered from the seller, should be utterly unaccountable therefor, is unreasonable and absurd.<sup>1</sup>

§ 232 a. Order for Goods. — An order for goods may be sent by mail or given otherwise; and acceptance being inferable from the seller's delivery of the goods unobjected to, the transaction stands completed.<sup>2</sup> Where the quantity ordered was indefinite, the purchaser is bound by the amount actually delivered to and accepted by him.<sup>3</sup> Oral delivery on the one hand, or oral acceptance on the other, obviates any objection that only one party has written.<sup>4</sup> An order may be countermanded on the same principle as the offer already considered; and in a certain legal sense an order constitutes a proposal which must be duly accepted or acted upon.<sup>5</sup>

§ 233. Sale may be Conditional or Qualified; Right to repurchase, etc. — Sales are not always absolute: the acceptance is sometimes made conditional, and delivery given accordingly; and then no complete execution of the contract can take place until the condition is fulfilled. Instances of this are found in sales "on trial," and the bargain of "sale or return," to be hereafter examined.<sup>6</sup> Qualifications introduced into a bargain raise perplexing questions of title; conditions precedent, however, preventing a transfer, while subsequent conditions would subject the completed transfer to possible defeat.<sup>7</sup>

Under a contract of sale which gives the seller the right to repurchase on giving a prescribed notice, — such as a three months' notice, — it is held that giving the notice does not constitute a present repurchase, but an engagement to repurchase; and that if the chattel be destroyed after the notice was given, but before the expiration of the period, the notifying party is not liable.<sup>8</sup>

§ 234. Writings merge Previous Oral Stipulations; Construction of Writings constituting a Bargain. — A written contract usually

<sup>1</sup> See Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341 (1880), a later case which harmonizes with the foregoing paragraph.

<sup>2</sup> Taylor v. Jones, 1 C. P. D. 87.

<sup>3</sup> McCall v. Iron Co., 98 Mich. 482.

<sup>4</sup> Ward v. Spelts, 39 Neb. 809.

<sup>5</sup> Peck v. Frees, 101 Mich. 321; Harvey v. Duffey, 99 Cal. 401; 8 Wash. 647.

<sup>6</sup> See post, c. 5.

<sup>7</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, §§ 128, 136.

<sup>8</sup> Reitz's Appeal, 64 Penn. St. 162.

merges all previous oral stipulations, and is not to be enlarged or limited by parol. So where any bargain has been consummated by a memorandum or negotiated by correspondence, the mutual intent will be gathered by the court upon inspection of all the papers. Language of itself unintelligible cannot avail in any such written contract; but the court will correct obvious errors and supply omissions upon proper evidence; and, in fine, make the agreement intelligible as it stands.<sup>1</sup> In this, as in most other respects, the law of mutual assent applicable to bargain and sale is part of the ordinary law of contracts; and it would appear that writings of this character will more readily be construed into an actual sale than an executory agreement to sell, there being nothing in the transaction to indicate a different intent.<sup>2</sup> A sale contract may be entire or severable as to the items embraced under it.<sup>3</sup>

---

CHAPTER II.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY RIGHT IN SPECIFIC CHATTELS.

§ 235. As to Transfer of Property Right in a Sale. — In every contract of sale there is a certain point at which a transfer of title takes place from seller to buyer, and rights and responsibilities of ownership becoming shifted accordingly. This point is readily perceptible in the very simple case of a cash sale made at a store counter, where the customer enters,

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 137; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 1, c. 3, § 1; Wilson v. Wilson, 5 H. L. 40; Guthing v. Lynn, 2 B. & Ad. 232; Merriam v. Field, 29 Wis. 592; Smith v. Dallas, 35 Ind. 255; Kelly v. Roberts, 40 N. Y. 432; Colt v. Cone, 107 Mass. 285.

<sup>2</sup> McCrae v. Young, 43 Ala. 622; Martin v. Adams, 104 Mass. 262. A binding agreement is constituted upon a final and full mutual assent to certain terms, such terms being so evidenced as fitly to comply with the Statute of Frauds (see cs. 9-11, post), notwithstanding the parties agreed that there should be a more formal instrument prepared and signed. Chinock v. Marchioness of Ely, 42 De G., J. & S. 646, per Lord Chancellor Westbury.

<sup>3</sup> See, e.g., Williams v. Robb, Mich. (1895); Ming v. Corbin, 142 N. Y. 334; Holmes v. Gregg, 66 N. H. 621.

selects his goods, pays for them, and carries them out. Should those goods be injured, destroyed, or stolen ever so soon after he has set foot in the street again, the loss is his own ; or should some chance immediately occur for selling them at a profit upon their cost, the opportunity is for his benefit to seize or let slip, — all this from the very obvious circumstance that the customer has become the owner. But while the same doctrine holds perfectly good under other circumstances, the facts which may attend a sale are so various that the courts must separate the meshes of a complicated network with great delicacy oftentimes, in order to discover just where that transition point lies. Thus, instead of a sale for cash on delivery, there may have been a sale on credit, the customer receiving his goods under an agreement to defer payment ; or the customer may have paid on the spot, with the understanding that the goods shall be sent to his address ; or a bargain may have been struck, and nothing said concerning payment of price and delivery ; or the terms of the purchase may have contemplated some further act on the part of buyer or seller, or a third person, such as weighing, counting, or measuring the goods ; or, to becloud the issue still more completely, a contract might relate to goods which have as yet no existence, but must be manufactured to order, or which, already in being as part of a lump or mass, need to be separated and set apart before there can be identical and specific property for the sale to operate upon.

§ 236. Mutual Intention is here the Guiding Principle. — Whatever the aspect presented by a contract of sale, so far as the parties themselves are concerned, the whole law concerning its effect in transferring the rights and liabilities of ownership pivots upon this, — that the mutual intention of the parties to the contract is to be studied out, and, if not found unlawful, allowed to operate. Anything short of this doctrine is mere presumption, liable to rebuttal, and legal rules are but ancillary to the investigation of a cardinal fact. But even when reduced to the question of intention, the solution of the problem of ownership is by no means easy, while the practical results arrived at, for the purpose of any intelligent and comprehensive system of rules, must needs be discordant. Mercantile transactions task the keenest wit and ingenuity; and, intent themselves on the pursuit of gain, men are constantly interweaving new webs, and then coming into the courts to get them unravelled. Price, subject-matter, and mutual assent, the essentials of a bargain, already considered,<sup>1</sup> the parties may well comprehend; but just how and when their assent to the sale shall accomplish a transfer of property, they do not so clearly bring to their own minds. The buyer wants to get the goods into his own hands, and, as to payment, let the seller take his chances; the seller means to flatter the buyer to the utmost in displaying a confidence in his honor and solvency, while the clutch of his hand upon those goods is not readily lost in the mean time, however well concealed from sight; and if through some casualty the goods perish before the last stage of performance is attained, neither party desires to be owner in sustaining the loss. Each party being naturally eager, then, to reap all the advantages and shirk all the burdens of a contract whose full scope was probably not brought within the clear range of their mutual vision, how difficult must it be for a court to apply an inflexible rule, or juries to agree upon consistent verdicts.

To this inherent difficulty we must continually recur in the examination of all cases where the legal effect of a sale contract, executed or executory, is brought under discussion. Nor is a certain bias of court and jury, which appears traceable in various reported decisions, unworthy of a passing remark: namely, against the presumed intention of complete transfer, wherever the natural result of litigation would be to give the buyer the benefit of goods for which he can never pay, or leave the seller to enjoy the purchase-money advanced for goods which he has never delivered.<sup>2</sup> And in our present discussion we assume that no provision of the Statute of Frauds affects the issue.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See preceding chapter.

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., Littledale, J., in Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857, referring to Hanson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614; Haldeman v. Duncan, 51 Penn. St. 66.

<sup>3</sup> See cs. 9-11, post.

§ 237. Executory and Executed Sale Contracts, etc.; Distinctions of Common and Civil Law. — Writers on the English law of sales distinguish between an executory contract of sale and a full bargain and sale; in other words, between an agreement to transfer goods whose effect in changing the property thereto is yet postponed to further acts contemplated in the agreement, and that which of itself amounts to such a transfer of property, whether further acts, as, for instance, delivery on the payment of price, remain to be performed or no.<sup>1</sup> These two things, the executory contract of sale and the absolute or executed sale, are attended with different consequences of ownership. When contrasting the executory contract of sale with the executed bargain and sale, it is proper that an executed or absolute sale should be further distinguished from an executed contract of sale. A sale may be complete so far as transferring the property right is concerned, notwithstanding further acts, such as delivery or payment of the price, remain to be done in order to render the execution of the contract, as such, complete. An executed sale, therefore, may be understood to mean a sale where nothing remains to be done by either party to accomplish the transfer of property: but by an executed contract of sale is properly signified that the transaction is finished throughout; the thing delivered, the price paid, and the agreement which incidentally carries the property over, fully performed on both sides.<sup>2</sup> The result appears in giving to the executed bargain and sale a sense broader or narrower, according to circumstances, — a transfer of property being sometimes its consequence, and sometimes only its incident.

Mr. Story says that by the Roman law there is no distinction made between an executory contract of sale and an absolute sale; any agreement to transfer goods on the one side and to pay for them on the other being a complete sale with transfer of the jus in re; and he thinks that towards this conclusion our own jurisprudence is now tending, the former rigor of the common law of sales becoming relaxed in that respect.<sup>1</sup> But the Roman law of sales, it should be added, was quite artificial; it differed at different stages of Roman history; and the modern civil law has departed from it in many particulars. The discovery, in 1816, of a manuscript copy of the Institutes of Gaius, upon which work the celebrated compilations of Justinian's age were founded, has given later writers the advantage over Pothier, Domat, and other eminent civilians of the last century. And it would appear, in the light of the evidence now accessible, that the sale contract of the Roman law was not in strictness a transfer of the property in the thing sold; that it amounted to letting the buyer have the thing, rather than giving it to him; though it was a special rule, notwithstanding, that the buyer should suffer loss if the thing perished before delivery, the seller being bound on his part to take reasonable care meantime, but no further.<sup>2</sup> While, then, mutual consent became, in Rome's maturity, the foundation of a contract of sale, the jurisprudence of the empire on this subject furnishes unsafe analogies for our guidance at the present day.

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 1; Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 438; Story Sales, § 232; Blackburn Sales, 147-149.

<sup>2</sup> See Story Sales, § 231; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cr. 87.

§ 238. The Same Subject.—It may be gathered from the preceding chapter, at all events, that while the simultaneous union of three essentials is requisite for a valid sale at our law, there may yet be an incomplete bargain for that which is not yet ready to be regarded as in definite existence, nor with a definite price already put upon it; on the principle that an

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 186.

<sup>2</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 7, where the effect of a sale by the civil law is treated at length; Dig. 18, 1, 25; § 1; Inst. 3, 23, 3; Gaius, L. 4, § 30. See Lord Blackburn in M'Bain v. Wallace, 6 App. Cas. 608, concerning the distinction between the English and Scotch law on this point. He observes that by the English law, when there was a bargain and sale, — a contract for good and valuable consideration to pass the property in particular chattels, — as soon as that was ascertain the property passed, even though there might be a vendor's lien or something else to prevent delivery. But the law of Scotland, he continues, was like the civil law upon which it was founded; the maxim of the civil law being traditionibus et usucapionibus non nudis pactis transferuntur rerum domitia, while there was not an actual delivery, the dominion of the thing did not pass to the purchaser. But Parliament interfered to assimilate the law of the two countries.

executory contract with consideration has been entered into, which will be given the effect of a complete sale and transfer in due time and under suitable circumstances. And here, so long as the contract continues merely executory, the subject-matter, if existing at all in an unfinished state, remains under the ownership of the selling party, who does not sell, but only promises to sell; while the buying party, as yet free from all responsibility for loss or destruction of the goods, can claim nothing specific under his contract, but is reduced to a suit for damages in case of its breach.

§ 239. Effect of Contract of Sale in transferring Property Right to be considered.—Since an executory agreement of sale is valid, and likewise an absolute bargain and sale, the question as to the true character of any such transaction, with the attendant consequences, will depend primarily upon the contemporaneous mutual intention of the parties.<sup>1</sup> But if this mutual intention has not been manifested by their words, acts, and conduct with sufficient clearness, the case calls for the application of certain rules of construction, which may aid in determining the particular controversy. With this guiding principle, let us proceed to examine in this and succeeding chapters the effect of the contract of sale in transferring the property right to the subject-matter.

§ 240. Property Transfer as to Specific Chattels; what are Specific Chattels.—That transfer of property rights to which our attention should first be directed concerns contracts of sale of specific chattels. Specific chattels are those which are already in existence, ascertained, and appropriated to the contract, so that the sale was plainly of those identical things and no others, whether anything further was to be done to them or not. Thus, the sale of a certain horse, A., or of a certain yacht, is plainly the sale of a specific chattel; and so, too, must it be in a variety of other instances, where the buyer has specially selected that which he desires because of its intrinsic qualities. And the sale of ten particular horses already selected is a sale of specific chattels, the contract relating to those ten identical horses and no others. So is the sale of a particular cargo in the mass, or of a particular herd of cattle, or of a particular heap of corn, or of a particular lot of cotton bales or of boxes of dry goods, a sale of specific chattels, notwithstanding the cargo, or the herd, or the heap, or the lot, comprised within itself a great many particulars. But, on the other hand, the contract of sale which calls for any horse or yacht answering a certain description, or any chattel which may be supplied in response to a general order; or that contract which calls for so many cattle out of a certain herd, so many bales or boxes from a certain lot, or so much in weight or measure from certain solids or liquids, — would be, at this stage in the transaction, the sale of chattels not specific. In this latter case there is nothing as yet definite, certain, identical, upon which the contract of sale may operate; some further act of separation and setting apart, if not of positive selection, is requisite before there can be essentially a subject-matter under the contract. But in the former case the contract closes upon its own subject-matter precisely, and that to which the bargain related is specifically before the parties.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 1; Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 449; Bethel v. Steam Mill Co. v. Brown, 57 Me. 18; Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. 76; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 119; 41 N. H. 275; Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich. 386; Foster v. Ropes, 111 Mass. 10.

§ 241. Specific Chattels may be sold though lying with Other Chattels. — A contract may be for specific chattels, notwithstanding the identical goods are lying with other goods, and require to be separated. Thus, in the hypothetical case which Chief Justice Shaw suggested, if there are one hundred bales of cotton, numbered from one to one hundred, and the contract is for the fifty odd numbers, or the fifty even numbers, or any other specified fifty numbers, the bales sold are here identified though not separated, and the sale is one of specific chattels.<sup>2</sup> Any designation by a visible mark — branding, numbering, lettering, and so on — will render a contract which so identifies, a contract for specific property. And hence does a bill of sale represent specific goods where it describes barrels of mackerel as marked No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, respectively, and includes all that the seller has on hand of any particular number, although these barrels are not separated from other barrels of mackerel; while, if the bill of sale does not include all that he has on hand of the particular number, and those intended to be covered by the contract are not yet specially set aside or designated, the transaction represented embraces goods as yet not specific.<sup>1</sup> So may there be a sale of a specific portion of goods in a warehouse, if that portion has its distinguishing marks, although there has as yet been no actual separation or delivery.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For instances of specific chattels sold, see Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; Russell v. Carrington, 42

N. Y. 119; Browning v. Hamilton, 42 Ala. 484.

<sup>2</sup> Shaw, C. J., in Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 40.

§ 242. Leading Considerations; whether Something remains to be done to Specific Chattels. — Two leading considerations are suggested, as concerns chattels specific and chattels not specific: (1.) That by the performance of certain acts chattels not specific may become specific chattels, — the latter class alone being what the contract always contemplates as the final condition of the thing sold. (2.) That even specific chattels under a contract of sale may require something done to them before the transfer of property right can be pronounced completed. Of chattels not specific and the former consideration more hereafter.<sup>3</sup> But as to contracts of sale which relate to specific chattels, let us, following the latter suggestion, consider them, first, where nothing remains, and, second, where something remains, to be done to them.

§ 243. Where Nothing remains to be done; Transfer presumed when Bargain is closed. — First. Where specific chattels are embraced under a contract of immediate sale, and nothing remains to be done to them, the presumed intent of the parties is, that the right of property shall become transferred to the buyer and vest in him, immediately upon completion of the bargain by mutual assent. And even though the seller subsequently continue in possession of the goods, the presumption remains the same as between the parties ; his possession being that of a bailee, with a right to recover his price.<sup>1</sup> For, as Chief Justice Bovill has said, "where specific and ascertained existing goods or chattels are the subject of a contract of immediate and present sale, and whether there be a warranty of quality or not, the property generally passes to the purchaser upon the completion of the bargain, and the vendor thereupon has a right to recover the price, unless from other circumstances it can be collected that the intention was that the property should not at once vest in the purchaser."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ropes v. Lane, 9 Allen, 502. And see Beck v. Sheldon, 48 N. Y. 365; Webster v. Anderson, 42 Mich. 554. .

<sup>2</sup> Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 118.

<sup>3</sup> See post, c. 3.

Most consequences of ownership necessarily attend this transfer of property ; the buyer, under such a presumption, being liable in case the goods are subsequently destroyed without the seller's fault (supposing the seller still in possession as bailee), and, on the other hand, having rights of ownership which pass to his own assignee or sub-vendee. For possession, a right of possession, and a right of property need not coexist in one and the same person.

§ 244. This Rule is one of Presumption only; Qualification where Price is not paid.—But, after all, the above rule is only one of presumption ; and where it is evident, from the circumstances, that the intention of the parties requires something further before the right of property passes from the seller, no change of ownership as yet takes place. Particularly is this true where no price has been paid, and an ownership is yet claimed for the seller's benefit. Sales may doubtless be on credit; but mutual intention is evinced where the parties

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 2 ; Blackburn Sales, 147-149 ; cases infra.

<sup>2</sup> Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 438. In Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 862, Bayley, J., said : "Generally, where a bargain is made for the purchase of goods, and nothing is said about payment or delivery, the property passes immediately, so as to cast upon the purchaser all future risk, if nothing remains to be done to the goods, although he cannot take them away without paying the price." And Park, J., said, in Dixon v. Yates, 5 Ad. & El. 313 : "I take it to be clear that by the law of England the sale of a specific chattel passes the property in it to the vendee without delivery." And see Blackburn, J., in Calcutta Co. v. De Mattos, 32 L. J. Q. B. 322, 328 ; and (as Lord Blackburn) in 11 Cas. 370 ; Olyphant v. Baker, 5 Denio, 379 ; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 413 ; Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78.

are silent, by business usage; and business usage varies in different localities, at different epochs, and with reference to different commodities. In the earlier days of the English law, when chattel traffic was in its primitive state, sales were usually for cash or "ready money," and the consideration of a contract of sale was most likely to be the actual payment of the price. Accordingly it was laid down by Noy, more than two centuries ago, that "in all agreements there must be quid pro quo presently; except a day be expressly given for the payment, or else it is nothing but communication;" by which we are to understand that a sale could not be considered executed or complete unless the money was paid at or about the time of the bargain, or else an agreement was entered into to pay on a day expressly named.<sup>1</sup>

This strong presumption of a cash transaction, which suited well the simple modes of business then prevailing, has changed with later usage; and in England the present rule is more decidedly favorable to credit sales; and, as lately expressed, the consideration of the contract is now held to be the purchaser's obligation to pay the price, where nothing shows a contrary intent, — not the actual payment of a price.<sup>2</sup> As Judge Blackburn expresses it, the parties (at least in commercial transactions) are taken to contemplate an immediate transfer of the property in the goods, and an immediate obligation to pay the price, with a reasonable time for delivery and payment, unless there be something to show a different intention.<sup>3</sup> Yet it is clearly admitted by him that where this presumption is rebutted, either from the nature of the transaction, or from other circumstances, so as to show that the sale was for ready money, the modern law does not differ from the ancient.<sup>4</sup>

In this country, and especially where the sale is not between commercial parties, the view frequently taken, conformably to the supposed intention of the parties, is, that the

<sup>1</sup> Noy's Maxims, 87-89 (A.D. 1641). And see Sheph. Touch. 224.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 2; Blackb. Sales, 147-149; Simmons v. Swift, property to a specific chattel does not vest in the purchaser, where nothing was said concerning payment, and no arrangement for credit was made, until the purchase-money is actually made or adjusted; but that immediately upon such payment or arrangement for time, and without waiting for delivery, the ownership is presumably shifted.<sup>1</sup> And whatever may be the assumed course of dealing among merchants, and particularly in the wholesale trade, we should say that, as between a retailer and his casual customer, cash on delivery, with title in the seller until the price is paid or secured, is, by the American, and perhaps, too, the English rule, prima facie the mutual understanding; credit sales resulting from a closer acquaintance of the parties, more extensive dealings, and a definite undertaking on the seller's part to run unusual hazards to accommodate the buyer.<sup>2</sup>

5 B. & C. 862; Dixon v. Yates, 5 Ad. & El. 313.

<sup>3</sup> Blackb. Sales, 147-149.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.

§ 245. The Same Subject; Qualification as to Matter of Delivery.—The presumption will readily shift, too, from regard to the matter of delivery. Undelivered goods may be purchased with the understanding either that the seller deliver them, or that the buyer send for them. While the disposition of the courts is doubtless to give the buyer who has paid for the goods all the advantages of a presumed ownership, they are not so ready to throw upon him the burdens of a loss while an act of delivery incumbent upon the seller remains actually unperformed.<sup>3</sup> Even as a bailee of the goods whose ownership is transferred, the seller has some responsibility for their safety; as a common carrier, could he be so regarded (as he seldom can), his liability for their safe delivery would be even greater. And there are cases which go so far as to make him absolutely bound under a contract of sale to deliver the goods at the place agreed upon,—thus putting upon the seller instead of the buyer the loss of goods paid for and not yet delivered, though the loss were occasioned by inevitable accident, without the fault of either; this on the ground of an undertaking by the seller amounting to a condition precedent.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hanson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614; Darnell v. Griffin, 46 Ala. 520; Cassell v. Backrack, 42 Miss. 56; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; Wabash Elevator Co. v. First National Bank, 23 Ohio St. 311; Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Phillips, 60 Ill. 190; Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich. 386; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 118; Brehen v. O'Donnell, 34 N. J. L. 408; Little v. Page, 44 Mo. 412. But see Jenkins v. Jarrett, 70 N. C. 255.

<sup>2</sup> See post, c. 5, as to sales conditional on payment. And as to the seller's lien to secure the price, see post, c. 14.

<sup>3</sup> See Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45; Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore P. C. 551; Pier v. Duff, 63 Penn. St. 59; Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 Mich. 486. The judicial inclination is here to leave the question to the jury as one of fact.

§ 246. The Same Subject; Presumption applies with above Qualifications.—But, with the foregoing qualifications, the modern presumption, in the sale of specific chattels, must be that the property or right of ownership in those chattels vests at once in the buyer and a right to the price in the seller, as soon as the bargain is struck by the aggregatio mentium, although nothing has been said about payment or delivery; provided, of course, nothing further is contracted to be done to the goods; the presumption being subject to countervailing evidence of mutual intent. This is established by numerous English and American authorities.<sup>2</sup>

§ 247. Where Something remains to be done; Presumption against Immediate Transfer.—Second. Where specific chattels are bargained for under a contract of immediate sale and something remains to be done to them by mutual understanding of the parties, the presumption is against a transfer

<sup>1</sup> See Bigler v. Hall, 54 N. Y. 167; Reynolds, C., dis. This extreme case seems opposed to Terry v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y. 520; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62; and Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 462. But see Logan v. Le Mesurier, 6 Moore P. C. 116. See post, c. 5, at more length as to conditions of sales.

<sup>2</sup> Tarling v. Baxter, 6 B. & C. 360; Dixon v. Yates, 5 Ad. & El. 313; Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 862; Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore P. C. 551; Olyphant v. Baker, 5 Denio, 379; Dexter v. Norton, 55 Barb. 272;

Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 Mich. 486; Bond v. Greenwald, 4 Heisk. 453; Webster v. Anderson, 42 Mich. 554; King v. Jarman, 35 Ark. 190; Webber v. Davis, 44 Me. 147; Buffington v. Ulen, 7 Bush, 231; Lester v. East, 49 Ind. 588; Bailey v. Smith, 43 N. H. 141; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 2; Blackb. Sales, 147–149; Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 449; Morse v. Sherman, 106 Mass. 430; Leonard v. Davis, 1 Black, 476; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 413; Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325.

of ownership until performance of the thing has taken place; though the question is still one of mutual intention, and open to rebutting proof as before. For while the thing to be done might, upon a true construction of the bargain, be shown to stand as an independent stipulation, not coming within the purview of the contract of sale at all, nor affecting the essential relation of buyer and seller, yet if the force of that stipulation be in doubt, or in case of its clearly inseparable connection with the contract of sale, the court should construe that stipulation into a condition precedent, causing a suspension of the transfer of title, — a consequence which must needs attend the incorporation of any condition precedent with a contract of sale, so long as that condition continues unfulfilled.<sup>1</sup>

§ 248. The Same Subject; Artificial Rules as stated by English Judges. — Lord Ellenborough and his successors have introduced into the English law certain rules of convenience on this subject, somewhat artificial. Borrowed from the civilians in the first place, they are applied by the courts of this day with a degree of flexibility which impairs their practical usefulness. Judge Blackburn thus states them: (1st.) Where by the agreement the vendor is to do anything to the goods, for the purpose of putting them into that state in which the purchaser is to be bound to accept them, or, as it is sometimes worded, into a deliverable state, the performance of those things shall, in the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention, be taken to be a condition precedent to the vesting of the property. (2d.) Where anything remains to be done to the goods, for the purpose of ascertaining the price, as by weighing, measuring, or testing the goods, when the price is to depend on the quantity or quality of the goods, the performance of these things also shall be a condition precedent to the transfer of the property, although the individual goods be ascertained, and they are in the state in which they ought to be accepted.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See post, c. 5.

<sup>2</sup> Blackb. Sales, 151, 152; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3.

These two rules have been in substance adopted and applied in numerous English and American decisions from the close of the last century, but not with uniformity, as will be presently shown. The rules, as thus stated, are not correlative; for the first applies to acts of the seller, while the second comprehends acts of seller, buyer, and third parties; moreover, as both relate to putting goods into a deliverable state, the second might be viewed as in some respects deducible from the first, unless both indeed were regarded as exhibiting phases of a principle more expansive. Judge Blackburn, though believing the former of these rules to be founded in reason, — since it is generally for the seller's advantage that the property should pass if he retains the goods as security for the price, — thought that the latter was somewhat hastily adopted from the civilians, without advertent to some important distinction between their law and ours.<sup>1</sup>

§ 249. English Cases reviewed where the Seller is to do the Act. — Let us briefly advert to the leading English cases under the head of acts to be done by the seller. In Hanson v. Meyer, where the purchaser became bankrupt before the goods were fully weighed and delivered, Lord Ellenborough said that the act of weighing (which was here under the seller's own orders) was in the nature of a condition precedent to the passing of the property by the terms of the contract, because "the price is made to depend upon the weight."<sup>2</sup> But this view of the act of weighing was drawn from a peculiar state of facts, — no payment of the agreed price having been made in a sale for cash, and it would have been a great hardship to the seller to view the transfer as completed, under the circumstances. The obligation of the buyer to pay the price before the title should vest in him may have furnished the true condition precedent. In Rugg

<sup>1</sup> Blackb. Sales, 151-154. And see 2 Kent Com. 496; Story Sales, §§ 246-253; Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 308; Civil Code La., art. 2433.

<sup>2</sup> Hanson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614. It was here broadly stated: "If anything remain to be done on the part of the seller as between him and the buyer, before the commodity purchased is to be delivered, a complete present right of property has not attached in the buyer." And see Withers v. Lyss, 4 Camp. 237.

v. Minett, certain casks having been destroyed which were not yet filled up by the seller according to contract, it was held that in these the property had not passed.<sup>1</sup> Zagury v. Furnell showed a sale of bales of goatskins. By the custom of the trade, the seller was first to count over the goatskins sold; and as these had not been counted, the loss by a fire was placed upon the seller.<sup>2</sup> Simmons v. Swift was the case of loss occasioned by damage to a lot of bark. Here the subject-matter of sale was clearly ascertained; it was all the bark stacked at a certain place, to be paid for at so much a ton; but the price could not be ascertained until the bark had been weighed. The weighing was not to be done, it appears, by the seller alone, for the agreement of the parties contemplated a mutual weighing on behalf of both; but, at least, "the concurrence of the seller in the act of weighing was necessary." The court placed the loss upon the seller.<sup>3</sup> In Acraman v. Morrice, the seller was allowed to have retained property as against a bankrupt buyer, where the contract of sale contemplated a selection of timber on the part of the buyer, whereupon the seller was to sever and dress the timber, and then convey it.<sup>4</sup> Logan v. Le Mesurier is an unusual case, where rafted timber not already delivered by the seller was destroyed by a storm, the buyer having already made payment. Here, the circumstances being taken together, and the whole contract viewed in the light of mutual intention, the result arrived at was that property was not to pass until the timber had been measured at the place of delivery.<sup>5</sup> Tansley v. Turner and Cooper v. Bill are to the effect that, where the seller's acts under the contract are fully performed, the title passes to the buyer; a mere

<sup>1</sup> Rugg v. Minett, 11 East, 210.

<sup>2</sup> Zagury v. Furnell, 2 Camp. 240.

<sup>3</sup> Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & C. 857.

The decision of this case went mainly upon another ground, the want of delivery under the contract sued upon; and the judges were not unanimous in the opinion that no transfer of property had taken place.

<sup>4</sup> Acraman v. Morrice, 8 C. B. 449.

<sup>5</sup> Logan v. Le Mesurier, 6 Moore P. C. 116. That the prepayment of price by the buyer had much to do with this decision, see the opposite result reached in Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore P. C. 551.

footing up of the agreed measurement which was to be sent not entering into the contract of sale.<sup>1</sup>

§ 250. American Authorities with Reference to this Point. — The American authorities appear to have been in substantial accord with the English at the outset. Chancellor Kent set it forth as a well-established principle in our doctrine of sales over half a century ago, that “if anything remains to be done, as between the seller and the buyer, before the goods are to be delivered, a present right of property does not attach in the buyer;” adding, however, that when everything is done by the seller to put specific goods in a deliverable state, the property, and consequently the risk thereof, passes to the buyer.<sup>2</sup> He further stated it to be a fundamental principle, pervading everywhere the doctrine of sales of chattels, “that if the goods of different value be sold in bulk, and not separately, and for a single price, or per aversionem, in the language of the civilians, the sale is perfect and the risk with the buyer; but if they be sold by number, weight, or measure, the sale is incomplete, and the risk continues with the seller until the specific property be separated and identified.”<sup>3</sup> Judge Story and other eminent American jurists besides our commentator gave in their early adhesion to Lord Ellenborough’s rules.<sup>4</sup> And the same maxims are constantly repeated in the courts, as occasion arises for applying them.<sup>5</sup> But with the rapid growth of the law of sales in this country, and the constantly varying aspects of facts as presented to a jury, there has developed

<sup>1</sup> Tansley v. Turner, 2 Scott, 238; Cooper v. Bill, 3 H. & C. 722. See also Langton v. Higgins, 4 H. & N. 402. Anderson v. Morrice is a case where, upon much controversy, it was determined that title in the buyer was postponed until the loading of the goods was completed. 1 App. Cas. 713; L. R. 10 C. P. 58, 609. But cf. 12 App. Cas. 128.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 495; M'Donald v. Hewitt, 15 Johns. 349; Barrett v. Goddard, 3 Mas. 107; Aliman v. Davis, 2 Ire. (N. C.) 12.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 496; Devane v. Fennell, 2 Ire. 236.

<sup>4</sup> See Barrett v. Goddard, 3 Mas. 197; Higgins v. Chessman, 9 Pick. 7; Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. 404; Davis v. Hill, 3 N. H. 382.

<sup>5</sup> Straus v. Ross, 25 Ind. 300; Mason v. Thompson, 18 Pick. 305; Story Sales, § 220; McClung v. Kelley, 21 Iowa, 508; Bailey v. Smith, 43 N. H. 141; Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 324.

in many quarters a positive preference for letting each case go pretty much upon its intrinsic merits, weighing the proof submitted, and letting the decision turn upon mutual intention, and with no very strong presumption one way or another.<sup>1</sup> Nor are the foregoing English rules stated and applied without some variation.<sup>2</sup> And certainly a presumption has been readily overcome, in certain cases, on the ground of a mutual intent to the contrary, express or implied, where the goods, though not yet weighed or measured, were otherwise ready for delivery; especially if payment of the price had already been made or arranged between the parties.<sup>3</sup> But other cases are decided on the principle that weighing and measuring, with the seller's concurrence, postpones presumably the change of ownership;<sup>4</sup> as where, for instance, wood was sold at so much per cord, a subsequent measurement being part of the bargain; and while the parties were disputing as between "running measure" or "solid cords," the wood floated away and was lost.<sup>5</sup>

Other acts than those of weighing and measuring, or separating from a larger supply, which are made requisite on the part of the seller to put the goods in a deliverable state in compliance with the mutual contract, have been generally held to postpone the divesting of his property. For instance, <sup>1</sup> See Hyde v. Lathrop, 3 Keyes, 497; Hutchinson v. Hunter, 7 Penn. St. 140; Groat v. Gile, 51 N. Y. 431; Graff v. Fitch, 58 Ill. 573; Morrow v. Reed, 30 Wis. 81; Southwestern Freight Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71; Marble v. Moore, 102 Mass. 443.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, it is sometimes said that the reason why marking, measuring, &c., is a prerequisite of transfer, is merely that the particular goods may be identified; in other words, made specific property, — a subsequent weighing or measuring merely to determine the full price at such a rate constituting no obstacle to the passing of property. Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Comst. 258; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 40; South- western Freight Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71; Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 73.

<sup>3</sup> See Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; Groat v. Gile, 51 N. Y. 431; Fitch v. Burk, 38 Vt. 683; Boswell v. Green, 1 Dutch. 390; Cummins v. Griggs, 2 Duv. 87; Brown v. Child, 2 Duv. 314.

<sup>4</sup> Frost v. Woodruff, 54 Ill. 155; Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C. 451; Gibbs v. Benjamin, 45 Vt. 124; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H. 290; Lingham v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 324; Bailey v. Long, 24 Kan. 90; Jones v. Pearce, 25 Ark. 545.

<sup>5</sup> Gibbs v. Benjamin, supra. And see Nesbit v. Burry, 25 Penn. St. 208.

baling and pressing a lot of hops;<sup>1</sup> taking out samples and comparing them with original samples in a sale of cotton;<sup>2</sup> the scaling of logs;<sup>3</sup> marking stems, and otherwise preparing tobacco;<sup>4</sup> the drying and weighing of fish;<sup>5</sup> the ginning of cotton;<sup>6</sup> the completed burning of charcoal sold in the pits.<sup>7</sup>

But, on the whole, the American decisions, as well as the grounds upon which they are rested, are quite contradictory; though more especially with reference to the second than the first of the Blackburn propositions, to the rule of weighing and measuring, rather than that of the seller's performing general acts to put the subject-matter into a deliverable state. Upon the unfulfilled condition precedent of paying the price before a title shall vest in the buyer, rather than the want of weighing, measuring, or putting the goods into a deliverable state, many of our cases turn.<sup>8</sup> And that any presumption of a suspended transfer may be overcome by proof of mutual intention that the property should pass before the thing was put into a deliverable condition, is left clear and unquestionable.<sup>9</sup>

§ 251. Further Considerations where the Seller is to do the Act.—Pothier is quoted by Mr. Story as of the opinion that if a sale be made of all the corn stored in a particular granary at so much a hundred-weight, the sale is not considered perfect before the weighing or measuring is performed.<sup>10</sup> But upon this passage Mr. Story observes, that the distinction must be kept in view between a sale by measure or weight, requiring the weighing or measuring to be accomplished for

<sup>1</sup> Keeler v. Vandervere, 5 Lans. 313.

<sup>2</sup> Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550.

<sup>3</sup> Begole v. McKenzie, 26 Mich. 470; Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich. 386.

But see Morrow v. Reed, 30 Wis. 81.

<sup>4</sup> Dixon v. Myers, 7 Gratt. 240.

<sup>5</sup> Foster v. Ropes, 111 Mass. 10. But an agreement that the seller shall haul the goods to a certain place does not prevent title from vesting in the buyer, if other facts consist with such mutual intent. Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45.

<sup>6</sup> Smith v. Sparkman, 55 Miss. 649.

<sup>7</sup> Hale v. Huntley, 21 Vt. 147.

<sup>8</sup> See post, c. 5, as to this doctrine.

<sup>9</sup> See Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; Boswell v. Green, 1 Dutch. 390; Bemis v. Morrill, 38 Vt. 130; Terry v. Wheeler, 25 N. Y. 520; Pike v. Vaughn, 39 Wis. 499; Cushman v. Holyoke, 34 Me. 289; Foster v. Ropes, 111 Mass. 10; Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45; 98 Mass. 152.

<sup>10</sup> Pothier Contrat de Vente, No. 309.

ascertaining the price, and the sale of specific goods in a lump at an ascertained price, accompanied by a representation or warranty of the weight or quantity, — where, so to speak, the weighing is only to satisfy the purchaser that he has got the quantity bargained for.<sup>1</sup> That as between purchasing a lot of specific goods at a fixed rate, with the intent of having them subsequently weighed and measured to ascertain the total sum payable, and the sale by measure or weight of what are, as yet, goods unspecified, not on hand, or else to be separated from a larger mass, there is a decided difference in the presumptions of transfer, will appear in the next chapter. But here, in the case of specific goods sold by the lot, we may distinguish two separate transactions. One is the sale of a certain specific lot at an agreed weight, measurement, &c., and on fixed terms, whereby the estimated weight is final between the parties, notwithstanding the buyer, on further test, might find the goods excessive or short; and here, the price being made by the terms of the bargain not only exact in rate, but, upon the simplest arithmetical computation, exact in amount, the transfer is completely made to the buyer on the bargain itself, quite independently of all further superfluous acts of weighing, measuring, or testing.<sup>2</sup> The other transaction is the sale of a specific lot at a fixed rate, the total price to be according to what it may prove to weigh or measure; in which case, the rate being exact by the terms of the bargain, and the obligation to pay extending to the identical goods, neither more nor less, there yet remains, in accordance with mutual agreement, a further test to be applied, before the exact amount payable can be determined. It is this latter case of specific goods that really presents difficulty as to title transfer; though even here the courts seem disinclined to apply the rule which suspends a transfer, pending the weighing or measuring which shall be decisive of amount payable, and rather favor the shifting of ownership, with its attendant advantages and risks, to the buyer, without awaiting the application of the final test.<sup>1</sup> Where delivery of such goods has once been made by the seller, or the goods were at the special risk of the buyer, and the property is then destroyed, so as to render weighing or measuring actually impossible, the full amount due is to be ascertained, as near as may be, by other evidence, and the seller recovers his price accordingly.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 220.

<sup>2</sup> Welch v. Moffat, 1 N. Y. Supr. (Thomp. & C.) 575.

§ 252. Cases reviewed where the Buyer is to perform the Further Act.—Now as to acts to be performed by the buyer with reference to a contract for the sale of specific goods. In Rugg v. Minett the seller had done all that was incumbent upon him, upon a sale contract concerning a large lot of turpentine in casks, including the filling up of the casks; but it was necessary to have the casks gauged by a customs officer before they were removed. By Lord Ellenborough, with whom Le Blanc, J., and Bayley, J., agreed, it was ruled, that as the gauging remained to be done at the buyer's instance, and not the seller's, the property had already passed so as to render the buyer liable for a loss occurring before delivery.<sup>3</sup> In Swanwick v. Sothern, Lord Denman, C. J., admitting the principle to be well established that where acts on the part of the seller are necessary, including weighing or measuring to identify the goods or to ascertain the price, the property does not pass, declares it otherwise where, instead, the weighing can only be for the buyer's own satisfaction.<sup>4</sup> In Gilmour v. Supple, where a raft of timber had been sold at a certain rate per foot, and the measurement was already made, so far as compliance with the mutual contract went, the intent to make a subse-

<sup>1</sup> Swanwick v. Sothern, 9 Ad. & El. 895; Groat v. Gile, 51 N. Y. 431; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 73. In this last case it was observed by the court: "The whole property being identified and sold at a fixed price per foot, the process of ascertaining the amount was not essential to passing the title, as it might have been if less than the whole amount delivered was to be sold and separated by measurement." In Cunningham v. Ashbrook, the property had been delivered to the buyer, though not yet weighed.

<sup>2</sup> Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; Castle v. Playford, L. R. 7 Ex. 98; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436.

<sup>3</sup> Rugg v. Minett, 11 East, 210.

<sup>4</sup> Swanwick v. Sothern, 9 Ad. & El. 895.

quent measurement for the buyer's own satisfaction only was held not to have suspended the legal transfer of property to the buyer; and for a subsequent loss by storm, — delivery appearing to have been actually made to the buyer's servant, — the buyer was accordingly held the responsible party.<sup>1</sup> Channell, B., of the Exchequer, in Turley v. Bates, later intimated that the rule promulgated by Judge Blackburn,<sup>2</sup> as to weighing, measuring, &c., should apply in general to acts by the seller, and not extend to a case where all that remained to be done was to be done by the buyer, with full authority from the seller to do the act. But, with an obvious reluctance to disturb authorities, he placed his decision on the sure ground that here the parties had made their intention sufficiently clear that the property should pass, notwithstanding a contemplated after-weighing, and this intention should be decisive of the right. Here the buyer was, at his own expense, to load and cart away a heap of fire-clay which he had purchased in the mass, and have it weighed at a certain machine convenient to him.<sup>3</sup> The reasoning of this decision finds approval in the latest cases; and in the opinion of some of the best English judges of the present day, the property in the goods passes whenever the acts remaining to be done are at the buyer's own instance, and not the seller's; their obvious tendency being to regard mutual intention at all events.<sup>4</sup>

In the American cases the buyer's acts are sometimes considered. One circumstance in Riddle v. Varnum, which upheld the buyer's title, was, that measurement was to be made by a third person under the buyer's direction, the seller agreeing to be bound by such measurement.<sup>5</sup> It would appear to be the American rule, that acts such as weighing and measuring, to be performed purely for the buyer's own convenience and satisfaction, do not prevent the divestment

<sup>1</sup> Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore P. C. 551.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, § 248.

<sup>3</sup> Turley v. Bates, 2 H. & C. 200 (1863). And see Kershaw v. Ogden, 3 H. & C. 717.

<sup>4</sup> Cockburn, C. J., and Blackburn, J., in Castle v. Playford, L. R. 5 Ex. 165; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; North British Ins. Co. v. Moffatt, L. R. 7 C. P. 25.

<sup>5</sup> Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280.

of the seller's right of property ;<sup>1</sup> and the same may be said in various instances where weighing or counting by the buyer or some third party after the goods are delivered, will be partly for the seller's benefit.<sup>2</sup>

§ 253. Where the Act remaining is to be done by both Buyer and Seller.—Where the act remaining to be done to the goods to render them deliverable is one in which both parties are designed to participate, it may well be presumed that the property in the goods does not meanwhile pass.<sup>3</sup>

§ 254. Delivery as a Circumstance evincing Mutual Intention of Transfer.—Delivery is doubtless an important circumstance bearing upon this question of mutual intention. How far should it be decisive in shifting the burden of proof from seller to buyer? For it is no uncommon thing for a chattel to be delivered upon the understanding that the price shall be ascertained by subsequent weight or measurement,—perhaps at a different place from that of delivery. It is reasonable to presume, whenever the goods are actually delivered, that the parties intended this as the final act of transfer (save so far as the question of payment as a condition precedent might arise),<sup>4</sup> and that any subsequent acts of weighing or measuring must have had reference to the buyer's convenience, or to an adjustment of the total price which was by mutual agreement deferred to the vesting of property in the buyer.<sup>5</sup> That the property in the goods may pass, even though something remains to be done to <sup>1</sup> See Prescott v. Locke, 51 N. H. 94; Bethel Steam Mill Co. v. Brown, 57 Me. 9; Gibbs v. Benjamin, 45 Vt. 124. And see Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78, where everything had been done, except that the buyer was to send his man and haul the chattels purchased.

<sup>2</sup> Scott v. Wells, 6 W. & S. 357; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Comst. 258. In Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick. 175, counting was to determine after the sale what should be paid under agreed rates.

<sup>3</sup> See Prescott v. Locke, 51 N. H. 94, where spokes were not to be removed by the purchaser until they had been counted over; both buyer and seller intending to participate in the count. And see supra, § 250.

<sup>4</sup> See c. 5, infra.

<sup>5</sup> Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; Burr v. Williams, 23 Ark. 244; Kel-sea v. Haines, 41 N. H. 247, 254; Cushman v. Holyoke, 34 Me. 289; Odell v. Boston & Maine R. R., 109 Mass. 50; Cunningham v. Ashbrook, 20 Mo. 553; King v. Jarman, 35 Ark. 190.

them by the seller after their delivery, is distinctly held; this perhaps, however, upon proof, and not presumption.<sup>1</sup> But the presumption of a completed transfer of property must be far stronger where miscellaneous acts subsequent to delivery are to be performed solely by the buyer, or on his behalf, and not on the seller's.<sup>2</sup>

By accepting the specific chattel as his own in fact, under a delivery, the buyer might well be supposed to have waived all claim to a delayed transfer of property arising out of further acts which remained to be performed.<sup>3</sup> And a like reasoning might apply for shifting the presumptions, in case the risks of delivery had been specially assumed by the buyer. But whether it be conceived that property has passed or not, in the latter instance, it is clearly decided that the buyer is liable for destruction of the goods caused through no fault of the seller, and is bound to the payment of the agreed price, wherever he has specially contracted to bear the risk of delivery; for this would be but enforcing a fulfilment of his own express undertaking.<sup>4</sup> As regards delivery generally, it should be added, that it is sometimes the duty of the seller, under a contract of sale, to deliver, and sometimes of the buyer to come and take the goods; so that in one transaction the seller might have to put his goods into a deliverable state, and then deliver; while in another, he needs only to have the specific goods in condition for delivery, and then give the buyer notice to come and take them.<sup>5</sup> A special undertaking, on the seller's part, to convey the purchased goods to a certain point for the buyer's convenience, is not inconsistent with the previous transfer of

<sup>1</sup> Greaves v. Hepke, 2 B. & Ald. 131; Hammond v. Anderson, 1 B. & P. N. R. 69.

<sup>2</sup> Delivery and acceptance of an absolute bill of sale of the goods favors the presumption that the title has passed, though something may remain to be done to them, such as weighing to fix the exact price at a rate already agreed upon. Shepard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377.

<sup>3</sup> See Burr v. Williams, 23 Ark. 244.

<sup>4</sup> Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; Castle v. Playford, L. R. 5 Ex. 165; 7 Ex. 98.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Waldron v. Chase, 37 Me. 414; Whitcomb v. Whitney, 24 Mich. 486; Bond v. Greenwald, 4 Heisk. 453; Martineau v. Kitching, supra, with Logan v. Le Mesurier, 6 Moore P. C. 116.

ownership by mutual assent.<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless, while delivery is usually the most significant fact to prove the transfer of title, it is not conclusive; for there may be either an express or an implied contract of the parties to the contrary.<sup>2</sup> It is one thing, moreover, to hold that title has passed so as to exclude the seller from ownership, and another to consider that the buyer has the risks of accident;<sup>3</sup> and courts sometimes feel the bias of such contrasting consequences.

§ 255. Summary of Doctrine; English Rules restated. — Upon the whole, it seems impossible to reconcile the English and American decisions concerning the sale of specific chattels, where something remains to be done to them, upon any principle short of giving their mutual intention easy play. And it is evident that a rule no more stringent than this must expose contracting parties constantly to the caprice of court and jury. But, in any event, it would seem that the two rules of presumption which Judge Blackburn has set forth<sup>4</sup> need to be restated, in order to be properly applied. Perhaps they may best be stated, with the reasons, as follows: Previous to the delivery of specific chattels already bargained for, it is for the seller's interest, rather than the buyer's, — since the former still retains a convenient lien to secure his price, — that the property therein should be deemed to have passed out of the former, and vested in the latter; but, after their delivery, it is likely to be otherwise. First, then, when the contract of sale applies to specific chattels, not yet actually delivered, and by mutual agreement something remains to be done to those chattels, by the seller alone or by some other person, as an act demanding at least the seller's concurrence under the contract, for his own benefit, — this being for the purpose of putting the property into that deliverable state in which the purchaser shall be bound to accept, — the presumption is, in absence of circumstances indicating a contrary mutual intention, that, until performance thereof, the right of ownership shall not pass from the seller to the buyer. Second. But where, under such a contract for the sale of undelivered specific chattels, the thing remaining to be done is to be done by the buyer, or by some other person, independently of such concurrence on the seller's part, and as something for the buyer's sole benefit or convenience, the right of property in the chattels will be presumed to have passed to the buyer, as in the case of specific chattels sold where nothing remained to be done. Third. Where the seller has made actual delivery of the specific chattels, and the buyer has accepted them, the presumption is, — so far, at least, as risks of title are concerned, — that the right of property has shifted from seller to buyer, whether more remains to be done to the chattels or not. The second rule given by Judge Blackburn as to weighing, measuring, and testing the chattels, may, for present purposes, be considered as merged in the above propositions.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45. bearing on a delivery. Bailey v. Weighing and marking the goods, Long, 24 Kan. 90. See c. 7, post. with the purchaser's name are always regarded as very significant facts

<sup>2</sup> Cooley, C. J., in Wilkinson v. Holiday, 33 Mich. 386.

<sup>3</sup> See § 270. <sup>4</sup> Supra, § 248.

---

CHAPTER III.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY RIGHT IN CHATTELS NOT SPECIFIC.

§ 256. No Transfer in General until the Subject-matter becomes specific. — Under a contract of sale relating to chattels not specific, that which is generally indispensable, before an actual transfer of property from seller to buyer can take place, is to make the subject-matter specific; in other words, to appropriate identical chattels to the contract. Until this title. (See supra, §§ 2, 3.) Nor is the transfer of title to be pronounced full and complete, so long as the buyer has only the right of property, without possession and the right of possession besides.

<sup>1</sup> We should remember that this property right (or property), though often interchanged, in the law of sales, with the word "title," is in strictness only one of the three elements which constitute a perfect

is done, the presumption remains that the agreement, still executory, contemplates a postponement of transfer meanwhile; and it is evident that trover or replevin cannot be maintained for goods which are not as yet identified, but exist only as part of a mass awaiting separation.<sup>1</sup>

Any agreement to furnish goods which require a specific identification, selection, and separation, to meet the contract, must be executory in its character, as concerns a transfer of the property; for the minds of the parties do not yet meet on anything specific: and the same principle applies where an article is contracted to be made to order. Even were the goods so far ascertained that the minds of the parties had already met upon a specified larger mass, from which the particular goods bargained for were to be taken, the law cannot fasten upon any particular portion of that mass, and say that this was the distinctive thing embraced under their mutual assent.<sup>2</sup>

§ 257. Instances where this Doctrine is applied.—To this effect, as to unspecified goods, are numerous English and American decisions. Thus, in Austen v. Craven, a case before Lord Mansfield, there had been a contract made for a certain quantity of a specified quality of sugars, and any sugars of the required quality would have satisfied it. It was held that no property had passed to the buyer.<sup>3</sup> White v. Wilks, applied a like rule in the case of oil,—a more volatile substance, and hence even less likely, as measured out, to have been the identical subject-matter embraced by the terms of the original bargain.<sup>4</sup> So would it be with a sale of ten tons of Riga flax, requiring the separation, by weight, from a larger mass of eighteen tons, and perhaps, according to the custom of packing, the breaking-up, besides,

<sup>1</sup> Austen v. Craven, 4 Taunt. 644; Scudder v. Worster, 11 Cush. 573; Gillett v. Hill, 2 C. & M. 530; Morrison v. Dingley, 63 Me. 553; per curiam in Hurff v. Hires, 11 Vroom, 581.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 4; Blackb. Sales, 122, 128.

<sup>3</sup> Austen v. Craven, 4 Taunt. 644. But see Whitehouse v. Frost, 12 East, 614.

<sup>4</sup> White v. Wilks, 5 Taunt. 176. And see Foot v. Marsh, 51 N. Y. 288; Wallace v. Breeds, 13 East, 422; Haldeman v. Duncan, 51 Penn. St. 66.

of bundles known as mats;<sup>1</sup> and where a bargain is for a certain number of barrels of pork, not identified or distinguished from the larger quantity which the seller has on hand;<sup>2</sup> or for the whole of a lot, with a reservation to be made by the seller;<sup>3</sup> or for so many bushels out of a larger mass keep in store;<sup>4</sup> or for ungathered vegetables or fruit;<sup>5</sup> or for two thousand telegraph-poles, which must be selected from a lot containing some twenty-one hundred;<sup>6</sup> or for ores, to be hereafter delivered from a mine or a heap;<sup>7</sup> or for lumber to be cut and sawed or piled.<sup>8</sup> In all such instances as these, the identity of the chattels contracted for, not being as yet ascertainable from the contract, but requiring further specific acts, the property does not pass to the buyer, but remains in the seller until identification, by suitable acts of selecting and separating, has taken place. Nor, as late cases tend to establish, is it enough to simply, secretly and independently select and separate; but the buyer must, by notice or otherwise, become apprised that the requisite act has been done, and charged accordingly.<sup>9</sup>

In a situation like this of chattels not specific appropriated to a contract, the seller cannot recover his price as for goods bargained and sold; nor can the buyer maintain trespass,

<sup>1</sup> Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397; Shepley v. Davis, 4 Taunt. 617.

<sup>2</sup> Scudder v. Worster, 11 Cush. 573.

<sup>3</sup> Block v. Maas, 65 Ala. 211.

<sup>4</sup> Waldo v. Belcher, 11 Ire. 609; Gresham v. Bryan, Ala. (1895).

<sup>5</sup> Bailey v. Long, 24 Kan. 90.

<sup>6</sup> Bailey v. Smith, 43 N. H. 141.

<sup>7</sup> Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott, 34 N. J. L. 184; Reeder v. Machen, 57 Md. 56; Gabarron v. Kreeft, L. R. 10 Ex. 274. And see Hutchinson v. Hunter, 7 Penn. St. 140; Stephens v. Santee, 49 N. Y. 35; Commercial Bank v. Gillette, 90 Ind. 268; Browning v. Hamilton, 42 Ala. 484; Golder v. Ogden, 15 Penn. St. 528; Ormsbee v. Machir, 22 Ohio St. 295; Warren v. Buckminster, 24 N. H. 336;

Smith v. Ward, 46 Iowa, 339; Ferguson v. Louisville Bank, 14 Bush, 555.

<sup>8</sup> Galloway v. Week, 54 Wis. 604; Pfistner v. Bird, 43 Mich. 14; Indianapolis R. v. Maguire, 62 Ind. 140; Dougherty v. Haggerty, 96 Penn. St. 515.

<sup>9</sup> Reeder v. Machen, 57 Md. 56; Moline Scale Co. v. Beed, 52 Iowa, 307; Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450; 73 N. Y. 252, 254; 46 Penn. St. 177. And see Brogden v. Metropolitan R., cited § 223. There may be some mutual stipulation as to delivery which postpones a transfer of title even after separation as above. Hoover v. Maher, 51 Minn. 269; Davis v. Miller, 69 Miss. 762; § 263.

trover, or replevin against the seller or any one wrongfully taking away the goods from the seller's possession.<sup>1</sup>

§ 258. But Numerous Exceptions are found; Mutual Intent regarded.— But the cases are not all in clear accordance with this doctrine as a rule of absolute force. Leaving out the question of practical remedies, such as trover and replevin or the seller's action for his price, and regarding only the rights of parties as to dominion and one's liability for loss, there seems to be good authority for asserting, that, if the parties so intend it, and their mutual intention is made sufficiently manifest, the usual presumption against a change of property, even in goods not specific, may be overcome; though whether it be on the ground that property has passed, or that the buyer has specially contracted to assume the risks, is not always clear.<sup>2</sup> Again: there are cases which favor a legal discrimination between goods which require both selection and separation, and those requiring separation only; as, for instance, between such sales as that of ten gallons of a certain kind of oil which the seller has on hand, or of ten pounds from a certain lot of sugar; and the sale of ten good saddle-horses out of a herd, or of ten barrels of the A. mill flour out of a lot which contains shipments from various parties.<sup>3</sup> For it is seen, that, in this latter class of cases, an act of special discrimination is requisite; and hence the property in the chattel should less readily be presumed to have passed than in the former class. Then again, delivery of all of what was ordered vests the title presumably in the buyer.<sup>4</sup> But applying the rule of mutual intention with more or less force to overcome a contrary <sup>1</sup> Cases supra; Benj. Sales, Book 2, c. 4, end, Bennett's American note; Bancher v. Warren, 33 N. H. 183; Winslow v. Leonard, 24 Penn. St. 12; Higgins v. Delaware &c. R., 51 N. Y. 288.

<sup>2</sup> Watts v. Hendry, 13 Fla. 523; Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 413; Waldron v. Chase, 37 Me. 414; Carpenter v. Graham, 42 Mich. 191. Morrison v. Dingley, 63 Me. 553

(which distinguishes Waldron v. Chase, supra), was a case where trover was brought.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Haldeman v. Duncan, 51 Penn. St. 66, and Chapman v. Shepard, 39 Conn. 413; Hurff v. Hires, 11 Vroom, 581.

<sup>4</sup> Or of substantially all. Fry v. Mobile Savings Bank, 75 Ala. 473. See § 264.

presumption, according as the sale may require separation alone, or separation accompanied by selection, the conflicting decisions under this head may be somewhat reconciled. And, upon this view of mutual intention, the circumstance that the purchaser is invested and charged with the right and duty to take the goods, separating for himself, is not without its force in determining whose should be the risks.<sup>1</sup>

It should be further observed that still other decisions, apparently in conflict with the general rule, are explainable on the assumption that the contract was not for a sale of property to be accompanied by identification and separation at all, but simply for the purchase of an undivided fractional part of the mass; the effect here being to join both parties in title, instead of transferring from the one to the other the ownership of a specific portion.<sup>2</sup> And, once more, waiving the question of transfer, the issue, as sometimes presented, is, whether or not the buyer or seller is not precluded, by his own acts and conduct, from alleging that the property right has or has not passed to the other party's disadvantage.<sup>3</sup>

§ 259. Instance where an Article is made to Order.—Where an article is to be made to order, the same general presumption against an immediate transfer of property holds true: for, on the mere agreement to supply, no specific thing can be identified as the property actually bargained for; but <sup>1</sup> See Foot v. Marsh, 51 N. Y. 288, explaining Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330; Waldron v. Chase, 37 Me. 414; Weld v. Cutler, 2 Gray, 195; Lamprey v. Sargent, 58 N. H. 241; Washburn Iron Co. v. Russell, 130 Mass. 543. But see Haldeman v. Duncan, 51 Penn. St. 66, where the buyer had paid for the oil, and was requested to select and take his goods, but did not do so; and the goods were destroyed. Here, however, both selection and separation were necessary.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, §§ 42, 43; Cushing v. Breed, 14 Allen, 376; Kimberly v. Patchin, 19 N. Y. 330; Whitehouse v. Frost, 12 East, 614. Whitehouse

v. Frost was much questioned in White v. Wilks, 5 Taunt. 176, and other English cases; but is defended on this ground in Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397.

<sup>3</sup> Woodley v. Coventry, 2 H. & C. 164; Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660. But see Scudder v. Worster, 11 Cush. 573, as to whether the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked in a case of replevin; also Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, distinguishing Knights v. Wiffen, supra. See Pleasants v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 473, which appears to have been wrongly decided on principle, from regard to the exceptionally hard circumstances of the case.

anything answering to the description might be afterwards furnished and appropriated to the contract. Thus, a carriage-maker, ordered to build a carriage after a certain pattern, might throw aside any number of carriages begun upon, because dissatisfied with them, or might turn them over to meet his more pressing orders from other quarters, before transferring his labors to that which finally turns out the specific property of a particular contract of sale. Hence a contract of sale for a chattel not, at the time, in existence, but to be made and furnished by the seller, is executory only; and, as a rule, no property in the chattel vests in the buyer until it is completely finished, and, in some manner, set aside and appropriated to the contract.<sup>1</sup>

But this rule is still one of presumption only; and the intent of the parties, as manifested by the particular circumstances, must control in the interpretation of their contract. Thus, a sale might be made of an unfinished chattel, as such, or of a chattel progressing towards completion; the true question being whether the parties to the sale, by mutual acts and conduct, had already concluded a transfer of the property to the thing in its existing state, or, at least, of the risks which usually attend ownership.<sup>2</sup>

§ 260. Doctrine of Subsequent Appropriation of Chattels to the Contract.—That which is found essential, then, under sale contracts relating to chattels not specific, in order to change presumptions of intent, and convert what was before a mere executory agreement into a bargain and sale, so full as to carry over an ownership therein, becomes, under the present head simply a specifying of the goods,—acts which

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 232, 315; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 4; Blackb. Sales, 122, 128; Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318; Atkinson v. Bell, 8 B. & C. 277; Anglo-Egyptian Nav. Co. v. Rennie, L. R. 10 C. P. 271; Briggs v. Light Boat, 7 Allen, 287; Fairfield Bridge Co. v. Nye, 60 Me. 372; Shaw v. Smith, 48 Conn. 306; Halterline v. Rice, 62 Barb. 593; McIntyre v. Kline, 30 Miss. 361; First Nat. Bank

v. Crowley, 24 Mich. 492; Gammage v. Alexander, 14 Tex. 414; Rider v. Kelley, 32 Vt. 268. See § 266, post, same chapter.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; Young v. Matthews, L. R. 2 C. P. 127; M'Conihe v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 495; Brown v. Bateman, L. R. 2 C. P. 272; Thorndike v. Bath, 114 Mass. 116.

identify certain chattels, and set them apart as fulfilling the sale stipulations between the parties. This, in law, is termed a subsequent appropriation of specific chattels to the contract. When such appropriation has fairly taken place, the contract stands related to specific chattels, and the legal rules which were stated in the last chapter become at once applicable to the property ; except that, as already observed, there should from some aspects be more than a secret and one-sided appropriation, without the other party's knowledge.<sup>1</sup>

Appropriation may take place in various ways. The authority to appropriate may rest in the buyer alone, or in the seller alone ; or there may be an appropriation by one party, to which the other must afterwards assent. To whichever of these kinds of appropriation a particular contract relates, is a matter of interpretation.<sup>2</sup> Separation and setting apart, accompanied perhaps by a special selection, are the prime acts which constitute a legal appropriation so as to accomplish any presumed transfer of ownership. But there is much practical difficulty found in discriminating between incomplete and complete transfer in this respect ; not only, as it seems, because of the legal uncertainty which prevails in determining whether unspecified goods have been rendered specific by appropriation or not, but, further, from this circumstance, that a seller will often really appropriate the specific goods to the contract, if it be incumbent on him to do so, and yet, being also bound to deliver, will, by such acts as making the bills of lading or invoices of the goods in his own name, evince a disposition to retain title, or what we shall presently consider as the jus disponendi, until he secures payment for the goods ; besides which there may be further acts requisite on his part to put the property into a deliverable state. The judicial extension of the word "appropriation," illogically, as it would appear, through delivery, through this last stage of transit of the goods, and even up to a final acceptance on the buyer's part, has made the law of specifying chattels under a contract more complex, redundant, and indefinite than it naturally ought to be; the real difficulty, however, being presented in cases where the seller, and not the purchaser, is bound to make the appropriation.

<sup>1</sup> See § 257.

<sup>2</sup> Ex. 1 ; Erle, J., in Aldridge v.

See Parke, B., in Waite v. Baker, Johnson, 7 E. & B. 885.

Supposing, then, that the requisite acts of subsequent appropriation are to be performed by the seller. It is said by Mr. Benjamin, that in these cases alone,—namely, where the seller is, by the express or implied terms of the contract, entitled to make the selection,—the ablest judges have been much perplexed; and he instances this common mode of doing business: for one merchant to give an order to another to send him a certain quantity of merchandise, as so many hogsheads of sugar, where it becomes the seller's duty to appropriate the goods to the contract. The difficulty, he adds, is to determine what constitutes the appropriation; to find out at what precise point the seller is no longer at liberty to change his intention.<sup>1</sup> Perhaps it might be added that the difficulty goes beyond the mere act of converting the original agreement into a sale of specific goods, and extends to the more general inquiry as to how far a transfer of property is delayed through the seller's omission to put them into deliverable condition, and then make full delivery, as contemplated under the agreement. For, supposing the agreement had been for so many hogsheads of sugar, to be set apart by the seller, and held by him subject to the buyer's further orders as to destination, and the goods were either paid for in advance or sold on credit, the rule of subsequent appropriation would be reduced to an easier compass.

§ 261. Cases reviewed as to General Appropriation under a Contract.—Let us notice some of the more important cases under the head of appropriation. Where it is incumbent upon the seller, by the terms of the agreement, to select and separate, and then notify the buyer, and this is done, the property passes when the buyer accepts the situation, if not before. Thus, where hogsheads of sugar were ordered out of a bulk, and the seller, after taking out the number ordered, gave notice to the buyer to take them away, which the latter promised to do, it was held that the property in the goods had passed to the buyer.<sup>1</sup> But was this assent on the buyer's part necessary to complete the appropriation? For surely, in many cases, despatching the separated goods, under circumstances favoring the supposition that the seller meant to shift the property, has been held to make the appropriation complete, without waiting for the buyer's distinct assent.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5.

In Aldridge v. Johnson there was an ascertained bulk of barley, of which a customer agreed to buy a certain quantity. It was left to the seller to determine what specific portion should be delivered under the contract. The agreed equivalent for the barley had mostly been rendered. The buyer sent his own sacks, which the seller was to fill, the latter promising to take the lot to the railway, for conveyance to the buyer, free of charge. The seller filled most of the sacks, but could not at the time procure their conveyance to the railway station, and afterwards apparently changed his mind about sending them at all, though still promising to do so, in response to the buyer's urgent letters. Being on the eve of bankruptcy, the seller finally emptied the barley out of the sacks into the bulk, so as to make the whole undistinguishable. On a suit brought by the buyer in trover against the seller's assignees, it was held that the seller, by putting barley into certain sacks which the buyer had sent to be filled, completed the selection on his part, and that there had been full appropriation as to these sacks, which, once made, the seller could not afterwards disturb; while as to the portion

<sup>1</sup> Rohde v. Thwaites, 6 B. & C. 388. And see Wilkins v. Bromhead, 6 M. & Gr. 963.

<sup>2</sup> See Fragano v. Long, 4 B. & C. 291; Sparkes v. Marshall, 2 Bing. N. C. 671. Atkinson v. Bell is an extreme case, which rests upon the doctrine, that although the seller has separated and placed them aside, and then has written to the buyer to ask by what conveyance the goods shall be sent, and before receiving an answer goes into bankruptcy, the property does not pass, inasmuch as the buyer has not assented to the appropriation. Atkinson v. Bell, 8 B. & C. 277. Here it might, perhaps, be said, that, notwithstanding the seller gave the buyer his option of a conveyance, he had not distinctly waived all right on his part to control the goods on their transit, nor put the burden of sending to take the goods away absolutely upon the buyer. But the precedent has proved a stumbling-block to jurists, and it is said that, upon other facts shown in the report, the decision was incorrect. See Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5, commenting upon this case.

not put into sacks the buyer could not recover, for want of a specific appropriation. Here was a good instance of appropriation by act of the seller, without ever putting the goods on the transit; followed, moreover, by the abortive attempt to revoke his own selection before the goods had passed out of his possession.<sup>1</sup> It might be said, perhaps, that there was evidence of the buyer's subsequent assent to the appropriation of the filled sacks, shown by his letters urging that the sacks be sent forward, and complaining of the delay; hardly so, however, and surely with no reference to the filled more than to the unfilled sacks; and the court seems to have squarely rested the case upon the assumption that appropriation had been so left to the seller alone, as to render a subsequent assent unnecessary on the buyer's part, the property passing as soon as the seller had done the outward act signifying his election.<sup>2</sup> This rule was followed in a later case, where the contract was for peppermint-oil, to be put into bottles furnished by the buyer, and the court deemed the filling the bottles by the seller (who afterwards absconded) a complete appropriation of specific goods to the contract.<sup>3</sup>

§ 262. The Same Subject.—But Campbell v. Mersey Docks gives another turn to the English doctrine of appropriation. In Aldridge v. Johnson there was, besides the suggested possibility of an actual subsequent assent, something thrown out in the remarks of the Chief Justice to indicate that an “a priori assent” might supply the want of a more distinct acquiescence by one party in the other's selection, in order to render appropriation complete. This later case proceeds upon the ground that some kind of assent to an act of appropriation is always needful to pass the property, whether it be express or implied. The “ear-marking” of cotton

<sup>1</sup> Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 E. & B. 885.

<sup>2</sup> Campbell, C. J., said: “Looking to all that was done, when the bankrupt put the barley into the sacks, eo instanti the property in each sackful vested in the plaintiff.” And Erle, J., is still more precise on this point: “Sometimes the right of ascertainment rests with the vendee, sometimes solely with the vendor. Here it is vested in the vendor only, the bankrupt. When he had done the outward act which showed which part was to be the vendee's property, his election was made and the property passed.”

<sup>3</sup> Langton v. Higgins, 4 H. & N. 402.

sent to a warehouse for the buyer was held inconclusive; the buyer repudiating afterwards, on the ground that the cotton was not equal to the samples.<sup>1</sup> While it was here admitted that a warehouseman may be the agent to give assent, it was announced (in language broader than the case required) that there must always be, where the seller is the party to separate, not only an appropriation, but an appropriation to which the vendee has assented in some way or another.<sup>2</sup> But, once again, in a later case, where twenty tons of best oil had been ordered, deliverable by steamer, and to be sent "free on board,"—or on account of the purchaser,—and the goods were shipped by the seller, but lost at sea, it was held, upon a construction of the contract, and the method employed by the seller in taking out the bill of lading and invoices, that the property in the goods passed to the buyer when they were placed free on board, in performance of the contract, and that he must bear the loss.<sup>3</sup>

The inference to be drawn from the language used in this and still later English cases is, that, on a sale of unascertained goods, the purchaser may, by his conduct, make the seller his agent both to appropriate and give in advance whatever assent may be necessary on his own part,—a doctrine which, if true, is so nearly allied to that of dispensing with an actual assent by the buyer to appropriation by the seller, that only a microscopic eye can detect the distinction.<sup>4</sup> And here the rule of appropriation appears to rest at this day, both in England and America; though, in most parts of this country, mutual intent as a question of fact would be taken as the material issue in cases involving under such circumstances the right of property.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Campbell v. Mersey Docks, 14 C. B. N. S. 412.

<sup>2</sup> See also Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229.

<sup>3</sup> Brown v. Hare, 3 H. & N. 484; 4 H. & N. 822.

<sup>4</sup> Brown v. Hare, supra; Tregelles v. Sewell, 7 H. & N. 571; Calcutta

Company v. De Mattos, 32 L. J. Q. B. 322; Jenner v. Smith, L. R. 4 C. P. 270.

<sup>5</sup> Boswell v. Green, 1 Dutch, 390; Merchants' National Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass. 195; Hyde v. Lathrop, 2 Abb. N. Y. App. 436; Birge v. Edgerton, 28 Vt. 291.

§ 263. Rule where Something more than Appropriation is needful.— We have shown how presumptions vary, even as to specific chattels which are made the subject of sale, according as the chattel is or is not in a deliverable state, or that condition in which the buyer is bound to take it.<sup>1</sup> Weighing, measuring, and testing are acts of the utmost consequence oftentimes for identifying property to a sale contract covering unspecified goods; and it may be safely added, that where an article not specified is sold, and something remains to be done to it by the seller before despatching it to the buyer, the transfer of property remains suspended, even though specific chattels be already appropriated to the contract.<sup>2</sup> It stands to reason, moreover, that where one thing is ordered and another sent, there can be in the setting apart by the seller no perfect sale, and consequently no binding appropriation of specific goods to the contract; any subsequent acceptance by the buyer of goods sent in fundamental variance from his original order, or of goods sent to replace what has once been appropriated to the contract, evincing really a substituted bargain between the parties.<sup>3</sup> And hence, if goods are delivered unreasonably later than the time set, or in excess of the quantity named, or of an altogether different description from those ordered, the party ordering the goods may refuse to receive them; for it cannot be maintained that the seller, whose duty it was to select and separate, has any right to throw the selection from a larger quantity upon the buyer, or stand upon his own misappropriation of goods to the contract.<sup>4</sup> So where a sale is made by sample, and the buyer has not

<sup>1</sup> Supra, c. 2.

<sup>2</sup> See Prescott v. Locke, 51 N. H. 94; Wanamaker v. Yerkes, 70 Penn. St. 443; supra, § 255. See as to added terms of sale, Hoover v. Maher, 51 Minn. 269; Davis v. Miller, 69 Miss. 762.

<sup>3</sup> See Smith v. Myers, L. R. 5 Q. B. 429, s. c. L. R. 7 Q. B. (Ex. Ch.) 139, where goods appropriated to the contract were destroyed by an earthquake while at the port of lading, and it was held that a contract covering this specific lot was not supplied by a similar cargo afterwards shipped by the same vessel.

<sup>4</sup> Cunliffe v. Harrison, 6 Ex. 903; Levy v. Green, 1 E. & E. 969; 27 L. J. Q. B. 111; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5; Downer v. Thompson, 2 Hill, 137; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327.

abandoned his right of comparing the bulk with the sample, or of verifying the weight, the seller cannot sue him as for goods bargained and sold, merely by setting aside the specific portion to await orders, and then sending an invoice to the buyer, with a draft for the price, which the latter refuses to accept.<sup>1</sup> And in those numerous cases of appropriation on condition, — of which a familiar instance is seen in the sale expressly conditioned upon immediate payment, — the title does not pass so as to enable the buyer to sue as owner, unless full delivery or tender to that purport is made by or under the authority of the seller.<sup>2</sup>

Where, in short, as between buyer and seller, the nature of the case forbids the supposition that they had designed a transfer of property immediately upon the seller's selection and separation of the chattels ordered, the right does not completely pass, though specific chattels are in fact appropriated to the contract. That the interposition of implied conditions embarrasses the whole inquiry concerning a legal transfer of ownership in goods supplied to order, will appear more fully in a subsequent chapter.<sup>3</sup>

§ 264. Delivery as a Circumstance, in Appropriation of Specific Chattels. — Delivery is a circumstance often considered in connection with the appropriation of specific chattels under a contract. It is doubtless well established, as the rule both of England and America, that where — all other things being equal — a seller delivers goods to the buyer, or to a carrier by order of the buyer, the appropriation is determined beyond his power to recall it, for the property has thus presumably vested in the buyer.<sup>4</sup> This

<sup>1</sup> Jenner v. Smith, L. R. 4 C. P. 270.

<sup>2</sup> Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229.

<sup>3</sup> See c. 5, post.

<sup>4</sup> Fragano v. Long, 4 B. & C. 219; Alexander v. Gardner, 1 Bing. N. C. 671; Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 B. & P. 582; Krulder v. Ellison, 47 N. Y. 36; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5; Arnold v. Prout, 51 N. H. 387; Wing v. Clark, 24 Me. 366; Odell v. Boston

& Maine R. R., 109 Mass. 50; Magruder v. Gage, 33 Md. 344; Star Glass Co. v. Longley, 64 Ga. 576. After delivering ordered goods to a carrier, consigned to the buyer, it is too late for the seller to notify the buyer that he must pay a different price from that upon which the order was made, Star Glass Co. v. Longley, 64 Ga. 576; or change directions, Philadelphia R. v. Wireman, 88 rule, however, is subject to the principle of jus disponendi, to be hereafter noticed, and may be controlled by special stipulations between the parties.<sup>1</sup> It was said, in Fragano v. Long, by Holroyd, J., that "when goods are to be delivered at a distance from the vendor, and no charge is made by him for the carriage, they become the property of the buyer as soon as they are sent off."<sup>2</sup> This is because a seller who charges for the carriage of goods is presumed to have intended keeping control of them during their transit, and so prevented the property from passing; while the presumption would be to the contrary if the carrier's charges were to be adjusted between himself and the buyer.<sup>3</sup> Wherever the goods are sent on trial, or with special conditions imposed, the property in the goods remains still in the seller during their transit.<sup>4</sup> As a matter of fact, appropriation can take place without a delivery, even to a carrier for the buyer; for delivery only manifests quite plainly a selection, which might well be evinced by acts of narrower scope, under fitting circumstances,<sup>5</sup> provided the element of notice already stated were present in the case.<sup>6</sup> But the delivery of goods to the buyer or his agent, or to some carrier for him, is a palpable act of appropriation and tender by the seller, whose intent thus evinced to transfer the title absolutely to the buyer can hardly be disputed, if the bill of lading be taken out in the consignee's name, or indorsed over to him without restriction.<sup>7</sup> Delivery of possession on the seller's part, carrying the goods to the place where the buyer had agreed to call for them, doing in fact all that the seller was to do, and reserving no right on his part,—such circumstances

Penn. St. 264; except as to the possible right of stoppage in transitu. See post, c. 14.

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 260; Winchester v. Pyrites Co., 67 Fed. 45.

<sup>2</sup> Fragano v. Long, 4 B. & C. 219.

<sup>3</sup> See Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Cl. & Fin. 600; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5; Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 E. & B. 885; Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray, 281; 113 Mass. 391.

<sup>4</sup> Swain v. Shepherd, 1 Moo. & Rob. 223; § 310, post.

<sup>5</sup> See Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 E. & B. 885; Blackb. Sales, 128.

<sup>6</sup> See § 257.

<sup>7</sup> Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass. 291; Magruder v. Gage, 33 Md. 344; Griffith v. Ingledew, 6 S. & R. 429; Alexander v. Gardner, 1 Bing. N. C. 671; infra, as to jus disponendi, and delivery, cs. 4, 7.

are highly significant in establishing full appropriation and a transfer of the title besides.<sup>1</sup> Delivery of an absolute bill of sale of the goods, too, is often tantamount to a transfer of the title in this connection.<sup>2</sup>

In case the whole mass of chattels not specific is delivered to the buyer, with a right and power in him to make the separation, the title sufficiently passes to render him liable for the price if he accepts; or to enable him as bailee, at least, to sue any one for their wrongful conversion before the separation is made.<sup>3</sup>

§ 265. Summary of the Doctrine of Appropriation under a Sale Contract.—Evidently, this whole subject of appropriating specific chattels to a sale contract, so as to pass the property right, is replete with difficulty; and, in view of the controlling influence which mutual intent must always exert over mere presumption, it might well be asked whether the English courts have not labored too much to put a fine edge upon tools of little practical utility. The present results seem to establish: (1.) that various meanings may be assigned to the word “appropriation,”—its more legitimate scope being limited to the selecting, separating, setting apart, and so clearly identifying, specific goods to the sale contract that the buyer may at once take them, while in legal discussion the word is often extended through the labyrinth of con-

<sup>1</sup> Where part of an entire mass of goods, such as coal, brick, or grain, is sold, and the purchaser is allowed to take possession of the whole for the purpose of enabling him to separate the part sold, the title to that part passes to the purchaser, and he may retain the whole till he has had sufficient time to separate and take the part which belongs to him. Lamprey v. Sargent, 58 N. H. 241; Weld v. Cutler, 2 Gray, 195. And see Washburn Iron Co. v. Russell, 130 Mass. 543; Fry v. Mobile Savings Bank, 75 Ala. 473. “When a mere operation of weight, measurement, counting, or the like, remains to be performed after the goods are actually delivered, and it is shown that it was the intention of the parties to complete the sale by delivery, such weighing, measuring, or counting afterwards will not be regarded as a part of the contract of sale, but will be considered as referring to adjustment on a final settling.” Wagner, J., in Ober v. Carson, 62 Mo. 209, 213; supra, § 254.

<sup>2</sup> Paine v. Young, 56 Md. 314.

<sup>3</sup> Lamprey v. Sargent and other cases supra; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 4, Bennett’s American note at end. But delivery under such circumstances to the buyer’s prejudice ought hardly to bind him to pay without separation and acceptance. See c. 8.

ditions and special stipulations, so as to comprehend the complete shifting of a title to unspecified chattels from seller to buyer; (2.) that there is doubt under the authorities as to whether an appropriation can in any sense ever be said to take place without an actual assent of some sort by the buyer to the seller's selection, or a notice to him, at least, — though, be it on the postulate that the seller was authorized in advance to give the buyer's assent, or that appropriation was made because of the nature of the contract by the seller alone and independently, there can be no doubt that the complete specifying of chattels to the contract, so as ordinarily to carry the property, is, under suitable circumstances, and when clearly and completely set apart, made by the seller, without requiring the buyer's subsequent assent. Concerning the latter point, it is suggested that where an order is sent for goods of a certain description, at a certain price, there is a proposal; and that by identifying specific property exactly as ordered, and setting it apart at the price for the ordering party (and communicating notice accordingly, as some cases hold), there is an acceptance of the proposal; and the case, at once, stripped of all collateral qualifications and reservations, ought to be that of a full bargain for specific goods, without waiting for the buyer's further acceptance of the seller's acceptance, though the buyer might reserve a right of approval as a prerequisite of property transfer.<sup>1</sup>

And as to appropriation, in the sense of rendering the contract of sale one in which the minds of the parties meet on specific goods, the proper rule appears to be, that the party upon whom the first, or it may be the only, act of appropriation devolves, can make his choice by selecting, separating, and setting apart, and so distinctly identifying, the things to the contract; that while these acts are only partially performed, the appropriation on his part is incomplete; but that, upon full performance thereof, and its due manifestation to the other party, his choice is complete and irrevocable as concerns the transfer of property, without waiting for the other party's assent. Thus, if the seller offers to sell the buyer certain oil, in casks which the latter shall select from the warehouse, the appropriation devolves upon the buyer, and, upon the latter's selection of the casks and setting them apart, with proper notice, the property presumably vests in him, as under an acceptance of the seller's proposal. On the other hand, if the nature of the agreement leaves the seller to select and set apart the oil, his choice being concluded with the intention manifested unconditionally to set apart for the buyer, the property vests in the latter. But, once more, there may be something in the agreement which shows that to the selection of the one party the other has reserved a right of verifying, participating in, or in some way assenting to, the appropriation, so as to make sure that it was the suitable specific chattel contracted for; and here the specifying of goods to the contract requires mutual acts before it can take full effect in vesting the property of goods in the buyer. Intent, in any case, is the paramount consideration; the practical difficulty being to ascertain this intent when there is scanty evidence.

<sup>1</sup> See supra, c. 2, as to the shifting of presumptions, even in the case of sales of specific goods.

§ 266. How Appropriation is constituted, where Chattels are made to Order.—What shall constitute appropriation so as to carry the property to chattels manufactured to order? In Mucklow v. Mangles, it is held that no property shall vest in an unfinished chattel until it is finished and delivered. Here a barge-builder had undertaken to build a barge to order; the party for whom it was ordered had advanced money before the work was begun, and afterwards paid to its full value; and the work, still under the builder's control, had just been completed, to the painting of the party's name on the stern. But, as the builder had not delivered or tendered the barge to the party for whom it was intended, the property therein was adjudged to go to the maker's assignees in bankruptcy, and not to the intended buyer.<sup>1</sup> Tripp v. Armitage, likewise the case of a bankrupt builder, involved the title to sashes and other building materials used in constructing a house to order; and it was held that, there being no bargain for the specific articles, but a contract to make up materials and work them into the house, the property therein did not pass until they were affixed to the freehold.<sup>1</sup> In Fairfield Bridge Co. v. Nye, a bridge-builder's creditors attached materials before the work was done, though partially paid for; and it was held that the property to the unfinished piers had not as yet passed from the builder to the bridge company.<sup>2</sup> A tender of the finished chattel, followed by the customer's refusal to take it, is held insufficient to pass the property from the maker; and so with other evidence of a disposition not to accept the appropriation.<sup>3</sup> But, on the other hand, in Wilkins v. Bromhead, the appropriation of a green-house made to order was considered complete so as to transfer the property to the buyer, where the latter, on being informed that the article was finished, remitted the price as requested, without seeing it, and asked the builder to keep the green-house until he should send for it.<sup>4</sup> And the buyer is held to have sufficiently assented to the appropriation, so as to enable the maker to sue as for goods bargained and sold, where, notwithstanding his delay to pay in full, he admits that the chattel was made to his order, and by acts manifests the accepting conduct and disposition.<sup>5</sup> The chattel itself, we assume, exists in so identifiable a shape, that the buyer is in a position to take it or to maintain trover against others with respect to it.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318. And see Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. 473.

<sup>1</sup> Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687. And see Johnson v. Hunt, 11 Wend. 135.

<sup>2</sup> Fairfield Bridge Co. v. Nye, 60 Me. 372. And see Shaw v. Smith, 48 Conn. 306, which intimates that as to the maker's attaching creditors his title will less readily be considered as passing in the unfinished chattels, than where the controversy is between the contracting parties themselves. Payment of full price is not a conclusive fact, especially if fraudulently procured. Ib. And see post, § 270.

<sup>3</sup> Moody v. Brown, 33 Me. 107; contra, Bement v. Smith, 15 Wend. 493. And see Halterine v. Rice, 62 Barb. 593; Gammage v. Alexander, 14 Tex. 414; McIntyre v. Kline, 30 Miss. 361; Rider v. Kelley, 32 Vt. 268; Stock v. Inglis, 9 Q. B. D. 318. <sup>4</sup> Wilkins v. Bromhead, 6 M. & Gr. 963.

<sup>5</sup> Elliott v. Pybus, 10 Bing. 512; Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450; Spicers v. Harvey, 9 R. I. 582. And see Story Sales, §§ 233, 315; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 5.

<sup>6</sup> Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 376.

The leading principle still to be traced is that of appropriation; but here the circumstances should show, according to the current of authority, not so much that a price had been paid, or appropriation made by the seller, as that there had been some mutual act of the parties, with or without payment, by which the manufactured thing, when finished or nearly so, was offered and accepted, whether expressly or by implication, as a due fulfilment of the contract to furnish it. Nor matters it, so far as rights and risks of title to the unfinished chattel are concerned, that the buyer was to furnish certain things necessary to their completion; the maker is as yet the owner.<sup>1</sup> But the appropriation of the thing having once been clearly manifested, and the chattel, being already manufactured, delivered in a state of completion to the buyer, and substantially accepted by him and paid for (or promised to be paid for),—acts more than sufficient, ordinarily, for appropriating specific chattels to the contract,—the transfer of property will be presumed to have taken place, notwithstanding special reservations under the agreement for the purpose of securing the buyer against possible faults in the construction of the chattel, provided that such reservations do not amount to a postponement of property transfer altogether until the chattel has been tested.<sup>2</sup> Actual delivery by the manufacturer is not always a prerequisite to the transfer of the property in the thing; especially if all has been done by him in conformity with his contract, and notice given to the buyer to come and take the finished thing, as it was the duty of the latter to do.<sup>3</sup>

§ 267. The Same Subject.—But, where the intent of the parties has been distinctly manifested to the effect that the property shall vest in the purchaser before the article is fully made, this intent shall prevail. One circumstance of material bearing relates to the method of purchase; as, for

<sup>1</sup> McConihe v. N. Y. & Erie R. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 495.

<sup>2</sup> Mount Hope Iron Co. v. Buffinton, 103 Mass. 62. Here an engine was made to order, delivered, and paid for, but a margin was reserved until the engine should “be started in a satisfactory manner.” The case was distinguished from Phelps v. Willard, 16 Pick. 29.

<sup>3</sup> Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450.

instance, the payment of the purchase-money by instalments at different stages; though the advance even of the whole purchase-money would be by no means decisive.<sup>1</sup> Another influential circumstance is that of employing some overseer or other agent, on behalf of the intended buyer, to superintend the work as it advances. Yet the stipulation for employment of this kind is not necessarily inconsistent with a right of ownership of the unfinished chattel reserved in the maker; the extent of such superintendence somewhat affecting the case.<sup>2</sup> These two circumstances conjoined, however, are so greatly favored for overcoming the presumption of property in the maker, in certain English shipbuilding cases, that a rule is sometimes deduced from them which the American decisions do not appear equally to sanction. Thus, as a rule of construction, to determine the mutual intent in shipbuilding contracts, the English cases hold, that, if the intended buyer is to put his own superintendent over the work, and pay by instalments, this is equivalent to an express provision, that, on payment of the first instalment, the general property in so much of the vessel as is then constructed shall vest in the buyer, and so on with the payment of further instalments.<sup>3</sup> But in some American cases, presenting similar facts, the contrary has been held; and the doctrine of this country appears to be against presuming a mutual intent for transfer of property in an unfinished ship or other chat-

<sup>1</sup> See Mucklow v. Mangles, 1 Taunt. 318; 11 App. Cas. 350, 380; Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. 473; Fairfield Bridge Co. v. Nye, 60 Me. 372; Halterline v. Rice, 62 Barb. 593.

<sup>2</sup> See Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687.

<sup>3</sup> Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; Clarke v. Spence, 4 Ad. & El. 467; Wood v. Bell, 5 E. & B. 772; s. c. 6 E. & B. 355. These decisions upheld the buyer's title as against the seller's assignees in bankruptcy. In Woods v. Russell there were other special circumstances, on which little stress was laid, but tending to show property in the buyer, such as the registry of the vessel in the buyer's name. Some extra-judicial expressions in this case tending to broaden the rule so as to allow of a specific appropriation of parts of an incomplete chattel while in progress of manufacture, are discountenanced by Clarke v. Spence, which tends to limit the doctrine. Wood v. Bell follows the authority of the two former cases. And see McBain v. Wallace, 6 App. Cas. 588; Seath v. Moore, 11 App. Cas. 330. As to the builder's lien for unpaid instalments under such contracts, see In re Lindsay, L. R. 10 Ch. 405.

tel, to attach at different stages on payment of instalments, and because of the supervision of the work on the intended buyer's behalf; but rather to require the buyer to wait for his title until the work is completed.<sup>1</sup> Yet neither in England nor America is this question treated as other than one concerning the interpretation of a contract, to ascertain the true intent of parties; the point of difference between the cases not being vital, but going only to construction and the burden of proof.<sup>2</sup>

§ 268. The Same Subject.—Appropriation, in short, may take place in any unfinished article as such, so as to transfer to the buyer the ownership thereof as a specific chattel. For instance, a party who agrees to purchase a vessel as it then stands, leaving the work of finishing it out of consideration in his contract of sale, makes a perfectly valid bargain for a specific thing; though buying it under a contract to have it finished and delivered would be quite a different matter.<sup>3</sup> Ordinarily, a contract for the sale of a chattel not yet finished must be regarded as executory; but, if the parties have manifested their intent that the transfer of property shall take place in the unfinished product at once, that intention will take effect.<sup>4</sup> Delivery in such cases, as <sup>1</sup> Andrews v. Durant, 1 Kern. 35; Elliott v. Edwards, 6 Vroom, 265; Green v. Hall, 1 Houst. 506; Story Sales, § 234; Williams v. Jackman, 16 Gray, 514; Briggs v. Light Boat, 7 Allen, 287; Elliott v. Edwards, 35 N. J. L. 265; Scull v. Shakespear, 75 Penn. St. 297; 81 Penn. St. 18. But Sandford v. Wiggins Ferry Co., 27 Ind. 522, prefers the English rule. And see 11 Humph. 206. Clarkson v. Stevens, 106 U. S. 505, recently announces as the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States an indisposition to make any such arbitrary rule as in Woods v. Russell, supra, but to carry into effect the intent of the parties as gathered from the terms of the contract and all the attendant circumstances.

<sup>2</sup> See Bigelow, C. J., in Briggs v.

Light Boat, supra; Elliott v. Edwards, supra; Mr. Justice Matthews in Clarkson v. Stevens, 106 U. S. 505.

<sup>3</sup> See Laidler v. Burlinson, 2 M. & W. 602.

<sup>4</sup> On this ground is justified a late English decision, rendered upon a somewhat extraordinary state of facts, and to the effect that the property in the chattels had passed to the buyer. A brickmaker in embarrassed circumstances agreed to sell to one of his creditors a large quantity of unfinished bricks. The buyer, who had in fact by his advances paid full consideration, sent his agent to take delivery. The bricks were distinctly ascertained and pointed out. The buyer's agent then asked, "Do I clearly understand that you are prepared, and will hold and deliver elsewhere, is a significant fact in proof of a completed sale and transfer of title; and so, too, is an absolute bill of sale, which would be more appropriate where the seller had yet to finish the thing; for one may buy an unfinished chattel outright, on the understanding that the seller should finish it for the buyer, and retain possession longer for that purpose.

But as to materials designed for an unfinished chattel, and not affixed thereto,—such as cordage, or a rudder, or boilers or machinery, bought for some particular ship by the seller of the ship,—it will still be presumed, notwithstanding a constructive change of ownership in the unfinished chattel, that the property to these still remains in such seller, if they have not been so incorporated with the principal thing as to become part of it.<sup>2</sup> The mutual agreement of the parties, clearly expressed, may affect this rule, however.<sup>3</sup>

The approval of the buyer's own agent will conclude the buyer himself as to acceptance of work made to order; but this approval must go directly to the point of accepting the product.<sup>4</sup> Acceptance merely with the intent of pronouncing materials suitable for the structure constitutes no acceptance of the structure into which those materials are worked.<sup>5</sup> Where a test by the buyer makes part of the contract, the usual and customary test will be presumed.<sup>6</sup>

§ 268 a. Appropriation after a Rejection.—If appropriated goods or goods made to order, upon a contract which gives a this said quantity of bricks?" And the answer was, "Yes." Young v. Matthews, L. R. 2 C. P. 127. Cf. Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Comst. 258.

<sup>1</sup> Thorndike v. Bath, 114 Mass. 116. Perhaps this transfer holds especially good as between the parties themselves; for fraud upon creditors of the seller, by leaving him in visible possession, might bias the decision of a case otherwise. Cf. Shaw v. Smith, 48 Conn. 306; post, § 270.

<sup>2</sup> Wood v. Bell, 5 Ell. & B. 772; 6 Ell. & B. 355; Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687; Seath v. Moore, 11 App. Cas. 350; 79 Penn. St. 220;

Wright v. Tetlow, 99 Mass. 397; Johnson v. Hunt, 11 Wend. 135; contra, Woods v. Russell, 5 B. & Ald. 942; Goss v. Quinton, 3 M. & G. 825. See also § 297, as to sales on the "instalment plan."

<sup>3</sup> Brown v. Bateman, L. R. 2 C. P. 272.

<sup>4</sup> Young v. Matthews, L. R. 2 C. P. 127; Clarke v. Spence, 4 Ad. & El. 467.

<sup>5</sup> Tripp v. Armitage, 4 M. & W. 687.

<sup>6</sup> 55 Fed. 449. See as to waiver of a test, McClure v. Jefferson, 85 Wis. 208.

limited time, are rejected by the other party as not what the agreement called for, the seller may, while that limited time lasts, but not later, appropriate and tender other goods suitable to the agreement.<sup>1</sup>

§ 269. The Same Subject; Summary of the Doctrines as to Chattels made to order.—On the whole, it may be said that the rule as to chattels manufactured to order is not different in essence from that of other chattels not specific, which require appropriation; only, since we are still regarding presumptions, that the buyer's assent given in advance, or the seller's appropriation made without distinct assent to the appropriated thing on the buyer's part (which, we have seen, may often suffice, in the general instance of unspecified goods under a contract of sale, to accomplish the transfer of property, or at least the risks of title, from seller to buyer), is not so readily presumed to have effected the full transfer of a thing not existing at all when ordered, requiring more than separation and setting apart, or even selection, and necessarily dependent, for its intrinsic value, upon the quality of the workmanship bestowed upon it. If I order so many gallons of a certain oil from a reputable firm, I may readily be supposed to have left to them the separation and setting apart, or, as some would say, given my assent to the appropriation in advance; not so readily, however, where I order a carriage built after a certain pattern. Common prudence suggests, in the latter case, a suspension of transfer until the work, substantially finished, has been examined or tested, or, at all events, admitted to be satisfactory. The manufacturer is not supposed to be an unbiased judge of his own workmanship, though an honest merchant might be of goods on hand for sale. And yet the parties to a contract may make it what they like, and give the advantages of a bargain to one or the other. That the circumstances attending a particular transaction for manufacturing chattels to order may have been such as to disclose a mutual intent that the property, or at least the risks attending title, to the thing, when finished, shall pass to the customer, without awaiting his subsequent acceptance; that upon the interpretation of some such contracts a court might pronounce that the buyer had previously authorized the seller to make full appropriation for him, with much the same consequences as in other instances of appropriating specific chattels to a contract of sale, — we have little question.<sup>1</sup> But still, as before, an uncommunicated appropriation or setting apart or making to order, without some notice to the other party, or opportunity for him to know that he may at once take the thing as his own, is not favored as affecting a property transfer.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Borrowman v. Free, 4 Q. B. D. 500.

§ 270. Property Transfer may pass for Certain Purposes only; Rule as to Creditors, etc.— The doctrine of property transfer in chattels not specific becomes still further complicated by the circumstance, often indicated by the authorities, that the ownership may designedly pass for some purposes, and not for others. Thus, under certain contracts presented for judicial consideration, the buyer may be plainly saddled with the risks of loss before the goods come to his possession, while yet it is doubtful whether the rights of property, the full privileges of ownership, have passed to him.<sup>3</sup> Again, it is a principle supported by many American authorities, that title to personal property may have passed, as between the parties to the contract of sale, and nevertheless, for want of an actual, visible, and substantial change of possession, may be pronounced invalid against the seller's creditors, and liable to attachment by them, or against bond fide third parties for value, on the ground that one gains a fictitious credit with the public by seeming to be the owner of that which does not in fact belong to him.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450.

<sup>2</sup> §§ 223, 257, 263.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. opinions of judges in Calcutta Co. v. De Mattos, 32 L. J. Q. B. 322; Castle v. Playford, L. R. 5 Ex. 165; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; Stock v. Inglis, 10 App. Cas. 263.

<sup>4</sup> See Birge v. Edgerton, 28 Vt. 291; Lewis v. Swift, 54 Ill. 436; Miller v. Garman, 69 Penn. St. 134;

Shaw v. Smith, 48 Conn. 306; First Nat. Bank v. Crowley, 24 Mich. 492. But the general rule in England and America is, that the continued possession by the seller of goods he has sold is a fact going to show fraud upon creditors, but not such a fraud per se. Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 4; Martindale v. Booth, 3 B. & Ad. 498; 2 Kent Com. 515; infra, c. 16.

CHAPTER IV.

SELLER'S RESERVATION OF THE JUS DISPONENDI.

§ 271. How the Seller may reserve the Dominion of the Thing.— Before passing from the subject of property transfer in chattels, specific and non-specific, it is proper to notice how our general rules of construction may be affected by the seller's reservation of rights which are inconsistent with an intention on his part of absolute and immediate surrender of ownership to the buyer. The seller naturally seeks payment for his goods before finally parting with them, and acts accordingly, however much he may choose to disguise the motive, out of delicacy towards his customer. This holding back of the seller's title is known in the courts as the seller's reservation of the jus disponendi, and the rules apply usually to goods the subject of bargain between parties who are far apart, and to unspecified goods ordered by the buyer rather than to specific property ; and though the seller's usual reason for holding his right of ownership is to secure his price, he may doubtless pursue the same course from other motives.

It cannot be too often repeated, in the course of our present investigation as to the leading consequences of a contract of sale, that intention of the parties is, after all, the fundamental inquiry ; that all the roads, however circuitous, lead to the same centre ; and hence that the final issue in any case becomes a simple one of fact, for which very reason legal rules of presumption must often appear contradictory. It follows that, notwithstanding one may have ordered chattels to be sent him, which the seller has fully appropriated to the contract, — in other words, notwithstanding a bargain of specific goods has been made between the parties, — the property therein cannot pass to the buyer, so long as the seller's act with reference to the chattels is such as to repel the usual inference. The act of appropriation is, under such circumstances, said to be provisional or conditional; and it is often a nice question to determine whether appropriation in a certain case is of this character or an absolute one.<sup>1</sup>

§ 272. Rule of Reservation applies especially to Delivery through a Carrier.—The cases under the present head are arranged with especial reference to the method of making delivery through a carrier. In the delivery of ordered goods to a common carrier, as we have shown, or to the buyer's own agent, or to the buyer himself, the presumption is, that appropriation is an accomplished fact, so that the title has finally passed to the buyer.<sup>2</sup> Placing the goods in the buyer's own receptacle (whether it be on board his vessel, or into sacks, casks, or the like, furnished by him), or where the buyer had agreed to take them—is a strong circumstance indicative of an executed intention to appropriate on the seller's part.<sup>3</sup> But it would be different where the seller sends goods not ordered, in the hope of inducing a sale; for that delivery to a carrier which charges a purchaser, as delivery to him from the seller, must have been under some express or implied authority from the purchaser.<sup>4</sup>

§ 273. The Same Subject; where Bill of Lading is taken out.—Now, supposing the seller, in sending goods by a vessel or other carrier, to have taken out a bill of lading or similar document, a new circumstance is presented. The rule of presumption becomes this: that the carrier thereby agrees to take the goods as bailee for the person whose name is therein indicated as the one for whom the goods are to be carried;<sup>5</sup> and, this bill being made out to the seller or order,

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 6.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 264. This rule extends to a delivery made to a warehouseman for the buyer. Hunter v. Wright, 12 Allen, 548. And see post, Delivery, c. 7.

<sup>3</sup> See Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 E. & B. 885; supra, § 264; Coleridge, C. J., in Ogg v. Shuter, L. R. 10 C. P. 159; Washburn Iron Co. v. Russell, 130 Mass. 543.

<sup>4</sup> Cobb v. Arundel, 26 Wis. 553.

<sup>5</sup> Brandt v. Bowlby, 2 B. & Ad. 932; Wilmshurst v. Bowker, 7 M. & Gr. 882; Ellershaw v. Magniac, 6 Ex. 570; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 6; Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1; Key v. Cotesworth, 7 Ex. 595; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass. 295; Dows v. Nat. Exchange Bank, 91 U. S. 618; Griffith v. Ingledew, 6 S. & R. 429; Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray, 281;

the carrier's engagement is primâ facie to carry the goods for and on account of the seller, to be delivered to him in case it should not be assigned or indorsed; but if it should, then to his assignee or indorsee.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, taking out the bill of lading in the buyer's name affords presumptive evidence on the seller's part of an intent to transfer the title.<sup>2</sup>

This rule of presumption holds good, even though the goods be delivered on what might be termed the buyer's own vessel; the question being not one of a carrier's authority from the buyer, but whether the captain or other carrier took the goods with the qualification which the seller had the right to impose before delivering them at all.<sup>3</sup> But no fraudulent procurement of bills of lading in his favor can avail the seller to obstruct the acquisition of title in the buyer.<sup>4</sup>

The primâ facie case afforded by the circumstance of taking out a bill of lading to the seller's order may be rebutted

Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196; s. c. L. R. 4 Q. B. 493; s. c. L. R. 5 H. L. 116; Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 560; Marine Bank v. Wright, 48 N. Y. 1; Ward v. Taylor, 56 Ill. 494.

<sup>1</sup> Ib. The above doctrine is applied in a leading English case, where the seller had agreed with the customer for payment of price on delivery of the bill of lading. The bill of lading, made out to the seller's order, was brought to the customer, and presented unindorsed; the latter made sundry objections to the sale; and when he finally offered the price, and said, "I accept," the seller refused to take his money and indorse over, but took the bill from the counter and presently sold the goods to another customer, indorsing the bill to him. The goods afterwards arrived in port, and, their market value having risen considerably, the first customer went and took part of the cargo; but the court held that, by reserving the jus disponendi under the bill of lading, the seller had been enabled to defeat the sale, and that the second customer could sue the first in trover as owner of the cargo. Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1.

There is no rule of law, which, in absence of usage, obliges the seller of goods who delivers them to a railroad company to be first transported on their road, and thence forwarded by the company on a steamboat to the purchaser, to take out an "internal bill of lading," and send it to the purchaser at or about the time of despatching the goods; nor requiring a railroad company to give a bill of lading for goods delivered them for transportation. Johnson v. Stoddard, 100 Mass. 306. See, as to bills of lading, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 321, 471.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 264.

<sup>3</sup> Wait v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1; Turner v. Liverpool Docks, 6 Ex. 543; Falk v. Fletcher, 18 C. B. n. s. 403.

<sup>4</sup> Ogle v. Atkinson, 5 Taunt. 759.

by proof that the seller, though pursuing this form, did so with the intent, nevertheless, of divesting himself of the rights of property. Thus, where a seller had indorsed the bill of lading to the buyer specially, sending it to his own agent, and the goods were lost before the bill was delivered to the buyer, it was held upon the facts that the buyer must bear the loss; the contract being here to ship the goods "free on board."<sup>1</sup> It is not always easy, however, to reconcile such cases with those following the ordinary rule, unless it be explained by the manifest reluctance of the courts to make a seller's precautionary measures, taken simply for securing his rights, redound to the advantage of the other party, so as to exempt him from the ordinary risks of transit. Chief Justice Cockburn has observed upon this discrepancy, that there is much reason for holding in some of the cases that while the property had vested in the buyer the seller retained possession, with a lien for the purchase-money.<sup>2</sup>

§ 274. The Same Subject; where Bill of Lading is accompanied by Draft for the Price.— Sometimes a bill of lading is accompanied by a bill of exchange, drawn by the seller upon the buyer for the price, his expectation being that the bill of exchange will be accepted concurrently with a vesting of property under the indorsed bill of lading. The effect of such a transaction is to make delivery of the bill of lading ineffectual for divesting the seller of his right of ownership in the goods, unless the price is adjusted by the buyer's simultaneous acceptance of the bill of exchange; and if the buyer declines such acceptance, he has no right to keep as his own either the bill of lading or the goods which they represent. Shepherd v. Harrison is a late decision upon this point, which presents an able exposition of the whole law of jus disponendi reservations, as viewed by the highest tribunals of Great Britain. The House of Lords and Courts of Exchequer Chamber and Queen's Bench concurred in opinion

<sup>1</sup> Brown v. Hare, 3 H. & N. 484; 84; Hobart v. Littlefield, 13 R. I. s. c. on appeal, 4 H. & N. 822. And 341.

see Van Casteel v. Booker, 2 Ex.

691; Joyce v. Swan, 17 C. B. N. S.

<sup>2</sup> Cockburn, C. J., in Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196.

as to the effect of a bill of lading when accompanied as above;<sup>1</sup> and the same rule prevails, doubtless, in this country.<sup>2</sup>

Upon bills of exchange, with bills of lading thus attached, advances are frequently made by third parties, by way of a loan on the security of the merchandise; and the pith of the matter is, that the party who discounts the bill of exchange for the seller, upon security of the bill of lading, acquires property in the chattels therein described, subject to an acceptance of the draft by the buyer; and he succeeds to the rights of the shipper.<sup>3</sup>

Where goods are delivered to a carrier with a bill of lading in the name of the seller indorsed to the buyer, to be delivered only on payment of the draft, the ownership, with its rights and risks, remains with the seller until the draft is paid; but when payment is made, the ownership vests in the buyer.<sup>4</sup>

§ 275. Limitations of this Reserved Dominion Doctrine.—Concerning the property in chattels sold on condition that they shall be paid for on delivery, we shall speak in the next chapter. Nor should this reservation by the seller of the jus disponendi be confused with the seller's lien and special right of stoppage in transitu, in certain cases of a buyer's insol-

<sup>1</sup> Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196; s. c. L. R. 4 Q. B. 493; s. c. L. R. 5 H. L. 116. And see 11 Q. B. D. 372; English cases cited next section.

<sup>2</sup> Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 560; Marine Bank v. Wright, 48 N. Y. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Marine Bank v. Wright, 48 N. Y. 1; Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 560. And see Nat. Bank of Commerce v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 92; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 471, 472. The legal import of such transactions is a sale to the person upon whom the drafts are drawn upon credit, to be perfected by his acceptance of the draft. But where the seller himself takes the draft and bill of lading and gets a bank to discount the draft, transferring both documents to the bank, the transaction may, agreeably to the apparent mutual intent, import that the bill of lading shall not be delivered to the drawee until the draft is actually paid. Security Bank v. Lutgen, 29 Minn. 363; Farmers' Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 568; 115 Mass. 224, 230; Emery v. Irving Nat. Bank, 25 Ohio St. 360. A bill of lading is the representative of the goods for which it is given, and its delivery will pass the title. Nor will this effect be changed where the bill accompanies a draft drawn upon a third party. Skilling v. Bollman, 73 Mo. 665.

<sup>4</sup> Dows v. Nat. Exchange Bank, 91 U. S. 619; Treadwell v. Packing Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 22; Newcomb v. Boston & Lowell R., 115 Mass. 230. And see Sch. Bailments, § 507.

veney;<sup>1</sup> for this reservation is something more than a lien.<sup>2</sup> The seller's exercise of the jus disponendi is in pursuance of a reservation consistent only with the intention on his part to preserve his rights of ownership. It is most strenuously insisted, under the latest authorities, that all the surrounding circumstances are material to an issue of this kind; that the judges sit like jurymen, to weigh all the evidence, and determine, as a fact, whether the intention was to transfer or withhold the seller's rights as owner.

The stipulation for payment upon a bill of lading is a strong circumstance against the divesting intent; but its effect is subject to countervailing circumstances in the buyer's favor, such as a special stipulation for delivery "free on board," part payment, the tenor of the invoices and bills of lading, the fact of placing the goods in the buyer's receptacle, and so on.<sup>3</sup> Delivery of a bill of lading, with the intent to pass the property, has that effect, certainly in some of our States, without even the technical indorsement.<sup>4</sup> The latest cases well illustrate the impossibility of compressing the law on this whole subject into any exact system of rules; intention of the parties is still the controlling principle.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This right is considered, post, c. 14.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 C. P. D. 47.

<sup>3</sup> See Ogg v. Shuter, L. R. 10 C. P. 159; opinions in Shepherd v. Harrison, supra.

<sup>4</sup> City Bank v. Rome, &c. R. R. Co., 44 N. Y. 136; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 471, 472.

<sup>5</sup> See Ogg v. Shuter, L. R. 10 C. P. 159, where, upon the facts, it was decided that the buyer's refusal to accept the draft presented with the bill of lading until he could verify the cargo did not prevent the property from passing. The seller's agent here acted harshly in insisting, under the circumstances, upon immediate acceptance. Upon appeal, however, this decision was reversed. 1 C. P. D. 47. See also Gabarron v. Kreeft, L. R. 10 Ex. 274. Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, 3 Ex. D. 164, favors the idea that if the drawee first declines to accept the draft, but subsequently tenders the amount and demands the bill of lading, his title to the goods becomes complete.

As to whether delivery "C. O. D." to the carrier is a reservation of jus disponendi to the seller, or merely of possession until payment, see post, § 396.

CHAPTER V.

CONDITIONS IN SALES.

§ 276. Conditions Precedent to Transfer of Property.—The leading rules of construction which have been pointed out in the three preceding chapters receive constant allusion from the courts as operating by way of a condition precedent to the transfer of property. Thus, the proposition that property in a specific chattel does not presumably pass while something remains to be done by the seller to put it into a deliverable state, is stated by Judge Blackburn as affording a presumption that the performance of the thing shall be taken as a condition precedent to the vesting of the property.<sup>1</sup> So is the genuineness of the thing sold, or its actual existence, frequently spoken of as a condition.<sup>2</sup> In sales, too, which require payment on delivery, sales by description, and the like, there is much to be found in the books about an implied condition in the contract, — not to speak of those more obvious, because more clearly expressed, conditions of sale which parties are always free to introduce when they will, as an element of their mutual assent. That we may entertain clear ideas, if possible, upon what has become doubtless a very perplexing branch of the law of sales, and, indeed, of contracts generally, let us briefly advert to some of the leading principles.

§ 277. Conditions under General Law of Contracts; Rule of Mutual Intent.—I. As to conditions generally. The modern rule on the subject of conditions in contracts, and the only one, however indefinite and unsatisfactory it may be, which appears to reconcile the numerous conflicting cases under this head, is that the mutual intent of the parties, as shown by the facts in any given case, must ultimately prevail; a principle which runs through the whole subject of property transfer in chattels by sale, as our preceding chapters indicate. Mr. Parsons observes on this point, that it would be difficult, and perhaps impossible, to lay down rules which would decisively determine the vexed question; but, he adds, the late rule is, that it must depend upon the intention of the parties, to be collected in each particular case from the terms of the agreement itself, and from the subject-matter to which it relates.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 248; Blackb. Sales, 151, 152. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3, passim.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.

§ 278. Stipulations in an Executory Contract, whether Dependent or Independent.—Any executory contract between two parties will be found, upon analysis, to be made up of stipulations; the one engaging to do one or more things, and the other likewise engaging in return. Though these stipulations may not all have been expressed in so many words, they are nevertheless there, and are inferable, at least, from the nature and subject-matter of the contract, which may be more or less complex, according to circumstances. Now, in construing the stipulations of any given agreement, the question will occur, whether certain stipulations are independent, or mutual (that is to say, dependent); whether that which one of the parties has engaged to do must be performed absolutely, and independently of the other, or, on the other hand, depends upon the performance by the other party of his corresponding engagement. If the stipulation be one of the former kind, or independent, the party is bound to perform what he has undertaken to do, without reference to the other party's discharge of his own obligation; and, conversely, any breach thereof on his part will not justify the other party in repudiating the contract altogether, but simply enables him to maintain a cross-action for damages. But in stipulations of the latter kind, or dependent, the dependence of the one party's engagement upon the corresponding engagement of the other is so thorough, that performance on the one side is a condition precedent to performance on the other.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 2 Pars. Contr. 2d ed. 525-527. 684; Cutter v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; And see ib. 528, 529; Benj. Sales, bk. 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 17-66; Story Sales, 4, pt. 1; Jones v. Barkley, 2 Doug. §§ 252, 253.

No precise words are necessary to render a stipulation conditional and dependent rather than independent; nor does the collocation of words in an instrument settle the question; and the only practical difference between oral and written contracts in this respect is, that the one class usually calls for interpretation by the court, and the other by the jury. The evident sense and meaning of stipulations, as to dependence or independence, must be gathered from a careful consideration of the whole agreement, its nature, and the various things contemplated for performance: in sales, from a due regard to the entire transaction, in its nature and objects, as viewed on both sides.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, the self-same expression, which, under one state of facts, would be construed into a mere independent stipulation, might, under another, prove a condition precedent of the most momentous sort; as, in the latter instance, if one engages to send goods by a vessel described as "an American vessel," not because there was mutual indifference felt on the point of the ship's nationality, but so as to avoid the danger of confiscation in time of a European war by sending under a different flag.<sup>3</sup>

§ 279. Precedence of Conditions where Stipulations are dependent; Concurrent Conditions.—Where stipulations are mutual and dependent, the precedence of the condition is frequently to be inferred from the order of time in which the transaction, as truly intended by the parties, requires performance; a test which, of course, must be applied naturally, and not in any forced sense.<sup>4</sup> Thus, if the goods are to be

<sup>1</sup> 2 Pars. Contr. 528, 529. The two kinds are often hard to distinguish, as Mr. Benjamin illustrates from English decisions relative to charter-parties, where a stipulation that a vessel will sail or receive cargo on a day named is held to be conditional, while stipulations that the vessel shall sail with all convenient speed are regarded as independent. Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Seeger v. Duthie, 8 C. B. N. S. 46;

M'Andrew v. Chapple, L. R. 1 C. P. 643.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Pars. Contr. 525-527; Jones v. Barkley, 2 Doug. 684-691, per Lord Mansfield; Shaw, C. J., in Cadwell v. Blake, 6 Gray, 402; Story Sales, § 252; Schwoerer v. Boylston Market, 99 Mass. 285.

<sup>3</sup> See Williams, J., in Behn v. Burness, 3 B. & S. 751.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.

sent on trial, and subject to the buyer's approval, delivery by the seller becomes a condition precedent to his recovering payment of the price.<sup>1</sup> So, if a manufacturer agrees to make a machine after a certain model to be furnished by his customer, the customer's engagement to furnish a model comes first in point of time, and is a condition precedent to the fulfilment of the seller's engagement to manufacture.<sup>2</sup> And it is a familiar rule of construction, that where a day is appointed for doing any act, and the day is to happen, or may happen, before the promise by the other party is to be performed, the latter may bring action thereon before his own performance, which is not a condition precedent; otherwise, if the day fixed is to happen after the performance, since his performance would then be deemed a condition precedent.<sup>3</sup>

But, once again, where the stipulation of one party is to be performed at the same time with the stipulation of the other, these are concurrent conditions; and the party who would maintain an action must show performance, or an offer of performance, on his own part. Of this rule a striking illustration is afforded in the sale of goods for cash on delivery, — a subject to be presently discussed.<sup>4</sup>

§ 280. How far a Stipulation may affect the Whole Consideration. — But there is still another point to be here considered; namely, the extent to which a stipulation may affect the consideration of the whole contract: and this subject is perhaps the hardest of all to reduce to rule. It is justly maintained by the courts, that even though a stipulation were, under ordinary circumstances, to be deemed a condition precedent, yet the acceptance by the other party of a substantial part of that which was to be performed on this side should change it into an independent promise; in other words, that one who receives a partial consideration should not be relieved from performance of his own engagement merely because he has not received the whole. Mutual promises, which go to the

<sup>1</sup> See Moss v. Sweet, 16 Q. B. 493.

<sup>2</sup> Savage Man. Co. v. Armstrong, 19 Me. 147.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Wms. Saunders, 320 b; Cutter

v. Powell, 6 T. R. 320; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 17-86; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.; Dana v. King, 2 Pick. 155;

infra, § 292.

whole consideration on both sides, are mutual conditions precedent; but a promise which goes only to a part of the consideration is rather an independent stipulation, damages for its breach affording the injured party sufficient indemnity, under the usual contingencies.<sup>1</sup>

§ 281. General Maxim that Each Party should strictly perform in Turn; Exceptions.—The general maxim which the courts apply to conditional contracts is, that one party who would hold the other bound must show that he has fully performed to the letter every condition precedent which the contract by its terms put upon himself, save only (1st) so far as the other party has prevented or waived performance of such condition; to which exception may be added (2d) certain other cases where performance has become impossible through circumstances independent of the other party's conduct.<sup>2</sup>

§ 282. Exception where Other Party prevents or waives Performance.—As to the first exception, which grows out of the opposite party's own acts and conduct, it is clear law that an obstruction of performance, which renders one's act of performance impossible, puts the obstructing party at fault, and renders him liable for the consequences. Hence, as it is tersely stated, the performance of a condition precedent by the plaintiff, which has been rendered impossible by the defendant's neglect or default, "is equal to performance."<sup>3</sup> So, too, a positive, absolute refusal by one party to carry out the terms of the contract, or conduct which in effect renders his own promise incapable of performance, is held to exempt the other party from going through the idle ceremony of tendering performance of the condition precedent which the contract exacted of him; and, whether we regard such conduct as amounting to prevention of performance, or an implied waiver on the part of the opposite party, he who has bound himself to the performance of a condition precedent is relieved from fulfilling the engagement when the other prevents him from fulfilling it.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Cutter v. Powell, 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 17-66; Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 450.

<sup>2</sup> Cutter v. Powell, supra; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Ashhurst, J., in Hotham v. East India Co., 1 T. R. 645.

And that there may be an express waiver of the condition by the one, so as to excuse performance by the other, is a natural sequence from the fundamental proposition that parties to a contract may rescind and modify its terms at pleasure by mutual consent. But the mere assertion by one party that he will not or cannot carry out his own engagement, or stand by the contract, is not so positive an obstruction as relieves the other from tendering performance of his own stipulated condition precedent: before he may sue as for breach of contract, there must be, at all events, a clear and distinct refusal, and this, under most circumstances, to the extent of putting its retraction out of the question.<sup>2</sup>

§ 283. Exception as to Impossibility from External Circumstances. — As to our second exception, — an impossibility of performance under the circumstances, independently of the other party's conduct, — the law is to be laid down with great caution. Impossibility of performance is still at the root of the matter; but, unlike the case of impossibility resulting from the acts of the other party, the loss here must, in general, fall upon him who had engaged without sufficiently guarding himself against the contingency. The party cannot perform, it is true; yet the law still regards him as bound by his promise, and refuses to relieve him from the harsh consequences which ensue from non-performance.<sup>3</sup> Particularly does this hold good when a contingency happens which a prudent man might have provided against, such as a stipulation to have a vessel ready to receive a cargo by a certain day, the party making no reservation for possible delays in getting her into the pier; or a contract to deliver coal with a certain despatch, which is made regardless of the circum-

<sup>1</sup> Cutter v. Powell, supra; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Sumner v. Parker, 36 N. H. 449; Smith v. Lewis, 26 Conn. 110.

<sup>2</sup> Frost v. Knight, L. R. 5 Ex. 322; 7 Ex. 311; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246; Smoot v. United States, 15

Wall. 36; Shaw v. Life Insurance Co., 69 N. Y. 286.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Rugg v. Minet, 11 East, 210; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62; Knowles v. Dabney, 105 Mass. 437.

stances that a frost setting in might preclude the intended despatch.<sup>1</sup>

But how shall we apply the rule in the more remote and unforeseen exigencies? It is the English doctrine that impossibility of performance arising from the inherent nature of the thing, or so rendered by the act of God, sufficiently excuses the engaging party for non-performance; for, as Judge Blackburn remarks, there is an implied condition that the impossibility which arises from the perishing of the person or thing shall excuse the performance.<sup>2</sup> This tacking of an implied condition upon an expressed condition precedent is, perhaps, a roundabout way of saying that if, upon reasonable construction of the whole contract, it appears that any impossibility occasioned under such circumstances must have been mutually understood beforehand to exempt from performance, the binding force of the stipulation will be limited accordingly. To this latter result the best of the American authorities appear to tend, in harmony with the English. But that the "act of God," so called,—meaning usually inevitable accident, or, better still, an irresistible disaster without human agency,<sup>3</sup>—ought, as a matter of course, to exempt from performance, is expressly denied in the courts of some of the United States; and there are certainly contracts involving exposure to some special peril or hazard, which could hardly be so construed upon implication, without too greatly encouraging laxity on the part of those who might have foreseen, and should have made express reservation.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386; Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267.

<sup>2</sup> Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826; Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 467; 1 Q. B. D. 258.

<sup>3</sup> Schoul. Bailm. § 410.

<sup>4</sup> See Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441, per Shaw, C. J.; Knowles v. Dabney, 105 Mass. 437; Knight v. Bean, 22 Me. 531; Harmony v. Dingham, 2 Kern. 106; 60 N. Y. 487, 490, 491; Jones v. United States, 96 U. S.

24, 29. A legal impossibility, it is frequently observed, excuses a party from performance. This, however, as it may be surmised, not so much for the reason that some intervening statute renders a lawful performance impossible by means beyond the control of the parties themselves, as because contracts are well presumed to carry the implication on both sides, that, if the law of the country shall, before full performance, render a conditional stipulation on either side un-

§ 284. Restatement of Exceptions to Performance of Condition Precedent.—The strict rule, which requires every party bound to a condition precedent to fully perform what he has without express qualification undertaken to do, might then, upon the whole, be pronounced subject to these two leading exceptions, — (1) a mutual modification or rescission, suggested by the other party's waiver ; (2) the impossibility of performance by one under circumstances which, upon a reasonable interpretation of the whole contract, may well be thought to have constituted a mutually understood exemption from performance.

§ 285. Conditions as a Doctrine in the Law of Sales; Conditions Precedent and Concurrent.—II. To apply the foregoing principles to contracts of sale. It is an elementary principle, that, where there is a condition precedent or concurrent embodied in a contract of sale, upon the performance of which the transfer of property depends, the buyer will acquire no property in the thing before that condition has been fulfilled ; the right of ownership, notwithstanding delivery of the chattel, continuing in the seller meanwhile, even against the buyer's creditors.<sup>1</sup> This is in full accordance with the jus disponendi and other doctrines, already set forth at length, and will presently be exemplified still more fully. Other conditions precedent on the buyer's part than that of payment may doubtless be introduced ; nor is it always the transfer of property which furnishes the corresponding stipulation. Thus, a contract for the sale and lawful, its performance shall not be attempted. The promise to do an illegal act is, of course, without legal force ; and presumptions are naturally against the intention of assuming unlawful engagements. 1 Salk. 198 ; Davis v. Cary, 15 Q. B. 418 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2 ; Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180. But illegality, as understood of laws or regulations of a foreign power, does not cut so deeply ; and there are instances where a party bound to the condition precedent of loading or unloading abroad, under a shipping contract, can claim no exemption from full performance because of merely foreign local regulations closing the port. See Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267 ; Kirk v. Gibbs, 1 H. & N. 810. But see Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 4 Q. B. 127.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 497 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3 ; Bishop v. Shillito, 2 B. & Ald. 329 ; Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196, 493 ; s. c. L. R. 5 H. L. 116 ; Strong v. Taylor, 2 Hill, 326 ; Story Sales, § 250.

delivery of unspecified clover-seed, expressly stipulating that bags shall be furnished by the purchaser, imposes upon the latter the condition precedent of furnishing bags within the time fixed for delivery; delivery being the engagement next in order. The seller need not demand the bags; and the fact that the seller had not the seed on hand at any time would not have excused the purchaser from tendering the bags, and discharging a duty which he had bound himself strictly to perform as a prerequisite to the sale and delivery.<sup>1</sup> It is a familiar rule that delivery and payment are concurrent and mutually dependent conditions; and that where the seller would recover against a buyer for non-performance he must not only be ready but must offer and make tender; and so correspondingly with a buyer.<sup>2</sup>

§ 286. Condition where a Third Party must first perform, etc.—The same strict rule as to conditions precedent will apply wherever by the terms of the bargain, as made by the parties, something essential is to be first done by some third party.

Thus, as we have seen, a sale contract, made dependent upon a price to be fixed hereafter by valuers, will render it essential that the valuers act, before the bargain can be pronounced a valid one.<sup>3</sup> So would it be with a sale of goods subject to the inspection or approval of some person mutually designated by buyer and seller; and such a condition precedent must be complied with before the property in the chattels can vest in the buyer.<sup>4</sup> Or where a chattel is sold, subject to the test of a third person as to whether it accomplishes the intended purpose.<sup>5</sup> And, again, where payment

<sup>1</sup> Russell v. Witt, 38 Ind. 9. And see Thompson v. Ray, 46 Ala. 224; Lowry v. Barelli, 21 Ohio St. 324.

<sup>2</sup> See Hanson v. Slaven, 98 Cal. 377.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 215; Vickers v. Vickers, L. R. 4 Eq. 529; Nutting v. Dickinson, 8 Allen, 540; Hutton v. Pearce, 26 Ark. 382.

<sup>4</sup> Brogden v. Marriott, 2 Bing. N. C. 473; Thurnell v. Balbirnie, 2

M. & W. 786; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72; Nofsinger v. Ring, 71 Mo. 149.

<sup>5</sup> Robbins v. Clark, 129 Mass. 145. The decision of such third person is in the nature of an award, and binds buyer and seller, unless assailable for fraud. Ib.; Batterbury v. Vyse, 2 H. & C. 42. But if either party colludes with such third person, or by his own wrongful act makes it im-is to depend upon the measurement or computation of a certain expert, or a third party's certificate, or the stipulation is for payment into the hands of a designated depository, or in some specified manner,—in all such cases, if the stipulation be really put by way of a prerequisite, the party who claims must show performance of the condition, in accordance with the mutual understanding.<sup>1</sup> And the honest decision by such third party in pursuance of a mutual reference is final.<sup>2</sup> The refusal of such third party to undertake the responsibility which buyer and seller have sought to put upon him, simply leaves the sale parties without a bargain; for even if he accepts the trust, and then fails to perform it, the question is merely one of remedies to be pursued against him, for obstructing the sale.<sup>3</sup> And if, to avoid such a predicament, the sale contract leaves a chance for substitution in case the designated party refuses to act,—as in a sale made expressly “subject to the inspection of A., or other mutually satisfactory,”—neither contracting party has the right to call for the substitute until A. has refused or neglected to act.<sup>4</sup>

It is sometimes mutually agreed that the property shall vest primarily, not in the buyer, but in some third party; a convenient method of securing those who have become sureties or indorsers for the buyer, until final payment of the price on maturity of the obligation.<sup>5</sup> And there are other instances where the co-operation of a third person is, from the nature of the case, needful, before the buyer can acquire title in the goods sold him.<sup>6</sup>

§ 287. Exceptions as to Waiver and Impossibility considered.—But to conditions contained in a sale contract the possible for the third party to act, the injured party has his remedies for damage. See 18 C. B. 765; Batterbury v. Vyse, supra.

<sup>1</sup> Mills v. Bayley, 2 H. & C. 36; Roberts v. Watkins, 18 C. B. n. s. 278; Thompson v. Ray, 46 Ala. 224. See Newlan v. Dunham, 60 Ill. 233.

<sup>2</sup> Norfsinger v. Ring, 71 Mo. 149; Robbins v. Clark, 129 Mass. 145.

<sup>3</sup> Jenkins v. Beetham, 15 C. B. 189; Thompson v. Ray, 46 Ala. 224.

<sup>4</sup> Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72. The fact that A. was one of the sellers was here held to be immaterial to the issue.

<sup>5</sup> Worthy v. Cole, 69 N. C. 157; Sheffer v. Montgomery, 65 Penn. St. 329.

<sup>6</sup> See Perkins v. Dacon, 13 Mich. 81; De Loach v. Hardee, 64 Ga. 94.

usual exceptions as to waiver and impossibility apply. A party who on his part has waived or prevented performance must respond to the other, notwithstanding. Thus, as already shown, a buyer who has rendered the stipulated valuation impossible by consuming the chattel renders himself liable on a quantum valebat, to be fixed by a jury.<sup>1</sup> That there may be a mutual waiver of the condition cannot be doubted. So conduct which renders performance of the condition impossible constitutes an exception. But impossibility of performance caused by the opposite party is an excuse not to be lightly accepted, especially where one has his own condition precedent to perform.<sup>2</sup>

Impossibility of performance, owing to circumstances which impute no fault to the opposite party, affords an excuse for performance within the same narrow and uncertain range marked out for other contracts.<sup>3</sup> Actual impossibility to perform, which arises from extraneous circumstances of inability merely, in the particular instance, and does not amount to physical or moral impossibility,—such as the want of money to make a stipulated payment, or the failure to find <sup>1</sup> See Clarke v. Westroppe, 18 C. B. 765; supra, § 215. See also Batterbury v. Vyse, 2 H. & C. 42.

<sup>2</sup> Thus, in Smoot v. United States, the Supreme Court of the United States decided against a government contractor, on the ground that he was not justified in throwing up his contract and claiming damages as for refusal on the part of the government to be bound by its agreement. The contract was for horses, to be delivered subject to a certain kind of inspection on the part of government officers. New rules were promulgated pending a performance, requiring a more stringent inspection to be applied to contracts of this character; but the contractor, instead of tendering horses to be inspected in the manner previously agreed upon, abandoned the contract altogether on ascertaining the new rules, neither buying nor delivering, but relying upon his suit for damages. It was decided that he could recover nothing. Smoot v. United States, 15 Wall. 36. This decision does not go to sustain the government in making such arbitrary changes of its contracts; most probably, had the inspecting officers insisted on the new rules to the extent of declining the acceptance of horses tendered under the contract, or of clearly and unequivocally refusing to perform their part of the bargain, the contractor would have won his suit; but his error lay in presuming too readily that the contract was broken, and so failing to do what was first in order: namely, to procure and bring forward horses for inspection, a plain condition precedent to which he had bound himself.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 282-284.

in the market what was to be delivered,—cannot excuse one from the legal obligation to perform the condition, and hence liability in damages for non-performance. Of this a curious instance is preserved in the old English case, which held a foolish buyer to his bargain, made in ignorance of the rule of arithmetical progression, whereby he had bound himself to pay a preposterous price for a horse by doubling for every consecutive nail found in the hoofs;<sup>1</sup> though it may be doubted whether justice would at this day push a practical joke so far as to ruin its victim, if fraud or a want of clear aggregatio mentium on the price could be set up to defeat the claims of the outwitting party. So the happening of a contingency which, from the nature of the transaction, the party binding himself ought to have expressly guarded against, does not relieve him from the legal liability to perform, though actual performance prove clearly out of the question.<sup>2</sup> Legal impossibility, occasioned by the passage of a statute rendering the act illegal, will by the courts of the country be deemed a sufficient excuse for non-performance; and this in furtherance of the local public policy.<sup>3</sup>

§ 288. The Same Subject.—But it is not easy to trace the limits of this doctrine further. Our modern law, to judge from many of the decisions, is less punctilious in respect of impossibility as an excuse for not fulfilling bargains than that of former days;<sup>4</sup> and yet, while the obligor has been relieved in several instances on the ground that performance had become physically impossible by the act of God, there are other cases which clearly refuse to extend so sweeping a cause of exemption to an impossibility occasioned by any human agency.<sup>5</sup> The death of a particular horse, the subject of sale and delivery on a future day, or the spoliation of a specific

<sup>1</sup> James v. Morgan, 1 Lev. 111; Thornburn v. Whitacre, 2 Ld. Raym. 1164. And see Gilpins v. Consequa, 1 Pet. C. C. 91.

<sup>2</sup> Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180.

<sup>4</sup> For instance, cf. Barker v. Hodgson, 3 M. & S. 267, with Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 7 Q. B. 127, Kearon v. Pearson, 7 H. & N. 386, and Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826.

<sup>5</sup> Shep. Touch. 173; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441; Harmony v. Bingham, 2 Kern. 99.

growing crop from natural causes before the time of gathering it, is held to relieve the seller from performance of the promise to deliver.<sup>1</sup> But the destruction by fire of an unfinished chattel which is being made to order certainly does not exempt the maker from his obligation to deliver.<sup>2</sup> It would appear that between the engagement to perform a condition precedent as to a specific and identified thing, and an engagement to procure something as yet unspecified and unappropriated to fill an order, there is a wide difference of decision; impossibility of performance being indulged as an excuse in the former rather than in the latter instance. Yet, after all, the underlying principle of the exception is found in the presumed mutual understanding of the parties to the bargain; and to execute an implied intention, a rational purpose with reference to the stipulation, under the circumstances which rendered performance impossible, is the true solution of the difficulty.<sup>3</sup> But even as thus stated, the rule is found quite capricious for practical application.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Shep. Touch. 173; Howell v. Coupland, L. R. 9 Q. B. 462; 1 Q. B. D. 258.

<sup>2</sup> Jones v. St. John's College, L. R. 6 Q. B. 115; School District v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530; Jones v. United States, 96 U. S. 24; Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Mill Co., 60 N. Y. 487. This distinction accords with the general law of carriers. See Schoul. Bailm. §§ 410, 411. But some cases are inconsistent with the law of carriers in this respect as to impossibility through act of God, &c. See Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, and Bigler v. Hall, 54 N. Y. 167, cited in this section, post.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, § 284; Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826. That even "act of God" or other carrier excuses are not accepted where the contract was absolute in intent, see Bacon v. Cobb, 45 Ill. 47; Eddy v. Clement, 38 Vt. 486; Harmony v. Bingham, 2 Kern. 99. But a contract of sale may expressly stipulate for such excuses. Raisin Co. v. Barrow Co., 97 Ala. 694.

<sup>4</sup> Two late New York cases may serve as an illustration; in both of which the decision was placed on sound general principles, but the state of facts, as many would suppose, hardly warranted a difference in legal conclusion. In the former the contract was for the sale and delivery of six hundred and seven bales of cotton, to be paid for on delivery. Four hundred and sixty bales were delivered, and the remainder were accidentally destroyed by fire without fault or negligence on the vendor's part, so that delivery became impossible. The court held that the seller was not liable to the buyer for non-delivery of the burnt bales; that impossibility of performance was a valid excuse. Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, decided by a majority of the court: four judges, against two who silently dissented. Here it appeared that each bale was designated by a

§ 289. Stipulations as to Time of Performance; how far Conditional.—Stipulations as to the time of performance under a contract of sale are sometimes, but not invariably, in the nature of conditions precedent; and the main question presented for determination in controversies of this sort is, whether time appears to have been fairly understood between the parties as an essential element in the performance of the contract. To deliver the chattel, or have it ready at the precise time fixed, would be, under certain circumstances, the gist of the transaction; as, for instance, where a fast boat is ordered in ample season, and with special reference, as both parties know, for competition at a particular race. But, on the other hand, and under the ordinary circumstances attending sale contracts, a party who promises to forward merchandise by a certain time, and without any notice from the buyer of peculiar reasons which necessitate prompt performance, may well be supposed to stipulate for reasonable punctuality, rather than an exact and literal fulfilment of his promise; and the prevailing rule is to punish, if need be, only to the extent of rendering the breach of diligent performance, with respect to time, a cause of action particular mark, so that the sale was really one of specific chattels, and not of chattels awaiting appropriation when the fire occurred. This decision was rendered in 1871 by the Court of Appeals.

The latter case was decided about two years later by the Commission of Appeals (a sort of auxiliary tribunal of last resort), and apparently without any knowledge of the foregoing precedent. Here the seller had contracted to deliver to the buyer certain logs lying at specified places, all of which were duly measured, appropriated to the contract, and paid for. But, before the logs were rafted, a portion was swept away by a sudden freshet, and lost without fault or negligence of the seller. In a suit brought by the buyer to recover the price paid for the lost logs, it was ruled that impossibility of performance was no excuse; that the contract to deliver bound the seller absolutely, and that, for non-delivery, he was liable in damages as for breach of a condition. This was a sale of specific chattels as before; and the only important distinction between the two cases appears to be, that here the price had been paid in advance,—a fact which might have been deemed important of itself in determining the mutual intent of the parties concerning the risk of loss pending delivery of the chattels, but to which no particular attention was paid by the court. Bigler v. Hall, 54 N. Y. 167, one judge dissenting. Cf. Logan v. Le Mesurier, 6 Moore P. C. 116; Gilmour v. Supple, 11 Moore P. C. 551.

for damages sustained by the buyer, like other independent stipulations on the seller's part, and not an occasion for justifying the buyer in rescinding the contract in toto, on the ground that a condition precedent had failed.<sup>1</sup> For to justify usually such rescission, the real point appears to be that the party in default showed an intention to abandon altogether and refuse performance.<sup>2</sup>

On this point the case of Hoare v. Rennie, where a court justified the buyer in not accepting, on the assumption that the seller's stipulation to deliver six hundred and sixty-seven tons of iron, to be shipped "in about equal portions," in each of four consecutive months, was a condition precedent, broken by his failure to ship more than twenty-one tons in June, is questioned by the later authorities.<sup>3</sup> Even where a stringent performance would be rightfully exacted under the terms of the contract, acceptance, or a waiver of the condition precedent, might often be inferred from the buyer's subsequent conduct.

§ 290. Stipulations as to Place of Performance; how far Conditional.—Similar considerations should apply to stipulations concerning the place of performance. Thus, a contract to sell cotton at a given price to arrive at L., per ships from C., provided "the cotton to be taken from the quay; customary allowances of tare and draft; and the invoice to be dated from date of delivery of last bale." It was held that this clause as to place of delivery was not a condition precedent against the sellers, but a stipulation in their favor; and that the contract in effect placed the cotton at the buy-

<sup>1</sup> Jonassohn v. Young, 4 B. & S. 296; Simpson v. Crippin, L. R. 8 Q. B. 14; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Kirkpatrick v. Alexander, 44 Ind. 595; Rogers v. Woodruff, 23 Ohio St. 632; Story Sales, § 310; Brandt v. Lawrence, 1 Q. B. D. 344.

<sup>2</sup> Freeth v. Burr, L. R. 9 C. P. 208, 213; Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor, 9 App. Cas. 434, 438.

<sup>3</sup> Hoare v. Rennie, 5 H. & N. 19, doubted in Simpson v. Crippin, supra.

And see Freeth v. Burr, supra; Renter v. Sala, 4 C. P. D. 239. See Rouse v. Lewis, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 121, where, upon facts showing aggravated delay after payment in advance, it was held that the buyer need not receive the goods.

The expression "to be shipped" or for "shipment" within a certain time refers naturally to placing on board ship. Bowes v. Shand, 2 App. Cas. 455.

er's risk and charge from the time of landing on the quay.<sup>1</sup> Yet a stipulation as to the place of performance is, under proper circumstances, to be treated as a condition precedent.<sup>2</sup>

§ 291. Sales upon Notice; Requirement of giving Notice as a Condition Precedent.—Sales are sometimes made “upon notice,” or with reference to a designated time, or to the happening of some event, upon notice of which an act is to be performed. Whose duty, then, is it to first take notice that the time has come, or the event happened? This must be answered by reference to the contract, which if expressly requiring notice by one party or the other must be so fulfilled. The general rule is, that one who binds himself to do a thing at a designated time, or on the occurrence of a particular event, must take notice at his peril, and perform his promise when the time comes or the event occurs. If, then, the sale be conditioned upon a delivery next Christmas, or (both parties residing in this country) supposing war shall be declared between France and Germany, the buyer and seller are presumed to have equal opportunity of ascertaining when the condition precedent must be performed; and here the party who has engaged to perform the precedent act (or, in such instances, the seller) must perform without awaiting notice from the other that it is time. Still more is he bound to take notice, without a previous intimation from the party with whom he has contracted, whenever the fact upon which the contract turns lies peculiarly within his own knowledge and privity. But if, instead, the other party, according to a just interpretation of the contract as they meant it, was bound to give notice when the time had arrived or the event happened, the giving of such notice becomes the real condition precedent of the contract to which other acts like delivery are postponed. When actual knowledge of the essential fact is peculiarly in the obligee's breast, and particularly where the obligee reserves to himself the control of the fact, so that the exigency for performance shall occur when he so chooses, and not before, he is bound to give notice of the fact before he can compel the obligor to perform his engagement.<sup>1</sup> It may be added, that if a seller agrees to deliver or a buyer to take away, "on demand," or notice from the other party; or when the other party is ready, a reasonable time should be allowed him after such demand or notice for performing his engagement.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Neill v. Whitworth, L. R. 1 C. P. 684.

<sup>2</sup> Thompson v. Ray, 46 Ala. 224.

§ 291 a. The Same Subject; where Either Party has an Option.—Where a contract for the delivery of chattels of a certain description from time to time does not bind to any fixed limit, it is left optional with either party to put an end to the agreement; but the party seeking to terminate should give notice to the other of his intention in the premises, in order to effect this purpose.<sup>3</sup>

Notice of one kind or another is required in various other cases which may arise under the law of sales, according as an option going to the essence of the contract is given to buyer or seller; but the same general principle applies to the whole subject.<sup>4</sup>

§ 292. Property Transfer conditioned on paying or securing Price.—The law of conditions precedent and concurrent is constantly invoked for determining the reciprocal rights of

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Haule v. Hemyng, 6 M. & W. 454; Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 M. & W. 442; Clough v. Hoffman, 5 Wend. 500; Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Quarles v. George, 23 Pick. 400.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Sanborn v. Benedict, 78 Ill. 309.

<sup>3</sup> Houston, &c. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 38 Tex. 85. The nicety with which this burden of giving notice is adjusted by the courts is pointedly shown by Mr. Benjamin. One of the earlier English cases held that one who had sold a certain lot of barley, to be paid for at as much as he should sell for to any other man, could not sue the buyer before giving him notice of the price at which he had sold to others; the reason being, that the persons to whom the buyer might sell were perfectly indefinite at his own option. Haule v. Hemyng, cited in Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 M. & W. 454; Vin. Abr. Condition, A. d. pl. 15. "But no notice is necessary," adds Mr. Benjamin, "where the particular person whose action is made a condition of the bargain is named,"—as if in Haule v. Hemyng the bargain had been, that the buyer would pay as much as the seller should get from a certain party, J. S.; for here the party bound to pay in this event is sufficiently notified by the terms of his contract that a sale is or will be made to J. S., and agrees to take notice of it: there is a particular individual specified, and the seller is to exercise no option. Ib.; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1.

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., sales "to arrive," infra, § 314.

buyer and seller in sales made on the condition of paying or securing the price. We have seen that the transfer of property may, under suitable circumstances, be presumed to have been completed, on the striking of a bargain for specific goods, before either payment or delivery; this being the modern law of England, which, even before actual delivery, casts the risks of title upon the purchaser, though he cannot take the chattel away without paying for it.<sup>1</sup> But, as we have also shown, the circumstances of the transaction may be such as to indicate that the seller agrees to transfer the property in consideration, not of the buyer's engaging to pay, but of his actually paying or securing the price.<sup>2</sup> Now, in this last very common instance of a sale for payment on delivery, each party is bound to the other by concurrent condition, — the seller to deliver, the buyer to pay, — and neither can sue the other for breach of contract without averring that he performed, or offered to perform, the condition on his part.<sup>3</sup>

§ 293. Obligation to deliver and Obligation to pay, as Conditions Concurrent, etc. — Independently, however, of the question who owns the goods, it is a general rule in all executory agreements for the sale of chattels, that the seller's obligation to deliver, and the buyer's obligation to pay or render equivalent, are concurrent conditions in the nature of conditions precedent, and that performance, or the offer to perform, or a readiness and willingness to do what he was prevented from doing, is a prerequisite on the part of him who would enforce the contract against the other.<sup>4</sup> Thus, in Atkinson v. Smith, there was a sort of exchange bargain, or what would now be styled a mutual agreement for cross-sales; A. engaging to buy of B. a lot of fleeces, and to take in return a lot of woollen cloths called noils, and B. making

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 243; Blackb. Sales, 147–149; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 2.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 244.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Rawson v. Johnson, 1 East, 203; Jackson v. Allaway, 6 M. & G. 942.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.; Dana v. King, 2 Pick. 155;

Williams v. Healey, 3 Denio, 363; Warren v. Wheeler, 21 Me. 484; Atkinson v. Smith, 14 M. & W. 695; Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882; Sutton v. Campbell, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 595.

corresponding engagements. The noils rose in price, and B. refused to deliver them. A. sued, averring independent agreements; but he was nonsuited, the judges holding that he should have alleged his offer to deliver the fleeces, which was a condition precedent to his right to claim the noils.<sup>1</sup> But in Bishop v. Shillito, where iron was delivered under a contract that certain bills outstanding against the seller should be taken out of circulation, which was not done, the seller was allowed to sue in trover, and recover what he had delivered; for such delivery of the iron was to have been contemporaneous with the redelivery of the bills.<sup>2</sup>

§ 294. Condition of no Transfer of Title until Price is adjusted. — The principle here involved is constantly applied, in the American authorities, so as to defeat the buyer's title as owner where goods have been delivered on an express or implied condition that the seller shall not be divested of his property right therein until the stipulated price is paid or secured. Thus, Chancellor Kent lays it down emphatically, that, where there is a condition precedent attached to a contract of sale and delivery, the property does not vest in the purchaser on delivery until he performs the condition, or the seller waives it; and the right continues in the vendor, even against creditors and subsequent purchasers of the vendee.<sup>3</sup> And accordingly it is well settled, that where goods are sold and delivered on condition that the property therein shall not vest in the buyer until the purchase-money is paid or secured, such payment or adjustment of the purchase-money is a condition precedent on the buyer's part to the transfer of title to himself from the seller; subject, of course, to the usual exception attending the performance of a condition precedent.<sup>4</sup> If the condition precedent was plainly expressed in the delivery, all the more surely will the seller's condition be sustained; and it holds most strongly as between the sale parties themselves.

<sup>1</sup> Atkinson v. Smith, 14 M. & W. 695.

<sup>2</sup> Bishop v. Shillito, 2 B. & Ald. 329.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 497. See Green v. Rowland, 16 Gray, 58.

<sup>4</sup> Bishop v. Shillito, 2 B. & Ald. 329, n.; Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229;

§ 295. The Same Subject; Condition sustained notwithstanding Delivery. — Thus, if a tradesman sells goods payable on delivery, and his servant by mistake delivers without receiving the money, he may, after a demand and refusal to re-deliver or pay, sue in trover for the goods.<sup>1</sup> The consignment of a piano, too, by a wholesale to a retail dealer, on the previous distinct understanding that the piano shall remain the property of the consignor until paid for, and, if sold, that the consignee's agreement with the purchaser shall expressly reserve the consignor's right in like manner, leaves the consignor's title such that it cannot be seized and sold in execution upon a judgment recovered against the consignee.<sup>2</sup> Wherever, indeed, the sale is for immediate payment, and the buyer, on getting the goods into his own possession, refuses to make the payment, the seller who has not waived his rights may reclaim them, notwithstanding delivery.<sup>3</sup>

What has already been said of the seller's reservation of the jus disponendi bears in this same direction.<sup>4</sup> But, if the sale be conditioned on payment, the seller's right is usually conceded to extend even further. He may actually deliver the chattel to the buyer, — an act which, under circumstances imputing to him no laches, no waiver of a stipulated right, will not debar him from pursuing legal remedies afterwards; and the situation of things may be such as even to permit of leaving the chattel in the buyer's hands as a sort of bailee for a considerable period, in expectation of payment, without the loss of the seller's title. A liberal disposition is shown

Brandt v. Bowlby, 2 B. & Ad. 932; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 3; Porter v. Pettengill, 12 N. H. 299; Whitwell v. Vincent, 4 Pick. 449; Whitney v. Eaton, 15 Gray, 225; Tyler v. Freeman, 3 Cush. 261; Story Sales, § 313; Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552; Hasbrouck v. Lounsbury, 26 N. Y. 598; Little v. Page, 44 Mo. 412; Ridgeway v. Kennedy, 52 Mo. 24; Duncans v. Stone, 45 Vt. 118; Thompson v. Ray, 46 Ala. 224; Paul v. Reed, 52 N. H. 136; Henderson v. Lauck, 21 Penn. St. 359; Booraem v. Crane, 103 Mass.

522; 7 Blatch. 548; Empire State Type Co. v. Grant, 114 N. Y. 40; Shireman v. Jackson, 14 Ind. 459; Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384; Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4; Wabash Elevator Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 23 Ohio St. 311; Fifield v. Elmer, 25 Mich. 48.

<sup>1</sup> Bayley, J., in Bishop v. Shillito, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Cole v. Mann, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 380.

<sup>3</sup> Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, c. 4.

by the courts here, as in the case of a seller's reservation of the jus disponendi, in order that acts which merely indicate the reposing of confidence in the buyer, especially in mere externals, shall not prejudice the rights of the seller.<sup>1</sup> Thus, where delivery was made in expectation of a draft which the buyer was to go to the bank and procure, and the seller was put off with the promise that the draft would be sent him at once, it was held that the condition still remained in force to prevent the transfer of title.<sup>2</sup>

Even though the goods be in possession of a warehouseman or other custodian, no transfer of property, as against the seller, is effected by the custodian's entry of transfer on his books at the seller's suggestion; such third party, as part of the transaction, giving a paper to that effect to the seller, which the latter presents to the buyer, to be handed to him only on receiving payment: for here the intention is, upon the whole, manifested that the seller is not to part with the goods until they are paid for. This case is quite unlike that where a buyer takes a delivery order to the custodian, and the latter attorns to him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 296. The Same Subject; Rule applied where the Condition is not for Cash Payment; Payment by Check, etc. — The rule which insists upon the performance of a condition precedent applies not to cash sales alone; for, wherever delivery is made upon express or implied condition that the title shall remain in the seller until the price is adjusted after a certain manner, the buyer's possession, being in strict accordance with the condition, carries with it no absolute right of ownership. Thus, where goods are sold on six months, in consideration of certain acceptances, balance in sixty days, the due transfer of acceptances to this effect is a prerequisite of title to the

<sup>1</sup> Gibson v. Tobey, 46 N. Y. 637; Tyler v. Freeman, 3 Cush. 261; Sage v. Sleutz, 23 Ohio St. 1; Johnston v. Eicheberger, 13 Fla. 230; Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48; post, as to waiver. In Shepherd v. Harrison, L. R. 4 Q. B. 196, 493, s. c. L. R. 5 H. L. 116, this principle is applied in a case of reservation of jus disponendi, — the seller having mailed the bill of lading, together with the bill of exchange, directly to the buyer. And see Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229.

<sup>2</sup> Gibson v. Tobey, 46 N. Y. 637.

<sup>3</sup> Godts v. Rose, 17 C. B. 229; Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313.

goods in the buyer;<sup>1</sup> and, delivery being made upon the stipulation that the buyer shall give his notes for the price, with or without indorsement, or that he shall furnish certain securities, no title passes to the buyer before full performance of the condition.<sup>2</sup> So, too, where goods are sold at a fixed price, to be paid at a certain future time, and delivered upon this condition, the buyer acquires no title until he has made the payment.<sup>3</sup>

On the other hand, where payment, is made the condition precedent, the buyer's check does not operate usually as payment or adjustment, in any such sense as to prevent the seller from retaking the goods if such check is not duly paid; for his delivery was conditional upon due payment.<sup>4</sup>

§ 297. The Same Subject; Partial Adjustment of the Price; Sale on Instalment Plan.—If the contract of the parties be such as to indicate that the seller shall retain his right of ownership in the chattel after delivery, notwithstanding a partial payment or partial adjustment of the price, the condition of payment is enforceable to the extent of rendering full adjustment a prerequisite of title acquisition in the buyer. Instances are found where chattels are sold payable in instalments, — a plan which is becoming popular, in parts of this country, with reference to sewing-machines, pianos, and the like.<sup>5</sup> Here the buyer stands usually as a bailee for hire until all the instalments are paid. Prudence requires that contracts of this uncertain description be reduced to writing, so as to show clearly the respective rights of the parties, and enable the courts to discriminate between a sale conditional

<sup>1</sup> Dresser Man. Co. v. Waterston, 3 Met. 9.

<sup>2</sup> Russell v. Minor, 22 Wend. 659; Hirschorn v. Canney, 98 Mass. 149; Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48; 79 Me. 572.

<sup>3</sup> Little v. Page, 44 Mo. 412; Whitney v. Eaton, 15 Gray, 225; Hasbrouck v. Lounsbury, 26 N. Y. 598; Fifield v. Elmer, 25 Mich. 48; Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4.

<sup>4</sup> Nat. Bank v. Railroad Co., 44 Minn. 224. See also Davison v.

Davis, 125 U. S. 91, as to payment by the buyer's note where the seller has postponed delivery.

<sup>5</sup> Crawcour, Ex parte, 9 Ch. D. 419; 23 Ch. D. 261; Sage v. Sleutz, 23 Ohio St. 1; Sutton v. Campbell, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 595; Cole v. Mann, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 380; Preston v. Whitney, 23 Mich. 260; Giddey v. Altman, 27 Mich. 206; Goldsmith v. Bryant, 26 Wis. 34.

upon payment by instalments and that which is in truth a mortgage transaction or a bailment.<sup>1</sup> Such contracts are to be construed according to their tenor; and if they contain an option to buy or hire in favor of the one party, or other special conditions to be observed by the other, the court will give just scope to the mutual undertaking.<sup>2</sup> In such sales partial payments are presumably forfeited where there is default in the balance; but the written contract itself may furnish a criterion.<sup>3</sup>

§ 298. The Same Subject; Delivery carrying Possession without Property; how Possession is resumed by Seller, etc.— Sometimes other conditions besides payment, or adjusting the price, accompany delivery.<sup>4</sup> Nor are the instances rare where possession, given under the general condition that no property in the chattel shall pass until it is fully paid for, is held not to preclude the paramount title of the original bonâ fide seller.<sup>5</sup> A chattel may also be delivered with such a condition as to title by sale, while meantime the purchaser is to use it by way of loan or hire, under the mutual agreement of the parties.<sup>6</sup> While, too, a seller may stipulate for the retention in himself of a right of property, which ought naturally

<sup>1</sup> See Rowan v. Union Arms Co., 36 Vt. 124; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 417; Singer Machine Co. v. Cole, 4 Lea, 439. As to ships, see §§ 267, 268.

<sup>2</sup> Sumner v. Cottey, 71 Mo. 121; Hine v. Roberts, 48 Conn. 267. The seller or letter of the thing should be cautious how he attempts to replevy the thing upon default. See Meagher v. Hollenberg, 9 Lea, 392. The contract may provide for resuming possession on default at the seller's option, in which case he ought to give previous notice of his intention to exercise the option. Wheeler Man. Co. v. Teetzlaff, 53 Wis. 211.

<sup>3</sup> Colcord v. McDonald, 128 Mass. 470; Fleck v. Warner, 25 Kan. 492; 17 Mass. 606; Latham v. Sumner, 89 Ill. 233. In some cases equity might allow some benefit for partial payments made; but often the sense of the contract makes such payments to a great extent a sort of recompense for use.

<sup>4</sup> Hill v. McKenzie, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 122; Dresser Man. Co. v. Waterston, 3 Met. 9; Dyer v. Libby, 61 Me. 45. And see Allen v. Delano, 55 Me. 113; Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 113. For instance, possession of a thing may be given by A. on the understanding that B. shall either pay for it or sell it on A.'s account. Holt v. Holt, 58 N. H. 276.

<sup>5</sup> Sage v. Sleutz, 23 Ohio St. 1; Deshon v. Bigelow, 8 Gray, 159; Cole v. Mann, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 380; Powell v. Preston, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 644.

<sup>6</sup> Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384; Shireman v. Jackson, 14 Ind. 459.

to carry with it the right of possession, an actual delivery of possession to the buyer may be so far incompatible with the retention in himself of this right of possession as to render it incumbent upon him to give notice, or make some explicit declaration, before he can retake the goods, and resume possession as of right.<sup>1</sup>

But, at all events, a seller may resume possession of his chattels conditionally sold, on putting the other party at default. The possession of a purchaser who refuses payment upon getting possession of goods which had been delivered him in pursuance of an understanding, express or implied, that payment and delivery should be simultaneous, is wrongful; and the seller may reclaim the goods as his own, if reasonably prompt in asserting his rights in the premises.<sup>2</sup> The difficulty arising, however, from a voluntary delivery to the buyer without express assertion of the condition is, that a waiver of cash payment might be inferred; though this is not so readily asserted as between the original parties, and of course such inference may be repelled by the circumstances and proof of usage or of the contract.<sup>3</sup>

§ 299. Condition of no Title notwithstanding Delivery, applied as against Buyer's Creditors.—The condition precedent or concurrent thus imposed by the seller upon delivery will take effect, as a rule, in every bonâ fide transaction against not only the buyer, but all who may claim under him, including his attaching creditors.<sup>4</sup> And since the delivery of

<sup>1</sup> Giddey v. Altman, 27 Mich. 206. But see Powell v. Preston, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 644.

<sup>2</sup> See Atkinson v. Smith, 4 M. & W. 695; Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882; Henderson v. Lauck, 21 Penn. St. 359; Adams v. O'Conner, 100 Mass. 515; Leven v. Smith, 1 Denio, 571; Paul v. Reed, 52 N. H. 136; Deshon v. Bigelow, 8 Gray, 159; Ridgeway v. Kennedy, 52 Mo. 24.

<sup>3</sup> §§ 300, 304.

<sup>4</sup> Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384; Paul v. Reed, 52 N. H. 136; Ridgeway v. Kennedy, 52 Mo. 24; Ballard

v. Burgett, 40 N. Y. 314; Stevens v. Brennan, 79 N. Y. 254; Cole v. Berry, 42 N. J. L. 308; Smith v. Lozo, 42 Mich. 6; Bigelow, C. J., in Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co., 3 Gray, 545; Sage v. Sleutz, 23 Ohio St. 1; Duncans v. Stone, 45 Vt. 118; Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48; Thorpe v. Fowler, 57 Iowa, 541. A New Hampshire case may serve as an example, so far as a buyer's creditors are concerned. A man called at a store to make some cash purchases. He bought a hog, and put it into his wagon; also some sugar, which he chattels to the buyer conditional upon immediate payment carries no attachable interest therein of which his creditors can avail themselves, it follows, under the ordinary rule of law, that the seller's title is not extinguished by any tender of the purchase-money made on the attaching creditor's behalf;<sup>1</sup> a consequence which is, however, averted by legislation in some of our States, permitting the attaching creditor to make payment or tender at once or within the fixed period, and so take the buyer's place with reference to the property.<sup>2</sup>

§ 300. Rule as concerns Sub-purchasers from Buyer.—But a hardship is discovered when we come to apply the rule to sub-purchasers from the original buyer of chattels delivered into his possession. Any seller who makes his title known to such parties in anticipation of a sub-purchase may justly claim the law's protection.<sup>3</sup> But how stands the case as against a bonâ fide sub-purchaser who buys without notice of the original seller's claim of ownership, or of the condition upon which delivery was first made? Here are goods offered for sale by one rightfully in possession: they are taken and paid for by another in the honest belief that the transaction was legitimate; and the sub-purchaser may in-mixed with sugar of his own in the wagon; also certain other groceries, the prices of which were agreed upon. Then he took out his wallet to pay for the whole; but, before he could deliver the money, a writ was served upon him. It was decided by the court, that, upon this state of facts, the sale, as it was conditioned upon a payment not yet made, was incomplete, and that the seller could reclaim the goods as his own. Paul v. Reed, 52 N. H. 136. This, to be sure, was not a case of continuous possession in the buyer sufficient to have misled others and induced a false credit in those with whom he dealt. A stronger example is afforded in Holt v. Holt, 58 N. H. 276. The rule is different in some States. Thus it is well settled in Pennsylvania that a sale and delivery of personal property, with an agreement that the ownership shall remain in the seller until the purchase-money is paid, enables creditors of the buyer to seize and sell it for his debts. Brunswick Co. v. Hoover, 95 Penn. St. 508. And see next section.

<sup>1</sup> Sage v. Sleutz, 23 Ohio St. 1; Buckmaster v. Smith, 22 Vt. 203; Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 172. But see § 302, a.

<sup>2</sup> Duncans v. Stone, 45 Vt. 118. It seems always fair and sufficiently just to the seller, that the buyer's attaching creditor should have such a right; for if the seller obtains his price in due season he suffers no disadvantage.

<sup>3</sup> See Dresser Man. Co. v. Waterston, 3 Met. 9.

voke the aid of an old maxim, that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer, he should bear the loss whose conduct occasioned the difficulty. Accordingly, it has been not unfrequently asserted in effect, and we may perhaps regard the rule as settled in some of the United States, at least in cases of clear and continuous possession by the buyer under an apparent title, that the bonâ fide purchaser from one to whom chattels as yet unpaid for were delivered by the original seller on the understanding that no transfer of title should take place until payment was made, shall nevertheless hold them as his own against the original seller, if the latter's claim of title were not made known to him before his own purchase.<sup>1</sup>

Whatever support, however, this last proposition may seem to have received from some of the earlier Massachusetts and New York decisions, must, in the light of other recent adjudications, be considered as withdrawn.<sup>2</sup> For the weight of American authority is now decidedly opposed to such a doctrine. The arguments on both sides were carefully balanced in the able opinion pronounced by Chief Justice Bigelow of Massachusetts, in Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co. — a case which ranks as a leading one on the subject. Adverting to the long-settled rule as to a sale and delivery on condition of payment in cases between buyer and seller, which concedes that the seller has a right to repossess himself of the goods, both against the buyer and against his attaching creditors, the Chief Justice proceeds to the defence here set up, that a valid title should vest in the bonâ fide purchaser from the original buyer notwithstanding, since possession was per se a badge of fraud. That possession is a badge of fraud, he continues, will not suffice for argument, as compared with the principle that possession alone gives no right to transfer the title: the title continues in the seller until the conditions of sale and delivery are complete.<sup>1</sup> Ballard v. Burgett, another leading case, puts the New York doctrine on substantially the same firm footing. Here A. had sold oxen to B., and given him possession, under an agreement that the property should remain vested in A. until B. made payment of the price; but B., before paying the price, sold the oxen to bonâ fide third persons without notice. It was decided, upon full examination of the authorities, that A. could recover the oxen from such third persons on the ground that his title had not passed.<sup>2</sup> Numerous other American decisions of earlier and later date support the same conclusion; an important one in the Supreme Court of the United States affording occasion for an exhaustive review of the subject and its sanction to this doctrine;<sup>3</sup> and accordingly we may state, as decidedly the better opinion in this country, that (excepting, perhaps, the case of negotiable or quasi negotiable instruments) a sale of personal property made by one to whom the chattel was delivered by the original seller on condition that property should not pass until the chattel was paid for, or the price duly adjusted, confers no better title upon a bonâ fide purchaser without notice from the original buyer than the buyer himself had, or his attaching creditors, or a purchaser with actual notice of the condition; that against all of these the original seller may with due diligence follow up his rights, and reclaim the chattel as his own for non-fulfilment of the condition annexed to the delivery, if it was bonâ fide annexed and the transaction is free from fraud on his part.<sup>4</sup> For the

<sup>1</sup> Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Phillips, 60 Ill. 190, per curiam; Rose v. Story, 1 Penn. St. 190; Story Sales, § 313; Hussey v. Thornton, 4 Mass. 405; Wait v. Green, 36 N. Y. 556; Leighton v. Stevens, 19 Me. 154.

<sup>2</sup> See Hussey v. Thornton, 4 Mass. 405, commented on in Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co., 3 Gray, 545; Wait v. Green, 36 N. Y. 556, explained in Ballard v. Burgett, 40 N. Y. 314.

<sup>1</sup> Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co., 3 Gray, 545. And see Chase v. Ingalls, 122 Mass. 381.

<sup>2</sup> Ballard v. Burgett, 40 N. Y. 314. Cf. Dows v. Kidder, 84 N. Y. 121; 118 U. S. 675.

<sup>3</sup> Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663 (1886).

<sup>4</sup> Coggill v. Hartford, &c. R. R. Co., and Ballard v. Burgett, supra; Dows v. Kidder, 84 N. Y. 121; Parker v. Baxter, 86 N. Y. 586; Cole v. Berry, 42 N. J. L. 308; Brown v. Fitch, 43

Conn. 512; King v. Bates, 57 N. H. 446; Hart v. Carpenter, 24 Conn. 427; Bigelow v. Huntley, 8 Vt. 151; Deshon v. Bigelow, 8 Gray, 159; Hirschorn v. Canney, 98 Mass. 149; Southwestern Freight Co. v. Plant, 45 Mo. 517; Ridgeway v. Kennedy, 52 Mo. 24; Price v. Jones, 3 Head, 84; Baker v. Hall, 15 Iowa, 277; Hotchkiss v. Hunt, 49 Me. 213; Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4; Fifield v. Elmer, 25 Mich. 48; Shireman v. Jackson, 14 Ind. 459; Kimball v. Jackman, 42 original buyer, having no title in himself, can pass none ; and, as has been further suggested, any third party who knows that he had come into possession of the goods is bound to inquire whether the title acquired was that of buyer, borrower, or hirer, or in still another capacity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 301. Qualifications of this Rule as to Bonâ Fide Purchasers for Value; Negotiable Instruments, etc.—Some qualifications of the rule may still apply on behalf of bonâ fide purchasers, notwithstanding the concessions we have just stated. Thus it will be admitted that the relations of the original parties to transactions like these jostle roughly the rights of others ; since a buyer may have the opportunity to set up a fictitious

N. H. 242 ; Little v. Page, 44 Mo. 412 ; Wangler v. Franklin, 70 Mo. 659. The learned opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley in Harkness v. Russell, 118 U. S. 663, brings the doctrine in its historical aspects fairly down to 1886. See authorities cited, ib.

The right of the seller upon condition to pursue and recover his chattel as against a sub-sale applies where he sold a chattel conditional upon a price payable by instalments. McCombs v. Guild, 9 Lea, 81 ; supra, § 297 ; Sumner v. Cotter, 71 Mo. 121.

But it should be observed that in some States—as, for instance, Pennsylvania—it is still declared emphatically that a conditional buyer placed in possession, who sells the thing to a bonâ fide third person, transfers by the sub-sale a valid title as against the original seller. Stadtfeld v. Huntsman, 92 Penn. St. 53. And as to attaching creditors see preceding section. But in this State it is otherwise ruled where the contract is a bailment with an additional right to purchase ; and hence an effort on behalf of sellers to prove such transactions bailments and not sales. Chamberlain v. Smith, 44 Penn. St. 431. In Illinois, Kentucky, and some other States, the condition of title transfer appears to be sustained between the parties, but not as against bonâ fide purchasers or attaching creditors, without notice. March v. Wright, 46 Ill. 487 ; Vaughn v. Hopson, 10 Bush, 337. Statute provisions are found on the subject in some States. See 73 Me. 88 ; 48 Vt. 24 ; 57 Iowa, 541. And see 52 Ala. 94, 572. The policy of such legislation is to discourage the evils of false credit by requiring a record of title, in such cases of conditional sales, as to transfer of title ; or constructive notice to third parties as under a chattel mortgage ; and it must be admitted, in view of the present confusion and uncertainty of judicial results on these points, that such enactments are salutary.

As to remedies of the seller to recover the goods, where the buyer defaults in performance so that the property does not pass, see post, c. 12.

<sup>1</sup> See Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384. But cf. Leighton v. Stevens, 19 Me. 154, where it is said that in cases of apparent ownership third persons have a right to consider the property as that of the apparent owner ; a proposition which is doubtless true, so far as to render it necessary for the original seller who claims adversely to overthrow such presumption as may arise from the first buyer's possession, and show that the condition has not been performed upon which title depended.

credit with third persons, and tempt them to their ruin. Where, therefore, the original transfer of possession between parties is merely a dishonest device, with the semblance of a sale, fraud may be alleged; and fraud, of course, must recoil upon the guilty participants.<sup>1</sup>

On the ground of the presumed waiver of the condition, furthermore, other cases sustain a bonâ fide sub-buyer against the original seller; for they insist that a voluntary delivery to the original buyer, without payment or an express reservation on the seller's part, is presumptively a waiver of cash payment as a condition.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, the best authorities only set up this waiver as a presumption to shield the bonâ fide sub-buyer; and they admit further that such presumption may be repelled by special contract, usage, or circumstantial proof that no such waiver was intended.

But a more obvious qualification grows out of the law of transfer pertaining to negotiable and quasi negotiable instruments.<sup>3</sup> It is perhaps on this latter ground, rather than on any direct dissent to the general doctrine of upholding against the world a seller's title pending fulfilment of a condition precedent to transfer, that we find some decisions lately reported, to the point that a seller who (besides consistently yielding his possession of the goods) makes over to the buyer a quasi negotiable instrument in the nature of a bill of lading, thus vesting the latter with the full indicia of ownership, cannot afterwards recover the goods it represents under a claim that the goods were conditionally sold, so as thereby to defeat the title of one who has bonâ fide purchased or advanced on the security of the instrument.<sup>4</sup> The special <sup>1</sup> See infra, as to fraudulent sales, c. 16; Taylor v. Pope, 5 Cold. 416. In such cases, possession is usually coupled either with an apparent power to sell and exercise dominion, superinduced by the acts of the owner, or by coupling the possession with other indicia of title, such as a bill of sale, bill of lading, &c.

<sup>2</sup> Freeman v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 309; Hammett v. Linneman, 48 N. Y.

399; Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 572. See § 304.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 16; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 458.

<sup>4</sup> Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Phillips, 60 Ill. 190; Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456; Western Transportation Co. v. Marshall, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 575; Rawls v. Deshler, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 12. But see Brand v. Focht, 1 Abb. N. Y.

animus of these decisions is to sustain such instruments according to their tenor, and protect their use in the community as a suitable basis for merchandise loans and transfers.

§ 302. Who is a Bonâ Fide Purchaser, etc., in this Connection. — We may add, that a bonâ fide purchaser or transferee in this connection is one who advances or parts with property as a consideration: incurring a contingent liability for the first buyer, such as indorsing his notes for the price, is not enough to place a party upon this favored footing.<sup>1</sup> A transfer by the buyer to secure or pay a precedent debt does not render the transferee a bonâ fide purchaser in this connection.<sup>2</sup>

§ 302 a. Interests of Buyer and Seller before Breach of Conditions. — In such conditional sales the relations of the parties is a peculiar one, which is best observed where payment is postponed by consent. The seller still retains an interest in the goods which he can sell and transfer, or which may be attached by his creditors, subject to the buyer's right to pay as stipulated, whether at once or upon postponement, and so to retain the property.<sup>3</sup> The buyer, too, acquires immediately an interest in the goods, which he can sell or mortgage before breach of the condition; and if he does so, and afterwards duly pays or renders the price to the seller according to agreement, or if the seller waives such payment, the transferee's title from the buyer will become perfect without any new transaction or mortgage or bill of sale.<sup>4</sup> If goods are wrongfully taken from such conditional buyer, he may pursue the wrong-doer, and recover the goods or damages.<sup>5</sup> As

App. 185; Dows v. Kidder, 84 N. Y. 121; Parker v. Baxter, 86 N. Y. 586; Hirschorn v. Canney, 98 Mass. 149. Local statutes concerning bills of lading sometimes affect the question. Ib. And see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. cs. 7, 8. In some States (but not in all) this exception would be extended to a sub-sale of stock with a power of attorney indorsed thereon. Cherry v. Frost, 7 Lea, 1; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 406. See post, c. 6.

<sup>1</sup> Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674.

<sup>2</sup> Stevens v. Brennan, 79 N. Y. 254.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. Bennett's note, 283; Burnell v. Marvin, 44 Vt. 277; Everett v. Hall, 67 Me. 497; McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521; 12 Allen, 590.

<sup>4</sup> Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 445; Crompton v. Pratt, 105 Mass. 255; 122 Mass. 381; Beach's Appeal, 57 Conn. 473; Carpenter v. Seatt, 13 R. I. 477.

<sup>5</sup> Harrington v. King, 121 Mass. 269. For merely as bailee with a special property one would have this right; aside from considering him a with the buyer, so with his sub-buyer, the conditional seller cannot recover the goods or their value before a breach of the condition, — as where they were delivered on a postponed payment by the buyer's time note, — unless some such right was evidently reserved to him by the contract of sale.<sup>1</sup>

§ 303. Conclusion as to Sales with Condition of no Property Transfer until Payment. — Upon the whole, this subject is one of great perplexity where no statute is interposed, as will appear from a further examination of the admitted qualifications of our rule. Where there has been no delivery of the goods, the condition that the property therein shall remain in the seller until payment or adjustment of the price is readily inferred.<sup>2</sup> But a voluntary delivery raises the presumption per se that the complete title passes unconditionally; and to repel such a conclusion, declarations and acts of the parties and circumstances or usage, or best of all an express contract, must be alleged to the contrary.<sup>3</sup> This presumption being overcome, and the stipulation proving, in fact, that notwithstanding delivery the title shall not pass until the price is paid, this understanding takes effect; yet it is only as between the parties themselves, apart from documents of title, that we find the seller's title under such circumstances inflexibly upheld. With respect to sustaining the rule as against creditors of the buyer and bonâ fide purchasers from him, we can claim only the weightier authority in its favor, and must admit that in different States the rule is differently applied.<sup>4</sup>

§ 304. Exceptions growing out of Waiver or Impossibility. — The usual exceptions noted with reference to conditions conditional owner. As to the risk of loss from fire or other casualty without fault, authorities are not clear; and the rule is obscured by the presumption raised in some cases that the sole parties have agreed as to risks, or else that the buyer was conditionally the owner. See § 270. In the sense that such buyer is a sort of bailee, the seller should be presumed liable in such cases; and it is he who retains ownership until the condition is fulfilled. Cf. 111 Mass. 355; 107 N. C. 49; 66 Miss. 49.

<sup>1</sup> Newhall v. Kingsbury, 131 Mass. 445; Hurd v. Fleming, 34 Vt. 169.

<sup>2</sup> Tuthill v. Bogart, 79 N. Y. 215. The latest New York cases (cited supra, §§ 299, 300) show much uncertainty, so far as judicial dicta are concerned, on the subject.

<sup>3</sup> Parker v. Baxter, 86 N. Y. 586. And see as to waiver, next section.

<sup>4</sup> See preceding note, § 300.

precedent prevail likewise where goods are sold on condition of paying or securing the price; and acts and conduct on the seller's part, from which a waiver, express or implied, of the condition may be inferred, or which go to render due performance by the buyer impossible, will excuse the buyer from a strict compliance with the condition precedent, besides debarring the seller of the right to reclaim the goods as his own. The title thereto fully vesting in the buyer, the unpaid seller's remedies become those of an ordinary creditor;<sup>1</sup> and it is a familiar principle, that they with legal demands against a debtor who first attach will take the precedence. Delivery, we have seen, is not necessarily a waiver of the condition of sale; nor conduct on the seller's part which merely indicates a disposition to repose confidence in the buyer, and carry out the bargain, with all its conditions, in a liberal spirit.<sup>2</sup> But delivery is an important circumstance, nevertheless; and a voluntary delivery of the goods, and the indicia of title, made by the seller, with nothing said about the price, is presumptively a waiver of any possible condition concerning price, so as to render it incumbent upon him, under such circumstances, to show that the condition not only entered into the contract, but was never waived on his part.<sup>3</sup> And to do so successfully, he must have pursued his right with reasonable diligence according to the circumstances; following up the buyer at once, and without intermission, if the condition was cash payment or immediate adjustment of the price on delivery; nor suffering his vigilance to sleep after the maturity of the buyer's obligation, if the allowance of time was a part of the condition. Thus, where goods were to be paid for by the buyer's note, and the seller did not call for it until eight days after the sale, this delay was held to be fatal to his claim of title;<sup>4</sup> and where it was agreed that the buyer

<sup>1</sup> But as to a seller's lien, &c., see post, c. 14.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 295.

<sup>3</sup> See Leighton v. Stevens, 19 Me. 154; Farlow v. Ellis, 15 Gray, 229; Whitney v. Eaton, 15 Gray, 225; Smith v. Lynes, 1 Seld. 41; Parker

v. Baxter, 86 N. Y. 586; Fuller v. Bean, 34 N. H. 290; Freeman v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 309; Hammett v. Linneman, 48 N. Y. 399; Peabody v. Maguire, 79 Me. 572. See § 301.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Dennie, 6 Pick. 262.

should have possession and pay the price within a fixed period, and, after the time had elapsed, the buyer was still suffered without objection to retain possession, the court inferred assent to further delay and a waiver on the seller's part.<sup>1</sup> Where, again, a note was given for the goods, stipulating that title should not pass until payment, a mortgage of the goods afterwards by the buyer to secure such note, imports a mutual waiver of the stipulation.<sup>2</sup>

But each case must be adjudged on its own merits; for although waiver of the condition may be by express or implied acts and conduct, and while negligence unexplained justifies its inference, yet the essence of waiver, as one of our judges has well expressed it, is, after all, "voluntary choice not to claim and not mere negligence."<sup>3</sup> That the lapse of several days in following up the buyer is not conclusive evidence of a waiver of condition on the seller's part, appears from a case where a courtesy in the particular trade of ten days for payment was recognized, so as to enable the seller to replevy the merchandise afterwards from the buyer's creditors.<sup>4</sup> The circumstance that the parties live far apart, or transact business through third parties who have to notify the principals, is also clearly material in the allowance of time.<sup>5</sup> To ship goods, mailing to the buyer at the same time a bill indicating the terms of payment, or a letter requesting him to transmit payment by cash, check, or time note, as the case may be, is quite consistent with the idea of enforcing the condition, and justifies the seller in awaiting the due response.<sup>6</sup> A want of vigi-

<sup>1</sup> Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155. And see Mixer v. Cook, 31 Me. 340; Bowen v. Burk, 13 Penn. St. 146; Scudder v. Bradbury, 106 Mass. 427; Goldsmith v. Bryant, 26 Wis. 34.

<sup>2</sup> McCormick Co. v. Lewis, 52 Kan. 358.

<sup>3</sup> Shaw, C. J., in Farlow v. Ellis, 15 Gray, 229. The seller's secret intention that the title shall not pass on delivery will not prevent its passing. Scudder v. Bradbury, 106 Mass. 422.

<sup>4</sup> Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48. But a special usage that no title shall vest before payment should be strictly proved. Scudder v. Bradbury, 106 Mass. 422.

<sup>5</sup> Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48; Whitney v. Eaton, 15 Gray, 225; Hirschorn v. Canney, 98 Mass. 149.

<sup>6</sup> Ib.

lance on the seller's part, permissive acts of negligence, the failure to object to the buyer's retention of possession where such objection would have been called for, all go to weaken his hold upon the goods as his own; but it is rather his relaxation of proper effort under all the circumstances than the absolute lapse of more or less time that excludes his claim of title. Nor should the character of the chattel itself be disregarded; and a delay which might prove fatal in the case of goods easily taken back would be more readily excusable where the removal is necessarily attended with expense, difficulty, and injury to the subject-matter.<sup>1</sup> Still less readily will the seller be presumed to have intended a waiver, where the buyer's own conduct was such as to obstruct him in the effort to procure an adjustment of the price; as in the case of a sale, for cash on delivery, of goods in package which were found to require cooperage, where the buyer, after agreeing that the seller should send his cooper to do the needful work upon them, prevented the cooper from working on his arrival, and then refused payment of the bill which the seller thereupon sent him.<sup>2</sup>

§ 305. Seller may be estopped by his own Acts, etc., from claiming Goods as his own.— Under suitable circumstances, the original seller would be estopped by his own representations, or acts and conduct, from claiming the goods as his own against a third party who had purchased them in good faith without knowledge of the non-fulfilment of a condition accompanying delivery.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Goldsmith v. Bryant, 26 Wis. 34. As to the seller's lien for his price under such circumstances, see 50 Wis. 113; c. 14, post.

<sup>2</sup> Hill v. McKenzie, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 122. And see Tyler v. Freeman, 3 Cush. 261.

As to impossibility by death as an element, see McCraw v. Gilmer, 83 N. C. 162.

<sup>3</sup> But, in a sale upon the condition that the property should remain the seller's until paid for, it has been held that the original seller in a case

free from fraud may recover the chattel from a bonâ fide purchaser from the original buyer, notwithstanding, at the time of original sale, the seller had given to the first buyer a receipted bill of parcels, omitting at the latter's request any statement of the condition; and this, too, although the seller told the third party, when he thought of purchasing and inquired as to the sale, that he had sold it to the first buyer: whereupon the third person, having seen the bill of parcels, made the § 306. How Buyer should pay or adjust Payment, perform Condition, and gain Title.—Wherever a sale is made, subject to the condition of paying or securing the price on delivery, the buyer is, of course, bound to the performance of the condition on his part: in other words, he should promptly pay, or secure payment, as agreed upon, or at least offer to do so. If the contract be one of sale and delivery for ready money, and the ready money is paid, there is no longer a debt due on account of the goods, and the property thereto vests in him forthwith;<sup>1</sup> and so long as the buyer is not himself in default, but with due diligence, according to the circumstances, evinces the intention to fulfil his own obligation, so far as may be, his rights will not suffer injury. A tender of the amount due, seasonably and properly made, though refused by the seller, will of itself discharge all claim of title on the seller's part to the goods already delivered on condition of payment; or, if the goods be not yet delivered, will enable the buyer to sue for the seller's failure to deliver.<sup>2</sup> For the buyer is not bound to keep up a technical continuing tender of the price.<sup>3</sup> Nor does the buyer's own sale meantime of chattels conditionally held by him on an obligation for payment not yet matured constitute any breach of the condition, or carry with it the forfeiture of his rights; for he would have the right at any time to dispose of his interest in the property, such as it is, though remaining bound to the party from whom he purchased.<sup>4</sup>

§ 307. Rules of Evidence as to Sale for Cash on Delivery or upon Credit.—The question whether a particular sale was one for cash or adjustment on delivery or not, depends—like any other issue of “condition” or “no condition”—upon the intent of the parties at the time of sale, as manifested by their acts and conduct and the surrounding cir-

bonâ fide purchase in question. Zuchtman v. Roberts, 109 Mass. 53. See Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456; supra, § 258. And see c. 13, post.

<sup>1</sup> Bussey v. Barnett, 9 M. & W. 312.

<sup>2</sup> Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155; Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 445; Phillips v. Williams, 39 Ga. 597; Story Sales, § 238.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.

<sup>4</sup> Day v. Bassett, 102 Mass. 445.

cumstances. The later English authorities seem to incline against the presumption of what were anciently known as "ready-money" sales,—this, however, as is most probable, out of special regard to the character of large mercantile transactions, which, indeed, constitute the great staple of their modern sales decisions; whereas, in this country certainly, and as between retail dealers and their casual customers in particular, the presumption is more decidedly in favor of cash sales,—the payment or adjustment of price as a condition precedent to the transfer of property.<sup>1</sup> It is frequently held by American courts, that, where nothing is expressly said at the time of the bargain as to terms of payment, the presumption will be that the sale was intended for cash on delivery.<sup>2</sup> But upon this subject no inflexible rule can be set forth; for so much depends upon the usual course of dealing between the parties, and on trade usage at the time and place, that, after all, mutual intention and the just sense of the transaction must prevail, wherever it can be ascertained.<sup>3</sup> In an age of simple traffic, and among primitive people, cash sales are the rule; for credit is the outgrowth of confidence and mercantile activity.<sup>4</sup> To this

<sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 244, 245; Blackb. Sales, 147-149; Hanson v. Meyer, 6 East, 614; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; Hammett v. Linne-man, 48 N. Y. 399.

<sup>2</sup> Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491; Brehen v. O'Donnell, 34 N. J. L. 408; Farlow v. Ellis, 15 Gray, 229; Southwestern Freight Co. v. Plant, 45 Mo. 517; Adams v. O'Conner, 100 Mass. 515; Cassell v. Backrack, 42 Miss. 56; Darnell v. Griffin, 46 Ala. 520. But see Jenkins v. Jarrett, 70 N. C. 255.

<sup>3</sup> See Scudder v. Bradbury, 106 Mass. 422. If two persons agree that facts shall be deemed to exist with regard to goods, which, if they existed, would give the whole interest in, and power over, the goods to the one, and none to the other, and if everything is paid for by the one which would be paid for by an owner, and nothing by the other, in such a case, though it may be the intention and wish of the parties that the property shall not pass, nevertheless it will pass. Per Brett, L. J., Harris v. Truman, 9 Q. B. D. 264.

If the sale and delivery be unconditional in consideration of promised professional services by the buyer, and not a conditional one, the death of the buyer before his promise can be made good does not affect the divesting of the seller's property in the chattels. McCraw v. Gilmer, 83 N. C. 162. This seems consistent with principle, though a harsh inference to deduce from facts.

<sup>4</sup> See Southwestern Freight Co. v. Plant, 45 Mo. 517; Goldsmith v. Bryant, 26 Wis. 34.

extent, however, will every sale be presumed a conditional one upon payment (whatever might appear to be the case as to a full transfer of property), that the seller, without clear evidence that the sale was upon credit, shall not be compelled to relinquish possession to the buyer until he gets his price.<sup>1</sup>

§ 308. Rule applied in Sales upon Partial Delivery or Partial Payments.— Performance of the mutual or concurrent conditions of payment and delivery is a comparatively simple matter as between parties where a single delivery and a single adjustment of price are contemplated. But where the contract permits of a number of partial acts on either side, it becomes important to determine when one condition precedent is so far performed as to entitle the party to demand performance of the corresponding condition. This problem, too, resolves itself into a question of intention; whether, for instance, delivery of the whole lot was the prerequisite of payment, or the delivery of a portion entitled the seller to a full or partial payment, under the mutual understanding of the parties. A contract of sale of ten thousand bushels of barley, to be delivered at the rate of one thousand bushels per week, which is silent as to the time of payment, is held to import payment upon delivery of the whole ten thousand bushels, and not sooner.<sup>2</sup> Wherever there is an entire contract, the condition precedent imposed by law upon the seller of delivering the whole quantity is not affected by the circumstance that the buyer has not paid for the portion already delivered.<sup>3</sup> The same holds true where their agreement is explicit in postponing payment to the delivery of the last load or parcel.<sup>4</sup> So, on the other hand, where the buyer is to come and take away the chattels from the seller's premises, and the contract was silent as to the time of payment, he is bound to pay at once and in full, and not as fast as he removes the lot by piecemeal.<sup>5</sup> For the entirety

<sup>1</sup> See Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941; post, cs. 7, 13.

<sup>2</sup> Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Mount v. Lyon, 49 N. Y. 552; Shinn v. Bodine, 60 Penn. St. 182.

<sup>4</sup> Henderson v. Lauck, 21 Penn. St. 359.

<sup>5</sup> Brehen v. O'Donnell, 34 N. J. L.

408.

of a contract depends upon the intention of the parties, and not upon the divisibility of the subject-matter; though it is manifest that parties who do not like to trust one another are quite at liberty to bargain for payment by instalments correspondent with part-delivery, and so break up into fractional parts what would otherwise have been an entire sale contract.<sup>1</sup> A partial delivery, conditioned upon receiving full payment after the whole lot is delivered, gives the buyer no title in the portion delivered, against the seller's consent.<sup>2</sup> But in case of a buyer's qualified refusal to pay for partial deliveries under a contract which required him to pay thus, such refusal will not exempt the seller from all obligation to deliver further unless it amounted to an absolute refusal and renunciation of the contract;<sup>3</sup> or a disregard of essentials.<sup>4</sup>

Accepting partial performance under an entire contract is sometimes treated, under the circumstances, as an assent on the obligee's part to delay, and a waiver of forfeiture. Thus, if the price for chattels sold and delivered is wholly due at a certain time, and the seller accepts part-payment, and still allows the buyer to retain possession, this act so far changes the original status of the parties, that the buyer is presumed to have a right to acquire title by paying the residue of the purchase-money; which right will continue until there is a

<sup>1</sup> See Withers v. Reynolds, 2 B. & Ad. 882; Hyde v. Lathrop, 2 Abb. N. Y. App. 436; Bankart v. Bowers, L. R. 1 C. P. 484; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307.

<sup>2</sup> Wanamaker v. Yerkes, 70 Penn. St. 443. See Simpson v. Crippin, L. R. 8 Q. B. 14; Honek v. Muller, 7 Q. B. D. 92; Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor, 9 App. Cas. 434; Benj. bk. 4, pt. 1, showing the latest English rule as to part delivery. And cf. King Philip Mill v. Slater, 12 R. I. 82.

<sup>3</sup> Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor, 9 App. Cas. 434; § 289; Winchester v. Newton, 2 Allen, 492.

<sup>4</sup> Bradley v. King, 44 Ill. 339; 59

Md. 131; Florence Mining Co. v. Brown, 124 U. S. 385; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188; 121 U. S. 255; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Palmer v. Breen, 34 Minn. 39; Stephenson v. Cody, 117 Mass. 6; Rugg v. Moore, 110 Penn. St. 236. A positive refusal to pay and an absolute renunciation of the contract afford the most desirable ground here for the seller to refuse further delivery; but our American cases are often satisfied with less, on the ground that the contract is entire, or that the buyer's conduct makes it probable that he will not fulfil his agreement, or even because he is insolvent and cannot.

demand for the residue, followed by refusal.<sup>1</sup> But a buyer cannot sue for the non-delivery of a chattel under an entire contract, where he has only paid or offered to pay a part of the consideration; even though the part paid includes the full money consideration, and another chattel was agreed to be taken by way of balancing the price; the seller having waived none of his rights under the contract.<sup>2</sup>

All contracts of this kind deserve a reasonable construction. Time and amount may be essential terms of the contract, and if so, the buyer is not justly bound to accept to his own injury where the seller disregards his obligation by shipping partially from time to time and in partial amounts, regardless of what he had agreed to do. In such transactions, at all events, the better opinion is, not to treat each instalment delivery as a severable or divisible contract, with a continuing mutual obligation as to further instalments, unless absolute renunciation or refusal appears on the part of one of the contracting parties;<sup>3</sup> but to regard such essential terms as an indivisible condition precedent, upon the failure or non-performance of which the aggrieved party may repudiate the whole contract.<sup>4</sup>

§ 309. Property in Chattels sold may pass as Defeasible by Condition Subsequent. — Stipulations concerning price have sometimes the effect of passing property to the buyer, subject to a possible defeasance by way of condition subsequent; as in the case of a sale providing that, upon the purchaser's failure to pay over to the seller the first money received on their sub-sale, the chattels should be subject to the seller's order.<sup>5</sup> Other conditions subsequent are found. Thus,

<sup>1</sup> Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155.

<sup>2</sup> Sutton v. Campbell, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 595. See c. 13, post.

<sup>3</sup> See Mersey Steel & Iron Co. v. Naylor, and other English cases, supra, commented upon in 115 U. S. 188, 206, 211.

<sup>4</sup> Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188; approving Hoare v. Rennie, 5 H. & N. 19; King Philip Mills v.

Slater, 12 R. I. 82; Shinn v. Bodine, 60 Penn. St. 231; Bollman v. Burt, 61 Md. 415; Pope v. Porter, 102 N. Y. 366. But cf. Lucesco Oil Co. v. Brewer, 66 Penn. St. 351. There may, of course, be such waiver under of a breach of partial delivery as to preclude repudiation. Hutchings v. Munger, supra; 89 Penn. St. 231; 44 Md. 218.

<sup>5</sup> Chamberlain v. Dickey, 31 Wis. 68.

where one received sheep upon his undertaking to deliver a part of the wool annually, and pay for the sheep at the end of four years, and the parties further agreed that, if the annual amount of wool were not delivered, the whole price, as well as the wool, should become due, it was held — the sheep dying early in the term — that the title had passed to the purchaser, that the sheep were at his risk, and that the whole price was due.<sup>1</sup>

§ 310. Sales “on Trial” or “on Approval;” Bargain of “Sale or Return.” — Sales “on trial” or “on approval,” as they are termed, also afford instances of condition precedent; to which may be added as a conditional one the bargain of “sale or return.” It is obvious that one may take a chattel on the understanding that he is to try it before the purchase shall take full effect; or, again, upon a complete present bargain, with the reservation of a right on the buyer’s part to return it at his option within some period: and the main object of either provision is to give the buyer a chance to test the qualities of the thing, and find it satisfactory, before he shall be finally bound to the bargain. But the concession thus made by the seller is not coextensive in the two cases; for the one puts the test as a condition precedent to divesting the seller fully of his property, while the other seems rather to carry property to the buyer, defeasible on the condition subsequent of a test which proves unsatisfactory; though this application of a test must be, after all, a matter often within the buyer’s own breast, and a sort of ill-defined ingredient in determining his satisfaction or dissatisfaction.

The point towards which these decisions gravitate is doubtless that of mutual intention; but — using the terms above stated in no technical sense, since common-sense men will every day make bargains of either character, without designating them by any particular name — we find the distinction quite marked, as regards the immediate passing of property, between sales “on trial,” “on approval,” and the like, and the bargain of “sale or return.” There is a buyer’s option, to be sure ; but, as it has been fitly said, an option to purchase if the buyer likes is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if he should not like. In one case, the property will not pass until the option is determined; in the other, the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Smith v. Dallas, 35 Ind. 255. See Sheffer v. Montgomery, 65 Penn. St. also Worthy v. Cole, 69 N. C. 157; 329; Perkins v. Dacan, 13 Mich. 81.

§ 311. The Same Subject ; Sales "on Trial," etc., considered. — In sales "on trial," then, the buyer's option embraces the full period agreed upon, but no more ; and, where this period has not been expressly fixed in advance, a reasonable time is implied. The duty here rests, after delivery, upon the buyer who disapproves, of making his disapproval known to the seller, and acting upon it, in due season ; for, upon lapse of the time agreed upon, the property will vest in him, and the sale become absolute, unless he has taken the initiative by returning the chattels in token of his dissatisfaction.<sup>2</sup> Though the seller lives at a distance, the buyer is bound to seek him.<sup>3</sup> Exceptions to the rule requiring the buyer to notify of failure on trial within the reasonable or stated time, are sometimes, though rarely found, based upon a different agreement of the parties.<sup>4</sup>

If, on a fair trial, under a sale conditioned that the chattel may be returned on thus proving unsuitable and unsatisfac-

<sup>1</sup> Wells, J., in Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1 ; Story Sales, §§ 128, 247, 250.

<sup>2</sup> Humphries v. Carvalho, 16 East, 45 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1 ; Story Sales, § 128.

<sup>3</sup> Dewey v. Erie Borough, 14 Penn. St. 211. But, during the full period agreed upon for trial, the buyer, it seems, is at liberty to change his mind ; nor is his right of choice lost by telling the seller, in the interval, that the price does not suit him, provided he still retains possession of the chattel. Ellis v. Mortimer, 1 B. & P. N. R. 257 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1 ; Story Sales, §§ 128, 250. Though whether one could make his decision known, and then reverse it on the plea that a "reasonable time," as mutually understood, had not yet elapsed, might well be doubted.

<sup>4</sup> Gibson v. Vail, 53 Vt. 476, affords an instance. Here the seller had promised to come and ascertain the results himself ; and, what was greatly to the point, the attempted sale was, on his part, a fraudulent one. Cf. Kahn v. Klabunde, 50 Wis. 235, and cases therein cited. See, further, 54 Iowa, 36.

Whether he is debarred from keeping the goods and alleging breach of warranty, cf. Chapman v. Withers, 20 Q. B. D. 824 ; Hinchcliffe v. Barwick, 5 Ex. D. 177.

tory, the buyer finds it unsuitable and unsatisfactory to him, he may return the chattel peremptorily, in exercise of the option reserved to him, and without giving the seller any opportunity of remedying defects. It matters not that the chattel, after its return to the seller, worked well under his management, without alteration or repair.<sup>1</sup> Having once tested and returned the chattel with its refusal, he is not bound to test again.<sup>2</sup> And if, as often happens, the buyer has paid down the price, so as not to imperil the seller's interests too far, he may maintain a suit to recover it, under such circumstances, after demanding and being refused payment.<sup>3</sup> In arriving at a determination whether to keep the chattel or not, the buyer is bound to bring to it honesty of purpose, but not skill beyond that of ordinary persons in a like situation; and his judgment should be measured by his capacity to ascertain his own wishes. Little more can be made of the buyer's obligation under the usual sales "on trial."<sup>4</sup>

It is a question of fact, usually for a jury to determine, whether, in making an agreed trial, the buyer has used the thing properly, — whether, for instance, if the chattel was exposed to injury or diminution in the course of testing, the buyer, who declines finally to retain it, has been too careless, or experimented too frequently.<sup>5</sup> The position of the so-called buyer pending the result of trial, and before the lapse of the period embraced under the condition precedent, is, as to the property in his keeping, rather that of a bailee than a buyer, and certainly not, in legal right or responsibility, that of a full buyer.<sup>6</sup>

Upon the lapse of time allowed the buyer for trial, without a return of the article as unsatisfactory, the bargain becomes completed and binding, the property passes, and the buyer is at once liable for the price, if he has not paid or secured

<sup>1</sup> Aiken v. Hyde, 99 Mass. 183.

<sup>2</sup> Sugar Refinery v. Allis Co., 56 Fed. 786.

<sup>3</sup> Aiken v. Hyde, supra.

<sup>4</sup> Hartford Sorghum, &c. Co. v. Brush, 43 Vt. 528.

<sup>5</sup> Okell v. Smith, 1 Starkie, 107;

Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 170;

Lucy v. Moufiet, 5 H. & N. 229.

<sup>6</sup> See Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass.

198; Hartford Sorghum, &c. Co. v. Brush, 43 Vt. 528; Story Sales, § 400.

it already.<sup>1</sup> In this posture of the case, a buyer may be bound to pay the price, notwithstanding he has given a notice of defects, while retaining the chattel as though he meant to keep it;<sup>2</sup> he cannot retain the thing and defeat an action for the price by alleging that it does not suit his expressed purpose.<sup>3</sup> Nor can he return the thing as unsatisfactory after the proper time for trial has passed.<sup>4</sup> It follows, too, that the seller cannot, for non-payment of price, replevy the property as his own after the period of option has elapsed with the chattel still in the buyer's possession,—so far, at least, as the condition precedent arising out of such a sale is concerned, — but must sue as in a case of an absolute sale.<sup>5</sup>

§ 312. Bargains of "Sale or Return." — The bargain of "sale or return" has not always been understood in one and the same technical sense.<sup>6</sup> But the usual import of this expression is, that the chattel is taken by the buyer upon the understanding that it may be returned at his option, within a specified time, if not found satisfactory; though there might be a different contingency expressed, or perhaps none at all. The current of authorities regards this contract as carrying the property absolutely to the buyer, and permitting the seller to sue for goods sold and delivered, if they are not returned to him within the specified, or by implication reasonable, time.<sup>7</sup> But the price in such cases is usually adjusted in advance; and, in general, the title seems to be transferred completely to the buyer, subject to defeasance by condition subsequent.

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 128, 250; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1. But see, as to the transfer of title conditional upon payment, § 294 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> Aultman v. Theirer, 34 Iowa, 272.

<sup>3</sup> It might be suitable for some purpose, if not the agreed purpose. Hardee v. Carter, 94 Ga. 482.

<sup>4</sup> Fintel v. Cook, 88 Wis. 485.

<sup>5</sup> See Witherby v. Sleeper, 101 Mass. 138; Spickler v. Marsh, 36 Md. 222.

<sup>6</sup> See Meldrum v. Snow, 9 Pick. 441, a case of "sale or return," where an article sold was to be returned unless sold over by the buyer; Nevill, In re, L. R. 6 Ch. 397; Story Sales, § 249.

<sup>7</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Moss v. Sweet, 16 Q. B. 493, overruling Iley v. Frankenstein, 8 Scott N. R. 839; Ray v. Thompson, 12 Cush. 281; Perkins v. Douglas, 20 Me. 317; Crocker v. Gullifer, 44 Me. 491; Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198, per

The law under "sale or return" is, in many respects, like that of a sale upon trial, with the leading distinction already noticed; and as to the buyer's duty of making his dissatisfaction known by returning the article, and the general status of the parties after the period of option has passed, little more need be said. But the legal distinction between a bailment and sale must always be kept in view in considering this class of cases. Thus, supposing a contract by which a yoke of cattle is delivered to the hirer "to keep and use in a farmer-like manner for one year," and then to be returned, giving him a privilege to pay a price named and keep them, the rate of hire being agreed on at the time, — this is not a bargain of "sale or return," nor, indeed, more than a bailment, so long as the privilege lies dormant.<sup>1</sup> And even in a "sale or return" bargain, with delivery of the chattel defeasible by condition subsequent, there may be some condition precedent besides, which will prevent the vesting of title immediately in the buyer. For the rule of delivery, with title conditional upon paying or securing the price, has been applied to such cases.<sup>2</sup> And, moreover, the contract which gives the option to "return" in words, seems rather, in fact, a contract for a sale on trial and upon a condition precedent.<sup>3</sup>

The buyer's due exercise of his option without waiver is to be gathered from the facts. Thus, where a reaping-machine was sold on condition, that, if it failed to work as represented, the buyer might return it, and thereupon be entitled to receive back the purchase-money, and the buyer, finding it did not work as represented, offered to return the machine, which the seller would not receive, it was held that the agreement then made for a further test by the seller's agent, on the buyer's premises, did not necessarily conclude curiam; Spickler v. Marsh, 36 Md. 222; Jameson v. Gregory, 4 Met. (Ky.) 363; Schlesinger v. Stratton, 9 R. I. 578; Hall v. Ætna Man. Co., 30 Iowa, 215; Story Sales, § 313; Martin v. Adams, 104 Mass. 262; Foley v. Felrath, 98 Ala. 176; Childs v. O'Donnell, 84 Mich. 533.

<sup>1</sup> Chamberlain v. Smith, 44 Penn. St. 431. See also Porter v. Petten-gill, 12 N. H. 299.

<sup>2</sup> Crocker v. Gullifer, 44 Me. 491; supra, § 307.

<sup>3</sup> See Elphick v. Barnes, 5 C. P. D. 321; 47 Mich. 206.

the buyer's right; and, this test likewise failing, the buyer might drive the machine into his yard, leave it there, and notify the seller to take it away. Upon these facts, the buyer was allowed to sue for and recover the purchase-money.<sup>1</sup> Whether the privilege of returning within a reasonable or the stated time has been duly exercised so as to terminate the sale, is a question of fact to be decided in accordance with the mutual understanding.<sup>2</sup> And if the right to return be not exercised within the proper time it ceases to exist and the sale becomes absolute.<sup>3</sup>

If the buyer materially impair the condition of the chattel, by misuse or otherwise, while it is in his keeping, he cannot in general take advantage of the condition under which it was delivered so as to rescind the contract; for the seller ought to be put in statu quo.<sup>4</sup> But for an injury occasioned without the buyer's fault the exception has sometimes been waived; that is to say, in the bargain of "sale and return" of a horse.<sup>5</sup> Obviously there must be instances where chattels, and particularly live animals, taken under agreement of sale or return, will suffer damage or inflict injury, because of those very inherent faults against which the buyer was to be protected by securing this option to return; and under such circumstances the exercise of his right should not be denied him.<sup>6</sup>

§ 313. Other Instances of Buyer's Option; Sale to be Satisfactory, etc. — The buyer's option may be otherwise embodied in a sale contract. It is not uncommon to find, for instance,

<sup>1</sup> Hall v. Ætna Man. Co., 30 Iowa, 215. And see Padden v. Marsh, 34 Iowa, 522.

<sup>2</sup> See Gammon v. Abrams, 53 Wis. 323; Hinchliffe v. Barwick, 5 Ex. D. 177. And as to special terms, see also next section; 54 Iowa, 36.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; 84 Mich. 563; Jones v. Wright, 71 Ill. 61.

<sup>4</sup> Ray v. Thompson, 12 Cush. 281.

<sup>5</sup> Head v. Tattersall, L. R. 7 Ex. 7. And see Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198.

<sup>6</sup> Where a horse taken upon an option dies within the time limited for the return, and no fault rests upon the buyer, the loss should fall upon the seller. Elphick v. Barnes, 5 C. P. D. 321. Here the contract appears to have been somewhat peculiar, and by its terms the condition of full title was precedent; in other words the sale appeared essentially one "on trial," and in the nature of a bailment. See further, Nevill, In re, L. R. 6 Ch. 397, James and Mellish, Lords Justices. And see Meldrum v. Snow, 9 Pick. 441.

a bargain made so as to put the time of delivery at the buyer's option. In such a case the buyer is bound to make his election according to the contract, and give the seller reasonable notice, before he can put the latter in default; nor will he be allowed by artful and unfair means to gain an advantage over the seller in this respect.<sup>1</sup> But the seller, on his part, is bound to due diligence; and where, as usually happens, the buyer's option is confined within definite bounds, and the contract points at a final limit for the delivery to become absolute, a strict and punctual performance of the condition, in compliance with the buyer's notice, is imperative on the seller's part; it is his own misfortune if he has not taken such precautions as will enable him to render it.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes the option involves the action of a third person, under the special contract.<sup>3</sup> All options which are given by a seller should be carefully guarded in their terms, since local usage or the courtesy of trade cannot be set up to modify any clear engagement which he has chosen to enter into;<sup>4</sup> and if he means to hold himself in general readiness for a demand, a stipulation to deliver so many days after demand may properly be made.<sup>5</sup>

Where one expressly undertakes to make a thing to the satisfaction of a certain person, it is for that person to determine whether he is satisfied or not; and if he is not satisfied there is, in general, no sale.<sup>6</sup> However unreasonable or capricious the buyer, under such an option, his honest determination that he is not satisfied concludes the matter and the seller or manufacturer has no remedy.<sup>7</sup> Keeping and using the article as though satisfied, concludes finally such an option.<sup>8</sup> But a contract that one will take a thing "if satis-

<sup>1</sup> Colvin v. Weedman, 50 Ill. 311.

<sup>2</sup> Cleveland v. Sterrett, 70 Penn. St. 204; Snelling v. Hall, 107 Mass. 134.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 286; Hinchliffe v. Barwick, 5 Ex. D. 177.

<sup>4</sup> Snelling v. Hall, 107 Mass. 134.

<sup>5</sup> In this latter case, under the Louisiana code, the property is held to be at the seller's risk until delivery. Warren v. Kirk, 24 La. Ann. 150.

<sup>6</sup> Zaleski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136.

<sup>7</sup> Platt v. Broderick, 76 Mich. 580; McClure v. Briggs, 58 Vt. 82; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Penn. St. 291; 34 Am. Law Reg. 18.

<sup>8</sup> 36 Fed. 414; Palmer v. Banfield, 86 Wis. 441.

factory," there being additional expressions, should rather, if dubious at all, be construed in a sense that makes the contract mutually obligatory where the thing ought to be in fact satisfactory, as complying with the rational expectation of the parties.<sup>1</sup> And even where one orders goods, expressly agreeing only to pay if satisfied, it is held that dissatisfaction on his part should be real and not pretended, in order to relieve him of his promise.<sup>2</sup>

§ 314. Sales of Goods "to arrive," etc. — Among the sales known to commercial men is that of goods "to arrive." The English decisions under this head, though quite numerous, do not clearly settle when the language thus used shall amount to a condition precedent; nor, even then, what that condition shall be. Mr. Benjamin has given the decisions material to this issue quite at length.<sup>3</sup> It is to be remarked, that in such cases are often, though not always, blended two distinct stipulations: one, as to the cargo's being on the vessel in question; the other, as to the safe arrival of that vessel. Hence may be set up a double condition precedent as a prerequisite of full performance under the contract, — (1st) if the vessel arrive; and (2d) if, on arrival, the subject-matter prove to be on board. Mr. Benjamin, upon a full review of the English decisions, thus classifies them: First, Where the language is that goods are sold "on arrival per ship A." (or "ex ship A."), or "to arrive per ship A." (or "ex ship A."), — the two expressions meaning precisely the same thing, — it imports a double condition precedent: viz. that the ship named shall arrive, and that the goods sold shall be on board on her arrival.<sup>4</sup> Secondly, Where the language asserts the goods to be on board of the vessel named, as "1,170 bales now on passage, and expected to arrive per ship A.," or other terms of like import, there is a warranty that the goods are on board, and a single condition precedent, to wit, the

<sup>1</sup> Clark v. Rice, 46 Mich. 308; 149 Mass. 284.

<sup>2</sup> Daggett v. Johnson, 49 Vt. 345. See also Delamater v. Chappell, 48 Md. 253; Waters' Heater Co. v. Smith, 120 Mass. 444.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1. And see Story Sales, § 249.

<sup>4</sup> Boyd v. Siffkin, 2 Camp. 326; Lovatt v. Hamilton, 5 M. & W. 639; Johnson v. Macdonald, 9 M. & W. 600.

arrival of the vessel.<sup>1</sup> Thirdly, The condition precedent that the goods shall arrive by the vessel will not be fulfilled by the arrival of goods answering the description of those sold, but not consigned to the vendor, and with which he did not affect to deal; but, semble, the condition will be fulfilled if the goods which arrive are the same that the vendor intended to sell, in the expectation, which turns out to be unfounded, that they would be consigned to him.<sup>2</sup> Fourthly, Where the sale describes the cargo to be of a particular description, as “400 tons Aracan Necrensie rice,” and the cargo turns out on arrival to be rice of a different description, the condition precedent is not fulfilled, and neither party is bound by the bargain.<sup>3</sup>

The American cases incline to regard the stipulation for arrival in a sale of goods “to arrive,” whether it be by ocean or inland transportation, as conditional, and the contract as executory, with reference to a transfer of property, until the goods actually arrive. This is the declared doctrine in New York.<sup>4</sup> And Judge Scudder, in a New Jersey case, thus sums up the results: “The conclusion to which we must come, after a careful examination of these cases, is, that a sale ‘to arrive’ is conditional, and that if the article contracted for does not arrive, either from the vessel being lost or other cause by accident, and without any fraud or fault of the vendor, the contract is at an end. The contract is executory, and does not pass the property in the goods to arrive. It is merely an agreement for the sale and delivery of the articles named, at a future period when they shall arrive. It is in the nature of a condition, and not a warranty.”<sup>5</sup> But the law of the subject is less elaborately discussed in the United States than in England, and with less reference to shipping; nor, indeed, do the meagre and uncertain legal results appear to suf-

<sup>1</sup> Idle v. Thornton, 3 Camp. 274; Gorissen v. Perrin, 2 C. B. N. s. 681; Hall v. Rawson, 4 C. B. N. s. 85.

<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Myers, L. R. 5 Q. B. 429; s. c. 7 Q. B. 139.

<sup>3</sup> Vernede v. Weber, 1 H. & N.

311; Simond v. Braddon, 2 C. B. N. s. 324. And see Covas v. Bingham, 2 E. & B. 836.

<sup>4</sup> Benedict v. Field, 16 N. Y. 595.

<sup>5</sup> Neldon v. Smith, 7 Vroom, 148.

ficiently repay the efforts of writers to frame arbitrary rules for what after all must remain a matter of special interpretation in each individual transaction. It is not hard to perceive that the contract may be such, that upon its fair construction the arrival of the subject-matter shall be found the true condition precedent,—the actual means of transportation being of no vital importance as an element of mutual assent.<sup>1</sup> But still we may presume that no title passes, and no obligation arises on either side unless goods answering the description, arrive upon the vessel.<sup>2</sup>

This condition is also found in commercial sales of goods “to arrive,” that the seller shall give notice of the name of the ship on which the goods are expected, as soon as he finds it out; and such a condition, if part of the contract, must be strictly fulfilled, as a condition precedent to the seller’s right of enforcing the bargain;<sup>3</sup> though, by local usage, notice to the buyer’s broker, with whom the contract was made, may suffice for performance of the condition.<sup>4</sup>

§ 315. Miscellaneous Conditions Precedent; Rule of Construction in Doubtful Cases.—The question of condition precedent may arise upon the construction of other words used in a bargain; for the constant use among business men of concise, technical, and, to the uninitiated, obscure expressions, is a fruitful source of litigation. Thus, on the full meaning of the word “cargo” in a contract of sale,—whether it requires a single shipment of the whole cargo by a single vessel or not, as a condition precedent on the seller’s part,—the authorities are not in clear accord.<sup>5</sup> But

<sup>1</sup> While there is no warranty in such an expression, but words of condition and description only, further language may be used in contracts of this kind such as to import an express warranty of quality. 23 Hun, 242.

<sup>2</sup> Benedict v. Field, supra; Neldon v. Smith, supra; Boyd v. Siffkin, 2 Camp. 326; Story Sales, § 249; Heyworth v. Hutchinson, L. R. 2 Q. B.

447. And see 23 Hun, 241; Smith v. Pettee, 70 N. Y. 13; Rogers v. Woodruff, 23 Ohio St. 632.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Buck v. Spence, 4 Camp. 329; Graves v. Legg, 9 Ex. 709; s. c. 11 Ex. 642.

<sup>4</sup> Graves v. Legg, supra.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Ireland v. Livingston, L. R. 2 Q. B. 99, s. c. L. R. 5 Q. B. 516, s. c. L. R. 5 H. L. 395, with Kruger v. Blanck, L. R. 5 Ex. 179.

where the sale of a cargo is by bill of lading, the conditions which it imposes upon the seller must be strictly complied with before he can enforce the bargain.<sup>1</sup> And by the sale of "a cargo" to arrive in a certain vessel, the average capacity of the vessel when in good order affords a test of the amount to be delivered.<sup>2</sup>

This rule is laid down for guidance wherever the language of the parties to a sale puts insuperable difficulties in the way of a clear judicial construction: "When a principal gives an order to an agent in such uncertain terms as to be susceptible of two different meanings, and the agent bonâ fide adopts one of them and acts upon it, it is not competent to the principal to repudiate the act as unauthorized, because he meant the order to be read in the other sense, of which it is equally capable."<sup>3</sup> Upon this principle was decided a leading English case, in which the judges were found quite at variance as to the exact construction of the word "cargo."<sup>4</sup>

§ 316. Sale by Sample or Description; its implied Condition; Warranty distinguished.—With regard to a sale by sample, it is frequently laid down in the courts that there is an implied condition that the buyer shall have a fair opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample. This rule is enforced for the buyer's protection as a legal incident of such sales; nor is the buyer obliged to establish a usage to this effect in order to justify him in refusing to carry out the bargain, wherever the seller is so unreasonable as to deny him the opportunity for examination.<sup>5</sup>

So, where a thing is sold by a particular description, there is a condition precedent implied, according to the authorities, that the thing which the seller delivers or tenders shall answer the description. And so, generally, where the sub-

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Tamvaco v. Lucas, 1 E. & E. 581, 592.

<sup>2</sup> Barrowman v. Drayton, 2 Ex. Div. 15; Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons, 5 Gray, 589. Cf. 43 Fed. 279.

<sup>3</sup> Ireland v. Livingston, on appeal, L. R. 5 H. L. 395, Blackburn, J.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.

<sup>5</sup> See c. 6, post; Lorymer v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 1; Grimoldby v. Wells, L. R. 10 C. P. 391; Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321.

ject-matter of the sale is unascertained and the seller is to fulfil an order. The force of the term "condition precedent," in this connection, should be well estimated; for there is a constant tendency at this day, and especially in our American cases, to confuse "condition precedent" with "warranty," and use the latter term as broad enough for both. Of warranty we shall speak at length in the next chapter; and our present attention is confined to conditions or stipulations which constitute an integral part of a sale contract, on the one hand, as distinguished from statements or assertions, which are collateral or in the nature of a warranty, on the other. "Where the subject-matter of the sale is not in existence or not ascertained at the time of the contract," said the accomplished author of the Leading Cases, "an engagement that it shall, when existing or ascertained, possess certain qualities, is not a mere warranty, but a condition, the performance of which is a precedent to any obligation upon the vendee under the contract, because the existence of those qualities being part of the description of the thing sold becomes essential to its identity, and the vendee cannot be obliged to receive and pay for a thing different from that for which he contracted."<sup>1</sup>

The leading idea thus imparted is, that where one supplies by way of sale something different from that actually agreed upon, or ordered, there is not a breach of warranty, as the courts sometimes put it, which, in truth, applies to collateral undertakings; but, what is more, a non-fulfilment of the contract, a non-compliance with the terms of the bargain, or, it might be said, a non-supply of the thing ordered. To use Lord Abinger's illustration: "If a man offers to buy peas of another, and he sends him beans, he does not perform his contract; there is no warranty that he should sell him peas; the contract is to sell peas, and if he sells him anything else in their stead, it is a non-performance of it."<sup>2</sup> While, however, there are many judges who have treated such implied engagement on the seller's part as a warranty (contrary to what Lord Abinger here inculcates), there are others who shun the use of one term as well as of the other, for fear of misleading; and, again, it has been asserted that whether the buyer's action under a supply of goods not corresponding with the description shall be technically considered an action on a warranty, or an action for the non-performance of a condition, is quite immaterial.<sup>1</sup> For in America, where the doctrine of implied condition is less asserted than in England, there is usually a recognized right to return goods for either breach of warranty or breach of condition.<sup>2</sup> The want of precision in the use of terms has led to much apparent confusion in this respect; but that the buyer may refuse to perform his part of the bargain, unless the seller who undertakes to supply a chattel of a particular kind or description supplies accordingly,—in other words, that performance of the seller's stipulation is of the essence of the contract,—is a point well settled by the authorities. And the buyer's right, so universally conceded, to refuse performance—or, as it is sometimes said, to repudiate the contract—for the non-conformity of the article delivered to the description under which it was sold, is founded on the seller's engagement by such description that the article sold shall correspond with the description.<sup>3</sup> Nor is there any important difference in this respect between the contract of a dealer and that of a manufacturer to supply chattels of a certain description. The practical application of the doctrine will be studied in our next chapter; but here we add, that one reason why the seller's engagement is not always readily apprehended as a condition precedent in such cases is, that suits involving the principle are by no means brought invariably by the seller to enforce performance of the corresponding condition on the buyer's part, but quite fre-

<sup>1</sup> 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 27.

<sup>2</sup> Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 399.

<sup>1</sup> See Erle, C. J., in Bannerman v. White, 10 C. B. n. s. 844; Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. 97; Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262, per curiam.

<sup>2</sup> See § 579.

<sup>3</sup> Nichols v. Godts, 10 Ex. 191; Bannerman v. White, 10 C. B. n. s. 844; Azémar v. Casella, L. R. 2 C. P. 431; Josling v. Kingsford, 13 C. B.

n. s. 447; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 87; Borrekens v. Bevan, 3 Rawle, 23; Selser v. Roberts, 105 Penn. St. 242; Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 204; Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262; Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114; Carson v. Baillie, 19 Penn. St. 375; Dounce v. Dow, 60 N. Y. 411; post, § 344.

quently by a buyer who has performed everything incumbent upon him, and then, upon discovering the want of correspondence to the description, seeks to repudiate the transaction.

§ 317. The Same Subject. — There may be a sale by sample, in which the bulk sold shall actually correspond with the sample, and yet, if the sale be clearly of goods answering further a certain description, the condition is not fulfilled because the goods tendered fail to answer the description. Thus, in a sample sale of "foreign refined rape-oil," it was held that the tender of something else, though corresponding in fact with the sample, did not bind the purchaser to receive it.<sup>1</sup> And where hops were expressly sold as hops raised without the use of sulphur, — the evidence showing that the stipulation concerning the use of sulphur had been so strenuously insisted upon, that the ordering party would not have knowingly accepted sulphur-grown hops at all, — the buyer was permitted to repudiate the transaction, as soon as he found the hops were raised with the use of sulphur, though he had taken possession in ignorance of the fact, and notwithstanding the sale was by sample, and the bulk corresponded with the sample; for, as the court ruled, the seller had not fulfilled the condition to which he bound himself.<sup>2</sup> On the same principle, the bargain by an accepted sample, marked "Long-stapled Salem Cotton," of what was really "Western Madras Cotton" (an article not inferior alone, but requiring different machinery for its manufacture), has been recently declared not fulfilled by the tender of long-stapled Salem cotton corresponding to the accepted sample.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Nichols v. Godts, 10 Ex. 191.

<sup>2</sup> Bannerman v. White, 10 C. B. n. s. 844.

<sup>3</sup> Azémar v. Casella, L. R. 2 C. P. 431-677; 36 L. J. C. P. 124. And see Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321; Carson v. Baillie, 19 Penn. St. 375; Gardner v. Lane, 9 Allen, 492; 98 Mass. 492; Osgood v. Lewis, 2 Harr. & G. 495; Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; post, c. 6, as to sales by samples. And see Woods v. Miller, 55 Iowa, 168, where one ordered "Early Rose potatoes," and the seller sent a lot which were only three-fourths of that kind. Evidence of a custom among dealers to supply orders thus, was held incompetent in this case. So, too, in Johnston v. Raylton, 7 Q. B. D. 438, it was held that (in the absence of usage to the contrary) a manufacturer who sells his

And so, too, where articles ordered, as "Bristol Cabbage-seed," or a stated sort of "Turnip-seed," seed sent of another description is a breach of condition.<sup>1</sup>

On this same principle of a sale by description that involves a condition precedent, the bargain for a book or map according to a certain prospectus, is held not to be binding upon the subscriber where the thing when offered proves so materially and essentially different from that set forth in the prospectus, that it is not the specific thing which was agreed upon. For here the condition to supply, which rested upon the seller, has not been performed.<sup>2</sup> But as to inherent qualities of a thing sold which answers its full description, this is a matter of warranty, not of condition precedent.<sup>3</sup>

§ 318. Sales of Incorporeal Securities; Condition of Genuineness, etc., implied. — The same may be said of commercial securities of an incorporeal character, such as negotiable paper, bonds, and stocks, which are constantly made the subject of sale by description. Indeed, though the buyer had fixed upon a specific instrument, and said he would take it, he is still protected by the law; for, aside from that fraud which makes contracts voidable by the person imposed upon, the genuineness of the instrument is so far of the essence of the contract as properly to be deemed a condition precedent. One bargains not for the document itself, but for the money right which that document, if genuine, should evince. Here again there is a confusion of language in the courts as between condition and warranty. Yet the effect in principle is admitted to extend to repudiation in toto by the buyer, and the recovery of his purchase-money, if already paid, or a refusal to take and pay for it when the spurious thing is tendered for his acceptance. The condition to which the seller was bound in such a case is unfulfilled wherever the own goods, being no dealer, sells on the implied condition that the goods shall be of his own make. See further, Dounce v. Dow, 64 N. Y. 411; Jones v. George, 61 Tex. 345; Lewis v. Rountree, 78 N. C. 323.

<sup>1</sup> Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 198; 36 N. J. L. 262.

<sup>2</sup> Paton v. Duncan, 3 C. & P. 336.

<sup>3</sup> See next chapter.

thing is not the genuine thing bargained for, and the material consideration of the sale fails of effect; as where the thing was false and counterfeit; where, purporting to be the existing bond of a foreign government, it proved to belong to a class of obligations already repudiated; where, being negotiable paper, names signed or indorsed upon it prove to have been forged; and so on.<sup>1</sup> It is not for the identity of the paper alone, but for the bonâ fides of the obligation, as evinced upon its face, that the courts are so solicitous; and the general welfare of society requires the law to protect the buyer of property whose great intrinsic value or utter worthlessness may hang upon a single circumstance. Even though the thing be not entirely worthless, but has some value,—as where one good indorsement on a note proves genuine, though the other signatures were forged,—the rule of condition precedent still applies, and the contract of sale fails for lack of consideration.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Young v. Cole, 3 Bing. N. C. 724; Gompertz v. Bartlett, 2 E. & B. 849; Westropp v. Solomon, 8 C. B. 345; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; Aldrich v. Jackson, 5 R. I. 218; Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y. 307; Wood v. Sheldon, 42 N. J. L. 421; Donaldson v. Newman, 9 Mo. App. 235; Merriam v. Wolcott, 3 Allen, 258; Story Sales, § 367.

<sup>2</sup> Gurney v. Smith, 4 E. & B. 133. A sale of accounts imports that they are genuine; i. e., that there is an account against the person in question. Gilchrist v. Hilliard, 53 Vt. 592.

Hence the contract of sale fails if the subject-matter be a bill or promissory note, and all or any of those signatures upon which a buyer has the right to rely prove not to be genuine. Gurney v. Smith, 4 E. & B. 133; Aldrich v. Jackson, 5 R. I. 218; Dumont v. Williamson, 18 Ohio St. 515; Terry v. Bissell, 26 Conn. 23; Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y. 307; 120 N. Y. 303; Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30; Ward v. Haggard, 75 Ind. 381. Contra, Baxter v. Duren,

19 Me. 434, which is doubted in Hussey v. Sibley, 66 Me. 192. Even where one gets a note discounted at a bank without indorsing it, he is held to have warranted by implication that its signatures are genuine. Cabot Bank v. Morton, 4 Gray, 156. Or where one indorses without recourse. Dumont v. Williamson, 18 Ohio St. 515. It would appear that the sale of a note imports a warranty or condition precedent that each name upon which a buyer relies was signed by a person capable of binding himself by a valid contract. See Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Met. 193; Story Sales, § 367. But see Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 487. So rigid is the rule, that it has been enforced against a broker who sold a forged note for an undisclosed principal for less than its face, and then paid the money over. Merriam v. Wolcott, 3 Allen, 258; Thrall v. Newell, 19 Vt. 202; Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill, 278. If the seller was guilty of fraud, the buyer's right to repudiate the sale is

But if, as a matter of fact, the incorporeal chattel delivered is really what both parties intended it, even though the thing be not described with literal accuracy, the seller fulfils his condition precedent by delivering or tendering it.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, this condition precedent relates only to genuineness. That the party whose name is upon the note is solvent or the contrary, is no condition precedent;<sup>2</sup> but these and analogous questions remain for our consideration under the head of warranty.<sup>3</sup> In short, if the seller supplies what the buyer really undertook to buy, the contract of sale is fulfilled in the absence of fraud; and as to the quality or worth of the thing, that once more becomes a question of warranty.

§ 319. Sales of Specific Corporeal Chattels; Implied Condition of Genuineness, etc.—Here the authorities concerning implied conditions in sale contracts appear to rest. But the argument might be extended further. Not only sales of unspecified corporeal chattels, but those likewise of specific chattels; not sales by sample or by description alone, but sales with the subject-matter already clearly identified,—may involve certain implied conditions as a necessary sequence of the bargain. If a specific article is purchased, which the seller is to send home to the buyer, there is an implied condition of the contract that the identical thing shall be delivered. The genuineness of the thing throughout, its continuous specific identity, is an essential, when doubly sure. Bell v. Cafferty, 21 Ind. 411. And see Webb v. Odell, 49 N. Y. 583.

By the mere sale of a ticket, a seller, who is not the carrier, binds himself to a condition that the ticket is genuine and no more. Elston v. Fieldman, 57 Minn. 70.

<sup>1</sup> Mitchell v. Newhall, 15 M. & W. 308; Lambert v. Heath, 15 M. & W. 487.

<sup>2</sup> Day v. Kinney, 131 Mass. 37; Burgess v. Chapin, 5 R. I. 225. Cases which relate to receiving in payment are to be distinguished, semble, from those of sale, but not to the extent indicated in Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. 434.

<sup>3</sup> Whether a promissory note is tainted with usury or not affords no basis for a condition precedent. Littauer v. Goldman, 72 N. Y. 506. Nor whether the stock issued by a corporation in due form, which one sells, was fraudulently over-issued. People's Bank v. Kurtz, 99 Penn. St. 344; Lambert v. Heath, 15 M. & W. 487. Nor whether genuine municipal bonds were legally issued. Ruohs v. National Bank, 94 Tenn. 57.

anything intervenes between the striking of the bargain and the final transfer of possession.

Wherever a seller has had the opportunity to substitute something, if unfairly disposed, for the article actually contracted for, before the buyer could get possession, the inference is natural that the buyer shall have a right to inspect the property sufficiently to make sure that the identical thing is delivered, before accepting and paying for it; in other words, that the bargain did not contemplate the buyer's performance of his duties while blindfolded by the other. The genuineness of the thing, its identity as the specific article contracted for, must be fundamental in every contract for specific chattels; and the delivery of something else if the seller was bound to delivery, or the taking of something else if the buyer was bound to send and take away, is not a breach of collateral undertaking merely, but a non-fulfilment of the condition to which the party had bound himself. Every sale transaction, in short, whether relating to specific or unspecified chattels, is to be interpreted according to its express or implied terms; and the conditions, express or implied, are deducible accordingly.

---

CHAPTER VI.

WARRANTY.

§ 320. Warranty in Sales; Introductory Remarks.—What has been said in the preceding chapter of conditions under a contract of sale has prepared the way for a full discussion of the vexed subject of warranty. Stipulations attending sales in the nature of warranty are almost invariably found in practice to be such as impose an obligation upon the seller; far more so than conditions, which are of mutual force: and yet warranty, if properly understood, has no exclusive reference, logically speaking, to either party, but comprises all collateral undertakings on either side which form a part of the contract. A sale, however, differs from most other contracts in presenting generally little for the one party to undertake which is not an integral part of the agreement, but much for the other.

Our law of sales has run into a maze of confusion over this subject of warranty. Fraud, condition, representation and warranty, are subjects constantly mingled in legal discourse; rules overlap; and, as between implied conditions and implied warranties, the courts are at decided variance.

§ 321. Warranty defined; Warranty and Representation.—Warranty, as we apply the word to real estate, seems to have exclusive reference to title; and in the law of insurance the term has become one of peculiar significance, denoting clauses in the nature of conditions which must be strictly complied with.<sup>1</sup> What the word “warranty” shall mean in connection with the law of sales is not well agreed; but that for which we contend is substantially what Lord Abinger claimed, when distinguishing warranty from conditional statement: “A warranty is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and, though part of the contract, collateral to the express object of it.”<sup>2</sup> This definition has met the approval of English law writers of high repute.<sup>3</sup> And that warranty stipulations are not vital to the sale either of real or personal property can be demonstrated; the objective point in all such transactions being to accomplish a transfer of title from one party to the other, so that the buyer may get the genuine thing, and the seller his genuine quid pro quo; while to secure the buyer absolutely in his title against the world or not, to make his enjoyment more or less beneficial to him, to engage that the thing shall or shall not have certain qualities,—all these are alternatives incidental to the transaction, and not an inseparable part of it.

<sup>1</sup> Bouv. Dict. “Warranty.” 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 557, 558.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1; ib. bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; 2 Smith Lead.

<sup>2</sup> Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 399. Cas. 33, 34.

But “warranty” and “representation” are not convertible terms. We are not, perhaps, to take our distinction as the courts have put it with regard to insurance contracts; though even there it can be said that the sale of an indemnity against loss from a specified contingent cause requires of itself no such verbosity of so-called conditions as a policy now-a-days sets forth, but has rather for its express object the undertaking of a certain risk as to certain subject-matter for a certain compensation. We only observe, that while representations are statements which might be made prior or subsequent to the bargain, as well as contemporaneous with its formation, it is only with those representations which are so made as to become a part of the contract, those which lead parties to the aggregatio mentium, those which enter into the bargain, that the law of warranty in sales of personal property is concerned. A warranty need not, of course, be made at the conclusion of the bargain; but it should, at least, be more than a mere statement by way of inducement to the purchase: it should enter into the treaty, and constitute part of the basis of the sale. Thus, if I have a horse to sell, and if I expressly offer him as suitable for the saddle, and one who is known to be buying a horse for that special purpose takes him on the faith of my statement, the statement may prove to be a warranty: not so, however, if, offering the horse to one who is supposed to purchase for ordinary use, I state, as a mere matter of opinion and to help on the bargain, that the horse is good in the saddle.<sup>1</sup> The application of the distinction is sometimes extremely difficult, but the principle itself is perfectly sound; for the question at issue is, whether the representation appears to have been an understood ingredient of the contract. By warrant-

<sup>1</sup> See Hopkins v. Tanqueray, 15 C. B. 130; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114; Carter v. Black, 46 Mo. 384; McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203; Baker v. Henderson, 24 Wis. 509; Lawton v. Keil, 61 Barb. 558; Horton v. Green, 66 N. C. 596; Tewkesbury v. Bennett, 31 Iowa, 83;

Hillman v. Wilcox, 30 Me. 170; Larey v. Taliaferro, 57 Ga. 443; Smith v. Justice, 13 Wis. 600. See further, on this subject, Roscorla v. Thomas, 3 Q. B. 234; Summers v. Vaughan, 35 Ind. 323; Conger v. Chamberlain, 14 Wis. 258; 3 Bl. Com. 166; McCormicks v. Fuller, 56 Iowa, 43.

ing what he sells the seller gives assurance that should it prove otherwise he will indemnify the buyer.

§ 322. Caveat Emptor, the Rule in a Sale; Exceptions noted. — The leading principle of the law of warranty in sales at the common law is, that a purchaser buys at his own risk; caveat emptor. This maxim has been constantly cited, both in England and America.<sup>1</sup> But upon this rule, which applies more especially to the quality of the subject-matter, so as to throw all risks in this respect upon the purchaser of a specific chattel, have been ingrafted numerous exceptions, as we shall see when we come to treat of implied warranty. Wherever the seller has given an express warranty, or the law implies a warranty from the circumstances, or the buyer can bring fraud home to the party from whom he purchased, the doctrine of caveat emptor fails of application.<sup>2</sup>

§ 323. Warranty in an Executory or Executed Sale. — An executory contract may involve an express warranty of binding force, as well as may an executed contract which has been fully consummated.<sup>3</sup> But a guaranty that goods sold will pass inspection does not change an executed sale into a mere executory contract: it is, in effect, an express warranty of soundness to that extent.<sup>4</sup> A warranty has no present vitality and force in an executory contract of sale;<sup>5</sup> but whenever the sale is completed, the warranty, if part of the inducement to the purchase, becomes valid and obligatory.<sup>6</sup>

A warranty, to be effectual as such, should enter as an element into the negotiations and form part of the inducement to the purchase; and if such be the case, it matters not that it was given somewhat earlier, or even (as held) somewhat later, than the consummated sale, so long as it entered into the scope of actual consideration.<sup>7</sup> But representations made

<sup>1</sup> South Carolina seems never to have favored this maxim. § 345.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 349; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; infra, same c.

<sup>3</sup> Parks v. Morris, &c. Co., 54 N. Y. 586; Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573.

<sup>4</sup> Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 384.

<sup>5</sup> Osborn v. Gantz, 60 N. Y. 540.

<sup>6</sup> Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432.

<sup>7</sup> Way v. Marten, 140 Penn. St. 499; 63 Vt. 363; Crossman v. Johnson, 63 Vt. 333; Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432; Collette v. Weed, 68 Wis. 428. Or was given later to enlarge the original consideration. Porter v. Pool, 62 Ga. 238.

long before, or at any time after the completed sale, which fail altogether of connection with its consideration, and form no part of the inducement to purchase, cannot be construed into a warranty.<sup>1</sup>

§ 324. Warranty by One's Agent.—Warranties may be given by an agent, as well as by the principal party himself; and the common rule here applies, that acts which are within the general scope of the agency, though in violation of the principal's private instructions, shall be upheld on behalf of those dealing with the agent in good faith, and supposing him to have full powers. As an agent to sell is presumed to have authority to do whatever is usual in the course of the particular business, he may expressly warrant, if it be the custom of a seller to do so under like circumstances.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, the agent of a professional horse-dealer has been held to bind his principal by a warranty of soundness, even though privately instructed not to give it; the buyer having received no knowledge of such instructions before completing the purchase.<sup>3</sup> A clerk or salesman behind a counter is sometimes liberally regarded, from a view to what is customary.<sup>4</sup> And an agent, authorized to sell a manufactured article for the makers, has been allowed, under a similar state of facts, to bind them by express warranty of reasonable fitness.<sup>5</sup> It would appear to be quite in accordance with usage in certain localities that a commission merchant should be allowed to warrant the goods he sells as of good quality.<sup>6</sup> The implied warranty that the bulk shall correspond in sample sales, the implied warranty of quality where goods are supplied to order, and indeed every warranty which the law necessarily infers from

<sup>1</sup> Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 9 (here made a month earlier); Zimmerman v. Morrow, 28 Minn. 367; 33 Minn. 339; Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. 99; Morehouse v. Comstock, 42 Wis. 626. See further, § 332.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 350; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Brady v. Todd, 9 C. B. N. s. 592; Dingle v. Hare, 7 C. B. N. s. 145; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84; Williamson v. Connaday, 3

Ired. 349; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586; Howard v. Sheward, L. R. 2 C. P. 148; Story Agency, §§ 102, 443.

<sup>3</sup> Howard v. Sheward, L. R. 2 C. P. 148.

<sup>4</sup> See Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180.

<sup>5</sup> Boothby v. Scales, 27 Wis. 626.

<sup>6</sup> Randall v. Kehlor, 60 Me. 37.

the simple fact of such a sale, comes within the scope of an authority to make the sale, as an integral part of the sale itself.<sup>1</sup>

But the rule of agency itself suggests the true limitations of this doctrine. There may be general agents with large powers, and special agents with limited powers; and a party held out merely as one of the latter class cannot bind his principal by acts which go beyond the reasonable scope of his powers; nor can an express warranty, which shall bind the owner of chattels, be given by one whose authority to sell is manifestly, under all the circumstances, in the nature of a restricted or special agency, unless he can show that his authority covers the whole ground. Hence it is, as the English cases hold, that, while a party carrying on the general business of horse-dealing is presumed to have authority to expressly warrant the horses he may have on hand, the contrary is true of a private owner's servant, who is intrusted to sell and deliver a horse on a particular occasion: the former may expressly warrant; the latter cannot.<sup>2</sup> So, too, the authority of an auctioneer, or any mere broker, to give an express warranty, should be subjected to strict scrutiny before it can be recognized.<sup>3</sup> Again: though one's general agent with power to sell may give such express warranties as are the usual and proper incidents of the sale, besides holding the owner whom he represents to the fulfilment of every warranty which the law implies, he cannot, without more express authority, give an unusual warranty of like binding force; as, for instance, where an agent to sell flour, not content with

<sup>1</sup> Andrews v. Kneeland, 6 Cow. 354; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586; Boothby v. Scales, 27 Wis. 626; Story Agency, § 102; Palmer v. Hatch, 46 Mo. 585.

<sup>2</sup> Brady v. Todd, 9 C. B. N. s. 592, distinguishing Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 555. And see Perrine v. Cooley, 42 N. J. L. 623; Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446. Request or permission of the seller to warrant is all the same so far as the agent deals with third parties. Fay v.

Richmond, 43 Vt. 25. But the statement of one professing authority to warrant that he has it, is of course inconclusive. Wilcox v. Henderson, 64 Ala. 535.

<sup>3</sup> Bartholomew v. Warner, 32 Conn. 98; Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 375; Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45; Blood v. French, 9 Gray, 197; Dodd v. Farlow, 11 Allen, 426; The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. 644; c. 18, post, as to auction sales.

warranting its present quality, undertakes, on behalf of his principal, to go further, and warrant its continuing good quality for a given period.<sup>1</sup> Any buyer, who takes a warranty transcending the reasonable scope of the selling agent's authority, takes it at the risk of being able to prove that the agent had his principal's authority to that extent; and, if he cannot show such authority in point of fact, the law will not infer it for him. "It is unnecessary to add," says Erle, C. J., in Brady v. Todd, "that, if the seller should repudiate the warranty made by his agent, it follows that the sale would be void;"<sup>2</sup> in which case the transgressing agent and credulous buyer must, of course, adjust the losses of the bargain as their own personal affair.

§ 325. The Same Subject; Agent as Arbitrator. — The position assumed by the selling agent, as to the quality of goods which he contracts to supply, is sometimes that of an arbitrator, with rights and duties to be adjusted accordingly. Thus, where a selling broker had made a written contract of sale on his principal's account of Smyrna raisins to arrive in London, of "fair average quality in opinion of selling broker," and then rejected them on their arrival as not being of "fair average quality," it was decided that he was not responsible to his principal for the exercise of reasonable care and skill, but that, notwithstanding any possible error of judgment on his part, his act in rejecting the goods was merely that of a quasi arbitrator.<sup>3</sup>

§ 326. Effect of Custom upon the Law of Warranty. — Custom may be shown, in certain cases, to have affixed a peculiar meaning to certain words and expressions used in the contract of sale. But to reconcile the decisions on the point of local custom or usage is not easy. The courts are not disposed to create an express warranty upon any such sugges-

<sup>1</sup> Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586; Smith v. Tracy, 36 N. Y. 79. See, as to joint-owners, Holmes v. Wood, 32 Ind. 201. A warranty against seizure is unusual, and an agent is not presumably authorized to give it. Palmer v. Hatch, 46 Mo. 586.

<sup>2</sup> Brady v. Todd, 9 C. B. n. s. 592; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Story Sales, § 350.

<sup>3</sup> Pappa v. Rose, L. R. 7 C. P. 32; s. c. L. R. 7 C. P. 525.

tion; and the custom or usage should at least be certain, reasonable, and sufficiently old, to justify the presumption that it was so generally known at the time of the sale transaction as most probably to have entered into the calculation of both parties.<sup>1</sup> Thus, the statement of so much as the "invoice weight" in a bill of sale is not, on the allegation of custom or usage, to be taken as a warranty that the actual weight is the same as the invoice weight.<sup>2</sup> Nor is a custom not to warrant against latent defects to be favored in derogation of the common law.<sup>3</sup> Nor conversely a custom to establish a warranty of quality as against language or circumstances which import nothing of the kind.<sup>4</sup> Nor is evidence of a custom or usage of implied warranty against false packing admissible where the parties had no knowledge of such a custom.<sup>5</sup> But custom may define the contract in a certain point, where it gives precision, and does not contradict.<sup>6</sup> Nor is there any rule of law which prevents custom from being established by a single witness.<sup>7</sup>

The true doctrine appears to be this: that a warranty may be inferred from a clear custom or usage, reasonable in itself, and likely to have been contemplated in the particular transaction; but that custom or usage cannot be set up to defeat the plain purpose and scope of the transaction, nor to ingraft upon the contract an undertaking unreasonable of itself, or contrary to the policy of the law.<sup>8</sup> It may be added, that any warranty expressed in technical terms is, in the absence of distinct proof of a contrary mutual intent, to be construed in the technical sense.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Leggat v. Sands' Ale, &c. Co., 60 Ill. 158; Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co., 2 Allen, 58; Story Sales, § 358; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 383; Baker v. Squier, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 465.

<sup>2</sup> Rice v. Codman, 1 Allen, 377.

<sup>3</sup> Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co., 2 Allen, 58; Dickinson v. Gay, 7 Allen, 34.

<sup>4</sup> Wetherill v. Neilson, 20 Penn. St. 448; Dodd v. Farlow, 11 Allen, 426.

<sup>5</sup> Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 383.

<sup>6</sup> Robinson v. United States, 13 Wall. 363; Shepard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377.

<sup>7</sup> Ib. Usage of trade is not sufficient to authorize a merchandise broker to warrant the quality of what he sells. Dodd v. Farlow, 11 Allen, 426.

<sup>8</sup> Story Sales, § 358; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Jones v. Bowden, 4 Taunt. 847; Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353; Leggat v. Sands' Ale, &c. Co., 60 Ill. 158.

<sup>9</sup> Story Sales, § 361. As to what

§ 327. Waiver of Warranty; when inferred.—A waiver of warranty, or rather of the right to avail one's self of its breach, may be established by suitable evidence. Thus, where the buyer of warranted goods unreasonably fails to inform the party from whom he purchased, of the breach of warranty, in season to leave to the latter his due rights against others for the alleged defect, the law will infer a waiver on the buyer's part.<sup>1</sup> Other circumstances, such as the buyer's acceptance of the chattels without complaint, and upon due examination, followed by a lapse of time ample for finding out the defect, may, as well as an express waiver on his part, operate as a bar to proceedings otherwise available under the warranty.<sup>2</sup> So if a buyer orders separate lots, and finds that some do not correspond with the order, he must be prompt and decided in his course; for if he undertakes to keep all the lots while engaged in a controversy with the seller, and to pay for none until he has been supplied with all according to the agreement, he may find himself liable to pay for the whole, as upon so many separate contracts.<sup>3</sup>

But acceptance of the thing with or without inspection is not necessarily a waiver; especially as to matters latent and not discoverable at once.<sup>4</sup>

§ 328. Express and Implied Warranty to be considered.—The leading principles of the law of warranty in sales will become more apparent upon a division of the subject for treatment under these two heads: (1.) Express warranty; (2.) Implied warranty. An express and an implied warranty may exist under the same contract, if not relative to the same obligation; as where there is an express warranty of quality and an implied warranty of title.<sup>5</sup> But where the shall govern if local usages differ, see Star Glass Co. v. Morey, 108 Mass. 570.

<sup>1</sup> Hall v. McEwen, 19 Mich. 95; Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250; 63 Ga. 160.

<sup>2</sup> See buyer's remedies, infra, c. 15; Morehouse v. Comstock, 42 Wis. 626.

<sup>3</sup> Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250. See also Dean v. Nichols Co., Iowa (1895).

<sup>4</sup> Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; Ancrum v. Wehmann, 15 S. C. 118; Daniells v. Aldrich, 42 Mich. 58.

<sup>5</sup> Wells v. Spears, 1 McCord, 421.

warranty of quality is expressed (especially if in writing), an implied warranty as to quality is naturally excluded.<sup>1</sup>

Express warranty arises where one specially undertakes to make sure to the other that the thing sold is as represented; but an implied warranty is one which the law deduces as an inevitable consequence of the contract, notwithstanding there had been no special undertaking in the matter.

§ 329. As to express Warranty; what constitutes it.—

(1.) As to express warranty. What has already been said of warranty in general is quite pertinent. Thus, to determine whether an express representation shall have the force of a warranty, we ask whether the representation was an element of the bargain,—whether the parties designedly used it by way of building up, so to speak, their mutual transaction. This is an issue of fact, to be decided according to the evidence presented; and, doubtless, that which in one case amounted to no warranty at all, will, in another, become necessarily a warranty, because of the circumstances. As, for instance, in the sale of a horse, a representation made by the seller that the animal is only so many years old; to which undertaking the seller of a horse clearly does not mean to bind himself in ordinary cases, but which becomes sometimes of vital importance.<sup>2</sup> The English authorities furnish this as a decisive test of warranty for most instances: whether the seller assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the seller has no special knowledge, and on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion, and to exercise his judgment before closing the bargain; for in the former case there is a warranty, but in the latter none.<sup>3</sup>

But when we come to examine the decisions, we find an absence of universal tests; much that is worthless set forth by way of dicta; and the constant disposition manifested on the part of judge and jury, withal, to do what is substantially right by the bargaining parties, consistently with the particular circumstances of the case. And where the seller's conduct, by way of coaxing on a trade, is open to the suspicion of wilful misrepresentation, all the more sedulously will the court maintain the buyer's cause, by turning statements of doubtful import into an express warranty.

<sup>1</sup> De Witt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306, 313, and cases cited; Mullain v. Thomas, 43 Conn. 252; Jackson v. Langston, 61 Ga. 392; 35 Mich. 104; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 175.

<sup>2</sup> Burge v. Stroberg, 42 Ga. 88.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Buller, J., in Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 157.

There is much apparent confusion in the cases. Thus, the seller's mere praise and commendation of what he sells is held to be no warranty; and, indeed, the fact that he simply answers the buyer's question, instead of volunteering the statement, seems not without its legitimate bearing in his own favor.<sup>1</sup> Where, in a verbal bargain for a certain amount of sound corn to be delivered, the seller stated that he had just purchased the corn from another person as sound corn, and would sell it as such, it was held that this was merely a representation, and not a warranty.<sup>2</sup> So, too, where the buyer was present, with full opportunity to see how the seller packed the goods, and the seller assured him that they were not injured by the packing; the more so in this case, that a bill of sale which was made out made no mention of any such warranty.<sup>3</sup> A statement by the seller, that the chattel he sells is "all right," or that it is "good," is rather too vague to serve as an express warranty of soundness; but its bearing in this direction may depend upon circumstances.<sup>4</sup> The seller's statement of value may be presumed no warranty.<sup>5</sup> Nor his mere display of testimonials concerning the thing.<sup>6</sup> So a statement of efficiency, as applied to all chattels of the same general description with the article sold, and not made with special reference to this particular

<sup>1</sup> Tewkesbury v. Bennett, 31 Iowa, 83. The representation of one who sells a machine, that it is "very good and will do nice work," is held a mere recommendation and no warranty. Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473. And see Wilcox v. Henderson, 64 Ala. 535.

<sup>2</sup> Lawton v. Keil, 61 Barb. 55.

<sup>3</sup> Baker v. Henderson, 24 Wis. 509.

<sup>4</sup> Tuttle v. Brown, 4 Gray, 457; Smith v. Justice, 13 Wis. 600; Farrow v. Andrews, 59 Ala. 96; Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. 97; Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473; Wilcox v. Henderson, 64 Ala. 535; 53 Iowa, 399; 42 Mich. 58; Ryan v. Ulmer, 108 Penn. St. 332; 137 Penn. St. 310.

<sup>5</sup> Van Vechten v. Smith, 59 Iowa, 173.

<sup>6</sup> Richey v. Daemicke, 86 Mich. 647.

article, will not readily be construed as a warranty of the article's quality; as where the vendor of a machine affirms in general terms the fitness of all machines sold under that patent.<sup>1</sup> It is sometimes said, that no express warranty arises from "a mere unfounded naked affirmation" of soundness in a sale, though for deceitful representation there would be a remedy.<sup>2</sup> And in numerous cases the favorite distinction made is between a statement of fact and an expression of judgment or opinion; the former being laid off as a warranty, and the latter as a mere representation, — a rule, however, quite capricious in its workings.<sup>3</sup> The finding of a jury which is so much relied upon in such cases adds to the confusion prevalent.

§ 330. The Same Subject; Warranty under Limitations. — Even if we are to construe a certain statement into a warranty, that statement may be found so expressly limited as to amount at best only to a conditional or qualified warranty in favor of the buyer. Thus, if I offer a horse for sale, and, upon being asked to warrant the animal free from lameness, do so, at the same time qualifying the statement by showing a bruise, and directing that the part be treated with a certain liniment in order that it may be cured, the warranty may be deemed conditional upon such treatment.<sup>4</sup> So an absolute warranty may prove to be modified by general rules which the seller promulgates as applied to all sales of this description, and which are duly brought to the buyer's knowledge before the bargain is struck.<sup>5</sup> A seller who expressly warrants for a limited time alone is liable only for faults discovered and pointed out by the buyer within the stated period. All restrictions and limitations, in short, to which any express warranty is clearly subjected, must be allowed to operate.<sup>6</sup> But wherever the seller's statement was intentionally

<sup>1</sup> Chalmers v. Harding, 17 L. T. N. S. 571.

<sup>2</sup> Weimer v. Clement, 37 Penn. St. 147.

<sup>3</sup> See Horton v. Green, 66 N. C. 596; Reed v. Hastings, 61 Ill. 266; Story Sales, § 358. A statement made that tobacco is sound "and will certainly keep" may amount to a warranty. Herron v. Dibrell, 87 Va. 289.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Borst, 63 Barb. 57.

<sup>5</sup> Bywater v. Richardson, 1 Ad. & E. 508.

<sup>6</sup> Story Sales, § 363; Bywater v.

a component in the basis of the sale, where it was put forth (as appears likely upon a reasonable interpretation of the whole contract) as something for the buyer to rely upon by way of warranty, and the buyer has relied upon it accordingly, and entered into the sale upon the faith of it, such statement will be construed as an express warranty.<sup>1</sup>

§ 331. No Special Form of Words for Express Warranty.—No special form of words is necessary to constitute an express warranty. The word “warrant,” though customarily employed, need not, in fact, be used at all. Thus, certain representations concerning a sinking fund, which had been made by the municipal authorities in a sale of city bonds, were held to constitute a warranty that the bonds would be secured by a fund adequate for their final redemption.<sup>2</sup> “An affirmation at the time of a sale,” said Judge Buller in 1789, affirming a statement made by Lord Holt about two centuries ago, “is a warranty, provided it appear in evidence to have been so intended;” by intention meaning, of course, a mutual intention of the parties.<sup>3</sup> For the construction of an express warranty is upon common sense and reasonable interpretation, the question of intention going usually to a jury upon the facts;<sup>4</sup> though, where the question is raised upon a written contract solely, the interpretation and effect of that contract is the province of a court, rather than a jury.<sup>5</sup> The statement made by one party must be taken in its rational and appropriate sense; and if the other party, relying upon Richardson, 1 Ad. & E. 508; Chapman v. Gwyther, L. R. 1 Q. B. 463. Time when the warranty shall take effect may bring a contract within the operation of the Statute of Frauds; as in the case of young fruit-trees warranted to produce fruit. Gregory v. Underhill, 6 Lea, 207. And see post, c. 11.

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; supra, § 329; Story Sales, §§ 352, 353; Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114; Carter v. Black, 46 Mo. 384; Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573; Callanan v. Brown, 31 Iowa, 333; Reed v.

Hastings, 61 Ill. 266; Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 198.

<sup>2</sup> Callanan v. Brown, 31 Iowa, 333.

<sup>3</sup> Buller, J., in Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 57, citing Cross v. Gardner, 3 Mod. 261.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Stucley v. Bailey, 1 H. & C. 405; Gammar v. Borgain, 27 Iowa, 369; Congar v. Chamberlain, 14 Wis. 258; Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432; Morrill v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 111; Story Sales, § 357.

<sup>5</sup> Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen, 242

such an understanding of language in its full import, as to some material fact, was induced to enter into the bargain, the general law of contracts forbids the former to slip back and leave the latter to suffer; for the intention to be gathered is not so much the actual intention of either, as the reasonable intention of both.<sup>1</sup>

In short, while some cases incline to protect a seller who did not intend to state by way of a warranty, the better authority favors the rule that the buyer's reliance upon a seller's positive affirmation of a material fact, as a fact fit to be relied upon, constitutes in law an express warranty; that if the words used import a warranty this is enough.<sup>2</sup>

§ 332. Time of giving Warranty; Prospective Warranty, etc. — The time at which the statement was made has some influence in determining whether or not it amounted to an express warranty. Thus, representations made by a seller one month before the sale was consummated have been held too remote to constitute a warranty;<sup>3</sup> and, in general, a warranty, to be binding, should be contemporaneous with the sale. But such a deduction must be drawn from the evidence; and where the proof shows that the parties intended to have the antecedent statement incorporated with the bargain, it will have this effect; as in the case of an offer to warrant the chattel made at the commencement of the negotiation, upon the faith of which the sale was concluded some days later.<sup>4</sup> Of an express warranty made after the conclusion of the bargain, Blackstone says: "The warranty must be upon the sale; for if it be made after and not at the time of the sale it is a void warranty; for it is then made without any consideration; neither does the buyer then take the goods upon the credit of the vendor."<sup>5</sup> But this must be understood to mean state-

<sup>1</sup> See Stroud v. Pierce, 6 Allen, 413; Smith v. Justice, 13 Wis. 600.

<sup>2</sup> Cases supra; Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 9; Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 198; Kenner v. Harding, 85 Ill. 268.

<sup>3</sup> Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 9;

Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. 97; Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631.

<sup>4</sup> Wilmot v. Hurd, 11 Wend. 584; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Story Sales, § 356. And see Driesbach v. Lewisburg Bridge Co., 81* Penn. St. 177.

<sup>5</sup> 3 Bl. Com. 166.

ments made after the bargain which seek the protection of the original consideration; for any warranty made after the original sale, upon a consideration distinct from the sale itself, is valid, like any substituted agreement of parties; as where a seller, in default upon his condition, induces the buyer to waive a breach and accept performance in consideration of his giving an express warranty upon some point.<sup>1</sup> A statement made after the sale may afford proof of a warranty given at the time of the sale.<sup>2</sup>

There seems to be no good reason for holding, as Blackstone appears to have done, that a warranty can have no prospective operation; and his illustration — that one may warrant “that a horse is sound at the buying of him, not that he will be sound two years hence” — is certainly an ill-founded statement, though showing, perhaps, only his misapprehension of the rule under which he had instanced it.<sup>3</sup> Lord Mansfield has said, “There is no doubt but you may warrant a future event;”<sup>4</sup> and it has been expressly held that the seller’s warranty, reaching the quality of the subject-matter sold some time hence, is as good as a warranty of present quality.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, when it comes to an express and clear contract upon consideration, the permitted range of warranty must be very great.<sup>6</sup>

§ 333. As to Buyer’s Opportunity for ascertaining Defects, etc. — It may be gathered from what has been said already, that, in controversies over express warranty, a determining circumstance in favor of the buyer is, that a serious defect covered by the seller’s statement was one which was peculiarly within the seller’s own knowledge, and not open to the buyer’s inspection; for here the seller cannot easily escape the dilemma of intended fraud by concealing his knowledge of the defect, on the one hand, and intended warranty by honestly affirming

<sup>1</sup> Congar v. Chamberlain, 14 Wis. 258. And see Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432; Roscorla v. Thomas, 3 Q. B. 234; McCormicks v. Fuller, 56 Iowa, 43; Summers v. Vaughan, 35 Ind. 323.

<sup>2</sup> Tuttle v. Brown, 4 Gray, 457.

<sup>3</sup> 3 Bl. Com. 166.

<sup>4</sup> Doug. 735; Christian’s n. to 3 Bl. Com. 166.

<sup>5</sup> Congar v. Chamberlain, 14 Wis. 258. See also § 323; Osborn v. Nicholson, 13 Wall. 654.

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., 62 Ga. 238.

the thing good in spite of the defect, on the other. But caveat emptor is still the cardinal rule. While a seller is perfectly free to warrant the subject of sale expressly against defects which the buyer has had ample opportunity of examining for himself, he is not presumed to go so far; and hence against defects which were apparent on simple inspection, and of whose extent the buyer could readily have judged before making the purchase, the seller's simple statements are usually no warranty in the absence of fraud on his part.<sup>1</sup> That the buyer actually relied upon his own inspection or that of his own friend under the circumstances, or engaged to do so, is still more decisive against the supposition of a warranty.<sup>2</sup> These are all rules of convenience for determining the mutual intention of the parties in doubtful cases. That the seller may by express warranty bind himself even in respect to open defects, so as to protect the buyer against all the evil consequences thence possibly ensuing, there can be no question; and, as we shall presently see, diseased and unsound animals are frequently sold in this manner. A purchaser may examine for himself, and exercise his own judgment, and at the same time take an express warranty for his better assurance.<sup>3</sup> And even though an examination would have revealed undiscovered defects to the buyer, yet the sale may have been with the intention that the buyer should not examine for himself.<sup>4</sup> This is illustrated by a Vermont case, where hay was sold for keeping oxen during the spring and summer while working on the railroad; and the seller said the hay was good hay, cut early, and cut around the barn, and got in in good order. Here it was held — the hay appearing afterwards to be full of brakes, and not cut around the barn — that the seller's statement amounted to a warranty.<sup>5</sup> A fact also alluded to was, that there had been no examination intended at the time

<sup>1</sup> Gaylord Man. Co. v. Allen, 53 N. Y. 515; Hill v. North, 34 Vt. 604. And see, as to condition precedent where a thing is ordered, supra, § 316.

<sup>2</sup> See Poland v. Brownell, 131 Mass. 138; Fox v. Emerson, 27 Hun, 355.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Hale, 158 Mass. 178.

<sup>4</sup> Infra, § 341; Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631; Story Sales, §§ 355, 356; Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 83; Fletcher v. Young, 69 Ga. 591.

<sup>5</sup> Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114.

of the purchase, — a circumstance still more weighty in the buyer's favor, should it appear that the seller tried to throw him off his guard, and induce him to forego inspection.<sup>1</sup> Here was an express warranty against obvious defects. In general, however, obvious defects are not presumed to be covered by a warranty; no fraud being imputed to the seller;<sup>2</sup> but where the seller defrauds, his warranty covers them.<sup>3</sup>

§ 334. Express Warranty as to Latent Defects not presumed. — For latent defects unknown to the seller, in a specific thing sold, it is held that there should be clear evidence of an express warranty on his part, in order to render him liable.<sup>4</sup> But no seller can excuse himself by setting up that defects were latent when they were obvious.<sup>5</sup>

§ 335. Express Warranty in Writing; Question of Intent. — An express warranty is often given in writing; and it may be worth considering whether that which one puts deliberately upon paper regarding the subject of sale may not be more readily presumed an intentional warranty than the mere oral statements of a negotiation which are casually thrown out, and whose literal expression and full import must so often be left to conjecture. The English cases appear disposed to leave the question of intention pretty much to a jury, even where the bargain relied upon is in writing; and this is perhaps the true rule, where there are attendant circumstances to be considered, and not merely the construction of the instrument itself.<sup>6</sup> But where the whole question of intent turns upon the interpretation of a certain bill of sale, a continuous correspondence, or other writings, or the purport of words used simply and plainly, is to establish but one meaning, the court may take the case into its own hands, and decide upon inspection of the papers; to which effect are a number

<sup>1</sup> Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631.

<sup>2</sup> See Vandewalker v. Osmer, 65 Barb. 556.

<sup>3</sup> Kenner v. Harding, 85 Ill. 264.

<sup>4</sup> Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314;
Kingsbury v. Taylor, 29 Me. 508;
Hadley v. Clinton, &c. Co., 13 Ohio

St. 502; Frazier v. Harvey, 34 Conn. 469; Lord v. Grow, 39 Penn. St. 88. And see, as to implied warranty, infra.

<sup>5</sup> Drew v. Ellison, 60 Vt. 401.

<sup>6</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1,
§ 1; Stucley v. Bailey, 1 H. & C. 405.

of American decisions.<sup>1</sup> It should be borne in mind that any statement importing warranty, though a contract of itself, and capable of separate construction, is yet but the outgrowth of a more extensive contract, — namely, that of bargain and sale; and hence that there may be surrounding circumstances attending the writing and delivery of the statement to the buyer which go to show that an express warranty was in fact contemplated by the parties, or the reverse. Such evidence should be sifted and weighed; and, as it would seem, its general preponderance may well be left to the determination of a jury;<sup>2</sup> as would generally be the rule where it is doubtful what language the parties used.

§ 336. The Same Subject; Evidence Admissible. — Parol evidence is in general inadmissible, wherever the contract of sale is expressed in writing, to prove a warranty not stated therein, or to extend a warranty which is expressed. For though there were oral conversations over the terms of the intended sale, yet, the contract being in the end reduced to writing, the whole transaction naturally merges in that writing. Thus, where a ship, the subject of sale, had been verbally represented by the seller to be “copper-fastened,” but the bill of sale of the ship contained no allegation of the kind, it was held that the oral representation constituted no warranty.<sup>3</sup> And where a bill of sale or other writing professes to give the substance of the seller’s express undertakings, nothing is to be added thereto, by evidence or implication, to enlarge his liability; or, as it is said, the writing containing some express warranties, oral proof of others is inadmissible.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Wason v. Rowe, 16 Vt. 525; Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Sparks v. Messick, 65 N. C. 440; Stroud v. Pierce, 6 Allen, 413; Randall v. Thornton, 43 Me. 226; Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen, 242; Parks v. Morris, &c. Co., 54 N. Y. 586; Ranger v. Hearne, 37 Tex. 30; Leggat v. Sands’ Ale, &c. Co., 60 Ill. 158; Daniells v. Aldrich, 42 Mich. 58.

<sup>2</sup> Stucley v. Bailey, 1 H. & C. 405; Hahn v. Doolittle, 18 Wis. 196; Crenshaw v. Slye, 52 Md. 140.

<sup>3</sup> Kain v. Old, 2 B. & C. 672; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1. And see Pender v. Fobes, 1 Dev. & Bat. 250; Lamb v. Crafts, 12 Met. 353.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.; Dickson v. Zizinia, 10 C. B. 602; Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Ranger v. Hearne, 37 Tex. 30; Sparks v. Messick, 65 N. C. 440; Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co., 2 Allen, 52; Mullain v. Thomas, 43 Conn. 252; Tower v. Zell, 149 Penn. St. 458; 99 Mich. 269.

So, too, proof of a conditional warranty will not support the allegation of an absolute warranty.<sup>1</sup> But the statement of express warranties, whether verbal or written, does not exclude by inference the seller's liability under what the law deems an implied warranty of sale.<sup>2</sup>

Nor, again, does the reason of the rule which excludes parol evidence extend to writings which are not used or intended by the parties to set forth the terms, conditions, or warranties of the sale; and from this point are seen various exceptions. Thus, a bill of sale, which is executed merely in part performance, may be supplemented by evidence of the full agreement of sale.<sup>3</sup> An ordinary bill of parcels, signed by the seller, has in numerous instances been regarded as an insufficient memorandum of the whole contract of sale to debar the buyer from proving an express warranty by parol evidence; whence comes it that express warranties of quality, of correspondence of goods with the sample, and the like, have been in such instances specially proved.<sup>4</sup> So, too, writings in the nature of a receipt do not shut out oral proof of an express warranty, and for the same reason, that they are not designed as a reduction of the mutual contract to writing.<sup>5</sup> But while an informal document may be thus verbally explained so as to show an express warranty, or, indeed, a totally different transaction from that manifested on its face, a paper purporting to be a receipt, or mere bill of parcels, which really means to set out the whole contract, cannot be enlarged by oral proof of an express warranty.<sup>6</sup>

§ 337. General Proof of Express Warranty; Uncertain Expressions, etc.—An express warranty may be made out from parol words and acts followed by certain writings. Thus where

<sup>1</sup> Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165.

<sup>2</sup> Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Bigge v. Parkinson, 7 H. & N. 955; infra, as to implied warranty.

<sup>3</sup> Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Richey v. Daemicke, 86 Mich. 647.

<sup>4</sup> Harris v. Johnson, 3 Cr. 311; Hazard v. Loring, 10 Cush. 267; Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353; Atwater v. Clancy, 107 Mass. 369.

But cf. Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640.

<sup>5</sup> Allen v. Pink, 4 M. & W. 140; Filkins v. Whyland, 24 N. Y. 341; Hildreth v. O'Brien, 10 Allen, 104; Hersom v. Henderson, 21 N. H. 224.

<sup>6</sup> Chapman v. Searle, 3 Pick. 38; Goodyear v. Ogden, 4 Hill, 104. And see Story Sales, §§ 358–360.

a warranted sale of merchandise is verbally made upon credit, the quantity not being at the time ascertained, and the seller forwards a written bill of sale thereof, stating the quantity and price only, and afterwards ships the goods to the buyer, the whole transaction becomes an executed contract of sale, with warranty, as of the time when the goods are shipped.<sup>1</sup> And to get at the real force of language which is alleged to have constituted an express verbal warranty, it is often important to picture the situation of the parties at the time, — their looks, their gestures, and the whole manner of the conversation, — not to trust to particular words alone.<sup>2</sup> Nor is the oral contract of warranty necessarily confined to a single conversation; it may be gathered from the language and conduct of the parties at two or more interviews, and all the circumstances attending the transaction.<sup>3</sup> Statements in a catalogue or in an advertisement might, if relied upon by the buyer, constitute an express warranty.<sup>4</sup>

In truth, there are no mysterious rules of interpretation to be applied to language which imports an express warranty; for the object is clearly to ascertain what the parties themselves had intended, as in other contracts. But the use of loose and ambiguous expressions, or the awkward collocation of words in a sentence, may render this mutual intention a matter of much perplexity. More particularly is this true where the alleged warranty was expressed in writing. Thus, if a picture be expressly offered for sale as the work of a certain great master, the inducement to the purchase is found to be, with the generality of mankind, not so much the intrinsic merit of the work of art, as the reputation of the artist; and the question arises, whether such an advertisement, or the written description of the work as

<sup>1</sup> Foot v. Bentley, 44 N. Y. 166. It is held that previous conversations inducing a correspondence may establish a warranty, though the correspondence shows no such warranty. Driesbach v. Lewisburg Bridge Co., 81* Penn. St. 177; supra, § 332.

<sup>2</sup> See Horton v. Green, 66 N. C. 596.

<sup>3</sup> Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631; McDonald Man. Co. v. Thomas, 53 Iowa, 558; 48 Wis. 338. Circumstances may establish an express warranty that goods delivered shall be of as good quality as a previous lot furnished. Warren v. Coal Co., 83 Penn. St. 437.

<sup>4</sup> 64 Fed. 55.

done by a certain artist, shall be deemed an express warranty that the artist was that person and no one else. Two English cases appear to be at variance on this point, — one decided by Lord Kenyon, with reference to alleged works of Claude Lorraine and Teniers ; and the other, tried before Lord Denman, concerning some views in Venice, which were catalogued under Canaletti's name.<sup>1</sup> In the former, it was held by the court that the genuineness of the painting as the work of that artist was merely an expression of opinion ; but in the latter the jury were allowed to decide, whether, upon the facts, an express warranty in this respect was intended. But Lorraine and Teniers preceded Canaletti by nearly a century ; and Lord Denman suggests, as a fair ground of distinction between the two cases, that it is possible to make proof as a matter of fact where the work is by a modern artist, but that, in the case of very old painters, such assertions are necessarily a matter of opinion.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jendwine v. Slade, 2 Esp. 572 ; Power v. Barham, 4 Ad. & E. 473. And see Lomi v. Tucker, 4 C. & P. 15 ; Story Sales, § 358.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Denman, C. J., in Power v. Barham, 4 Ad. & E. 473. Various similar examples of uncertainty in expression might be adduced under the head of express warranty. In Mallan v. Radloff, soap-frames were bought, which the contract warranted to be "new frames, with all nuts and bolts complete and perfect." Upon the facts shown, and with full regard to the intention of the parties, it was decided that the seller was liable on his express warranty, where it proved that, though the frames were new, and had the proper number of nuts and bolts, they were not reasonably fit for the purpose of making soap. The court appears to have laid considerable stress on the use of the word "perfect" in the above stipulation. Mallan v. Radloff, 17 C. B. N. S. 588. But as to an implied warranty of fitness, see infra. So the use of appropriate descriptive words has been held to involve an express warranty of quality in numerous instances, though clear language expressive of obligation was wanting. Descriptive words themselves admit of explanation. Thus, the sale of "fair merchantable sassafras wood" may be shown to have meant in the contract, not any part of the timber of the sassafras tree, but sassafras roots. Tye v. Fynmore, 3 Camp. 462 ; Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 83 ; Gunther v. Atwell, 19 Md. 157. See, as to implied warranty, infra. The term "merchantable" is defined in Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236. And where the seller of "mess pork of Scott & Co." attempted to evade his responsibility by showing that the pork delivered by him was really consigned to him by Scott & Co., the court admitted proof to show, that, by a trade usage contemplated by the parties, the expression applied only to mess pork of Scott &

§ 338. Express Guaranty construed as Warranty and not as Condition.—A peculiar instance of express warranty is furnished by a recent English decision. The defendant bought of the plaintiffs, at a certain price, specific bales of wool, “to arrive ex ‘Stige’ or any vessel they may be transshipped in, and subject to the wool not being sold in New York,” &c.; the wool “to be guaranteed about similar to samples in P. & R.’s possession;” and, if any dispute arises, it shall be decided by the selling brokers, whose decision “shall be final.” The wool turned out not to be “about similar to samples;” and the selling brokers, upon the defendant’s protest, awarded that the defendant should take it at a certain abatement. It was decided that the guaranty was not in the nature of a condition, but only a warranty; that, under the contract, the brokers had power to award as they had done; and that the defendant was bound to take the wool accordingly at the abatement.<sup>1</sup> The dispute here was over the quality of goods, which were nevertheless of the very kind contracted for.<sup>2</sup>

§ 339. Express Warranty in Sales of Animals; Warranty of “Soundness.”—The favorite application of the law of express

Co.’s manufacture. Powell v. Horton, 2 Bing. N. C. 668.

The marked difference in value of the articles, according to the interpretation applied, is an important element for consideration. See McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203. And mackerel warranted as being No. 1, No. 2, etc., may be explained by reference to inspection laws which the parties must have mutually taken into account, to mean, not mackerel absolutely of that quality, but mackerel so branded by the inspector. Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. 57. Much may depend upon whether the specific thing is offered for the buyer’s inspection under the circumstances.

In construing the terms of a sale, or voucher of sale, as importing a warranty to the fullest expression of the description or only to certain words, a rational interpretation should be given to the language used. See Fraley v. Bispham, 10 Penn. St. 320; Whitman v. Freese, 23 Me. 212. As to uncertain expressions used in this connection, see § 329.

An article being expressly taken “with all faults,” this phrase means such faults or defects as the article might have, while still retaining its character and identity as the article described. Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 247.

<sup>1</sup> Heyworth v. Hutchinson, L. R. 2 Q. B. 447. “Guaranty” and “warranty” are words of like English origin.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Azémar v. Casella, L. R. 2 C. P. 677, which is thus distinguished. See also Wilcox v. Owens, 64 Ga. 601; Dike v. Reitlinger, 23 Hun, 241; Dubois v. Bigler, 95 Penn. St. 203.

warranty in the courts is to sales of animals, horse-sales especially, — a class of transactions which is found, both in England and America, peculiarly open to the suspicion of trickery and fraudulent concealment on the part of the seller. Now, where a buyer, in order to guard himself against imposition, takes an express warranty of the animal's soundness from the seller or auctioneer, to what purport is the term "soundness?" This will depend largely upon the circumstances of the case, and upon such local usages as manifestly entered into the mutual contract. But the buyer's rights under such a warranty are clearly though cautiously stated by Parke, B., as follows: "I have always considered that a man who buys a horse warranted sound, must be taken as buying him for immediate use, and has a right to expect one capable of that use, and of being immediately put to any fair work the owner chooses. The rule as to unsoundness is, that if at the time of the sale the horse has any disease, which either does diminish the natural usefulness of the animal so as to make him less capable of work of any description, or which in its ordinary progress will diminish the natural usefulness of the animal, or if the horse has either from disease or accident undergone any alteration of structure, that either actually does at the time, or in its ordinary effects will, diminish the natural usefulness of the horse, such horse is unsound."<sup>1</sup> This statement of the law, pronounced upon mature deliberation and with reference to the best of the earlier authorities, appears to have been accepted in England, to this day, as the standard of soundness.<sup>2</sup> Such a test manifestly takes into account a disorder which actually impairs the animal's natural usefulness at the time, or, as it has since been said, renders the animal "less than reasonably fit for present use";<sup>3</sup> and hence the rule favors the buyer more greatly than that previously laid down by Judge Coleridge, which must now be considered as obsolete; namely, that the question on such a warranty is, whether the animal had upon him a disease calculated permanently to render him unfit for use, or permanently to diminish his usefulness.<sup>1</sup> The American cases appear disposed to take the same view of "soundness," — as something to be tested by the animal's reasonable fitness for present use.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Parke, B., in Coates v. Stevens, § 1; Kiddell v. Burnard, 9 M. & W. 2 Moo. & Rob. 157; and Kiddell v. Burnard, 9 M. & W. 668. 608; Holliday v. Morgan, 1 E. & E. 1.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, 1 E. & E. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Hill, J., in Holliday v. Morgan,

But this doctrine of warranted soundness does not appear to extend to a merely temporary and curable injury, which exists at the date of sale, and does not really disqualify the animal for present service;<sup>3</sup> as where the animal has sustained a slight injury to the hock, and no deceit was practised. So a bill of sale, acknowledging receipt of the price for a certain horse "considered sound," is held not to import a warranty of soundness.<sup>4</sup> Nor should the language of an express warranty be stretched beyond its reasonable significance by implication. Thus, the sale of a horse described in a receipt as "a gray, four-year-old colt, warranted sound in every respect," contains a warranty of soundness only, and not of age besides; and so with expressions as to the animal's breed, previous use, and the like, which, if designed to amount to express warranty in those particulars, should have been more precisely worded.<sup>5</sup> If, again, the seller qualifies his warranty in any respect, the qualification, of course, takes effect with the warranty, of which a common instance may be seen in the sale of a horse "warranted sound for one month;" such a warranty properly limiting the seller's responsibility to such faults as the buyer might point out within the month, and not extending to defects discovered later, though possibly existing at the time of the sale.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Coleridge, J., in Bolden v. Brogden, 2 Moo. & R. 113.

<sup>2</sup> See Roberts v. Jenkins, 21 N. H. 116; Schurtz v. Kleinmeyer, 36 Iowa, 392; cases infra, § 341, final notes. Whether corns in a horse's feet constitute a breach of warranty of soundness depends upon circumstances. Alexander v. Dutton, 58 N. H. 282.

<sup>3</sup> Roberts v. Jenkins, 21 N. H. 116; Bigelow, C. J., in Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen, 242.

<sup>4</sup> Wason v. Rowe, 16 Vt. 525.

<sup>5</sup> Budd v. Fairman, 8 Bing. 48; Richardson v. Brown, 1 Bing. 344; Willard v. Stevens, 24 N. H. 271.

<sup>6</sup> Chapman v. Gwyther, L. R. 1 Q. B. 464; Bywater v. Richardson, 1 Ad. & E. 508.

§ 340. The Same Subject; Other Expressions importing Warranty.—Other expressions than “soundness” are frequently used. There may be a warranty of age; and a representation that an animal is so many years old, made under circumstances importing an express warranty, implies that the animal is no older.<sup>1</sup> Or the animal may be warranted “sound and right,” “sound and kind,” “sound and perfect,” “all right in every respect,” and so on,—phrases whose construction should be according to their natural import. To warrant a horse “sound and right” includes the idea that the horse is well-behaved; and any such phrases as the foregoing would seem, in substance, to super-add a warranty of good character to that of good physical condition. But it would always be a fair inquiry how far vicious behavior on a horse’s part was directly traceable to bodily unsoundness.<sup>2</sup> It appears that the special warranty of a mare as “all right in every shape” for a certain business, or even a general warranty of her soundness, does not protect the buyer against the consequences of the animal’s pregnancy.<sup>3</sup> The warranty that a horse is “well broke” might include a warranty of “gentleness,” as the greater includes the less; but it does not imply that the animal has received any particular training.<sup>4</sup> Whatever the phrase employed, an express warranty touching an animal’s character or state of health does not exact from the seller the use of particular words, but is inferable from the general conduct and conversation of the parties in concluding the sale, or the writing given, and may thus be set up against a seller who has never distinctly used the word “warrant” at all.<sup>5</sup>

If the seller’s express warranty be to the point that the animal was fit for use in a certain manner which the purchase contemplated, he is liable accordingly, even if the animal proves sound and right in other respects; as in the

<sup>1</sup> Burge v. Stroberg, 42 Ga. 88.

536; Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen,

<sup>2</sup> Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt.

242.

608.

<sup>4</sup> Bodurtha v. Phelon, 2 Allen, 347.

<sup>3</sup> Whitney v. Taylor, 54 Barb.

<sup>5</sup> Cook v. Mosely, 13 Wend. 277.

purchase of a horse expressly for use in the harness, but quite unsuitable therefor, though a good saddle-horse.<sup>1</sup> But such a warranty should rest upon the seller's special undertaking: for when a specific horse is sold, and warranted, moreover, in general terms, the seller is not understood to guarantee any education, or that the horse has been taught to do one thing more than another; for which reason the careful purchaser of a full-grown animal will see that the other party meets him clearly on special points before the bargain is concluded.<sup>2</sup> As to the breeding qualities of an animal the same general doctrine applies.<sup>3</sup>

§ 341. The Same Subject; as to Defects Open or Latent, etc.—Whether a general warranty of the animal's soundness and character shall be construed to cover defects which the buyer saw, or might by inspection have seen, at the time of the sale, appears to be a matter of proof in each case; with the presumption in the seller's favor, and mutual intention as the general aim of the investigation.<sup>4</sup> A general warranty of this kind is usually held not to extend to defects patent or obvious; but the doctrine is not inflexible, for it rests on the reasonable presumption that the parties could not have intended the warranty to apply to any defect causing unsoundness, which both parties saw and appreciated at the time of the sale; and the presumption is liable to be overcome.<sup>5</sup> Hence, in Brown v. Bigelow, it was held, in accordance with the facts, that the seller's express warranty of soundness was available to the buyer, where the horse proved permanently lame; and this notwithstanding the purchaser knew he was lame a week before the sale, and talked on the subject with the seller, who at

<sup>1</sup> Smith v. Justice, 13 Wis. 600.

<sup>2</sup> See Bodurtha v. Phelon, 2 Allen, 347.

<sup>3</sup> A stallion may be warranted as an ordinarily sure foal-getter; but to say of a young stallion prospectively that he will "make his mark as a foal-getter" is not such a warranty. Roberts v. Applegate, 153 Ill. 210.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, § 333.

<sup>5</sup> Bigelow, C. J., in Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen, 242. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Mulvany v. Rosenberger, 18 Penn. St. 203; Liddard v. Kain, 2 Bing. 183; Margetson v. Wright, 7 Bing. 603; 8 Bing. 454; Chadsey v. Greene, 24 Conn. 562.

first refused to give the warranty.<sup>1</sup> So, in Liddard v. Kain, the buyer's knowledge of the disorder which rendered the horses unfit for work did not prevent him from recovering for breach of the seller's warranty (which was grounded apparently upon this mutual admission of unfitness) to deliver the horses at the end of a fortnight sound and free from blemish.<sup>2</sup> For it must be admitted, the buyer's knowledge that a defect exists does not necessarily involve the means of ascertaining how long the disability may last, or how far it may prove incurable; and where, as in the case of a horse suffering from lameness or a distemper, the party concludes to purchase, the very object for which he takes an express warranty will most likely be to indemnify himself in case the animal's disability proves incurable and permanent. The older books, it is true, laid down the law with somewhat more reserve; taking the standpoint that suits on warranty are grounded on a supposed deceit, and that the seller cannot have meant to deceive the buyer as to faults which were open to the latter's inspection. Express warranty, however, is essentially a matter of bargain, of mutual understanding, of common consent; and that a seller may insure the buyer against the most obvious and patent defects in the subject-matter of sale, if he choose, is now unquestionable law.<sup>3</sup>

But, once more, against defects not readily discoverable, nor in fact perceived by the buyer at the sale, the seller's express warranty, couched in general language, is available for the buyer's protection; and where the defect was well known to the seller, and he used art in concealing it from the buyer, he ought all the more, for his fraud and deceit, to be held responsible for the consequences.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Brown v. Bigelow, ib. It was here considered that the unsoundness was not patent; for a temporary lameness was one thing and a permanent lameness another.

<sup>2</sup> Liddard v. Kain, 2 Bing. 183.

<sup>3</sup> See Tindal, C. J., in Margetson v. Wright, 7 Bing. 603; 8 Bing. 454;

Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631; Latham v. Hartford, 27 Kans. 249.

<sup>4</sup> Chadsey v. Greene, 24 Conn. 562; Hadley v. Clinton, &c. Co., 13 Ohio, n. s. 502. Among the defects which have been held to constitute unsoundness under the general warranty in horse-sales, the text-books enumerate

§ 342. Implied Warranty; Subdivision of the Subject.—(2.) As to implied warranty. This important topic may be subdivided, for our present purpose, into, first, implied warranty of quality, and, second, implied warranty of title. It is with reference to this doctrine of implied warranty in sales, and particularly as to implied warranty of quality, that the courts are found in so many crooked channels without a pilot. The dicta of the cases are not to be reconciled, whatever hypothesis may be framed for harmonizing the great mass of decisions. We may say generally, that the law implies a warranty in sales, because of attendant circumstances of the transaction, and in reliance upon acts rather than words of the parties. A contract is understood, but a contract evinced sufficiently by mutual conduct, with proof of a promise.

§ 343. Implied Warranty as to Quality; Rule and Exceptions; Sources of Confusion.—First, then, concerning the implied these: organic defects, such as that a horse had been nerved; bone spavin of the hock; and ossification of the cartilages. Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Oliphant Horses, 224-229. And see Croyle v. Moses, 90 Penn. St. 250; § 365, post, as to implied warranty on fraudulent concealment. Crib-biting has been declared to come in only under a warranty against vices. Scholefield v. Robb, 2 Moo. & Rob. 210. But, on the other hand, it is pronounced unsoundness, where shown to affect the general health and condition of the horse. Washburn v. Cuddihy, 8 Gray, 430. See also Dean v. Morey, 33 Iowa, 120; Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 608. Vicious tricks have sometimes been traced to congenital defects; as, for instance, the habit of shying, when owing to a malformation of the eye which causes imperfect vision; and such a case comes fairly under the head of unsoundness. Holliday v. Morgan, 1 E. & E. 1. A warranty of soundness does not strictly cover mere badness of shape, the animal being sound when sold; not even, as it would seem, though the misshape tends to produce unsoundness. See Brown v. Elkington, 8 M. & W. 132; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1. But if the seeds of disease be shown to have been in the animal at the time of the sale, which afterwards develop into full disability, there is unsoundness within the general meaning of the warranty. Woodbury v. Robbins, 10 Cush. 520; Kiddell v. Bunard, 9 M. & W. 668. As to corns in a horse's feet, see Alexander v. Dutton, 58 N. H. 282. On the whole, it is not safe to rely upon precedents in this respect; much must depend upon the facts of any given case; and so subtle is the connection between conduct and physical condition in dumb animals, and so necessarily imperfect are our sources of information as to their infirmities, that one who would read his warranty understandingly should take medical as well as legal advice.

warranty of quality in sales of personal property. The fundamental maxim is, caveat emptor; in other words, let the buyer look out for himself that what he buys has all the qualities and answers all the purposes for which he chose it; since the seller assumes no such responsibility. It is admitted, therefore, that no nice sense of honor, no ethical consideration, is to influence the courts in construing such contracts; and the buyer, knowing this, must either purchase with his eyes open, or risk the consequences of over-confidence. For, if he wants protection, he should insist upon an express warranty before closing the bargain.

But here the courts have not rested. With a commendable spirit of justice, they have long sought to mitigate the harshness of a rule, which, if allowed free operation, would give the sharper-witted constantly the upper hand; and hence come various modifications, — one exception to caveat emptor, where the seller is guilty of fraud; the other, where the circumstances might justify a court in saying that warranty was necessarily implied. When, in addition to these exceptions, we recall from the foregoing pages<sup>1</sup> that even an express warranty may frequently be inferred from the seller's language held forth at the sale, his conduct, and the attendant circumstances, without ever a precise undertaking, in so many words, to warrant the goods he offers, or anything more distinct than a statement by way of inducement which the buyer has relied upon, we may well conclude that this rule of caveat emptor doubles upon itself; indeed, between court and jury, it has come to be applied flexibly, so as usually to satisfy the demands of substantial justice in each individual case.

§ 344. The Same Subject; Warranty and Condition Precedent not clearly distinguished. — Another source of confusion in dealing with the law of implied warranty is to be found in the circumstance, that the distinction between a condition of sale and a warranty is not always clearly accepted in the courts, — a difficulty which was foreshadowed in the preceding chapter; conditions precedent being treated by some judges as warranties, while others say that the distinction is of no moment.<sup>1</sup> But the distinction is worth preserving, as will further appear when we come to the buyer's remedies; and whoever would attain a clear comprehension of the contract of sale should discriminate accordingly. He should know that it is one thing, under a contract for "Manilla sugar," to deliver "New Orleans sugar," — which would be in reality an utter non-compliance with the terms of sale, — and another thing to deliver "Manilla sugar" of an inferior quality. That the subject-matter of a sale exists is sometimes said to be an implied warranty; but it should rather be called a condition precedent, for it is of the essence of the sale, not a collateral undertaking.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See supra, § 337.

To use the language of a modern text-writer: "A warranty, properly so called, can only exist where the subject-matter of the sale is ascertained and existing, so as to be capable of being inspected at the time of the contract, and is a collateral engagement that the specific thing so sold possesses certain qualities."<sup>3</sup>

§ 345. The Same Subject; Caveat Emptor as a Modern Doctrine. — Caveat emptor, a purely common-law doctrine, seems, then, to have so far lost ground in modern times, that strictly good faith is exacted from the seller; but beyond this the best English and American authorities do not profess to venture, except it be to the extent of guarding a buyer whose opportunities of inspecting the subject-matter have neither been fairly offered nor waived by him. Hence in the sale of a specific chattel, inspected or selected by the buyer, or fairly subject to his inspection, there is no implied warranty of quality, but such warranty if relied upon must have been express. The civil and common law are here at

<sup>1</sup> Shaw, C. J., and others of eminent authority in America, speak of words of description as constituting a "warranty." Hogins v. Plympton, 11 Pick. 99. See also Wilde, J., in Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 87, and cases cited. But cf. the more cautious expression of Shaw, C. J.,

"undertakes as part of his contract that the thing delivered corresponds to the description," &c. Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. 60.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, § 317; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 33.

variance; and the Roman doctrine, that a sound price of itself warrants a sound article, has no root in English jurisprudence: nor, indeed, could such a rule and that of caveat emptor possibly flourish together.<sup>1</sup>

§ 346. Distinction as to Implied Warranty of Quality between Chattels Ascertained and not Ascertained.—Between ascertained specific chattels, and chattels which are not as yet fully ascertained, under a contract of sale, the line seems to be properly drawn at this day for admitting the principle of implied warranty as to quality; the circumstance that the chattel's situation has not yet admitted of inspection by the buyer bringing it into the latter category. As to a specific ascertained chattel already inspected, caveat emptor concerning quality applies in full force;<sup>2</sup> yet, as we have already seen, not so completely as to exclude the possibility that a seller's statement of quality, which was offered to be acted upon, was taken by the buyer in that faith, and so constituted an express warranty;<sup>3</sup> nor, again, as we shall see hereafter, so as to permit a seller's fraud to enure to his own advantage against an unwilling buyer.<sup>4</sup> But in the case of an unascertained chattel, or where a chattel is to be made or supplied to the purchaser's order, "there is," as Mr. Benjamin says, "an implied warranty that it is reasonably fit for the purpose for which it is ordinarily used, or that it is fit for the special purpose intended by the buyer, if <sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 365, 370; Mixer v. Colburn, 11 Met. 559; Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572; Weimer v. Clement, 37 Penn. St. 147. But see Pease v. Sabin, 38 Vt. 432. In South Carolina, the maxim that a sound price calls for a sound commodity has prevailed. 1 Bay, 324 (1793). But this maxim does not apply, of course, where the buyer is informed of a defect and takes the thing on the seller's agreement to repair it. Thomson v. Sexton, 15 S. C. 93, and State authorities cited.

<sup>2</sup> See Mellor, J., in Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197; Benj. Sales, bk.

4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314; Hopkins v. Tanqueray, 15 C. B. 130; Frazier v. Harvey, 34 Conn. 469; Weimer v. Clement, 37 Penn. St. 147; Mixer v. Colburn, 11 Met. 559; Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio, 378; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165; Pacific Iron Works v. Newhall, 34 Conn. 67; Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262; 9 Vroom, 496; 48 Vt. 83; 68 Penn. St. 149; 85 Ill. 16; 56 Ind. 575.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 329.

<sup>4</sup> Illegal and fraudulent sales, post, c. 16.

that purpose be communicated to the vendor when the order is given.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 347. Implied Warranty of Quality in Ascertained Chattels; Opportunity of Inspection, etc.—As to a specific ascertained chattel, the rule of caveat emptor was early applied in Chandelor v. Lopus, where the bare affirmation that an article sold was a bezoar-stone, without expressly warranting it to be so, was held to furnish no cause of action; a case, however, which is too imperfectly reported to be a safe guide.<sup>2</sup> Upon the sale of an ascertained article, such as a known machine, the component parts of which have been inspected by the buyer, there is, as it appears, primâ facie no implied warranty that the thing shall prove fit for the purpose for which it professes to have been constructed; certainly none, if the machine was in running order at the time of inspection.<sup>3</sup> So the sale of a specific boat, known on both sides to be old and in want of repair, implies no warranty of good quality.<sup>4</sup> Even for latent defects in the chattel sold, so long as the seller was guilty of no fraud, and knew as little of them as the buyer, the latter must suffer the consequences, unless he has taken an express warranty in his favor; as where hogs, which were sold as specific chattels, prove to have had a disease at the time of sale, of which they all die soon after.<sup>5</sup> And a certain yoke of oxen being bought upon inspection to do work upon a farm, it was held that there was no implied warranty in the sale that the oxen were fit for this work.<sup>6</sup>

But in all such cases as these it is found that the minds of the parties have so far met upon identical goods, that the buyer has either inspected for himself, as the law requests, or has had full opportunity to do so. Where this opportunity of inspection has, under the circumstances of the

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

<sup>2</sup> Chandelor v. Lopus, 2 Cro. Jac. 2; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 238.

<sup>3</sup> See Mallan v. Radloff, 17 C. B. n. s. 588.

<sup>4</sup> Weimer v. Clement, 37 Penn. St. 147.

<sup>5</sup> Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314; Kingsbury v. Taylor, 29 Me. 508; Frazier v. Harvey, 34 Conn. 469. And see Lord v. Grow, 39 Penn. St. 88; Hadley v. Clinton, &c. Co., 13 Ohio St. 502; Walker v. Pue, 57 Md. 155.

<sup>6</sup> Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165.

sale, been unreasonably denied him, or is as yet in abeyance or absolutely impossible, and the advantages of knowing the qualities of the thing are all with the seller, the courts, either on the imputation of a fraudulent purpose, or because they understand the mutual contract of the parties to have expressed or implied a warranty for the emergency, the buyer necessarily trusting the seller, are found quite averse to applying the caveat emptor doctrine.<sup>1</sup> Hence, too, it is said, that where lumber is sold, measuring a given number of feet, according to a scale already made by one employed by the seller and not the buyer, the sale carries with it an implied warranty, on the seller's part that the scaler was competent and the scale honestly made, unless it clearly appears that the buyer agreed to assume that risk.<sup>2</sup> In short, there should be actual inspection by the buyer, or the opportunity of inspecting. As to specific goods in esse capable of inspection, therefore, "the buyer," as was said in Jones v. Just, by Mellor, J., "has the opportunity of exercising his judgment upon the matter; and if the result of the inspection be unsatisfactory, or if he distrusts his own judgment, he may, if he chooses, require a warranty. In such a case, it is not an implied term of the contract of sale that the goods are of any particular quality, or are merchantable;"<sup>3</sup> and as to an existing specific chattel, whose actual condition is equally open to the inspection of either party, there is no implied warranty of quality.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114; Lord v. Grow, 39 Penn. St. 88; Pease v. Sabin, 38 Vt. 432. Where an expert in certain articles sells, — e.g., a druggist as to his drugs, — and from the nature of the article and its properties, only the seller can judge of the qualities, caveat emptor does not apply. Jones v. George, 56 Tex. 149. Doubtless the thing sold should (as a condition precedent) be the thing called for. But qu. whether druggists come properly under any special exception beyond what the text above indicates. But see post, §§ 357, 358.

<sup>2</sup> Ortman v. Green, 26 Mich. 209.

<sup>3</sup> Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197 (1868). In this opinion of Mellor, J., the English decisions are fully examined. And see Owens v. Dunbar, 12 Ir. L. R. 304.

<sup>4</sup> Turner v. Mucklow, 8 Jur. n. s. 870, explained in Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197; Barr v. Gilson, 3 M. & W. 390; Frazier v. Harvey, 34 Conn. 469; Rocchi v. Schwabacher, 33 La. Ann. 1364; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379.

The latest English cases extend the doctrine of an implied warranty of quality very far, on the principle

§ 348. Rule applied to Sale of Meat, Provisions, etc.—To this head may be referred the sale of meat or provisions, as specific chattels already inspected by the buyer and selected. It has been held that the maxim of caveat emptor here applies, notwithstanding the article proves diseased and unfit for food, the fact not appearing on examination, and the seller not being aware of it, and not meaning to defraud his customer;<sup>1</sup> for here the buyer purchases on his own judgment. But some have misapprehended the point in such cases, conceiving that provisions have some mysterious property to impart by way of warranty to the purchaser; and an ambiguous statement of Blackstone, that in contracts for provisions it is always implied that they are wholesome, is quoted in support of the theory.<sup>2</sup> The old authorities are carefully collected, however, in Burnby v. Bollett; and Mr. Benjamin reviews them, submitting the conclusion, that the responsibility of victuallers, butchers, and other common dealers in victuals (the only parties referred to in the old books), for selling unwholesome food, arises from no contract or implied warranty, but is a responsibility imposed by statute, that they shall make good any damage caused by their sale of unwholesome that where an article is bought for a particular purpose known to the seller, and the buyer purchases relying necessarily upon the seller's skill, there is an implied warranty of corresponding fitness. Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. 102. This rule is usually applied to chattels supplied to order. See §§ 357, 358, post. For the true rule is, that upon the sale of a specific article, then ascertained, present and subject to an intelligent examination on the buyer's behalf, no warranty of its quality or fitness for a particular use will be implied. Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165.

Where one sells a specific fertilizer, there is usually no implied warranty of quality; there being no fraud on the seller's part. Walker v. Pue, 57 Md. 155. But local statutes in some of our agricultural States bear in a different direction. 64 Ga. 635. And see Jones v. George, 56 Tex. 149.

With regard to fraud in the seller, as where worthless mining stock is sold as representing a valuable property, see post, c. 16.

Where, without the seller's negligence, copper clasps fell into a sack of bran which had been bought for feeding cows, and were swallowed by one of the cows and poisoned and killed her, it was held that the buyer had not inspected his purchase as he should have done, and that the seller was not liable. Lukens v. Freund, 27 Kans. 664.

<sup>1</sup> Emmerton v. Matthews, 7 H. & N. 586. And see Burnby v. Bollett, 16 M. & W. 644.

<sup>2</sup> 3 Bl. Com. 166.

food.<sup>1</sup> In other words, there appears to have been ancient English legislation, — founded doubtless on sound considerations of the public health, and aided by the circumstance that such a seller can rarely put off unwholesome food upon his customers without being aware of it himself, or else grossly negligent, — which imposed special duties upon these retailers of food. To the same purpose Parke, B., reasoned, in Burnby v. Bollett.<sup>2</sup>

In America the courts of several States have pointedly refused to infer a warranty of quality from contracts for the sale of specific wholesale provisions, or of live animals as articles of merchandise, notwithstanding the ultimate destination of the thing, for domestic consumption; though they further intimate that the rule would be otherwise in the retail sale of provisions or meat directly to the consumer.<sup>3</sup> It would seem to be best, on the whole, to let the ordinary maxim of caveat emptor apply to all sales of specific and selected articles ultimately destined for food, if actually inspected by the buyer, and taken upon his own judgment, — due regard being paid to the effect of the above legislation, or of modern local acts, in enlarging the liability of common dealers of food beyond the usual legal exceptions to the maxim; but in the sale of such articles when unascertained, and not inspected by the buyer, who has been obliged to rely upon the seller's judgment, — as in cases where the dealer supplies an order for dinner, — to give operation to that implied warranty of fitness which appertains to all other chattels similarly situated.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

<sup>2</sup> Burnby v. Bollett, 16 M. & W. 644. And see Goad v. Johnson, 6 Heisk. 340. See Beer v. Walker, 25 W. R. 880.

<sup>3</sup> Winsor v. Lombard, 18 Pick. 62; Howard v. Emerson, 110 Mass. 320; 145 Mass. 439; Ryder v. Neitge, 21 Minn. 70; Davis v. Murphy, 14 Ind. 158; 50 Ind. 10; Moses v. Mead, 1 Denio, 378; s. c. 5 Denio, 617; Goad v. Johnson, 6 Heisk. 340. See Zoller v. Morse, 130 Mass. 267. Mr. Story says, that, as to the sale of provisions for immediate domestic use and consumption, such a warranty is necessary for the preservation of health and life. Story Sales, § 373. But there would seem to be in general no implied warranty of this peculiar character, though there are a few State decisions bearing in that direction, but not unlikely involving deceit by the dealer. Morehouse v. Comstock, 42 Wis. 626; Hoover v. Peters, 18 Mich. 51; 57 Mich. 60.

<sup>4</sup> See Bigge v. Parkinson, 7 H. &

§ 349. Implied Warranty of Quality in Unascertained Chattels; Sale by Description. — We next come to what are called sales by description. The proposition is sometimes put forth, that, on the sale of a chattel as being of a particular kind or description, a contract is implied that the article sold is of that kind or description.<sup>1</sup> But what is a sale by description? If I sell a specific chattel, — say, a ready-made carriage, which the buyer has chosen, — and then send it to his house accompanied by some bill or writing made out by way of receipt or voucher, which describes the carriage after some sort, this is no sale by description under any such rule of implied contract, but rather the sale of a specific identified thing, accompanied by a written description, whose language may or may not, under the circumstances, evince the intent to give an express warranty on the points covered. The description is only incidental to the bargain. But if I am to sell a chattel as yet unascertained by the buyer, something for supply from a lot or for manufacture to order, — such as one of a lot of ready-made carriages of a certain kind and quality not selected, or a carriage to be made after a particular pattern, — this rule of an implied contract takes effect, and the sale when it takes effect is a sale purely by description. And further: even the sale of a specific thing implies that the thing to be delivered is the article contracted for, and that the article contracted for is genuine, and not a clever imitation.<sup>2</sup> But once more: what is here meant by an “implied contract?” The phrase is ambiguous, and suggests a practical legal difficulty; namely, that of determining, from the conflicting cases, whether the undertaking thus implied on the seller’s part is an implied warranty or an implied condition precedent.

We hold that the true principle to be extracted from the best authorities is, that, so far as concerns the identity or genuineness of the chattel as answering the description in kind or character, there is a condition precedent resting

N. 955; Beer v. Walker, 25 W. R. 880; post, § 354.

<sup>1</sup> See Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262, citing Barr v. Gilson, 3 M. & W.

390; Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 83; Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle, 23.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 319.

upon the seller to furnish the very thing ; but that, as to quality and other collateral matters involved in the contract, the want of correspondence with the description is to be discussed under the law of warranty. Thus it would be a condition precedent on the seller's part, in the case above supposed, to furnish a carriage, and, further, a carriage of the particular kind ordered ; but hardly so as to incidental matters of description, such as soundness or running qualities.<sup>1</sup>

§ 350. The Same Subject; Instances stated.—Some of the important cases involving description may now be stated. In Azémar v. Casella it was clearly ruled, in the sale of cotton by description, that the buyer need not receive the goods sent him, inasmuch as there was not a difference of quality merely, but a difference of kind. There was no sale in fact.<sup>2</sup> In Josling v. Kingsford, the contract was for "oxalic acid," and the seller was accordingly held bound to deliver an article of that kind, although he had exhibited the bulk of the article sold to the buyer, and written to him that he would not warrant its strength, and suggested a fresh examination on the buyer's part. Here was a condition precedent to deliver the genuine thing contemplated by the contract.<sup>3</sup> Nichols v. Godts described as sale as of "foreign rape-oil, warranted only equal to samples ;" but, notwithstanding the oil tendered actually corresponded with the sample, the case showed a failure of the condition precedent to furnish "foreign rape-oil ;" and Pollock, C. B., rightly said, "If a man contracts to buy a thing, he ought not to have something else delivered to him."<sup>4</sup> So in the sale of turnip-seed described as "Skirving's Swedes," it was ruled that the contract was not fulfilled by the tender of any other turnip-seed, for there was something more than a warranty of the quality of turnip-seed involved in the contract.<sup>5</sup> Bannerman v. White, which followed the same

<sup>1</sup> See supra, § 316 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3 ; cases infra.

<sup>2</sup> Azémar v. Casella, L. R. 2 C. P. 431.

<sup>3</sup> Josling v. Kingsford, 13 C. B. n. s. 447.

<sup>4</sup> Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 339.

<sup>5</sup> Allan v. Lake, 18 Q. B. 560. See Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262 ; Lord v. Grow, 39 Penn. St. 88.

principle of a condition precedent, was an extreme case, where the facts showed that what might, in most transactions of the kind, have amounted to a merely collateral undertaking, was understood by the parties as vital and conditional to the sale; and the sale not being of hops, accompanied by a representation that sulphur was not used in growing them, — which stipulation would have amounted to an express warranty, — but of what one might describe as “unsulphured hops,” the only kind contemplated by the contract, the seller, in furnishing sulphured hops, was held to have left his condition unfulfilled, so that he could not enforce the sale; and this notwithstanding the delivery corresponded with samples.<sup>1</sup>

§ 351. How far Description affords Condition Precedent rather than Warranty. — But it is not always easy to distinguish matter of description which forms a vital and an integral part of the contract of sale from that which is collateral and involves a warranty only. The same attribute of a subject-matter, it is seen, may be in one transaction an essential part of the description; in another a non-essential, according to circumstances. It is not literal, but substantial fulfilment, that the law exacts from any party. Thus the sale of chattels of a peculiar brand, such as “S. & H.,” requires delivery of goods known in the market by that designation; but if the brand has meantime been changed by the makers to “H. & Co.,” and the variation of letters is of no consequence to the buyer, the delivery of “H. & Co.” goods fulfils the condition by conforming with the description as rationally understood.<sup>2</sup> Again: a contract for “horn chains” (no particular quality being mentioned) is supplied under its natural interpretation by the market article answering that description; and if chains composed partly of horn and partly of hoof are <sup>1</sup> Bannerman v. White, 10 C. B. n. s. 844. And see Shepherd v. Kain, 5 B. & Ald. 240; Taylor v. Bullen, 5 Ex. 779; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 1, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Story Sales, § 377; Lamb v. Crafts, 12 Met.

355; Beals v. Olmstead, 24 Vt. 114; Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321.

<sup>2</sup> Hopkins v. Hitchcock, 14 C. B. n. s. 65.

merchantable as "horn chains," the contract is fulfilled by supplying them.<sup>1</sup> Where, too, an article is bought by description of a place, such as "Manilla sugar" or "Calcutta linseed," the leading test is whether the article delivered has that distinctive character in commerce; and if it be not so adulterated as to be unsalable by that description, but is the identical kind, though of a poor quality, the buyer's remedy, if he have any, must be under a warranty; he cannot repudiate the sale.<sup>2</sup> Yet the delivery of an article sold as "indigo," which is not that article in fact, but only a skilful imitation, has been regarded as no fulfilment of a contract of sale which calls for "indigo," where the buyer meant to bargain for the genuine article, and nothing spurious.<sup>3</sup>

§ 352. Buyer's Right to refuse such Chattels, if not what were called for.—Whether, then, it be said that there is a "condition precedent," or an "implied warranty," or an "implied contract," in these sales by description, to justify the buyer in refusing to take chattels essentially different from those called for, there can be no doubt that he may so refuse to take them, provided the circumstances were such that the buyer had necessarily trusted to the seller's judgment, and not his own. But how far descriptive language shall in a given case be construed as of the essence of the contract, is a matter for proof, resting ultimately upon the mutual intent of the parties, and more immediately as a matter of common justice upon the familiar mercantile significance of the terms they have employed.

§ 353. Instances of Descriptive Language in Such Sales.—A singular example of the force of descriptive language appears in Barr v. Gilson, where two parties had entered into an ordinary bargain and sale concerning a specific "ship" called the Sarah, not present for the inspection of either buyer or seller. It turned out afterwards that the ship, which was known to have been on a distant voyage, had got stranded on an island a few days before the sale, and was almost ruined at the date of the bargain. The terms of the sale made no reference to the existing quality of the ship; but the written instrument described the subject-matter as a "ship." On a rule to set aside a verdict given for the buyer, it was held that the sale here of a chattel described as a "ship" implied that the timber and materials existed in the character of a "ship" at the time of the sale, but did not imply that the ship was seaworthy or in a serviceable condition; and a new trial was accordingly ordered.<sup>1</sup> It is worth observing, that in this sale nothing had been left to the seller's judgment or selection: the sale was of an existing specific thing, whose present qualities were as capable of being ascertained by one party as the other; or rather were ascertainable by neither, in fact. The result is, that the buyer must bear the consequences of his own imprudence, if he engages to give a sound price for a chattel whose existing condition is necessarily a matter of conjecture on both sides; the more so when its situation, like that of any ship on a voyage, is one involving extraordinary risk of damage and destruction.

<sup>1</sup> Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 365.

<sup>2</sup> Wieler v. Schilizzi, 17 C. B. 619; Gossler v. Eagle Sugar Refinery, 103 Mass. 331; Whitman v. Freese, 23 Me. 212.

<sup>3</sup> Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Met. 87. See Taylor v. Bullen, 5 Ex. 779. And see Jones v. George, 56 Tex. 149. In Dounce v. Dow, 60 N. Y. 411, the order was for "XX pipe iron."

But now to contrast this case with Merriam v. Field, decided in one of our Western States. A lot of lumber, sold by the manufacturer to a lumber merchant, was at the time of the sale in rafts, and incapable of inspection by either party. The court held that the sale implied a warranty that the lumber was merchantable.<sup>2</sup> If this view was correct, it must have been for one of these two reasons,—first, that there was evidence presented of some oral statement by the seller which amounted to an express warranty of present quality on his part; or, second, that the sale was not absolutely of a specific lot of lumber as it stood, but rather of unascertained chattels by description, as to whose quality the buyer necessarily trusted to the manufacturer, not hav-

<sup>1</sup> Barr v. Gilson, 3 M. & W. 390.

<sup>2</sup> Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640.

The report of this case does not indicates all the essential facts very clearly.

ing had the opportunity of inspecting for his own satisfaction.<sup>1</sup> For, had the bargain been for this lot of timber, as for the particular ship above referred to, or any other specific chattel, in a distant place, caveat emptor should have closed the mouth of a buyer who knew that the present condition of the subject-matter must be uncertain, and that the seller could not inspect it; and yet demanded no special warranty.

But, once more, contrasting these two cases, the character of the subject-matter might suggest a possible difference: for a ship, a horse, and many other chattels, may plainly exist in specie, and be salable, though more or less damaged or diseased; whereas a lot of lumber does not easily suffer injury, save through the utter destruction of the whole or a specific part; and the bargain for a thing which proves to have been at the time destroyed wholly, or perhaps only in substantial part, will fail for want of an adequate subject-matter, as we have elsewhere seen.<sup>2</sup> Very closely, then, do these distinctions run in the law of sales.

§ 354. Implied Warranty that Chattels are Salable or fit for Special Purpose stated.—In the sale of chattels by description there is more involved than the condition precedent (or warranty, or implied contract, as some would say) which we have noticed. So long, in fact, as the buyer has not had the opportunity of inspection, but trusts necessarily to the seller's judgment, whether the seller be dealer or manufacturer, the contract for unascertained chattels carries with it an implied warranty that they are salable or merchantable under their description; and if ordered for a certain described purpose, the warranty is further enlarged, so as to imply on the part

<sup>1</sup> Since the first edition of this book was prepared, the same case has come before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin again,—three different times in all,—and the latest judicial disposition appears to be to sustain the original conclusion, on the second reason above suggested. It appears that the seller was the manufacturer, and that he knew that part of the lot consisted of "culls" or unmerchantable lumber; and this was the gist of the buyer's action for breach of warranty. See Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; 29 Wis. 593; 39 Wis. 578. The court ruled unfavorably to the first reason suggested in the text. Sed qu. See supra, § 336.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, § 207.

of the manufacturer or dealer that they shall be reasonably fit for that purpose. This warranty, for the buyer's benefit, is founded in the reliance which he has been obliged to place upon the seller under the circumstances, and is a reasonable inference of law from the peculiar nature of the contract. Thus, as Lord Ellenborough first put the rule in the sale of twelve bags of "waste silk:" "Under such circumstances the purchaser has a right to expect a salable article, answering the description in the contract. Without any particular warranty, this is an implied term in every such contract. Where there is no opportunity to inspect the commodity, the maxim of caveat emptor does not apply. He cannot, without a warranty, insist that it shall be of any particular quality or fineness; but the intention of both parties must be taken to be that it shall be salable in the market under the denomination mentioned in the contract between them."<sup>1</sup> And Mellor, J., has recently set forth the English doctrine in the not uncommon form of two abstract propositions: (1.) "Where a manufacturer undertakes to supply goods manufactured by himself, or in which he deals, but which the vendee has not had the opportunity of inspecting, it is an implied term in the contract that he shall supply a merchantable article." (2.) "Where a manufacturer or a dealer contracts to supply an article which he manufactures or produces, or in which he deals, to be applied to a particular purpose, so that the buyer necessarily trusts to the judgment or skill of the manufacturer or dealer, there is in that case an implied term of warranty that it shall be reasonably fit for the purpose to which it is to be applied."<sup>2</sup> The doctrine appears to have been

<sup>1</sup> Gardiner v. Gray, 4 Camp. 144.

<sup>2</sup> Mellor, J., in Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197, setting forth these with various other propositions. And see Story Sales, §§ 368, 371; Brown v. Edgington, 2 M. & G. 279; Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 533; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Hamilton v. Ganyard, 3 Keyes, 45; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48; Mann v. Everston, 32 Ind. 355; Pease v. Sabin, 38

Vt. 432; Brown v. Murphee, 31 Miss. 91; Merriam v. Field, 24 Wis. 640; Gaylord v. Man. Co., 53 N. Y. 515; White v. Miller, 71 N. Y. 118; Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 630; Alden v. Hart, 161 Mass. 576; 51 Minn. 525; 37 Neb. 68; Lespard v. Van Kirk, 27 Wis. 152; Pacific Iron Works v. Newhall, 34 Conn. 67; French v. Vining, 102 Mass. 135; Sims v. Howell, 49 Ga. 620; Mc-enforced with express reference to manufacturers ; but it is not to be restricted to such persons, but may apply, upon a proper state of facts, to any person who sells.<sup>1</sup>

Instances where this warranty of merchantable quality, or of fitness for the designated purpose known by the seller, has been inferred and enforced, are quite common ; as in the sale of merchandise, which the buyer ordered for shipment to a particular market, or for use under circumstances necessarily requiring an article of that peculiar quality to be merchantable ;<sup>2</sup> and where machines are to be delivered suitable for certain work.<sup>3</sup> If an article so supplied to order fails to serve its designated purpose as a whole, it cannot avail the maker or dealer that the ingredients or component parts fulfil the implied warranty of fitness.<sup>4</sup> And if through defective materials or labor or both, something is produced not reasonably fit for the uses intended, the seller or maker is liable on his implied warranty.<sup>5</sup>

§ 355. The Same Subject.— But this implied warranty of merchantable quality is limited in time to the period while the goods are in the seller's possession, and does not ordinarily extend to the time of their arrival at their destination. A warranty that the chattel shall continue of merchantable quality during the transit, or for any length of time after they leave his own control, should be expressly given on the seller's part, in order to bind him.<sup>6</sup> Nor, once more, would

Klung v. Kelley, 21 Iowa, 508. In Bigge v. Parkinson, 7 H. & N. 955, this rule is applied to a sale of provisions ; also as to meat in Beer v. Walker, 25 W. R. 880.

<sup>1</sup> Ib. ; Story Sales, § 368 ; Brown v. Edgington, 2 M. & G. 279.

<sup>2</sup> Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197 ; Mann v. Everston, 32 Ind. 355 ; Lespard v. Van Kirk, 27 Wis. 157 ; Pease v. Sabin, 38 Vt. 432.

<sup>3</sup> Jones v. Bright, 5 Bing. 533 ; Pacific Iron Works v. Newhall, 34 Conn. 67 ; Brown v. Murphee, 31 Miss. 91 ; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48.

<sup>4</sup> Mallan v. Radloff, 17 C. B. n. s. 588 ; Sims v. Howell, 49 Ga. 620. But cf. Sims v. Howell (a case of a fertilizer) with Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572. See also as to error or fraud in sales, c. 16.

<sup>5</sup> Cases supra ; Gammell v. Gunby, 52 Ga. 504 (guano) ; Gerst v. Jones, 32 Gratt. 518 (tobacco boxes) ; Poland v. Miller, 95 Ind. 387 (leaky barrels) ; Harris v. Waite, 51 Vt. 480 (gas meters).

<sup>6</sup> Bull v. Robison, 10 Ex. 342 ; Leggat v. Sands' Ale, &c. Co., 60 Ill. 158 ; Mann v. Everston, 32 Ind. 355. But cf. Beer v. Walker, 25 W. R.

this implied warranty necessarily extend to the cask or other receptacle which contained the subject-matter; so as, for instance, to make the seller of merchantable oil liable by implication for the merchantable quality of the oil-casks besides.<sup>1</sup> But the fitness of the receptacle, or the general quality of the subject-matter, at the termination of the transit, or at any other period, may have an important bearing upon the vital issue in such cases; namely, whether, when the sale took full effect so as to pass property and risks to the purchaser, the subject-matter was in a merchantable condition. A seller who ships suitable oil should not be responsible for such deterioration as naturally results from the transit or voyage;<sup>2</sup> but if the oil reaches the buyer materially injured in consequence of being put up in unsuitable casks, or if its spoiled condition evinces that it was not of proper quality in the first place, the result must be different.<sup>3</sup>

§ 356. The Same Subject; Limitations of this Doctrine.—Moreover, the warranty of merchantable quality or fitness for a designated purpose is only implied so far as the described thing is ordered under circumstances showing that the buyer does not mean to rely upon his own judgment in estimating its qualities; and hence, wherever a special, known, described, 880, where a warranty was implied that meat sent to a distance would continue fit for food, if not delayed in transit. See § 348.

<sup>1</sup> Gower v. Van Dedalzen, 3 Bing. N. C. 717.

<sup>2</sup> 57 Fed. 451.

<sup>3</sup> The decision in Jones v. Just, where the whole doctrine of implied warranty is so learnedly set forth, really confirms these views, though the facts as reported might perhaps, at first glance, give a contrary impression. Here the contract was for a quantity of Manilla hemp, to arrive from abroad by certain ships. The ships arrived, and the hemp was delivered and paid for. The buyer, having had no earlier opportunity of inspection, now found that the bales had been wetted through with salt water, afterwards unpacked and dried, and then repacked and shipped from the agreed place of export. The hemp retained its character of hemp, but was so damaged as not to be "merchantable." The court ruled that the buyer could recover damages on an implied warranty that the goods should be salable or merchantable under their description. Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197. As to what is "merchantable," see Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236. It will be noted that the damage complained of affected the goods, in point of fact, before they were put upon their transit; also that the method of packing bore upon the merchantable quality of the subject-matter bargained for. See Cushman v. Hol-yoke, 34 Me. 289.

and definite thing is ordered from the dealer or manufacturer, and he accordingly furnishes, in fair compliance with such order, and honestly, that particular thing, or, in other words, a merchantable chattel of the kind called for, it is the buyer's misfortune if that kind of chattel prove unsalable, or unfit for a particular purpose which the buyer had in mind; for the doctrine of implied warranty does not reach the case. This distinction may seem subtle, but it is logical. Thus, if I expressly order twelve sewing-machines, of some pattern suitable for stitching leather, the seller is bound to furnish machines which will do such work; but if I order "twelve H machines, No. 2," intending to sell or use them for stitching leather, it is enough that twelve machines merchantable under the description are supplied, their fitness for leather-stitching being no element of the implied undertaking on the seller's part. Such is the exception to implied warranty which numerous decisions justify.<sup>1</sup> It is also held, in a case of sale by description, that the warranty which the law usually implies, because the buyer has had no opportunity to inspect the goods, does not extend to cases where the buyer should have inspected, though it would have been inconvenient to do so.<sup>2</sup> The fact, therefore, that the seller knew of the purpose to which the chattel was to be applied by the buyer, does not commit him to an implied warranty of its fitness for the purpose; the real difficulty being, however, that a purpose which is distinctly made known in ordering unascertained goods might often, by construction of the whole bargain, be pronounced an essential part of the description, or held to involve the dealer, who went right on to fulfil the order, without demurring as to the chattel's fitness for such purpose in an express warranty of fitness. On such shifting ground, after all, does caveat emptor rest.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jones v. Just, supra, per Mellor, J.; Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 399; Ollivant v. Bayley, 5 Q. B. 288; Hyatt v. Boyle, 5 Gill & J. 110; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165; Port Carbon Iron Co. v. Groves, 68 Penn. St. 149; Story Sales, § 372; Mason v. Chappell, 15 Gratt. 572;

Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Height v. Bacon, 126 Mass. 10; Armstrong v. Bufford, 51 Ala. 410; Horner v. Parkhurst, 71 Md. 110; Ober Co. v. Blalock, 40 S. C. 31.

<sup>2</sup> Hyatt v. Boyle, 5 Gill & J. 110; Lukens v. Freund, 27 Kans. 664.

<sup>3</sup> As to implying an express war-

§ 357. Further Illustrations of Warranty as to Merchantable Condition and Fitness for Special Purpose.—Shepherd v. Pybus is a somewhat peculiar case, which appears to come within the rule of implied warranty as to merchantable condition. The builder sold a barge which was afloat, but not completely rigged and finished. It was ruled, that, inasmuch as the buyer had only inspected the chattel when it was built, and not while it was being built, there was an implied warranty of the chattel's reasonable fitness as an ordinary barge. But it was further held, as the buyer had given no distinct notice to the builder of the purpose for which he meant to use the barge, that there was in the sale no warranty implied of its fitness for the particular purpose he had contemplated. The animus of the decision was, that in the former respect the buyer had relied upon the seller's skill and judgment, but not in the latter.<sup>1</sup>

There is quite a recent English case which seems to extend the doctrine of implied warranty very far. A carriage builder supplied a pole for the plaintiff's carriage which broke while the plaintiff was driving, so as to injure his horses. It appeared from the evidence that the pole was not reasonably fit and proper for the carriage, though the defendant was not culpably careless in his work. The court of appeal held, that the defendant must be taken to have warranted the pole to be reasonably fit for the particular purpose, and that this implied warranty operated, although some latent defect in the wood, which he could not by the exercise of any reasonable care or skill have discovered, produced the mischief. Probably, however, the plaintiff failed in this instance to exercise due skill in the selection of the material from which he made the pole.<sup>2</sup> In this decision Brett, L. J., reviewed the English cases on this subject at much length, and laid down the broad doctrine that if the article or commodity offered or delivered does not in fact ranty of fitness, the instrument, if written out, must be studied. 87 Wis. 120; § 337. .

<sup>1</sup> Shepherd v. Pybus, 3 M. & G. 868.

<sup>2</sup> Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. 102; commenting upon Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., L. R. 4 Q. B. 379, and other cases.

answer the description of it in the contract, it does not do so more or less because the defect in it is patent or latent, or discoverable.<sup>1</sup>

§ 358. Implied Warranty of Quality deducible from Circumstance that the Seller's Skill or Expert Knowledge must be relied upon. — From the case last mentioned,<sup>2</sup> one might infer that the seller's implied warranty of quality is deducible in a sale by description even as to latent defects, where the buyer does not clearly state his special purpose. But each decision, it should be remembered, is only a precedent upon its own state of facts. It still remains of the essence of the transaction that the buyer ordered the thing under circumstances showing that he would have to rely upon the seller's judgment. A contract for such work upon a carriage, moreover, whether by way of hired service or sale, implies the bestowal of skill both in the choice of materials and the fashioning of them; and it stands to reason that the supply of a pole for a particular carriage involves the purchase for a particular purpose, unlike the case where one orders one or more poles to be attached to carriages in general.

Perhaps a fit rule to state in such a connection is this: that where, from the nature of the transaction, the seller ought to display skill or expert knowledge, and upon such skill or knowledge the buyer who orders must necessarily rely, the contract of sale implies a warranty that such skill or expert knowledge is exercised in supplying the order. And such a maxim must apply with especial force where a mere customer orders an article for his own use from a manufacturer of reputed skill, and pays a full price. But expert knowledge is requisite on the part of dealers in many instances: a druggist, for instance;<sup>3</sup> or a maker of pianos, or ships, or steam-boilers.<sup>4</sup> And thus it is held that the

<sup>1</sup> Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. 102, 109.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. 102.

<sup>3</sup> See Jones v. George, 56 Tex. 149. But though a druggist may be called a dealer, whose expert knowledge of the qualities of various articles is highly important to the public, like that of a chemist or assayer, yet the compounding of drugs is properly a manufacture.

<sup>4</sup> Snow v. Schomacker Man. Co., 69 Ala. 111; Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48; 1 Sprague, 404.

implied warranty extends to both workmanship and materials.

§ 359. Implied Warranty of Quality in Sales by Sample.— We now come to implied warranty of quality in sales by sample. And here let us ask, What is a sale by sample? For this phrase is often used without a clear idea what it signifies; whence ensues confusion. If one inspects goods for himself, and purchases them specifically, the fact that the seller had shown him part instead of the whole, or a sample to aid him in forming his judgment, or by way of an inducement, does not change what would plainly have been an ordinary sale, with or without an express warranty of quality, into a sale by sample: but, where the contract of sale is made solely with reference to some sample exhibited which is taken by mutual assent of the parties to show the actual quality of a bulk bargained for, the buyer's reliance as to quality rests, not upon his own judgment or opportunity for present inspection, but upon the faith of the seller's special undertaking that a bulk shall be furnished corresponding with the sample shown; and this constitutes a sale by sample.<sup>1</sup> A sample sale, then, properly speaking, takes effect upon examination of the sample only; though if sample examination be the pivot of the transaction, as shown by the evidence, the distinctive character of the sale may continue, notwithstanding the further circumstance that the chattels in bulk were where the buyer might have inspected them, or that the sample was drawn by the seller from the bulk in the buyer's presence, or even that the buyer personally inspected the bulk pending the negotiation in a casual way, and without relying, or being understood to rely, upon such inspection as the inducement of his purchase.

Instances of sales where a sample or specimen was exhibited to the purchaser, and yet the sale could not be pronounced a sale by sample, are not unfrequent; the decisive circumstance against such a conclusion being, that the buyer had examined the property as minutely as he could have wished, or else had taken some express warranty of quality from the seller to strengthen himself.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, the inclination of the courts is to construe every sale transaction into a sale by sample, where it appears that the buyer's opportunity to inspect at the time of the bargain, owing to the mode of packing, was necessarily partial, unsatisfactory, and preliminary, and the seller allowed him to break the bulk enough to see a small portion and no more.<sup>2</sup> The just intent of the transaction should be studied to determine whether the sale is by sample or not.

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 376; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Beirne v. Dord, 1 Seld. 95; cases infra.

§ 360. The Same Subject.—Now, in the sale of goods by sample, a warranty by the seller is universally implied, according to the authorities, that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality.<sup>3</sup> That it shall be the same, too, in kind and character, if the contract be of unascertained

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Tye v. Fynmore, 3 Camp. 462; Gardiner v. Gray, 4 Camp. 144; Kellogg v. Barnard, 10 Wall. 383 (a leading case); Jones v. Wasson, 3 Baxt. 211.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. Cf. Salisbury v. Stainer, 19 Wend. 159, and Williams v. Spafford, 8 Pick. 250. The former case ruled it no sale by sample, where the seller of bales allowed the buyer to rip them up and examine for himself; but in the latter case the purchaser drew out specimens from a hole in the side of the package, and this was treated as a sale by sample. But see infra, § 362. In a Minnesota case the bargain was for whiskey, to be "five per cent better than" a certain sample exhibited. The court decided, that, as the subject-matter of sale was (in this and certain other respects shown by the evidence) to be essentially different from that exhibited to the buyer, the indispensable element of a sale by sample was wanting; for, to constitute a sale by sample, the parties must have contracted solely with reference to the sample or article exhibited, and mutually understood that the bulk should be found like it. Day v. Raguet, 14 Minn. 273.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 376; Parker v. Palmer, 4 B. & Ald. 387; Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Gunther v. Atwell, 19 Md. 157; Williams v. Spafford, 8 Pick. 250; Day v. Raguet, 14 Minn. 273; Beirne v. Dord, 1 Seld. 95; Hanson v. Busse, 45 Ill. 496; DeWitt v. Berry, 134 U. S. 306; 65 Iowa, 390; Proctor v. Spratley, 78 Va. 254; Boothby v. Plaisted, 51 N. H. 436; Graff v. Foster, 67 Mo. 512; Hughes v. Bray, 60 Cal. 284; 78 Ill. 499.

But for the Pennsylvania rule on this subject, which is peculiar, see Boyd v. Wilson, 83 Penn. St. 319. Where the bill of sale in a sample sale described the thing sold as "superior sweet-scented Kentucky leaf tobacco," it was held that the buyer could not be held as for an implied warranty on the ground that it was neither superior nor sweet-scented. Fraley v. Bispham, 10 Penn. St. 320. But this decision seems to have been not inconsistent with the peculiar facts of the transaction.

goods, and that, in any case, the buyer shall have a fair opportunity of comparing bulk and sample to test the substantial correspondence in nature and quality, is also inferable from the contract, as our last chapter shows; such further implied undertakings, however, on the seller's part, being more properly treated, we think, as fundamental conditions of the sale, than as stipulations so purely collateral to the contract as a warranty.<sup>1</sup> In a word, the seller, by offering the specimen or sample alone for present inspection, means to assure the buyer that the bulk will be found like it in kind and quality.

But in selling by sample there is usually no warranty of quality implied, beyond what is incidental to a bonâ fide correspondence of the sample with the bulk on due inspection. This, however, is not an invariable rule; and there are circumstances, such as a latent or undiscoverable defect on a simple inspection, which makes the goods unsuitable for market.<sup>2</sup>

§ 361. The Same Subject; "Average Sample" Sales.—A sale is sometimes made by what is called "average sample;" the seller taking samples or specimens from various packages, mixing them, and then giving the mixture to the buyer, which the latter accepts as the real sample of the bulk. This is as much as to say that the mixture and the bulk shall, in substance, correspond; and the real test on a sale by average sample—as where, for instance, in selling a lot of beans in bags, the seller takes a handful from each of several bags, mixes them, and shows the mixture to the buyer—is, not that some packages of the bulk can be rejected as inferior to the average, but whether, if the contents of all the packages were mixed together, the quality of the bulk so formed would equal the average sample.<sup>3</sup> Custom,

<sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 316, 317.

<sup>2</sup> See cases §§ 362–364; and particularly Drummond v. Van Ingen, 12 App. Cas. 384. See also Kaufman Co. v. Stuckey, 40 S. C. 110. And see, as to "merchantable quality," Boyd v. Wilson, 83 Penn. St. 319; 108 Penn. St. 55.

There may of course be an express warranty given in a sample sale, as in other sales. See §§ 329–340; Gould v. Stein, 149 Mass. 570; Miller v. Moore, 83 Ga. 692.

<sup>3</sup> Leonard v. Fowler, 44 N. Y. 289.

as well as special contract, may be set up to prove that the sale was by average sample; the sample representing the average quality of the entire lot.<sup>1</sup>

§ 362. Rule of Final Inspection by Buyer in Sample Sales.—Sales by sample certainly contemplate a future inspection by the buyer, when he shall have full opportunity to satisfy himself of the correspondence of the bulk with the sample: whereupon, the test appearing satisfactory, and the evidence showing that he must have accepted the bulk accordingly,—all of which may be inferred from circumstances and the lapse of time,—the seller's warranty, as such, can be no longer available. After the buyer has made such final examination as he thinks fit, and knowingly accepted the goods as being of the kind and quality called for, his rights under the contract are concluded, even though he misused his opportunity by making a careless examination.<sup>2</sup> For, in one aspect, the case is somewhat as Cochran, J., has put it: "Strictly speaking, a contract of sale by sample is not a warranty of quality, but an agreement of the seller to deliver, and of the buyer to accept, goods of the same kind and quality with the sample."<sup>3</sup> But though sample comes in usually under a preliminary, and bulk under a final inspection, it should not be forgotten that fraud vitiates; so that any acceptance which is induced by the seller's fraud or artifice, whereby a proper examination is prevented or interfered with, leaves the buyer's rights unimpaired under the contract.<sup>4</sup> Nor can the buyer's acceptance of part on delivery as corresponding with the sample prevent him from rejecting what is subsequently delivered under the same contract.<sup>5</sup>

The inspection which precedes a consummation of the bargain may be such, notwithstanding samples are shown

<sup>1</sup> Schnitzer v. Oriental Print Works, 114 Mass. 123.

<sup>2</sup> McCormick v. Sarson, 45 N. Y. 265; Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205; Carson v. Baillie, 19 Penn. St. 375; Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321; Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall.

383. See Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226.

<sup>3</sup> Cochran, J., in Gunther v. Atwell, 19 Md. 157.

<sup>4</sup> Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321; Mody v. Gregson, L. R. 4 Ex. 49.

<sup>5</sup> Hubbard v. George, 49 Ill. 275.

by the seller during the negotiation, as to preclude the supposition that the transaction was intended to be a sale by sample, instead of an out-and-out sale of ascertained and inspected chattels. Barnard v. Kellogg is a strong case in point, where the decision of a lower Federal tribunal was reversed on appeal, by the Supreme Court of the United States, a few years ago. A broker had wool on sale for a Boston principal, with instructions not to sell unless the purchaser came on and examined the wool for himself. Negotiations were made through this broker with parties resident in Hartford by the exhibition of samples; and the Hartford parties agreed to purchase the wool at a certain rate, if equal to the samples furnished; the contract providing expressly, however, that they should examine the wool in Boston at a certain day, and report whether they would take it. They went to Boston; and there they were allowed to examine the wool as fully as they wished, opening four bales, and declining to inspect more, though invited to open all. The bargain was thereupon concluded. Some months later, a number of the bales, when opened, proved to have been deceitfully packed, and to contain rotten and damaged wool. The buyers sued for indemnity; and the lower court decided in their favor, mainly on the supposition that there was by the usage of trade an implied warranty against false packing, so as to give the buyer opportunity for a later inspection at his leisure. But the Supreme Court, on appeal, repudiated the idea that any such usage could be alleged, where the parties, as in the present case, did not appear to have contracted with reference to it; and, the facts showing no knowledge on the seller's part of the false packing, the court enforced the maxim of caveat emptor, and left the buyers to bear the loss.<sup>1</sup> Now, in this transaction, the exhibition of a sample entered into the early negotiations; but the sale stood really upon the later examination of the wool in Boston, which, being with full opportunity to accept or reject, necessarily concluded the parties, unless they had chosen to distinctly designate this as something preliminary to a future and final inspection.

<sup>1</sup> Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 383.

§ 363. The Same Subject; Other Instances of Decisive Inspection.—Once again: the reasonable inference from the contract may be, under some circumstances, that the parties intend to become mutually bound by the inspection of some third person, such as an official inspector; and mean that the sale shall take full effect when such inspection is completed, without awaiting any special examination by the buyer himself.<sup>1</sup> Of course the buyer may constitute any person his agent for comparing a bulk with a sample.

But the stipulations of a sale transaction may assume various shapes; nor is it altogether exceptional to find parties who sell by sample, as well as in sales by general description, binding themselves to the possible results of a final, following a sort of preliminary, examination of the bulk. One who bargains with a government is most likely expected to run the gauntlet of officials, and pass his goods through the hands of successive inspectors; the transaction, from its peculiar stipulations, all reduced to writing, being more commonly styled a “government contract” than a “sale to government.” To this class belongs Heilbutt v. Hickson, a late English case, wherein is largely discussed the law of sales by sample, as presented in a novel aspect.<sup>2</sup> The transaction involved the sale of shoes as between private parties, for the ultimate use, as they well understood, of the French army on a winter’s campaign. The sellers, English shoe manufacturers, were to supply a large number of pairs according to a sample shown, at a certain price per pair, to the buyers, who were the London agents of French correspondents. The contract, which was quite minute in its provisions, required the shoes to be delivered free at a wharf in weekly quantities; to be inspected and the quality approved before shipment; payment in cash on each delivery. But, besides this inspection, it was further understood and agreed that the shoes were afterwards to be inspected by the French authorities at Lille. A quantity of the shoes proved to have paper in the soles. As the decision in this case turned upon a construction of the whole contract, including the manufacturer's own written offer, after the Lille authorities had discovered the defect, to take back any shoes that might be rejected by the French authorities in consequence of containing paper, we need not go into the evidence at length, which bore chiefly upon a question of damages. But the language used by Brett, J., with reference to a double inspection under a contract of sale by sample, is worth quoting; his view being, that the manufacturer's written offer to take back all rejected shoes had given the buyers no right which was not already embodied in the original contract. He says: "If the term of inspection, as agreed on, be subsequent to the time agreed for the delivery of the goods, or if the place of inspection, as agreed upon, be different from the place of delivery, the purchaser may, upon inspection at such time and place, if the goods be not equal to the sample, return them then and there on the hands of the seller;" and he proceeds to show, that, under the circumstances of this particular case, there was nothing beyond an apparent inspection possible in London at the time of shipment, and consequently that the only real inspection which could take place was that contemplated at Lille. The fault in the goods was a secret defect of manufacture, committed, undoubtedly, with the knowledge of the seller or his servants.<sup>1</sup> To this same head may likewise be referred a New York case, where bullets were sold to the State authorities under an agreement which allowed an opportunity for full inspection of the property, even after its formal delivery.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gunther v. Atwell, 19 Md. 157.

<sup>2</sup> Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 438.

§ 364. The Element of Fraud in Sample Sales; Dealer or Manufacturer. — The bearing of intentional fraud and artifice upon sample sales of defective goods is worthy of a passing comment. Heilbutt v. Hickson was a case of goods supplied, not by a dealer, but by the manufacturer; and hence the natural inference, that the seller or his servants knew that the shoes had paper worked into them. No class of men are more likely to be roughly handled in the courts than shoddy contractors; and in this case the jury found that the shoes delivered under the contract and those ready for delivery were not equal to the sample, and that the defects could not have been discovered by any inspection which ought reasonably to have been made.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, in Barnard v. Kellogg, stress was laid upon the circumstance, that the seller of the goods fraudulently packed was neither the manufacturer nor the grower, of the goods; which was as much as to say that the denial of all knowledge that the bales which he sold contained rotten and damaged wool might, from a dealer, but not from a manufacturer or grower, be readily accepted.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Heilbutt v. Hickson, supra. And see Drummond v. Van Ingen, 12 App. Cas. 384.

<sup>2</sup> Messmore v. N. Y. Shot Co., 40 N. Y. 422.

This same distinction crops out in cases which present a bulk corresponding with the sample, but serious defects in both, — a state of things causing much perplexity. In Heilbutt v. Hickson the sample shoe contained paper fillings, apparently unknown to all parties, and undiscoverable by any ordinary examination; and it would appear from the language of Bovill, C. J., who gave judgment, that, if a manufacturer agrees to furnish goods according to sample, the sample is to be considered free from a secret defect of manufacture not discoverable on inspection, and unknown to both parties.<sup>3</sup> Mody v. Gregson is a case more strongly in point. Here a manufacturer had agreed to supply a quantity of shirtings according to a sample, each piece to weigh seven pounds. The shirtings were delivered and accepted; but it was afterwards found that the weight was made by introducing fifteen per cent of clay into the fabric, which rendered the goods unmerchantable. The presence of the clay could not be ascertained by any ordinary examination of the sample. Now, here the seller's conduct was blameworthy; and, being the manufacturer, he or his servants had most likely intended fraud. At all events, the buyer was allowed to sue for damages.<sup>1</sup> But it is observable that the seller's fraud is not always stated to be the basis of the buyer's remedies in such cases; for in this last case it was maintained by the court that the sale carried with it, under the peculiar circumstances, an implied warranty of merchantable quality, besides that of correspondence with the sample.<sup>2</sup> This last can hardly be accepted as a general proposition; for, whenever a sale is based in good faith upon a bonâ fide sample, the seller's contract should be interpreted to mean that he will supply an article which corresponds in merchantable and other qualities to the sample; but, as to its intrinsic properties beyond this, the law forewarns the buyer, caveat emptor, and there is no implied warranty.

<sup>1</sup> Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 438.

<sup>2</sup> Barnard v. Kellogg, 10 Wall. 383.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3, reviewing Heilbutt v. Hickson, supra.

§ 365. Rule as to Latent Defects both in Sample and Bulk.—It is doubtless with reference to this issue of bonâ fides on a seller's part in sample sales that we are to understand Mr. Story's proposition, that if the sample is fairly drawn from the bulk of the goods, and the bulk corresponds with the sample, but there is a defect in the bulk, and in the sample itself as a part thereof, and this defect is unknown, and cannot be discovered by examination, there is no implied warranty against this defect, and the seller is not responsible.<sup>3</sup> Surely, if the honest dealer in goods which he did not make cannot ask as much as this, his sale, which purports to be to furnish according to a given specimen or sample, puts him at greater disadvantage than a simple sale by description; for he must then be bound to furnish an article like what he shows, and yet, in a contingency, unlike it. And we find Mr. Story's rule commended and applied where in a sample sale of cloths the seller had exercised good faith.<sup>4</sup> This was not the case of a manufacturer, however; and it may still be an open question, whether a grower or manufacturer who sells by sample is responsible or not for a latent defect in

<sup>1</sup> Mody v. Gregson, L. R. 4 Ex. 49.
And see Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49
N. Y. 321; post, c. 16.

<sup>2</sup> Mody v. Gregson, L. R. 4 Ex.
49. But cf. § 360.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 376.

<sup>4</sup> Dickinson v. Gay, 7 Allen, 29.

both sample and bulk beyond his own express warranty or fraud on his part. By this we mean, of course, a latent defect,—something hidden from both parties; for to offer a sample shoe for army purposes made of unserviceable stuff carefully secreted, or a sample of cloth artificially weighed down with clay, is to propose a bargain for goods which the manufacturer, or some one for whom he is answerable, knows were deceitfully prepared: the point of legal distinction is only that a mere seller may have dealt bonâ fide with goods on his hands, while the original maker or his own servants can hardly have been ignorant. A contract to sell by sample implies at least that the specimen is an honest specimen of an equally honest bulk.

As to defects really latent, however, such as a flaw in an iron boiler, which neither the manufacturer nor the party ordering it could have discovered, the law of implied warranty is somewhat capricious. There is a bias on the part of some tribunals against the party whose duty it was to supply something unascertained according to a description.<sup>1</sup> But the rule carefully set forth by Judge Selden of New York is as follows: Upon the sale of a chattel by the manufacturer, the seller is liable for any latent defect not disclosed to the buyer which arises from the manner in which the article is manufactured; and, if he knowingly uses improper materials, he is liable for that also; but not for any latent defect in the material which he is not shown, and cannot be presumed to have known.<sup>2</sup> And thus behind a blameless manufacturer might sometimes stand a blameworthy party who supplied him with defective raw materials. A manufacturer or grower is fairly held to stricter fulfilment in all such respects than the mere dealer in finished products, for his judgment, skill, and due care are specially relied upon; but as the question, whenever a thing is made or raised, and supplied to order, arises upon the contract of the parties, which contract is likely in such instances, not only to state the purpose of manufacture, but to be full of special stipulations, we need not pursue an inquiry which takes us beyond the true limits of the law of sales. Where an existing specific definite thing is sold without an express warranty of quality, caveat emptor is the rule as to latent defects, if the seller has dealt honestly.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Rodgers v. Niles, 11 Ohio St. 48; Story Sales, §§ 368, 369; Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. 227.

<sup>2</sup> Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552.

And see Story Sales, § 374; Cunningham v. Hall, 4 Allen, 268; supra, §§ 358, 359; Randall v. Newson, 2 Q. B. D. 102.

§ 366. Rule of Implied Warranty as to Second-hand Chattels. — We should not pass from this subject of implied warranty without noticing that defective articles, second-hand chattels, even those which the generality of mankind treats as refuse, may be the subject-matter of sale where a buyer stands ready to take them for a price. No warranty by implication can go beyond the reason of the particular contract, or insure that a chattel shall be supplied free from defects which were admitted at the outset to exist in anything answering the description; and while, as we shall see hereafter in treating of illegal sales, a seller may incur a direct liability for selling some kinds of noxious and injurious articles, the sale of a defective chattel as such, if made in perfect good faith and without negligence, will not, without an express warranty, render the seller liable for such injuries as may afterwards result from the defect.<sup>2</sup>

§ 367. Whether Express Warranty excludes an Implied Warranty. — Express warranty does not necessarily exclude such warranty as the law implies. There are cases, where, upon a true construction of the whole transaction, it has been ruled that the usual implied warranty of fitness for its purpose — the thing having been ordered by a buyer who necessarily trusted to the seller's judgment in selecting and supplying the goods — was re-enforced by an express warranty given for the buyer's benefit, so as to guard against special emergencies.<sup>3</sup> But, in general, no warranty of quality is implied where the parties have taken care to express the warranty by which, in that respect, they mean to be bound. Expressum facit cessare tacitum.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314; Kingsbury v. Taylor, 29 Me. 508; Hadley v. Clinton, & Co., 13 Ohio St. 502; Frazier v. Harvey, 34 Conn. 469; Lord v. Grow, 31 Penn. St. 88; Hoe v. Sanborn, 21 N. Y. 552.

<sup>2</sup> Loöp v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351. And see Holden v. Clancy, 58 Barb. 590.

<sup>3</sup> Bigge v. Parkinson, 7 H. & N. 955.

§ 368. Implied Warranty of Title to be considered; Warranty and Quitclaim.—Second. Concerning implied warranty of title. This is a subject more readily grasped than that we have just detailed; but its law is by no means clearly settled. Nor does the doctrine of the English courts appear to coincide with ours of America. In a sale of lands, one grantor will give a warranty of title, so as to assure peaceable enjoyment to his grantee against the world; but another will merely quitclaim,—in other words, undertake that the grantee's title shall be good against himself and those claiming under him, but against none other. Now, we shall readily admit that the seller of personal property may expressly warrant title for the buyer's benefit to any extent he pleases, rather than merely quitclaim; but the question is, supposing he has given no express warranty, whether the law will infer, from the nature of the contract and the obligations it imposes, a binding assurance on the seller's part that he was the true owner of what he offered to sell, and that he will make the title good if dispute arises.

§ 369. Doctrine of Implied Warranty as to Executory Contracts.—The doubt relates, however, to executed contracts, and not to those which are executory, with the transfer still incomplete. For, in the latter instance, the purchaser has the right to refuse acceptance of the chattel under a defective title, unless the seller makes that title clear; and, if he has advanced the purchase-money in whole or in part, he may recover it on the same ground of a defective title.<sup>2</sup> Nor, in equity, is a vendor allowed to enforce specific performance on a total failure of consideration; nor, indeed, with an abatement, where there is only a partial failure of consideration, unless the vendor has assented to so modify

<sup>1</sup> Parkinson v. Lee, 2 East, 314; Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3. See Dickson v. Zizinia, 10 C. B. 602; Deming v. Foster, 42 N. H. 165; Benj.

supra, § 337.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 367; Parke, B., in Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Ex. 500.

the original bargain.<sup>1</sup> Hence, if A. agrees to sell B. one hundred barrels of flour, he cannot claim to have fulfilled the condition precedent which the bargain imposes by tendering one hundred barrels which some one else owns in whole or in part; nor is B. bound to accept any such tender.<sup>2</sup>

§ 370. Fraud in Matters of Title renders Sale Voidable.— But, again, where a person offers chattels for sale, knowing that they do not belong to him, and conceals such knowledge from the purchaser, the sale is voidable by the latter as a fraudulent sale. If, however, the seller communicates this knowledge to the buyer at the time, he makes the buyer a participant in the fraud, or the purchaser of an infirm title, and so closes the buyer's mouth.<sup>3</sup>

§ 371. Express Warranty of Title may be given.— Furthermore, we have seen, in discussing the topic of express warranty, how ready the courts are to construe language, acts, and conduct of the seller, amounting to an affirmation of anything concerning the specific subject-matter, which might reasonably be the basis of warranty, into an express warranty; this upon the reasonable assumption that the seller so affirmed in order that the buyer might rely, and that the buyer relied accordingly. Here is a principle broad enough to cover many of the cases which might involve the issue of warranty or no warranty of title.<sup>4</sup>

§ 372. Warranty of Title sometimes negated by Circumstances; Judicial Sales; Sales under Pledge, etc.— A warranty of title against the world cannot be implied where it is expressly negated, or where the circumstances show that such negation entered into the bargain.<sup>5</sup> Thus, one may buy certain barrels of flour, knowing that they are claimed by a third party, and meaning to take the risks; in other words, he may have bargained merely for the seller's quitclaim of title. Perhaps to this general principle should be referred

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 143.

<sup>2</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; fraudulent sales, post, c. 16; Sherman v. Johnson, 56 Barb. 59.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, §§ 330, 331; Burgess v. Wilkinson, 13 R. I. 646; Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66.

<sup>5</sup> Story Sales, § 367.

numerous cases which are sometimes distinguished differently in the courts.<sup>1</sup>

It is clear that sheriffs, and officers of the law generally, also executors, administrators, and other trustees, who sell property real or personal, in such capacity, are presumably held to no implied warranty of title; a sufficient reason being, that the character of the office precludes the supposition that such a party is the true and absolute owner of that which he offers for sale. Jurisdiction in the premises, and regularity of proceedings by virtue of the office, is the gist of the title warranty in such cases; and positive law prescribes what effect shall attend the sale which is fairly and properly made under such circumstances.<sup>2</sup>

So, too, the sale by the pledgee or mortgagee of a chattel, as such, purports to transfer only the peculiar title of pawnbroker, pledgee, or mortgagee; and the circumstances must repel any inference that a warranty of title as owner is intended, though the title thus originating may have ripened into a good one; and, in absence of his express warranty of title or fraudulent conduct, the transaction will be taken accordingly.<sup>3</sup> The same may be said of any sale expressly made by a mere bailee who professes to sell as such, under some special claim, and not as a full proprietor. Of course, in all such cases, and as an additional inducement to a purchase, an express warranty of title may be given, though here the seller does what he is neither bound nor presumed to do.

§ 373. Warranty of Title in Sale of Incorporeal Chattels. —

The case of an incorporeal chattel is somewhat peculiar with respect to warranty of title; for, its existence as property being founded in a money-right, the seller's title must ulti-

<sup>1</sup> See Page v. Cowasjee Eduljee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127; Bagueley v. Hawley, L. R. 2 C. P. 625; Porter v. Bright, 82 Penn. St. 441.

<sup>2</sup> Chapman v. Speller, 14 Q. B. 621; Scranton v. Clark, 39 N. Y. 220; Hensley v. Baker, 10 Mo. 157; Blood v. French, 9 Gray, 197; Brigham v. Maxey, 15 Ill. 295; Bartholomew

v. Warner, 32 Conn. 98; Stephens v. Ells, 65 Mo. 456; Baker v. Arnot, 67 N. Y. 448; Neal v. Gillaspie, 56 Ind. 451; Harrison v. Shanks, 13 Bush, 620; Mechanics' Assoc. v. O'Conner, 29 Ohio St. 651; Fore v. McKenzie, 58 Ala. 115.

<sup>3</sup> Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Ex. 500, the case of a pawnbroker.

mately prove valid, and the right enforceable, or there is nothing to be enjoyed. But the chance of realizing what is of doubtful validity is really the moving consideration of many a purchase ; and claims may be purchased upon a calculation of the money's worth of the seller's doubtful title, and not necessarily because the title is deemed impregnable ; though, in other instances, it is the chance of reducing to a settlement by proper remedies, and in reliance upon the obligor's solvency and means of responding, supposing the right of action to be clear against him. The sale of a money right, known by the seller to be worthless, is impeachable, of course, by the deluded buyer.<sup>1</sup> But, in the absence of fraud, would such a transaction ordinarily imply that the seller transfers the thing for what it is worth, by way of quit-claim, or that he warrants the title? Upon the former view the English courts appear to have sometimes acted ; deciding, for instance, that the sale or assignment of a patent must be presumed to imply, not that the patent right is original in the vendor, and indefeasible, but merely that he has the letters-patent.<sup>2</sup> In this country, however, it has been held, that in the stronger case, where one sold a machine whose fitness to the purchaser depended upon the right to use a certain patent contrivance involved in its manufacture, and the seller knew this, and represented that he had the right to so manufacture, he is liable, on an implied warranty of the thing's fitness for a designated purpose, if not of his own title, where it proves that the manufacture was illegal, and the use of the thing also illegal, because infringing upon a third person's patent for the contrivance.<sup>3</sup> So, too, it is said, in this country, that every assignor of an obligation

<sup>1</sup> See Holden v. Clancy, 58 Barb. 590.

<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. N. s. 67 ; Hall v. Conder, 2 C. B. N. s. 22.

<sup>3</sup> Pacific Iron Works v. Newhall, 34 Conn. 67 ; Croninger v. Paige, 48 Wis. 229 ; 83 Penn. St. 426.

We have already seen that the sale of stock, a promissory note, &c., implies, in general, genuineness, by way of condition precedent ; and that in selling a money right against A. there is implied a genuine claim, whether good or bad ; but that as to the inherent worth of the claim, the solvency of parties whose names are on the negotiable paper, &c., there is, in the absence of fraud, no implied warranty. Supra, § 318.

engages that it is genuine and binding on the obligor unless he discloses to the assignee all the facts and circumstances connected with the execution and delivery of the obligation; and after such advice the assignee agrees to take the risk.<sup>1</sup> Upon the whole, the sale of incorporeal property would appear to stand, according to the later English and American cases, upon essentially the same footing with regard to an implied warranty of title, as the sale of corporeal personalty, so far as the peculiar attributes of such property permit.<sup>2</sup>

Hence, whether upon the theory of an implied warranty or a condition precedent, the assignee of an incorporeal bond, stock certificate, or a book debt, which is not the obligation it purports to be and hence is unenforceable, has been permitted to recover indemnity from his assignor, whether he holds his guaranty or not, and to consider the assignment a warranty of title broken as soon as made if the thing be not in fact valid.<sup>3</sup>

§ 374. A Quitclaim of One's Own Title is always implied.—But, once more, every one who sells a thing engages by implication, if not to warrant against others, at all events to quitclaim as to himself and those under him, agreeably to

<sup>1</sup> Flynn v. Allen, 57 Penn. St. 482.

<sup>2</sup> See §§ 376-379. And yet, though dicta abound to this effect, the decisions relate rather to affirming the presumed genuineness of the obligation, and its binding force against the obligor. § 318. The point pertinent here would be, rather, that the bond, stock, or other incorporeal species of property (supposing it, of course, genuine and not spurious, and binding upon the obligor) was not owned by the seller, but stolen or falsely assigned to him, &c. Here then come into view peculiar formalities of transfer, unlike those pertaining to corporeal goods and chattels. As to assignments in writing, there is a warranty or condition precedent that signatures in giving or registering title are genuine. § 318. As to lost or stolen negotiable paper, the buyer is protected by the circumstances of payment by him in good faith; and hence he needs no recourse against his seller (as in corporeal personalty sales) for indemnity under an implied warranty of title. § 19.

<sup>3</sup> Flynn v. Allen, 57 Penn. St. 482; Wood v. Sheldon, 42 N. J. L. 421; Gilchrist v. Hilliard, 53 Vt. 592. Cf. Ruohs v. Nat. Bank, 94 Tenn. 57; § 318.

See as to false and fraudulent warranty of value, Handy v. Waldron, 18 R. I. 567; §§ 603, 604. On the ground of reliance necessarily upon the seller's statements of value (i.e. of "quality"), an express warranty has been raised, irrespective of fraud and deceit. Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 106.

the character under which he has assumed to make the sale. For, as Parke, B., has said: "The bargain and sale of a specific chattel by our law undoubtedly transfers all the property the vendor has, where nothing further remains to be done, according to the intent of the parties, to pass it. But it is made a question, whether there is annexed by law to such a contract, which operates as a conveyance of the property, an implied agreement on the part of the vendor that he has the ability to convey."<sup>1</sup> § 375. Inquiry whether, in General, a Sale implies a Warranty of Title.—The point of inquiry, therefore, becomes this: whether, in a sale of personal property, where the circumstances do not negative an intent to warrant title, the party who sells that which he honestly puts forward as his, and yet says nothing to the purchaser which can fairly be construed into an express warranty of title, warrants by implication that the title is in himself as owner, so as to enable the buyer after the sale is consummated to procure indemnity in case of his dispossession by some third person having a paramount title, or perhaps so as to defend otherwise, as on a breach of warranty. This leads us to consider (1st) the English doctrine, (2d) the American doctrine, and (3d) the rule of the civil law.

§ 376. The Same Subject; English Doctrine.—(1st.) The English doctrine. Some of the ancient writers, such as Coke and Noy, were evidently of the opinion that caveat emptor was the common-law rule as to title.<sup>2</sup> Noy puts it quite pointedly: "If I take the horse of another man and sell him, and the owner takes him again, I may have an action of debt for the money; for the bargain was perfect by the delivery of the horse, and caveat emptor." This is severity itself; nor was it pretended that the rule of the civil law corresponded. But Blackstone says later: "A purchaser of goods and chattels may have a satisfaction from the seller, if he sells them as his own and the title proves deficient, without any express warranty for that purpose."<sup>3</sup> This language is not quite clear, for the selling as one's own might possibly refer to a state of facts from which an express warranty was deducible ; but it indicates the disposition at a more advanced stage of the law to relax the rigor of the old maxims in this respect.

<sup>1</sup> Parke, B., in Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Ex. 500.

<sup>2</sup> Noy Max. c. 42; Co. Lit. 102 a.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Bl. Com. 451.

But the earliest English decision which gives the question much consideration is Morley v. Attenborough, — the case of a pawnbroker's sale, where nothing more was actually established than that a pawnbroker who sells an unredeemed pledge under that name gives no warranty by implication that his title is good as owner of the goods.<sup>1</sup> The decision was doubtless correct, and upon a principle already alluded to ; but Parke, B., in rendering an elaborate opinion, laid down some propositions ex cathedrâ, which, though deriving lustre from his great name, have not altogether stood the shock of time. After ransacking the older authorities of the common law, the result of whose teachings, he says, is, "that there is by the law of England no warranty of title in the actual contract of sale, any more than there is of quality," he cites Blackstone and Wooddeson of later writers to show that in recent times a different notion appears to be gaining ground. But, on the whole, he thus concludes : "It would seem that there is no implied warranty of title on the sale of goods, and that if there be no fraud a vendor is not liable for a bad title, unless there is an express warranty, or an equivalent to it, by declarations or conduct ; and the question in each case where there is no warranty in express terms will be, whether there are such circumstances as will be equivalent to such a warranty."<sup>2</sup>

Of Baron Parke's opinion Lord Campbell remarked in a later decision : "According to Morley v. Attenborough, if a pawnbroker sells unredeemed pledges, he does not warrant the title of the pawnor, but merely undertakes that the time for redeeming the pledges has expired, and he sells only such right as belonged to the pawnor. Beyond that the decision does not go ; but a great many questions are suggested in the judgment, which still remain open.”<sup>1</sup> Mr. Benjamin, who has cited the English cases in historical order with great fulness, calls attention to an old equity case, which Lee, C. J., afterwards explained, in correction of the reporter, Peere Williams, so as to give this version: “It was held by the court, that offering to sell generally was sufficient evidence of offering to sell as owner, but no judgment was given, it being adjourned for further argument.”<sup>2</sup> To be sure, this can hardly serve as an authentic precedent under the circumstances; but the remark of Lee, C. J., was evidently overlooked by Parke, B., in his review of the old authorities; and, so far as it goes, it tells against his conclusion. We are also to observe that the summary of the law concerning implied warranty of title on sales of personal property which Morley v. Attenborough contains, is, after all, quite cautiously expressed. For Parke, B., admits very slight circumstances, which, in his opinion, would be equivalent to a warranty of title; as, for instance, he said, if the articles are bought in a shop professedly carried on for the sale of goods, the shopkeeper must be considered as warranting that those who purchase will have a good title to keep the goods purchased. And again, he makes the important admission, that possibly, though the seller might not be sued on the breach of an implied warranty of title for unliquidated damages, yet the purchaser might make out a case for recovering his purchase-money as paid on a consideration that had failed.<sup>3</sup> The true effect of the dicta in Morley v. Attenborough, then, if not taken by detached paragraphs, is to leave the true law of the subject still in obscurity.

<sup>1</sup> Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Ex. 500.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. And see Ormerod v. Huth, 14 M. & W. 604.

But the above hint as to a buyer's recovering his purchase-money, though not damages, upon the failure of his title to the chattel sold, was not thrown away,—a distinction which Noy's Maxims, however, would not have justified.<sup>4</sup> In

<sup>1</sup> Sims v. Marryat, 17 Q. B. 281.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2; L'Apostre v. L'Plaistier, 1 P. Wms. 318, as explained by Lee, C. J., in Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. 348.

<sup>3</sup> Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Ex. 500, per Parke, B.

<sup>4</sup> Noy Maxims, c. 42, cited supra, p. 404. But Erle, C. J., in Eichholz v. Banister, 17 C. B. n. s. 708, under-

Chapman v. Speller it was said by the court: "We wish to guard ourselves against being supposed to doubt the right to recover back money paid upon an ordinary purchase of a chattel, where the purchaser does not have that for which he paid."<sup>1</sup> The point of this decision was merely to disaffirm the application of an implied warranty of one's title to goods sold under a sheriff's sale. At last, in Eichholz v. Banister, which was decided in 1864, the buyer's right to recover his purchase-money as for failure of consideration, should the title prove worthless, was affirmed under circumstances quite apposite. Certain printed cloths were bought of a job warehouseman, which were affirmed to be a job lot just received by him. The cloths were delivered, and the price paid; but it turned out afterwards that they were stolen, and the buyer was compelled to restore the property to the true owner. The buyer sued on the common money counts; and the defence set up was, never indebted. The decision was to the point that, under the circumstances shown, the buyer could recover the price paid.<sup>2</sup> The form of action was not such as to bring to a direct issue the question of a buyer's further right to recover damages as for breach of contract in such an emergency.

§ 377. The Same Subject. — The English authorities actually concede, then, that the buyer may recover the price paid. But whether the failure of the seller's title involves, too, the breach of an implied warranty of title, so as to justify damages, is a matter still in abeyance. Some still later cases intimate doubts whether caveat emptor remains the general rule of law as to title; but they decide nothing, the facts either showing that the sale was not by one who offered the goods in a capacity of a full owner, or else sufficiently negating the presumption that any implied warranty of title was intended to be given.<sup>3</sup> But to revert to Eichholz v. Banister takes to reconcile Noy with his decision.

<sup>1</sup> Chapman v. Speller, 14 Q. B. 621.

<sup>2</sup> Eichholz v. Banister, 17 C. B. N. S. 708.

<sup>3</sup> Page v. Cowasjee Eduljee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127; Bagueley v. Hawley, L. R. 2 C. P. 625.

(which presents, perhaps, the one satisfactory state of facts upon which this rule is rested in the English courts), and assuming that the important doctrine which it promulgates is not to be hereafter repudiated by some higher tribunal, we cannot but observe that the whole animus of that case is to sustain the principle of an implied warranty of title on the part of him who sells a chattel as its owner. The judges read separate opinions; but upon this point they were all agreed. And, as if to show how little Morley v. Attenborough<sup>1</sup> had positively declared to the contrary, Erle, C. J., drew his argument from the very admissions of Parke, B., in that case. "In all ordinary sales," says Erle, C. J., "the party who undertakes to sell, exercises thereby the strongest act of dominion over the chattel which he proposes to sell, and would, therefore, as I think, commonly lead the purchaser to believe that he was the owner of the chattel. In almost all ordinary transactions in modern times, the vendor, in consideration of the purchaser paying the price, is understood to affirm that he is the owner of the article sold." In this Byles, J., concurs, adding: "It has been stated, over and over again, that the mere sale of chattels does not involve a warranty of title; but certainly such statement stands on barren ground, and is not supported by one single decision; and it is subject to this exception, that if the vendor by his acts or by surrounding circumstances affirm the goods to be his, then he does warrant the title."<sup>2</sup> To these statements of the law Mr. Benjamin gives ready support, while yet admitting that the English doctrine of implied warranty of title is still involved in doubt.<sup>3</sup> "The exceptions," he says, "have become the rule, and the old rule has dwindled into the exception, by reason, as Lord Campbell said, 'of having been well-nigh eaten away.'"<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 3 Ex. 500, cited supra, § 376.

<sup>2</sup> Eichholz v. Banister, 17 C. B. N. S. 708. Raphael v. Burt, cited Benj. Sales, latest English and 6th Am. ed., applies this rule of implied warranty of title to a sale of United States bonds which proved to have been stolen and whose payment was refused by government.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, §§ 1, 2.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2; Sims v. Marryat, 17 Q. B. 281, per Lord Campbell.

§ 378. Whether a Sale implies a Warranty of Title; American Doctrine. — (2d.) The American doctrine. American text-writers maintain a distinction which our courts have repeatedly recognized, — namely, between chattels which are in the seller's possession, and chattels which are in the possession of some one else ; holding that in the former case there is an implied warranty of title on the seller's part, but none in the latter.<sup>1</sup> This distinction, which the later English cases appear to have repudiated, is said to be too deeply rooted in our law to be easily eradicated, even if it were shown to be misconceived in its origin.<sup>2</sup> But when we reflect how little, after all, the precedents have established, how recently Eichholz v. Banister<sup>3</sup> was decided, and what a considerable part of the law in England upon this subject rested previously upon mere dicta, we shall be slow to conclude that the American courts have found a safe harbor. There are recent cases in our State courts which tend to establish this preferable doctrine : that the sale of personal property implies a warranty of ownership in the seller, unless the circumstances are such as to justify a contrary presumption ; but that where the goods are absolutely in a third person's possession, and neither actually nor constructively in the seller's, this is a strong circumstance against implying so full a warranty.<sup>4</sup> In other words, the question is one of evidence, without any clear-cutting distinction in respect of possession by this or that party.

For what is meant by saying that chattels are not in the seller's possession ? If I undertook to sell you a horse which some one else was known by both of us to possess under an adverse claim of ownership, the inference is a fair one that you bought my title subject to that incumbrance, running

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3 ; Story Sales, § 367 ; 2 Kent Com. 478 ; Scranton v. Clark, 39 N. Y. 220 ; Long v. Hickingbotham, 28 Miss. 772 ; Whitney v. Heywood, 6 Cush. 86 ; Fletcher v. Drath, 66 Mo. 126.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, 3d ed. Perk. n., p. 459.

<sup>3</sup> 17 C. B. n. s. 708 ; supra, §§ 376, 377.

<sup>4</sup> See Sherman v. Champlain Trans. Co., 31 Vt. 162 ; Morton, J., in Shattuck v. Green, 104 Mass. 42 ; Gross v. Kierski, 41 Cal. 111 ; Thurston v. Spratt, 52 Me. 202 ; McGiffin v. Baird, 62 N. Y. 329 ; Marshall v. Duke, 51 Ind. 62.

your own risks.<sup>1</sup> Whether, if that person's claim of ownership failed, and you got possession, and then got dispossessed after all, because some new party turned up from whom the horse was originally stolen, I should be liable for the failure of title, appears not to have been decided ; but, as it seems, I should be liable, notwithstanding I sold a chattel when (as the text-writers say) I was out of possession : for the doctrine concerning sales by parties out of possession was only meant to exclude the inference of warranty against the possessor's superior title. As we have already seen, neither the American nor the English cases infer a warranty of title where the circumstances should repel such a presumption ; while, on the other hand, express circumstances or a special undertaking may raise an express warranty.<sup>2</sup> Even as to the seller's possession of the chattel, the possession of the seller's warehouseman, bailee, servant, or agent, so understood, is constructively the seller's own possession, and the presumption, as to an implied warranty of title, must be accordingly ;<sup>3</sup> and such is the rule, even where an owner in common of personal property, which is in possession of a third person as bailee of all the owners, sells his undivided share.<sup>4</sup> The distinction between chattels in and out of the seller's possession must, then, under its most favorable aspect, be a narrow one to rest so broad a statement upon.

Wherever by the American rule the seller is understood to imply a warranty of title, — which is usually the case, at any rate, where he sells while in actual or constructive possession of the thing, — he is liable to the extent of indemnifying the buyer against dispossession by others. And if the buyer is compelled, in order to retain the property, to discharge an incumbrance existing at the time of the sale, he may sue the

<sup>1</sup> See Long v. Hickingbotham, 28 Miss. 772.

<sup>2</sup> A bill of sale from a former seller, assigned over by the holder to his own buyer, might contain an express warranty of title or some other special stipulation, which would inure to such new buyer's benefit. But if the bill is silent as to warranty of title, the rule of our text applies. Cf. 62 Ind. 537 ; 104 Mass. 42.

<sup>3</sup> Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 273 ; Hubbard v. Bliss, 12 Allen, 590 ; Shattuck v. Green, 104 Mass. 42 ; Michel v. Ware, 3 Neb. 229.

<sup>4</sup> Shattuck v. Green, 104 Mass. 42.

seller in assumpsit as for money paid, or deduct from the unpaid purchase-money.<sup>1</sup> If an express warranty of title was given against incumbrances, all the more surely must the seller be held to respond.<sup>2</sup> "Warranty of title" is the term constantly employed in our courts to meet such cases; but whether meaning that damages shall be computed on a different footing from the simple reckoning of loss of consideration does not seem to have received any particular attention.<sup>3</sup>

It would appear that, in cases which imply a warranty of title, a full title acquired by the seller after sale necessarily inures to the buyer's advantage.<sup>4</sup> But it is held in New York, that where one out of possession makes a sale, so as not to be liable on an implied warranty of title, and the chattel subsequently comes to his possession by purchase, and is transferred to a bonâ fide purchaser, this purchaser takes <sup>1</sup> Sargent v. Currier, 49 N. H. 310; Harper v. Dotson, 43 Iowa, 232. But see Gross v. Kierski, 41 Cal. 111, which intimates that there is usually no breach of the warranty until actual dispossession. As to remedies, see more generally c. 15, post. It is said that a buyer cannot generally defeat recovery for the price by showing that the property is owned by another, unless he has been ousted, or there has been a recovery by the true owner; but that fraud or deceit in the seller in respect of title will defeat an action for the price. Sweetman v. Prince, 62 Barb. 256; Krumbhaar v. Birch, 83 Penn. St. 426; Linton v. Porter, 31 Ill. 107. In some States, however, ouster or eviction of the buyer is not so strongly insisted upon; and the buyer may stand upon his defence of a breach of warranty. Perkins v. Whelan, 116 Mass. 542; Gross v. Hennessey, 13 Allen, 389; Gay v. Kingsley, 11 Allen, 345; Word v. Cairn, 1 Head, 506. For the Kentucky rule see Tipton v. Triplett, 1 Met. (Ky.) 570. The later New York rule requires that either the buyer returns the property to the seller, or has had his possession interfered with, or has had a recovery against him by the claimant, or has paid such claimant for the property. McGriffin v. Baird, 62 N. Y. 329.

<sup>2</sup> Atkins v. Hosley, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 322; Hahn v. Doolittle, 18 Wis. 196. And see Michel v. Ware, 3 Neb. 229; Burgess v. Wilkinson, 13 R. I. 646. See Croninger v. Paige, 48 Wis. 229, as to expressions construed into a warranty that the article sold was not an infringement on any patent; supra, § 373. But words in a written contract importing a quitclaim cannot be construed into a warranty of title. First Nat. Bank v. Loan & Trust Co., 123 Mass. 330; Johnston Harvester Co. v. Bartley, 81 Ind. 406.

<sup>3</sup> A warranty of title is as readily to be implied in an exchange or barter as upon a sale. Supra, § 201; Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18; Byrnside v. Burdett, 15 W. Va. 702; 48 Vt. 182. It applies to a prior lien or incumbrance on the property. Sargent v. Currier, 49 N. H. 310.

<sup>4</sup> Sherman v. Champlain Trans. Co., 31 Vt. 162.

the title absolutely free from all claim on behalf of the first purchaser.<sup>1</sup>

§ 379. Whether a Sale implies a Warranty of Title; Rule of Civil Law. — (3d.) The rule of the civil law. A sale, by the civil law, always carried with it an implied warranty against eviction. We are to bear in mind that the maxim of Roman jurisprudence made the sale a contract not rem dare, but præstare emptori rem habere licere. The vendor did not bind himself to transfer to the buyer the property in the thing sold; and, when the contract was once completed, possession only was what he was bound to deliver. But vacua possessio, not a title in litigation, was herein implied; and if the vendor sold, knowing that he was not the owner, and so wilfully exposed the buyer to the danger of eviction, it was a fraud; so too, after the sale, he remained responsible to warrant and defend the purchaser against eviction from possession. The eviction against which the vendor thus warranted the purchaser was, however, an actual dispossession by means of a judgment; and the practice was, for the purchaser, whenever sued by a person who claimed superior title, to cite in the vendor, and give him an opportunity to defend the suit.<sup>2</sup> The French civil code rigorously enforces the seller's obligation of warranty against eviction in all cases.<sup>3</sup>

§ 380. Miscellaneous Warranties; Warranty as to Quantity, Manufacturer's Make, etc. — Quantity generally enters into a sale as an essential ingredient by way of condition precedent, rather than mere warranty. Thus, if one orders 200 pounds of sugar, he is not obliged to take 100 or 300 pounds as in fulfilment of the sale; nor does a seller's offer of 200 pounds at a specified price bind him to furnish 100 or 300 pounds at the same rate. But parties may, and often do, close a bargain without insisting so strongly upon an exact quantity; and here their mutual understanding calls for a corresponding interpretation.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Scranton v. Clark, 39 N. Y. 220.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 367; Pothier Vente, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2, No. 82; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, c. 7, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

<sup>3</sup> Civil Code, arts. 1625, 1629; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3.

<sup>4</sup> The words "say about" a designated number, "more or less," and

Where one manufactures, who is not otherwise a dealer in goods ordered, there is an implied condition (sometimes called a warranty) that the goods furnished shall be of his make.<sup>1</sup>

§ 381. Summary as to Implied Warranty and Caveat Emptor.

— The preceding review of cases under the law of warranty tends to show that the implied warranty, properly so called, of sales, concerns itself chiefly with quality; while matters of kind and quantity as fulfilling a buyer's description are brought rather within the rule of conditions precedent. Leaving out questions of title, the judicial confusion appears to have chiefly arisen in staying the disastrous consequences which attend a conventional caveat emptor, — a rule which was obviously designed by the fathers of the common law, not to trick the buyer out of the subject-matter which he had bargained for, but to throw him upon the exercise of his own mental faculties in ascertaining its true qualities; not to give sellers, as a class, an undue advantage, but to make men purchase with their wits about them. Caveat emptor only goaded the buyer in case he had misused his own opportunities of inspection; where he had imprudently trusted to good luck or the seller's scruples. Did the minds of both parties meet upon a specific thing, such as a horse, a sack of flour, a piece of cloth, or an article of furniture? For, in the olden time, most chattels bargained for and sold were of this simple character, visible and tangible. Then the buyer could not exonerate himself from blame if the seller had given him a chance to handle, examine, poise, talk over such attributes as he thought fit, and ask for an express warranty to cover every doubtful point; the seller transferred ownership in the specific thing; and that was enough.

But if the circumstances were such that the buyer's opportunity of inspecting its qualities must necessarily have been deferred; if, for instance, something had to be made to order, similar expressions, do not (especially where the sale is of a specific lot), constitute a warranty as to quantity, but are words of expectation and estimate only. McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203; Shepard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377; 10 Mo. App. 241; Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons, 5 Gray, 589. And see McKay v. Evans, 48 Mich. 597; also § 389, post; Brawley v. United States, 6 Otto, 168.

<sup>1</sup> Johnson v. Raylton, 7 Q. B. D. 438.

or an article had to be procured from a distant market, — the situation was quite different. In such a case the precise subject-matter which should eventually fill the contract was not where both could judge of it, nor always even in existence ; and the buyer could only leave his order, describing what should be supplied him, and detailing its character at pleasure ; and the seller was to furnish something of corresponding description. The seller's judgment being necessarily relied upon, and the description given by the buyer being a rule of guidance, the seller was bound to supply what in truth answered that description, and was so salable in the market ; the nature of the contract called for so much. But here the seller's duty terminated ; for caveat emptor would throw upon the buyer all additional risks as to quality and the inherent fitness of such a thing for his own unexplained purposes ; the doctrine further suggesting, that so soon as the buyer had an opportunity of inspecting the article, and ascertaining its fair compliance with his description, he was bound to examine and reject for cause, or be forever held to his bargain as ad idem with the seller in all respects.

So when, at a much later stage, merchants took up the practice of dealing in specific commodities by bargaining over a representative sample, caveat emptor still prevailed : the bulk furnished should correspond with the sample, to be sure ; but of its intrinsic qualities the buyer was to judge by testing the sample, and using all the precautions in his power.

Implied warranty of quality appears to be, therefore, a doctrine by no means at variance with the policy of caveat emptor ; it is rather the reasonable adaptation of that policy to emergencies : for still, as before, the subject-matter delivered by the seller must be essentially that bargained for ; while upon the buyer is ever cast the responsibility of taking heed, to the extent of his opportunity, that the thing which he means to purchase is worth all he agreed to pay for it. It is only where the circumstances of the transaction are such that the buyer cannot be supposed capable of making an intelligent inspection of the thing at all, and discriminating as to its true qualities for himself, but must, instead, trust to the superior discretion and opportunities of the seller (the seller's vocation here importing peculiar skill or expert knowledge in supplying the thing wanted), or where the seller seeks to defraud, that the latest cases seem to depart from the old rule of caveat emptor; and this, after all, in order to give the particular transaction its just import, consistently with maintaining the general maxim.

---

CHAPTER VII.

DELIVERY.

§ 382. Delivery in a Sale to be considered.—We have seen in the course of the preceding chapter, that the responsibilities of warranty, which are not necessarily confined to one or another of the parties entering into a mutual agreement, rest, for all practical purposes, under the law of sales, upon the seller alone. There remains to be considered one more duty which the law lays upon the seller, as his own share of the burdens attending a right performance of the contract of sale: namely, delivery of the subject-matter.

§ 383. What is Delivery; Numerous Senses of the Word.—In order to understand this subject of delivery properly, we must discriminate between the different senses in which the word is employed. That transfer of right incidental to every sale, whereby at a certain point in the transaction the property and risks of ownership shift from one party to the other, is sometimes called “delivery;”<sup>1</sup> but inaccurately, we think, so far as concerns things which require a bodily transfer in execution of the contract. Handing certain goods to the buyer is an act by no means contemporaneous with the abstract passing of property to these goods: for, as we have seen, under some conditions, the property will pass before the buyer gets the goods into his possession; and under others, not even after he has acquired possession.<sup>1</sup> The corporeal tradition stands on its own merits; and it is this transfer of the possession of a thing from one party to another, which, in the true sense, constitutes a delivery.

<sup>1</sup> See Parke, J., in Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 340.

But, even in the sense of a transfer of possession, there are in our law two leading senses in which the word "delivery" may be employed: (1st) to denote a delivery of possession in performance of the contract; (2d) to denote that delivery, which, as the correlative of actual receipt by the buyer, is constantly met with in cases arising under the Statute of Frauds, — a statute which, in its peculiar application to the subject of sales, will receive an extended notice hereafter.<sup>2</sup> We shall, in this chapter, treat of delivery in the first and more natural signification of the term. Even here, we shall not escape the need of a subdivision: for there is a constructive delivery of possession which the law frequently admits as a full performance of the duty of delivery on the seller's part; while there is a delivery involving a total and unqualified surrender of possession so final and complete as utterly to destroy the vendor's lien.<sup>3</sup> Of the extent of a seller's lien we shall treat under the head of the seller's remedies:<sup>4</sup> our present concern is only with that surrender of possession which amounts to a sufficient fulfilment of the seller's duty of performance; and we are to consider the subject mainly as between the sale parties themselves.<sup>5</sup>

To avoid logical embarrassment, therefore, with a word so fruitful of legal definitions as "delivery," is no easy matter. But to recapitulate a little the substance of former chapters: A bargain of specific goods having been completed, there becomes at once a "delivery," or rather transfer of property: but before the goods are actually delivered, so as to constitute a complete "delivery" of possession, the buyer is expected to pay or adjust what is due, the seller meantime retaining a lien on the goods for his price; though when the

<sup>1</sup> Cf. cs. 2 and 5, supra.

<sup>4</sup> See post, cs. 13, 14.

<sup>2</sup> See post, cs. 9-11.

<sup>5</sup> For the effect of delivery as to third parties, see § 395.

<sup>3</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 294, 295, 331; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2.

seller gives the goods to the buyer's agent or carrier, or to the buyer in person, in pursuance of the sale, the case generally presents a "delivery" so complete as to divest the seller of his lien.<sup>1</sup> One last right may, however, be exercised by the original owner, where the goods are still in transit, and the buyer proves insolvent, — namely, that of stoppage in transitu; and of this right, as well as the lien, we shall have more to say hereafter.<sup>2</sup> Such is the sale transaction as usually developed in the English law. But, in the United States, the favorite sale appears to be that with a transfer of title conditioned upon paying or securing the price, where "delivery of possession" precedes, or is concurrent with, the "delivery" or transfer of title: there may not be a complete "delivery" of the goods, when they are put into the buyer's custody in expectation of payment, in the sense of divesting the buyer either of his title or of his lien.<sup>3</sup> Either aspect is, however, a presumptive one. Nor are we to forget that weighing, measuring, or other acts, may be requisite on the seller's part to put the chattels into a deliverable state before delivery can take place at all, or even a transfer of property right.<sup>4</sup>

§ 384. Seller's General Duty of Delivery to fulfil Bargain. — The duty of the seller as concerns delivery depends in any case upon the express or implied terms of the contract, which may be varied or extended by the usage of trade or peculiar circumstances attending the bargain; and, to get at the extent of this duty, we must search out the real intent of the contract. Two leading kinds of contract are found: one, a sale for payment on delivery; the other, a sale on credit. The completion of the contract of sale, where the right of property has passed, leaves the buyer free to take possession: but the seller's duty to deliver possession is not unqualified; it cannot be enforced against him to the disregard of conditions precedent or concurrent of payment on the buyer's part, nor so as to absolve the latter from performing such other conditions precedent or concurrent as the contract may

<sup>1</sup> Supra, cs. 2, 4.

<sup>2</sup> See seller's remedies, post, c. 14.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, cs. 2, 5.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, c. 2; Story Sales, § 296.

have embraced, inconsistent with the parting of possession by the seller. In sales for payment on delivery, the seller is not bound to deliver possession until he gets payment; though, on the other hand, his duty requires him to deliver or tender the chattel before he can sue for non-payment.<sup>1</sup> But, again, the sale being upon credit, where nothing is agreed upon as to the time of delivering the chattel, "the vendee," as Bayley, J., has said, "is immediately entitled to the possession, and the right of possession and the right of property vest at once in him: but his right of possession is not absolute; it is liable to be defeated if he becomes insolvent before he obtains possession."<sup>2</sup> It cannot be said that the intent of any contract requires the seller to surrender final possession of the goods to one who will be manifestly unable to pay for them.

The seller, in the absence of a contrary agreement, is not bound to send or carry the goods to the buyer: it is enough that he stands ready to deliver them whenever the buyer sends for them, and that he offers no improper obstruction to their removal.<sup>3</sup> But the contract may be, and frequently is, such as requires the seller to forward the goods to the buyer.<sup>4</sup> Once more: the parties may have mutually manifested an intention that the seller shall make delivery conditional upon the performance of certain acts by the buyer; and here the principle of notice would apply.<sup>5</sup> The character of the acts to be performed on either side, and the order of performance, may be inferred under any circumstances from the nature of the agreement; the law favoring a natural and common-sense interpretation.

§ 385. As to the Place of Delivery. — It follows, that, as to the place of delivery, the law presumes a delivery of the chat-

<sup>1</sup> Supra, c. 5; Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941, per Bayley, J.; Story Sales, §§ 299-303; Fell v. Muller, 78 Ind. 507.

<sup>2</sup> Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941, per Bayley, J.; Tooke v. Hollingsworth, 5 T. R. 215; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2. See, as to the seller's remedies, post, cs. 13, 14.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 505; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, §§ 300, 301, 312.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 302.

<sup>5</sup> Armitage v. Insole, 14 Q. B. 728; Stanton v. Austin, L. R. 7 C. P. 651; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; supra, c. 5; Posey v. Scales, 55 Ind. 282.

tels to have been intended at the place where they were when the bargain was completed; and the seller should be ready to perform accordingly. To quote Chancellor Kent: "If no place be designated by the contract, the general rule is that the articles sold are to be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale. The store of the merchant, the shop of the manufacturer or mechanic, and the farm or granary of the farmer, at which the commodities sold are deposited or kept, must be the place where the demand and delivery are to be made, when the contract is to pay upon demand, and is silent as to the place."<sup>1</sup> Such being the state of things, it is not incumbent upon the seller to take the goods from place to place in search of the buyer; nor, indeed, would it be prudent thus to expose the property to hazard and increased expense.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, as every one knows who goes shopping in large cities, the usual course of dealing frequently puts the seller under an obligation of sending the goods to his customer's house or place of business. Sometimes the seller holds himself ready, by the express terms of the contract, to send the chattels to the buyer's address;<sup>3</sup> and, if this address be designated, the seller must be ready to make appropriate delivery; but if the buyer fail to designate the place at which he desires delivery made, as he ought in any contract of this kind, the seller performs his duty, so as not to be liable for breach, by having the things ready on his own premises awaiting information.<sup>4</sup> Wherever a place of delivery is definitely agreed upon, the buyer is not bound to accept the goods, nor the seller to tender them, elsewhere;<sup>5</sup> and if the goods at the time of sale

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent Com. 505, and cases cited; Pothier Traité des Oblig., No. 512; Rice v. Churchill, 2 Denio, 145; Smith v. Gillett, 50 Ill. 290; Middlesex Co. v. Osgood, 4 Gray, 429; Miles v. Roberts, 34 N. H. 253; Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, §§ 307, 308, 391.

<sup>3</sup> Devine v. Edwards, 101 Ill. 138; 41 Iowa, 104; 7 Oreg. 49; Steele Works v. Dewey, 37 Ohio St. 242.

<sup>4</sup> Lucas v. Nichols, 5 Gray, 309.

<sup>5</sup> Story Sales, § 308. Delivery being made at a specified place, where the buyer is to come for them, as by rail to a certain point, the seller's duty is performed, and presumably the title and its risks are transferred. Supra, § 252; Sedgwick v. Cottingham, 54 Iowa, 512. And see Washburn Co. v. Russell, 130 Mass. 543; 116 Mass. 388; Rattary v. Cook, 50 Ala. 352.

be in the buyer's own possession, and under his control, there is presumed to be no other place of delivery agreed upon, nor, indeed, any formal act of delivery expected at all.<sup>1</sup> Ordinarily, then, the buyer ought to come for his goods before the seller need make delivery, and furthermore to come within a reasonable time if he would hold the seller bound to deliver; yet all this may be modified by 'special contract of the parties, or even by custom or usage.

The contract of sale implies, therefore, a license to the buyer to come upon the seller's premises at reasonable business hours, and take the chattels bargained for, if no other place be designated as the place of their delivery; for, were it otherwise, the seller could defeat the proper performance of the contract.<sup>2</sup> Wherever, in fact, the seller is bound to have them at a designated place for the buyer to take possession, giving that opportunity for taking them would appear to be part of the seller's engagement. When delivery is to take place upon a third person's premises, and the chattels are there, and not upon the seller's own premises, the third person must attorn to the buyer as his bailee, or else deliver possession in order to make the stipulated delivery effectual; and his refusal to do so might, under some circumstances, involve the seller in a breach of condition.<sup>3</sup> But if any third person upon whose premises the chattels lie gives a license in advance to the seller to enter and take them, or attorns in advance to whomsoever they shall be sold, and this undertaking enters into the bargain as of chattels to be delivered on his premises, he cannot withdraw his implied permission afterwards.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Shurtleff v. Willard, 19 Pick. 210; Warden v. Marshall, 99 Mass. 305; Lake v. Morris, 30 Conn. 201. So where one co-owner sells to his co-owner in possession already. Cushing v. Breed, 14 Allen, 376.

One who sells a vessel need not put her into a dry dock, but may tender delivery at a safe and reasonable anchorage. Lincoln v. Gallagher, 79 Me. 189. In case of an option on the seller's part to deliver at one place or another, due notice of his choice should be given to the buyer. 12 Johns. 221. And see as to place of delivery stipulated, Yockey v. Norn, 101 Mich. 193.

<sup>2</sup> McLeod v. Jones, 105 Mass. 403, per Wells, J., and cases cited; Wood v. Manley, 11 Ad. & E. 34; McNeal v. Emerson, 15 Gray, 384.

<sup>3</sup> Bentall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 423; Wood v. Tassell, 6 Q. B. 234.

<sup>4</sup> Salter v. Woollams, 2 M. & G.

§ 386. As to the Time of Delivery.—As to the time of delivery, the law supposes, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a reasonable time; and, whether the seller or buyer is to take the initiative, reasonable diligence will be exacted, no more, no less, unless a definite time was set. But if a definite time was set, this is of the essence of the contract as between the parties.<sup>1</sup> What is a “reasonable time” will depend upon the circumstances; and in investigating this point we try to get at the real meaning of parties who have failed to express themselves distinctly, not to discover a touchstone adapted to all cases alike. When a written contract of sale says nothing as to time, it may be shown, by parol evidence of the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, what the parties thought was a reasonable time for delivery: but it cannot be thus shown that any specific time was agreed upon, for this would be to supersede the written instrument; nor does reasonable time necessarily mean the time usually taken by other parties to perform a similar act.<sup>2</sup> And where a written contract stipulates for delivery in a “reasonable time,” oral proof of a contemporaneous agreement fixing a late date is inadmissible.<sup>3</sup>

Whether a written contract of sale expresses the time or not, its language may yet call for judicial interpretation. Thus, “a reasonable time” necessarily involves longer delay than such expressions as “directly,” “forthwith,” or “immediately,” which require great promptness; especially if the seller might have performed according to his promise, or else used means in his power to get his contract modified.<sup>4</sup> But 650; Wood v. Manley, 11 Ad. & E. 34. If the buyer was to name the place of delivery and fails to do so, the seller's offer of readiness to perform suffices for his own duty. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549.

<sup>1</sup> Higgins v. Delaware, &c. R., 60 N. Y. 553; Bolton v. Riddle, 35 Mich. 13; Kellam v. McKinstry, 69 N. Y. 264. If a note is given in consideration of a delivery on the day the note is dated, a failure to deliver at that date constitutes a failure of the consideration of the note. Corwith v. Colter, 82 Ill. 585.

<sup>2</sup> Ford v. Cotesworth, L. R. 7 Q. B. 127; Story, J., in Cocker v. Franklin, &c. Co., 3 Sumn. 530; Atwood v. Cobb, 16 Pick. 227.

<sup>3</sup> Coon v. Spaulding, 47 Mich. 162.

<sup>4</sup> Duncan v. Topham, 8 C. B. 225; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Roberts v. Brett, 11 H. L. Cas. 337; Isaacs v. Plaster Works, 67 N. Y. 124.

the literal meaning of a single word or expression must sometimes give way to the evident intent of the whole instrument; and hence a contract to deliver "forthwith" may be found, upon comparison with a corresponding stipulation for payment within fourteen days, to mean delivery within fourteen days.<sup>1</sup> Though a meaning more analogous to "within a reasonable time" is imposed by the latest cases;<sup>2</sup> yet a contract to deliver goods "as soon as possible," according to its natural import, is held to refer, not to a logical possibility, but to the power of the seller, consistently with the proper execution of his prior orders, to fulfil the stipulation.<sup>3</sup> The word "month" generally means a lunar month; though in mercantile contracts understood to be a calendar month, which is the more convenient mode of reckoning.<sup>4</sup> With reference to "days," consecutive days are meant, inclusive of Sundays, unless the parties are shown to have expressly intended otherwise. As to the computation of time in delivery, the modern rule, which has a general legal application, excludes the day from which computation begins; and likewise leaves out any day expressly set as a final limit under such expressions as "until," "up to," or "between." An undertaking, for instance, to deliver "in three months from April 2d," would give the seller July 2d as his last day of delivery; but his promise to deliver "between April 2d and July 2d," or at any time "until July 2d," will oblige him to deliver by July 1st.<sup>5</sup> Whether "to" shall be taken

A delay of nearly two months is held unreasonably long in Coon v. Spaulding, 47 Mich. 162.

<sup>1</sup> Stainton v. Wood, 16 Q. B. 638. And see Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 148, as to "immediate delivery."

<sup>2</sup> Hydraulic Co. v. McHaffie, 4 Q. B. D. 670; 3 McCrary, 190.

<sup>3</sup> Attwood v. Emory, 1 C. B. N. s. 110.

<sup>4</sup> Webb v. Fairman, 3 M. & W. 473; Churchill v. Merchants' Bank, 19 Pick. 532; and see Stat. 13 Vict. c. 21, § 4, which sets all doubt at rest in England. Other local statutes, as to time for delivery, may be found. See State v. King, 44 Mo. 238; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, cited Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2.

An agreement to deliver "during the first half" of August is held to give until noon of the 16th. Kirkpatrick v. Alexander, 60 Ind. 95.

<sup>5</sup> Webb v. Fairman, 3 M. & W. 473; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, § 310; Farwell v. Rogers, 4 Cush. 460; Atkins v. Boylston, & Co. Ins. Co., 5 Met. 440; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502; Newby v. Rogers, 40 Ind. 9; Pease v. Norton, 6 Greenl. 229.

as a word of like exclusive force is not positively settled: the better opinion being, that it has sometimes the inclusive, and sometimes the exclusive, sense; and, further, inclining to give the benefit of a doubt to the party charged in the transaction with the duty of performance.<sup>1</sup> A promise to deliver "on or before" such a day is held in some of the United States to give the seller the whole of that day to make delivery;<sup>2</sup> but whether "on" shall be taken as a word of inclusive or exclusive force in such a connection is still a matter of controversy in England.<sup>3</sup>

§ 387. The Same Subject.—In relation to the hour of the last day which the law sets as the final limit for punctual delivery, Startup v. McDonald is a learned authority, which supports this distinction as a matter of law,—that, where a thing is to be done anywhere, a tender at a convenient time before midnight is sufficient; but that where the thing is to be done at a particular place, and the law implies a duty on the part of the other party to attend, that attendance is to be by daylight, and a convenient time before sunset.<sup>4</sup> But the customary hours of business with reference to the class of transactions in question and the place of delivery ought, we think, to be regarded, so as to permit of one's performance even after sundown, wherever the other party may, without unusual delay in closing his day's business, give attendance to such duty as the law exacts from him in return.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Conawingo Co. v. Cunningham, 75 Penn. St. 138. Says Agnew, C. J.: "This question cannot be decided by cases which interpret dubious expressions in laws or rules of court, in order to preserve rights or fulfil special purposes. What we are concerned with here is in ascertaining the meaning of the parties in this particular contract. The preposition to is properly applicable to place or position, while till or until properly applies to time. Yet to is in common parlance, and sometimes in legal phraseology, applied to time. It has also various significations indicating toward, to,

and into. In regard to time it often indicates a coming or passing into a day, as well as arrival at it." Merchandise being here deliverable "at any time from this date to December 31st," it was held that the seller had the whole of December 31st in which to deliver.

<sup>2</sup> Adams v. Dale, 29 Ind. 273.

<sup>3</sup> See Coddington v. Paleologo, L. R. 2 Ex. 193, where the court was equally divided on this question.

<sup>4</sup> Startup v. McDonald, 6 M. & G. 593. And see McClartey v. Gokey, 31 Iowa, 505.

<sup>5</sup> Id.; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2;

§ 388. As to the Quantity to be delivered; the Terms of the Contract determine.—We next consider the quantity which the seller is bound to deliver. How much shall be delivered, depends upon the terms of the contract; and, as a rule, the seller must deliver just what he has bargained to deliver,—no more, and no less. He has no right to mix the goods ordered with others not ordered, and so put the buyer to the alternative of taking the whole, or selecting his portion; nor, in general, to deliver a quantity in excess of that ordered.<sup>1</sup> The delivery of fifteen hogsheads of wine, where ten were bargained for, justifies the buyer in refusing acceptance.<sup>2</sup> And, even where crockery-ware was sent packed in a crate with other crockery of a different pattern, the court held that mixing the latter, which the buyer had not ordered, with the former, the true subject-matter of the sale, was a violation of the seller's duty, even though the two sets were perfectly distinguishable.<sup>3</sup>

If delivery in excess of the contract be a dereliction of duty on the seller's part, still more so is the delivery of a less quantity than that bargained for; since, in this case, no such simple act as separation could put the parties where

Story Sales, § 310. In considering time for the other party to perform his duty, it should be remembered that goods should be delivered or tendered in season to permit the buyer to receive, examine, or otherwise perform what is incumbent upon him to complete the sale within the time specified.

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Dixon v. Fletcher, 3 M. & W. 146; Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Hart v. Mills, 15 M. & W. 85; Cunliffe v. Harrison, 6 Ex. 903; Nicholson v. Bradfield Union, L. R. 1 Q. B. 620; Chandler v. De Graff, 27 Minn. 208; Croninger v. Crocker, 62 N. Y. 151; Reuter v. Sala, 4 C. P. D. 239.

<sup>2</sup> Cunliffe v. Harrison, 6 Ex. 903.

<sup>3</sup> Levy v. Green, 8 E. & B. 575. Cf. Nicholson v. Bradfield Union, supra, where there was a complete mixture with the portions undistinguishable.

Levy v. Green, which lights the rule on its outer edge, shows us, that, even in so small a matter as throwing the onus of an easy selection upon the buyer, the seller runs perilous risks when he transcends the terms of the contract: he may doubtless separate the excess if he pleases, and tender seasonably what was bargained for; but he cannot so deliver as to force the buyer to assume a responsibility which the contract never meant should rest upon him. See as to confusion of goods, supra, §§ 42–52. But see Iron Cliffs Co. v. Buhl, 24 Mich. 86, where a larger mass of iron ore was piled at the point of delivery than was contracted for, and the buyer might have easily taken his contract quantity from the pile. And see § 394, post.

they had agreed to stand. Where less than the quantity sold is delivered, the buyer may pointedly refuse to accept, on the ground of the seller's non-performance of a condition precedent:<sup>1</sup> though doubtless, if he really accepts part as a substantial performance of the contract, he renders himself accountable for its value.<sup>2</sup> If only a portion under an entire contract was seasonably delivered, the buyer may refuse to receive the residue.<sup>3</sup> But, until the period of delivery has elapsed, the seller has the opportunity of remedying errors, and making up a deficiency; and the buyer is not, meanwhile, put to his election between returning the portion tendered on the ground of non-performance and keeping it to be paid for.<sup>4</sup> So, if the contract was for a certain quantity to be delivered in parcels from time to time, the parcels first delivered may be returned if the seller fails to deliver the latter parcels as promised; for, when the period of delivery has elapsed, we may ask whether the total amount contracted for is already delivered.<sup>5</sup>

§ 389. The Same Subject; Substantial rather than Literal Compliance required; Expressions "More or Less," etc., construed.—But, under any circumstances, substantial compliance with the contract, rather than literal fulfilment, is what the law favors; and, where the contract itself permits of some latitude of construction as to the quantity which the seller is to furnish, the courts will avail themselves of the opportunity to give him a fair margin, while sedulous that the buyer suffers no detriment. Such expressions as "more or less," "about," and the cautious words "say about," are words of estimate and expectation only, which mark the seller's purpose not to bind himself to any precise quantity, but merely to keep reasonably close to the amount

<sup>1</sup> Morgan v. Gath, 3 H. & C. 748; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Waddington v. Oliver, 2 B. & P. N. R. 61; Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; Rockford, &c. R. R. Co. v. Lent, 63 Ill. 288; Wright v. Barnes, 14 Conn. 518; Smith v. Lewis, 40 Ind. 98; Marland v. Stanwood, 101 Mass. 470.

<sup>2</sup> Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307.

<sup>3</sup> Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Waddington v. Oliver, and Oxendale v. Wetherell, supra.

<sup>5</sup> Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307.

named.<sup>1</sup> Thus a contract of sale of "say about six hundred spars" is substantially satisfied by a delivery of four hundred and ninety-six spars, where the contract covered all the spars of a certain description out of a specified lot, and this proved the whole quantity.<sup>2</sup> The full import of such expressions is, however, a matter often of great doubt, where no criterion of quantity can be gathered from other parts of the contract to which the estimate relates.<sup>3</sup>

To adjust the respective rights of parties under a contract which provides for delivery by quantity is a task of great delicacy. The natural meaning of the words employed should be taken, unless exceptional circumstances favor a different rule; and the spirit of the transaction should always be regarded. Thus, where "a small cargo" of wood, "in all about sixty cubic fathoms," is ordered, a delivery of the whole loading of the ship would be exacted, though amounting in fact to eighty-three fathoms, rather than suffer the seller to set apart sixty fathoms upon unloading the ship, and tender this amount only.<sup>4</sup> The courts are not seldom confronted with writings of doubtful import, where the irresistible conclusion must be that the parties did not understand their own bargain; and, after protracted litigation, the case will be decided upon its special merits, without adding anything valuable to general principles.

§ 390. Rule as to Delivery by Instalments, etc.—A contract, for instance, which provides for delivery by equal

<sup>1</sup> McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203; Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons, 5 Gray, 589; Shepard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377; Cross v. Eglin, 2 B. & Ad. 106; supra, § 380; Moore v. Campbell, 10 Ex. 323. And see, as to bills of lading, Tamvaco v. Lucas, 1 E. & E. 581, 592. See Cash v. Hinkle, 36 Iowa, 623, as to "average weight."

<sup>2</sup> McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203.

<sup>3</sup> See Bourne v. Seymour, 16 C. B. 337; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2; Robinson v. Noble, 8 Pet. 181. Qualifying words may be controlled in effect by other stipulations in the contract. Tancred v. Steel Co., 15 App. Cas. 125.

The meaning of expressions like those of the text is considered in late English cases. Morris v. Levison, 1 C. P. D. 155; McLay v. Perry, 44 L. T. n. s. 152; Tancred v. Steel Co., supra. In Brawley v. United States, 6 Otto, 168, 171, rules of construction for such cases are stated at length by Mr. Justice Bradley.

<sup>4</sup> Kreuger v. Blanck, L. R. 5 Ex. 179.

instalments, may, under the postponement from time to time of full periodical performance with the buyer's assent, and the substitution of new terms by mutual consent, become at last a riddle to solve; though here, whatever the modifications of a contract not rescinded, the seller still remains bound to make delivery at some reasonable time, and hence cannot rightfully refuse performance altogether.<sup>1</sup> A contract of sale which is silent as to the quantity to be delivered of each of various kinds enumerated, or which fails to specify how much shall be delivered at each of certain fixed periods, binds the seller to deliver the full amount within the full period, but naturally leaves the quantity of each kind or of each delivery at his option.<sup>2</sup>

A partial delivery of goods under an entire contract, even though delivery of the residue has been rendered impossible under circumstances which exempt the seller from full performance, will not (apart from a waiver on the buyer's part) enable him to enforce part performance against the buyer.<sup>3</sup> But whether a given contract shall be deemed an entire one with partial deliveries, or as providing for a separate sale of each lot, is a matter of construction.<sup>4</sup>

§ 390 a. Tender of a Second Delivery. — Within the specific time limited by his undertaking, a seller has the right to tender a second delivery, where the first has been properly rejected by the buyer as of goods unsatisfactory and not in accordance with the terms of the contract; such second delivery being of suitable goods.<sup>5</sup> But in general where the seller, who makes or supplies to order, tenders what is not in accordance and unsatisfactory, the contract ends upon the buyer's rejection, once and for all, unless it was

<sup>1</sup> Tyers v. Rosedale, &c. Iron Co., L. R. 10 Ex. 195 (Ex. Ch.), reversing s. c. L. R. 8 Ex. 305. And see Ireland v. Livingston, L. R. 5 H. L. 395; Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 148; O'Neill v. James, 43 N. Y. 84; Bergheim v. Iron Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 319.

<sup>2</sup> Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491.

<sup>3</sup> Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550; Story Sales, § 387. And see next chapter.

<sup>4</sup> See Veerkamp v. Hulburt Co., 58 Cal. 229; Gardner v. Clark, 21 N. Y. 399; Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250.

<sup>5</sup> Borrowman v. Free, 4 Q. B. D. 500.

agreed that defects might be remedied or a new article supplied.<sup>1</sup>

§ 391. As to the Manner of Delivery ; General Principles.— Now as to the manner of making delivery. Separation, selection, setting apart for the buyer,—all these ideas are associated with the act of delivering chattels not specifically sold ; and, beyond this, the extent of the seller's duty as prescribed by law will depend upon circumstances,—the character of the property, its situation, and the consideration whether the contract obliges him passively to let the buyer take them, or actively to forward them to him.<sup>2</sup> A mere offer to deliver is not a sufficient compliance with the seller's engagement, to enable him to enforce his rights against the buyer : there must be either actual or constructive delivery, and at least an actual tender of the thing.<sup>3</sup> But where the goods are ponderous, or where they are not in the seller's own custody, the law requires only that they shall be put under the buyer's absolute power, and that the seller surrender whatever indicia of title are requisite to enable the buyer to take full possession ; which constitutes constructive or symbolical delivery.<sup>4</sup> These principles of familiar application in chattel transfers have already been marked ; nor does delivery under a sale differ in any essential respect, save intent, from that under a gift. "The law," as was remarked in a recent case, "requires good faith and such acts only as are practicable according to the character of the thing tendered and the nature of the business."<sup>5</sup>

§ 392. Indicia of Title ; Delivery of Bill of Sale or Bill of Lading, etc.— Among the indicia of title which the seller may de-

<sup>1</sup> White Bronze Co. v. Gillette, 88 Mich. 231.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 499, 500 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2 ; Story Sales, § 311 ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 87, 88.

<sup>3</sup> See Webber v. Minor, 6 Bush, 463.

<sup>4</sup> 2 Kent Com. 499, 500 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 2, c. 2 ; Story Sales, § 311 ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 87, 88 ; Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 192, per Lord Ellenborough ; Ellis v. Hunt, 3

T. R. 464 ; Thompson v. Baltimore, &c. R., 28 Md. 396 ; 12 Mass. 300. The symbol employed must have been delivered with a suitable mutual intention of making a constructive sale. Delivery of the brass knobs worn by oxen is not presumably a symbolical delivery of the oxen themselves. Clark v. Draper, 19 N. H. 419.

<sup>5</sup> Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 426, per curiam.

liver or tender in fulfilment of his obligation under the contract is the bill of sale of a vessel, which has long been held a sufficient delivery, by way of symbol, of a vessel still at sea.<sup>1</sup> So, too, bills of lading, railroad way-bills, and various instruments in the nature of delivery orders addressed to warehousemen and other third parties who hold possession of the goods, will suffice when transferred in such form as to make the goods in another's custody deliverable to the buyer; and the delivery or tender of such documents may constitute such a sufficient performance on the seller's part as to defeat any action against him for non-delivery of the goods;<sup>2</sup> though the seller's lien for non-payment or right of stoppage in transitu might not have been extinguished.<sup>3</sup> During the period of transit and voyage, and while the goods are necessarily incapable of physical delivery, the bill of lading is universally recognized by the law-merchant as a symbolical delivery of the goods, and property may pass by the indorsement and delivery of such instrument.<sup>4</sup>

But wherever delivery of possession of corporeal chattels is given conformably to the contract of sale, a bill of sale (except as to vessels) is unnecessary, — or, at all events, such an instrument serves merely as evidence of the transfer, in connection, it may be, with a receipt, or perhaps notice of the price.<sup>5</sup> And in order that the sale may avail against all third parties the buyer under a bill of lading or other docu-

<sup>1</sup> Atkinson v. Mailing, 2 T. R. 462; Gardner v. Howland, 2 Pick. 602; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 305; Story Sales, § 311.

<sup>2</sup> Salter v. Woollams, 2 M. & G. 650; Wood v. Manley, 11 Ad. & E. 34; First Nat. Bank v. Dearborn, 115 Mass. 219; Davis v. Jones, 3 Houst. 68; Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 426; Russell v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 118; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 399; McKee v. Garcelon, 60 Me. 167.

<sup>3</sup> See infra, as to seller's remedies, c. 14. A sale of hay was held to have taken place, with all the acts requisite on the seller's part, upon an interchange of writings, in Shep- ard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377. And see Endicott, J., in Harlow v. Hall, 132 Mass. 232.

<sup>4</sup> "It is a key which, in the hands of a rightful owner, is intended to unlock the door of the warehouse, floating or fixed, in which the goods may chance to be." Bowen, L. J., in Sanders v. Maclean, 11 Q. B. D. 327, 341. As to making out bills of lading in triplicate or duplicate, and the holder's rights against the carrier, and the inconvenience and confusion of rights that may ensue, see Glyn v. West India Dock Co., 7 App. Cas. 591.

<sup>5</sup> Gatzweiler v. Morgner, 51 Mo. 47.

ments ought to take full possession upon reasonable opportunity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 393. Other Instances of Constructive Delivery.—Another sort of constructive delivery is that of a part for the whole, where the goods are scattered about in various places, and the simultaneous delivery of each part is impracticable.<sup>2</sup> In short, wherever the seller has not expressly bound himself to special activity in placing the chattels within the buyer's control and dominion, he will have performed his part by giving the buyer every opportunity of taking possession which the nature and situation of the property fairly demand.<sup>3</sup>

Hayden v. Demets, a New York case, illustrates the rule of constructive delivery. The contract of sale was for fifty thousand pounds of copper, to be delivered at a certain time; the price was stated as cash, to be paid on delivery. On the day specified, the seller tendered warehouse receipts of copper to the amount of forty-nine thousand nine hundred and sixty-six pounds: he offered to pay the warehouse charges, or have them deducted from the price payable; also to deliver the copper itself, if required. He had more copper on hand, sufficient to make up the slight difference. The buyer did not object on the spot to the mode of tender, nor to the amount tendered; but declined to accept, solely on the ground that he had not the money to pay for the copper, and asked an extension of time. The seller thereupon sued upon the contract; and it was held, sustaining the suit, that this tender was sufficient. Even if any objections to the form or amount of the tender existed, added the court, they had been waived by the buyer.<sup>4</sup>

§ 394. Where Buyer waives Complete Delivery.—This last remark suggests that the buyer's conduct may be such as to

<sup>1</sup> See § 395.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 311; Pratt v. Chase, 40 Me. 269; Phelps v. Cutler, 4 Gray, 131.

<sup>3</sup> With regard to a constructive delivery sufficient as against creditors and third persons, see post, §§ 395, 616.

But where goods are put on water or railway transit, a bill of lading is, in modern practice, to be delivered or transferred, as well as the goods themselves. See Carriers in general under Schoul. Bailments; Barber v. Taylor, 5 M. & W. 527; post, c. 14.

<sup>4</sup> Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 426. See supra, § 388.

preclude him from complaining that the tender was insufficient. A delivery of forty-nine thousand nine hundred and sixty-six pounds of copper might not, strictly speaking, have fulfilled an engagement to deliver fifty thousand pounds; but, had the buyer complained that this was less than the amount bargained for, the seller stood ready to make up the slight deficiency on the same day. And, once again, were it not clear that the seller had a right to tender warehouse receipts instead of the metal (a question which reference to business usage in aid of the contract would probably have determined), he was, at all events, prepared to tender the copper itself, if the buyer insisted upon it. We may lay it down, perhaps, that where there is doubt whether constructive delivery, instead of actual delivery, truly fulfils the terms of the contract, a constructive delivery or its tender, with an offer in the alternative to make actual delivery, is sufficient performance on the seller's part, unless, at the time, the buyer objects to the mode.<sup>1</sup>

In other respects a buyer may waive his right to a complete delivery.<sup>2</sup>

§ 395. Effect of Delivery as concerns Third Parties.—The effect of delivery is often considered with reference to the rights, not of buyer and seller alone, but of third persons, such as attaching creditors and subsequent purchasers. Such cases should be carefully distinguished from those now under consideration. For, as between buyer and seller, property may often pass without actual delivery of the goods; one may be estopped to deny the validity of his own sale; and the seller performs his duty of delivery sufficiently by tendering the subject-matter for acceptance. But cases which involve the rights of third persons usually require something more,—a complete delivery; acceptance by the buyer; an actual and substantial change of possession between the parties; a transfer not only of property rights or indicia, but of the thing <sup>1</sup> Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 426.

And see Alexander v. Gardner, 1 Bing.
 N. C. 671; Iron Cliffs Co. v. Buhl, 42 Mich. 86; 49 Ala. 309; Knights

v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660; c. 8,
infra.

<sup>2</sup> See next c.; Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341.

itself.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, as to a transfer of property right, less might be required; for a title might pass as against creditors of the seller, where something further, such as an opportunity to inspect, might still be exacted by the buyer, as between himself and the seller, in performance of the full engagement to deliver.<sup>2</sup> In order to make delivery complete, as against the seller's attaching creditors or purchasers, where constructive or symbolical delivery took place, and a simultaneous actual possession was impossible, the buyer ought to take complete possession of the thing under his bill of lading or other document, as soon as practicable. If he does this, acting with due diligence and discretion, he is usually protected in his acquired rights against all third parties who may have meanwhile attached and claimed them.<sup>3</sup>

§ 396. Delivery to Buyer's Agent is Delivery to Buyer; Case of Carrier, etc.—Delivery to the buyer's accredited agent is equivalent to delivery to the buyer himself. And even if the seller be bound to send the goods, instead of delivering them upon his own premises, the act of performance is usually completed when he has put the goods in transit to the buyer.<sup>4</sup> For delivery to a common carrier is, as we have

<sup>1</sup> See, as to delivery against the seller's creditors, Bullard v. Wait, 16 Gray, 55; 17 Mass. 110; Veazie v. Somerby, 5 Allen, 280; Wright v. Vaughn, 45 Vt. 369; Garman v. Cooper, 72 Penn. St. 32; supra, §§ 111, 270; McKee v. Garcelon, 60 Me. 165; Morgan v. Taylor, 32 Tex. 363. As to subsequent purchasers, etc., see Winslow v. Leonard, 24 Penn. St. 14; Dugan v. Nichols, 125 Mass. 43. Delivery of a bill of sale will not suffice as against third persons (independently of registry statutes), where actual delivery is possible. Burge v. Cone, 6 Allen, 412; 127 Mass. 381; 14 Me. 303; Solomons v. Chesley, 58 N. H. 238. Many statutes require delivery of possession as against creditors. See Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 117 U. S. 282; § 616. Severance of grass is necessary, likewise, before delivery; the article must exist as a chattel. Lamson v. Patch, 5 Allen, 586. As to the presumption of fraud upon one's creditors or third parties where a seller retains possession of the things sold, see post, § 616.

<sup>2</sup> See Hunter v. Wright, 12 Allen, 548. And see Washburn Co. v. Russell, 130 Mass. 543; Wyoming Bank v. Dayton, 102 U. S. 59.

<sup>3</sup> See §§ 392, 393; Badlam v. Tucker, 1 Pick. 389. The principle is applied by analogy in cases of constructive delivery of goods at a distance, where no documents of title or warehouse orders have been given. See 5 N. H. 570.

<sup>4</sup> 2 Kent Com. 499; Story Sales, §§ 305, 306; Benj. Sales, bk. 2, pt. 2, c. 6; Thompson v. Baltimore, & C. R. Co., 28 Md. 396.

seen, presumed to be tantamount to delivery to the buyer's own agent; though, if the seller choose to keep the carrier his own agent, for his better security or other cause, the act of delivery necessarily remains incomplete while this agency to himself continues.<sup>1</sup> The seller is, of course, not responsible for the risks of transit, if he has treated the carrier as the buyer's agent; but he is bound to pack in the customary and proper manner, and take other suitable precautions according to the character of the goods and their probable exposure. He must not invite injury, nor perform negligently any duties incidental to transportation which his own contract has by fair inference placed upon him.<sup>2</sup> And, in order that delivery to a carrier may be in truth a delivery to the buyer's agent, the seller is bound, in absence of special stipulations under the contract concerning the precise method of transportation, to forward the goods by the usual means of conveyance, or, at least, by such a channel as he has reason to suppose the buyer prefers.<sup>3</sup> A proper solicitude for his own burden under the contract will further lead the seller to inform the buyer promptly of his consignment to a common carrier in all cases where he undertakes transportation from a distance; for, if he has not undertaken to control the goods on their transit as owner, he certainly has bound himself to cautious and discreet dealing with the principal, in the recognition of one who may be said to come to him from the buyer as an agent only generally accredited, and with limited authority.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; supra, § 272; Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Cl. & F. 600; Waite v. Baker, 2 Ex. 1; Magruder v. Gage, 33 Md. 344; Ranney v. Higby, 5 Wis. 62; Hall v. Gaylor, 37 Conn. 550; 13 Fed. Rep. 345; Wilcox Silver Plate Co. v. Green, 72 N. Y. 17; Perkins v. Eckert, 55 Cal. 400. See this rule applied in conflict of laws as to validity of a sale. Orcutt v. Nelson, 1 Gray, 537; Sarbecker v. State, 65 Wis. 175.

In some cases a jury must determine whether or not the title and its risks passed intentionally upon delivery to the carrier, and before the consignee received. 102 Mass. 291; 30 Ohio St. 211. Prepayment of freight by the seller is a circumstance tending to show that the property did not pass to the buyer. And see §§ 271-275.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 355; Clarke v. Hutchins, 14 East, 475; Bull v. Robinson, 10 Ex. 341. See Johnson v. Stoddard, 100 Mass. 300.

<sup>3</sup> Comstock v. Affoelter, 50 Mo. 411; Story Sales, § 305.

<sup>4</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 500; Bell Sales, 89. And see further, post, c. 14.

Whether carriage for delivery by a carrier "C. O. D." imports that

If goods are sent through a carrier which were not ordered at all, or are materially different in fulfilment from what were ordered, delivery to a carrier neither puts the risks of ownership upon the buyer nor constitutes a delivery of the goods; for the latter is not obliged to receive them nor to pay the carrier's charges.<sup>1</sup> Nor can a carrier be called the buyer's agent where no direction was given, and neither custom nor contract operates to create the agency.<sup>2</sup>

§ 397. Delivery whether by Means of Seller's or Buyer's Agents.—If a seller takes upon himself the risk of delivering into the buyer's hands, — as frequently happens, through the employment of the seller's own agents, where he himself is at a distance, — he must stand to his risk; as where, for instance, a manufacturer agrees to deliver a thing, after making it, at the customer's place of business:<sup>3</sup> otherwise delivery to the carrier should absolve him from responsibility.<sup>4</sup> Nor is the general rule, which makes delivery to the carrier a delivery, in effect, to the buyer's agent, controlled by evidence that the seller had expressly warranted the chattels to be good up to a reasonable time after their delivery, or that he agreed to bear the loss if they were destroyed on the transit through his own fault; for this is different from agreeing to bear absolutely all risks of transit.<sup>5</sup> Nor does delivery to the buyer's selected agent fail to take effect, so as to pass the risks of title out of the seller, although the goods are still subject to custom-duties, the seller having done all that his contract bound him to perform;<sup>6</sup> and so, too, where the seller sends by a carrier to the point agreed upon, and, the buyer being in default in taking them after the transit ends, the goods are there destroyed.<sup>7</sup> ownership has passed from seller to buyer is not clearly settled. Cf. Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252; 130 Penn. St. 138; State v. O'Neil, 58 Vt. 140. But until payment or tender, the buyer has no right to a delivery. Lane v. Chadwick, 146 Mass. 68.

<sup>1</sup> Rommel v. Wingate, 103 Mass. 327; Larkin v. Lumber Co., 42 Mich. 296; next chapter.

<sup>2</sup> Hague v. Porter, 3 Hill, 141; Hanauer v. Bartels, 2 Col. 514; Loyd v. Wright, 20 Ga. 574.

<sup>3</sup> Taylor v. Cole, 111 Mass. 363.

<sup>4</sup> Vale v. Bayle, Cowp. 294; 2 Kent Com. 500.

<sup>5</sup> Arnold v. Prout, 51 N. H. 387.

<sup>6</sup> Waldron v. Romaine, 22 N. Y. 368.

<sup>7</sup> Sedgwick v. Cottingham, 54 Iowa, 512.

Where an agent comes specially accredited from the buyer to receive the goods, the seller should deal with him according to the scope of his powers. For it is to be remarked, that while the buyer may empower any one, not only to receive the goods as agent, but to make full acceptance on his behalf, a common carrier is not ordinarily to be regarded as agent for the buyer to any such extent, but only for receiving the goods.<sup>1</sup> Inspection of goods supplied to order, for ascertaining that they conform to the contract, is no part, then, of a carrier's duty; and this, if not already made, or the opportunity waived, on the buyer's behalf, before the goods reach him, is a right still reserved, which the seller ought duly to respect in performing his own part of the bargain.<sup>2</sup>

The same principle of agency which applies to a carrier may likewise be invoked in case delivery is made to a warehouseman. Thus tobacco, which has been paid for in advance, may be boxed by the seller, marked with the buyer's name, and delivered to a warehouseman to be kept for the buyer; this being done in pursuance of the contract of sale, and in full performance of the seller's undertaking.<sup>3</sup> But a warehouseman who holds goods for the seller, in the first place, is usually regarded as the seller's agent until he attorns over in some way to the buyer, or else yields up his custody altogether.<sup>4</sup>

§ 398. Miscellaneous Points as to Delivery; Acts of Parties construed; Usage, etc.—All incidents attending the acts of delivery follow the principal thing; and the mode of performance should be throughout according to the understanding of the parties, if mutually expressed; and in whatever respect the method of delivery may have been left in doubt, the true purpose of the transaction, aided by circumstances, <sup>1</sup> Astey v. Emery, 4 M. & S. 262; Meredith v. Meigh, 2 E. & B. 370; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4. But see Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y. 661.

<sup>2</sup> Isherwood v. Whitmore, 11 M. & W. 437.

<sup>3</sup> Hunter v. Wright, 12 Allen, 548;

Means v. Williamson, 37 Me. 556; Williams v. Lerch, 56 Cal. 330.

<sup>4</sup> See Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660; Scudder v. Worster, 11 Cush. 573; Boswell v. Green, 1 Dutch. 390; Shepardson v. Cary, 29 Wis. 34; supra, § 385.

will be allowed full scope.<sup>1</sup> Usage may give precision to a point which in terms has been left undefined, so far as the supposition avails that the parties knew of its existence, and contracted with reference to it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 399. Where Thing Sold is already in Buyer's Possession, no Formal Delivery.—If the thing sold be already in the buyer's possession and control, the property will pass without any formal act of delivery, the circumstances and subsequent conduct of the parties being consistent with such mutual intention.<sup>3</sup>

§ 400. Seller's Responsibility as to a Chattel sold but not delivered.—Before passing from the subject of the seller's duties, it is proper to inquire to what extent he is personally responsible for the safety of personal property which he has sold, but not yet delivered. This must depend upon the circumstances of the sale, as evincing that the property right has or has not passed to the buyer. If the property has not passed, the seller is still owner; if it has, he is only a bailee for the buyer. As bailee, he appears to become bound to that degree of care and attention which men of common prudence bestow upon their own property, provided the buyer was not under a present obligation to remove the thing purchased;<sup>4</sup> or as in the usual case of a bailment for mutual benefit. But where the buyer is under such an obligation,—as, if the time for receiving the goods has elapsed, and the buyer is at default,—the seller is responsible only for fraud or gross negligence;<sup>5</sup> for he is here a bailee for the buyer's sole benefit. And where, upon a complete execution of the contract and the receipt of full pay-

<sup>1</sup> See Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491; Robinson v. United States, 13 Wall. 363; Story Sales, § 388.

<sup>2</sup> Upon evidence of usage, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a contract to deliver so many bushels of "first quality clear barley," meant to deliver the barley in sacks; the contract not stating whether it was to be delivered in sacks or loose. Robinson v. United States, 13 Wall. 363.

And see Steel Works v. Dewey, 37 Ohio St. 242; Shepard v. Lynch, 26 Kans. 377.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 312; Warden v. Marshall, 99 Mass. 305; Lake v. Morris, 30 Conn. 201; Stowe v. Taft, 58 N. H. 445.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, §§ 300, 394. And see Schoul. Bailm. passim.

<sup>5</sup> Ib.

ment, the seller consents, as a favor to the buyer, and without receiving compensation for his trouble, to take some special charge with reference to its custody or conveyance, his liability is limited to the latter extent. A contract for safe-keeping, under circumstances like these, will not be inferred, but must be founded in a clearly manifested intent.<sup>1</sup>

§ 401. Seller's Duty as to Delivery; Concluding Summary. — On the whole, then, the seller's duty of making delivery is commensurate throughout with the scope and purpose of the contract. The identical, genuine goods in suitable condition should be delivered. All acts necessarily preceding delivery†, to which the seller may have bound himself, with reference to the subject-matter, — such as manufacturing, raising, appropriating to the contract, or putting into a deliverable condition, — must, of course, be performed; next, delivery itself, whether of a merely permissive character on one's own premises, or by means of a carrier, or with intent to bring the thing to the buyer's own door; delivery in all cases being according to the nature of the subject-matter and attendant circumstances. This delivery should be fully and promptly made. Nor can the seller safely rest here, if the circumstances of the transaction are such as require more to be done in justice to the buyer before the latter can be put in default; and this may be an opportunity for the buyer to inspect what he has ordered, or a surrender by the seller of the documents which properly accompany goods on their transit, or some notification.

From first to last, the seller must perform according to the spirit of the bargain; and when he has done so, or has fully tendered the performance of all he undertook to do, expressly or by implication, by way of condition precedent or concurrent, he stands in a position to enforce the contract against the buyer, who must now perform his part, or suffer the consequences of a default. What are the buyer's duties in this exigency will be shown in the next chapter.

<sup>1</sup> McKay v. Hamblin, 40 Miss. 472.

CHAPTER VIII.

BUYER'S DUTIES; ACCEPTANCE AND PAYMENT.

§ 402. Acceptance and Payment the Buyer's Leading Obligations. — Any contract may take such form as to impose a variety of duties on one or the other party: but, in contracts of sale of personal property, there are but two leading obligations exacted from the buyer; and these are, — (I.) acceptance of the chattels; (II.) payment for them. To these obligations, with their proper incidents, the present chapter will be devoted.

§ 403. As to Acceptance of the Chattels; General Principles. — I. As to acceptance of the chattels. Acceptance is not a word which readily conveys the full idea of the buyer's obligation in our present connection; for the party accepting a thing is naturally taken as passive and inert in comparison with him who tenders it. Now, the buyer, so far from waiting in all cases for the seller to bring him the subject-matter of sale, is rather presumed, as we have shown, under an obligation to go to the seller and fetch it; the seller, not the buyer, being presumed the quiescent party, provided the minds of the parties have actually met upon a specific subject of sale for a specific price. Still the contract may have been such, that the seller stands bound, not only to take the initiative by giving notice of his readiness to deliver, but actually to deliver; to deliver, not to a carrier only, but, it may be, to the buyer's own door; to his house it may be, or to his place of business. In such a case the buyer is the comparatively quiescent, passive party. But delivery may be made of that which is in a third person's custody; a case presumably, though not necessarily, calling upon the buyer to bestir himself, and procure a sub-delivery as soon as he has provided himself with a delivery order or other suitable indicia of title from the seller. And, finally, the subject-matter sold may, at the time of the bargain, be already in the buyer's custody; in which event, neither formal delivery nor formal acceptance is needful for effecting an entire transfer of the legal title.<sup>1</sup> Whatever be the nature or the situation of the property bargained for, the duties of seller and buyer are reciprocal; and the measure of the buyer's duty of acceptance must be according to the plain intent of the contract, — his part being to fill out what the seller's performance has left incomplete towards effecting a legal transfer of possession and possessory rights. His duty of acceptance may bind him to take, and not merely to receive; though, indeed, he may have to do neither: but, such as the contract makes it, he must perform his obligation with zeal and discretion.<sup>2</sup>

§ 404. Acceptance is more than a Mere Receipt. — We are also to distinguish acceptance from the mere receipt of the thing. Legal acceptance under a sale includes the idea of receipt: but to receipt is superadded the element of intention to retain in accordance with the contract; that is to say, as the new owner by purchase. This latter is the strong element, after all; for, while an actual receipt by virtue of the purchase is not always requisite, there must be in every case the intention to retain in accordance with the bargain, else the contract has never been completely executed. Acceptance signifies, not only that the thing is received, but that it is received in satisfactory fulfilment of the seller's obligation to deliver, as a full compliance with the bargain previously entered into.<sup>3</sup>

§ 405. Buyer's Duty as to Acceptance where Seller has performed his Part. — Now, supposing the seller to have performed all that was needful on his part in tendering delivery of the goods, what is incumbent on the buyer? In the first place, the buyer must, with reasonable promptness, put himself where

<sup>1</sup> See, supra, §§ 382-385.

<sup>2</sup> If it was mutually agreed that the buyer should name the place of delivery, he must do so in due time; otherwise the seller's offer of readiness to perform will put him in default. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549. And see Greaves v. Ashlin, 3 Camp. 426; Denman v. Cherokee Iron Co., 56 Ga. 319.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 1; Story Sales, §§ 404-408.

the goods shall come into his own possession, without subjecting the seller to further risk or trouble; sending for them, as the ordinary presumption goes; at all events, holding himself prepared to receive them at the proper time, in the proper place, and in the proper manner, according to the terms of the bargain. The buyer's performance of this obligation must be adequate to the occasion; and for unreasonable delay in receiving or taking possession he subjects himself to liability for such extra charges and expenses as may be incurred in the custody of the goods, besides running the risk of damage and loss. What is an unreasonable delay must depend upon circumstances. The seller who does his own part stands clear: but prudence requires him to notify the buyer in case of doubt; and for a simple, unexplained delay on the buyer's part in coming to take the thing away, the seller would hardly be justified in treating the bargain as rescinded.<sup>1</sup>

§ 406. Buyer's Right to Inspect, etc., before Accepting.— But the buyer is not obliged to carry his receipt of possession to the full extent of acceptance with his eyes shut. Every contract of sale calls for a rational interpretation; and where, under the peculiar circumstances, that inspection which shall show whether the chattels tendered by the seller are such as were bargained for must necessarily await their actual receipt, the law leaves an opening. The instances in point have been incidentally considered already, and chiefly concern unascertained chattels made or supplied to order. Thus, the bulk being delivered under a sale by sample, the buyer ought to be allowed an opportunity to compare and ascertain for himself the substantial correspondence of bulk and sample.<sup>2</sup> He is not obliged to keep goods sent to his order without ever being allowed to inspect them. Even if specific goods were mutually agreed upon, which the seller has undertaken to send home to the buyer, the seller cannot rightfully deprive the buyer of the opportunity, upon their arrival, to remove the wrappers, or break the package, so as to make sure that the identical thing is brought him.<sup>1</sup> Nor is the buyer, any more than the seller, obliged to go beyond his fair share in fulfilment of the contract. It may accommodate, to be sure, for the buyer to select his own goods from a larger quantity offered him, or to accept part performance, or to wait unreasonably long at his place of business in order that the delivery may be complete, and all be found satisfactory; but his obligation to do so is a very different matter.<sup>2</sup> "In a word," says one writer, "as delivery and acceptance are concurrent conditions, it is enough to say that the vendee's duty of acceptance depends altogether upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of the delivery offered by the vendor."<sup>3</sup> And primâ facie, we may add, the place of delivery is also the proper place for a conclusive inspection.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 404; Benj. Sales, supra, § 359; Couston v. Chapman, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 1.

<sup>2</sup> Lorymer v. Smith, 1 B. & C. 1; ham, 79 Ill. 131.

Whether in the course of inspection the buyer has a right to fully weigh, measure, or manipulate the goods, must depend upon the circumstances of the case and the reasonable intent of the contract; this being certain, that the buyer must not go beyond its proper import, and make delay or expose the thing to injury in carrying out an inappropriate examination. He might well be permitted to weigh or measure if his liability to pay depended upon the exact weight or measurement, and no final test had already been applied; but such acts are clearly superfluous where he has bound himself to pay so much for the thing as it stands.<sup>5</sup> In general, the buyer has a reasonable time after receiving the goods to examine and inspect, according to circumstances or the mutual intent of the transaction; but unless he rejects and notifies within such reasonable time, he is held to have accepted.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Isherwood v. Whitmore, 10 M. & W. 757; supra, § 319.

<sup>2</sup> Startup v. McDonald, 6 M. & G. 593; Hart v. Mills, 15 M. & W. 85; Kein v. Tupper, 52 N. Y. 550; supra, §§ 388-390, and cases cited.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Perkins v. Bell [1893], 1 Q. B. 193; White v. Harvey, 85 Me. 212;

Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Metropolitan R., 157 U. S. 94. Cf. 8 Houst. 7.

<sup>5</sup> See Pettitt v. Mitchell, 4 M. & G. 819.

<sup>6</sup> Cases supra; Pierson v. Crooks, 115 N. Y. 539; § 408. This rule applies particularly as to open and ascertainable defects, and not so as to debar a buyer from remedies upon a § 407. Acceptance; how Inferable from Words and Acts; Detention, etc. — Acceptance of goods in the fullest sense may be expressed by words or acts; and it is likewise inferable from the facts.<sup>1</sup> A detention of custody by the buyer becomes, in the lapse of time, decisive of the question; for, should he mean for cause not to accept the goods, it is his duty to promptly reject them, and to throw them back upon the seller.<sup>2</sup> An American case in point is Treadwell v. Reynolds. A., through his agent, bought wool of B., whose name and address he did not know; but his agent did. Three days after the wool was delivered, A. notified his agent that he refused to accept the wool; making no objection to the quantity or quality, but merely for the delay of its delivery. He did not tell his agent to notify B. of this refusal; nor did he take any steps to find out B.'s address, or to bring the matter to his knowledge, until six weeks after the wool had been delivered. The wool had meantime fallen in market value, and B. supposed all the time it had been sold. It was very properly ruled, that A., by retaining the wool so long, had become fully liable for the price.<sup>3</sup> Even the three days' detention, which might possibly have been allowed for testing the quantity and quality, seems to be an unreasonably long period for deciding, as in this case, to refuse acceptance on the mere ground of a delayed delivery;<sup>4</sup> for, in estimating how long a period of detention is consistent with the buyer's purpose of refusing acceptance, it is material to consider the grounds on which such refusal is based.

warranty of quality or as for fraud, in matters not readily discoverable. 115 N. Y. 539.

<sup>1</sup> For evidence held insufficient to establish a knowing acceptance by the buyer, see Gowing v. Knowles, 118 Mass. 232.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 405; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 1; Bianchi v. Nash, 1 M. & W. 545; 2 Pars. Contr. 221; Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250; Treadwell v. Reynolds, 39 Conn. 31; Boughton v. Standish, 48 Vt.

594; Hirshhorn v. Stewart, 49 Iowa, 418.

<sup>3</sup> Treadwell v. Reynolds, 39 Conn. 31.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. But in Sanders v. Jameson, 2 C. & K. 557, a usage of the Liverpool corn-market, allowing the buyer but one day to object that corn sold was not equal to the sample, was held to be reasonable. In Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250, a period of about seven weeks was thought by Lord Chelmsford to be Still more conclusive upon the buyer is a detention of custody accompanied by the exercise of acts of ownership over the chattels, such as the attempt to sell the property over as one's own before giving notice of non-acceptance;<sup>1</sup> or giving the goods in security.<sup>2</sup> Whether the buyer has put himself without the pale of the law, in this respect, must depend upon all the facts, not upon words alone which are not borne out by the buyer's own conduct. He cannot fully accept and then change his mind and reject.<sup>3</sup> An evasive, shuffling course of procedure will not answer; nor can the buyer's refusal of acceptance avail him when (to use Lord Abinger's expression) he has exposed himself to the imputation of playing fast and loose, declaring that he will not accept the goods, but at the same time preventing the seller from dealing with them as his own.<sup>4</sup> That the buyer examined too long for examining large lots of wine sold by sample: a week, he said, would have sufficed.

<sup>1</sup> Parker v. Palmer, 4 B. & A. 387; Chapman v. Morton, 11 M. & W. 534; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 1; Story Sales, § 405; Delamater v. Chappell, 48 Md. 244. Even where one disclaims having ordered goods at all, he becomes liable if, instead of returning them, or notifying the sender to take them, he exercises acts of ownership over the goods. Bartholomae v. Paull, 18 W. Va. 771; Wellauer v. Fellows, 48 Wis. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Leggett Co. v. Collier, 89 Iowa 144.

<sup>3</sup> See Brown v. Nelson, 66 Vt. 660.

<sup>4</sup> Chapman v. Morton, 11 M. & W. 534, per Lord Abinger. In a Scotch appeal case to the House of Lords, a person had ordered from public auction various lots of wine, as per sample. The wine was delivered on the 11th of April; the buyer examined it, and on the 31st of May wrote to say that two lots were objected to, but that he was willing to pay for the rest, and also, when supplied according to the sample, for these lots. In the same letter he stated the damages which he wished allowed him for breach of contract. The seller rejected this proposal; and the controversy was carried on by letter until June 13th, when the seller sued. The buyer had kept all the lots, neither paying, nor tendering pay, for what he admitted were satisfactory. It was decided (the case going up to the House of Lords among the Scotch appeals), that the sale of each lot was a separate contract; that, if the lots objected to were inferior to the sample (as was evidently the case), the buyer, being unwilling to keep them, should reject and return each of them; that, if the seller would not acquiesce in the rejection, the buyer ought to place them in neutral custody, giving the seller notice; and that a buyer has no right to hold to the contract, and ask for other goods than those he rejects. Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250. "Where a party," says Lord Chelmsford, "desires to rescind a purchase upon the ground that the quality of the goods does not cor-goods when delivered and made no objection to them is a stronger fact showing acceptance than their simple detention.<sup>1</sup>

§ 408. Buyer refusing Acceptance; his Proper Course.—The buyer must avoid crippling himself by trying to bear off too many advantages, — negotiating for a favorable settlement of the seller's breach, while clinging to the goods which he professes to have rejected; he should put his refusal of acceptance so plainly and so promptly before the seller, as to leave no doubt of his real intention in the premises, and get rid of the custody of the goods as soon as possible, unless he has concluded to keep them.<sup>2</sup> It is only where the buyer, by some artifice of the seller, or under other circumstances imputing to himself no negligence, is really deprived of his proper opportunity to examine, that his right of acceptance, after the seller has tendered delivery, may long remain in abeyance.<sup>3</sup>

On the other hand, the buyer who means to refuse acceptance for cause is not narrowed to a technical performance of his duty: for the real object which the law keeps in view is, that the other party shall receive such formal and distinct notice of non-acceptance that he may secure his own interests, and perform seasonably what is incumbent upon him in return; and with this it is satisfied. Thus, where the buyer met the seller on the day of delivery, and told him that the goods delivered were still on his premises, that they were bad, that he would not have them nor pay for them, and that the seller might do what he liked with them, it was held that he had sufficiently performed his duty, and was not liable respond with the sample, it is his duty to make a distinct offer to return, or, in fact, to return, the goods, by stating to the vendor that the goods are at his risk; that they no longer belong to the purchaser; that the purchaser rejects them; that he throws them back on the vendor's hands; and that the contract is rescinded." Ib.

<sup>1</sup> Small v. Stevens, 65 N. H. 209. Where the market rate fluctuates greatly, the buyer's conduct must not be in unreasonable suspense. 59 Fed. Rep. 83.

<sup>2</sup> Couston v. Chapman, supra.

As to modern practice permitting the buyer to set up damages arising from a breach of warranty, although he has not returned or offered to return the goods, see post, c. 15, as to buyer's remedies.

<sup>3</sup> See Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321.

for the price.<sup>1</sup> Formality or fulness in stating reasons for rejection appears not strongly insisted upon.<sup>2</sup> Nor is it essential in all cases that the buyer return the goods when he rejects; for the fact of prompt rejection and notice is what the law most insists upon.<sup>3</sup>

§ 409. Seller may waive Prompt Notice of Non-Acceptance.

— The seller may have waived strict notice of non-acceptance and return of the goods by entering into some special arrangement inconsistent with enforcing such requirements. Thus where the buyer and the seller's agent agree that if the goods sent are not satisfactory the buyer need not accept them, but shall retain them until the agent returns to the buyer's shop, the buyer is excused from giving an earlier notice of his refusal to accept.<sup>4</sup>

§ 410. Acceptance where Delivery is by Instalments, etc.—

Where delivery is made by instalments, the buyer's acts of acceptance should naturally correspond; so that the buyer's acceptance of the first instalment will not debar him from rejecting, on proper grounds, the portions subsequently delivered.<sup>5</sup> But, of course, a buyer may acquiesce in modifications of the original contract of delivery, so as to be bound to new terms of acceptance, — a state of things which often occurs under instalment contracts.<sup>6</sup> If less than the quantity is delivered the buyer is not bound to accept; nor even if more is sent, except so far as a reasonable separation of so much as he had ordered would suit the transaction.<sup>7</sup> Yet the act of final acceptance once completed under a contract of sale, the buyer is precluded from asserting afterwards

<sup>1</sup> Grimoldby v. Wells, L. R. 10 C. P. 391. It was here said that the buyer need not offer to send the goods back, nor place them in neutral custody. But cf. Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250.

<sup>2</sup> See White Bronze Co. v. Gillette, 88 Mich. 231, 232.

<sup>3</sup> See 78 Ill. 69.

<sup>4</sup> Suit v. Bonnell, 33 Wis. 180. See Kahn v. Klabunde, 50 Wis. 235. And where shutters are put up, to which the buyer objected and the seller agreed to alter them so as to correspond with the order, the seller must do as he promised before suing for payment. Belt v. Stetson, 26 Minn. 411.

<sup>5</sup> Hubbard v. George, 49 Ill. 275.

<sup>6</sup> See Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; supra, § 390; Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341.

<sup>7</sup> § 390; 10 Hun, 227; Perry v. Iron Co., 16 R. I. 318; Brownfield v. Johnson, 128 Penn. St. 254.

that the goods were not of the quality or quantity agreed, unless he can show fraud or a warranty. This rule holds true, even though the goods contracted for were to be of various qualities, and situated in various places; as where, in a sale of lumber at so much for "prime," so much for "merchantable," and so much for "refuse," a buyer had receipted, after full opportunity to examine the entire lot, for a described quantity of each.<sup>1</sup>

As a buyer may refuse to take less than the quantity purchased, so may he return the parcels first received, where a whole quantity was ordered to be delivered from time to time, and the latter deliveries are not duly made.<sup>2</sup> But where delivery is tendered for the purpose of fulfilling the seller's contract in part, the buyer cannot take and hold the goods tendered for any other purpose.<sup>3</sup> Wherever a contract of sale is not entire and indivisible in its nature, an acceptance of one kind of goods does not preclude the buyer from rejecting those of another kind.<sup>4</sup>

§ 411. As to Payment; Modes of Payment stated.—II. As to payment for the chattels. To settle for what he has bought in conformity with the terms of the bargain is the last duty of the buyer, and quite commonly the final act of performance which renders the contract of sale fully executed. Payment of the price may be of three sorts: (1st) in cash;

<sup>1</sup> McCormick v. Sarson, 45 N. Y. 265. And see Gilson v. Bingham, 43 Vt. 410.

This subject of acceptance will come up once more in connection with the Statute of Frauds. Infra, cs. 9, 10.

<sup>2</sup> Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; Bowes v. Shand, 2 App. Cas. 455; Reuter v. Sala, 4 C. P. D. 239; Marland v. Stanwood, 101 Mass. 470; 63 Ill. 288; supra, § 390. See also Houck v. Miller, 45 L. T. 202.

<sup>3</sup> Burrill v. Sampson, 73 Me. 286.

As to non-fulfilment by the seller in time, place, quantity, and manner of delivery, see preceding chapter.

<sup>4</sup> Pierson v. Crooks, 115 N. Y. 539.

Where an order for goods separately specifies the quality and price of each article, the contract is severable, so that the purchaser may, on receipt of the goods, retain those that comply with the order and refuse those that do not. Potsdamer v. Kruse, 57 Minn. 193; Holmes v. Gregg, 66 N. H. 621.

On the other hand a contract for a lot of goods, all to be of a certain quality, for a lump sum, is an entire contract; and the buyer may accept all, or reject all, if part of the goods sent do not accord with the contract. Sidney Furniture Co. v. School District, 158 Penn. St. 35. See also Gilbert v. Lichtenberg, 98 Mich. 174.

(2d) by a present adjustment not in cash, as where the buyer gives his notes for the price; (3d) on credit. And the mode of payment in any case will depend upon the agreement, express or implied, of the parties, neither of whom can claim the sole right to vary it; though optional modes are sometimes agreed upon.

§ 412. Payment in Cash; Ordinary Rule.—(1st.) As to payment in cash. Where there is nothing in the contract to the contrary, payment in cash as soon as the bargain is struck is the rule;<sup>1</sup> and, even if the seller has bound himself to make delivery upon the understanding that no title shall vest in the buyer until the thing sold is paid for, a cash payment will be exacted from the buyer concurrent with delivery, according to the universal presumption.<sup>2</sup> In the former instance, the buyer ought not to wait until a demand is made upon him for the price; for as it is his duty to fetch the goods from the seller's premises within a reasonable time, so ought he, at the same time, to offer that payment without which he can have no right to remove them.<sup>3</sup> In the latter instance, payment and delivery being in the nature of mutual conditions precedent or concurrent, the tender of the goods after the manner agreed upon serves itself as a demand of their price.<sup>4</sup> Where, however, provision is made that the price shall be payable only after some formal demand or notice, the buyer should be allowed a reasonable time both for getting his notice and for complying with it.<sup>5</sup>

§ 413. The Same Subject; Time and Manner of Payment.—The time and manner of the buyer's performance of this obligation to pay the price must, however, depend greatly upon the natural sequence of mutual stipulations in the contract. Thus, under a sale of marble which provides for a

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 403; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2; supra, § 235; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 292; Farlow v. Ellis, 15 Gray, 29; Hammett v. Linneman, 48 N. Y. 399; Brehen v. O'Donnell, 34 N. J. L. 408; Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491; Cassell v. Backrack, 42 Miss. 56; Goldsmith v. Bryant, 26 Wis. 34.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 384, 403.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, § 292.

<sup>5</sup> Brighty v. Norton, 3 B. & S. 305; Massey v. Sladen, L. R. 4 Ex. 13.

measurement to be stated at length, at the seller's instance, the payment to be based upon this statement, the buyer is not bound to pay or tender payment for the marble before the statement is presented; and for the seller's failure to measure, and make the statement, he may sue as for breach of contract.<sup>1</sup> On the other hand, when the buyer himself fixes a time to call for the selection and delivery of the chattels, to which the seller assents, he should not come for them at that date without being prepared to pay cash in full, as otherwise his later tender of the price may be refused.<sup>2</sup> Where the contract fixes no time of payment, the seller agreeing to deliver for a certain price, the buyer should be prepared to pay on demand at the time of delivery.<sup>3</sup>

Cash payment on tender of the bill of lading, duly indorsed over so as to pass the property, is sometimes the stipulated mode.<sup>4</sup>

§ 414. The Same Subject; Payment by Instalments.—An entire contract, though involving part deliveries, does not oblige the buyer to make payment until the seller has delivered or tendered the entire quantity; with this reservation, of course, that the buyer takes care not to so finally accept goods tendered in part performance as to bind himself for a corresponding price.<sup>5</sup> Nor can a buyer, by offering part payment under an entire contract, claim an equivalent portion of the goods, though they happen to be divisible.<sup>6</sup> But that which at first glance might be mistaken for an entire contract is frequently found to be an aggregate of separate bargains, each with its attendant liabilities.<sup>7</sup> Where this is the case, the buyer is bound to punctual payment for each lot; and it is even held that the seller thus entitled to

<sup>1</sup> Lowry v. Barelli, 21 Ohio St. 324. And see supra, § 293.

<sup>2</sup> Beauchamp v. Archer, 58 Cal. 431. And this, notwithstanding the buyer had previously advanced part of the price under an entire contract. Ib. And see next section.

<sup>3</sup> Brandon Man. Co. v. Morse, 48 Vt. 322.

<sup>4</sup> Sanders v. Maclean, 11 Q. B. D. 327.

<sup>5</sup> Oxendale v. Wetherell, 9 B. & C. 386; supra, §§ 390, 410.

<sup>6</sup> Story Sales, § 403.

<sup>7</sup> See Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250; Veerkamp v. Huldard Co., 58 Cal. 229.

his pay for each delivery does not waive his right, but may treat the contract as broken by a single failure to make payment upon tender of delivery, although he has repeatedly delivered loads without payment, and has given the buyer no notice of his intention to insist upon the terms of the bargain.<sup>1</sup>

§ 415. Payment in Cash, with Risks of Delivery, etc.— We have shown that where a legal transfer of property right in a chattel has taken place, although the thing be destroyed before it reaches the buyer, he is responsible for the price; and that the same consequences must ensue wherever the buyer assumes the risks of delivery. So, too, if the buyer has paid cash in advance of delivery, he cannot, under such circumstances, claim to recover it.<sup>2</sup> It matters not that the goods are still in the seller's possession, save so far as this may aid in proving that property had not yet passed under the contract as mutually intended, or that the seller as a bailee was culpable; for, when a transfer of property has taken place, the seller's possession is only that of bailee for the buyer, and his liability a limited one accordingly.<sup>3</sup>

§ 416. Rules as to Cash Payment applied; Tender, etc.— The buyer's common obligation to pay cash is capable of being varied by circumstances, according to the different shades of intent in a contract. Not payment alone relieves him from responsibility, but a tender of what is due will suffice; and as to payment and tender under a sale, we are led to apply constantly the ordinary rules as between debtor and creditor.<sup>4</sup> Payment should be made under the seller's directions, and in the manner, and with the precautions, which he may have chosen to prescribe. To guard himself against liability to loss in transmitting what is due, the buyer should

<sup>1</sup> Gardner v. Clark, 21 N. Y. 399. But great laxity in carrying out such a bargain might go to show that the parties had mutually consented to modify the original terms of the contract.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, cs. 2, 3; Rugg v. Minett, 11 East, 210; Castle v. Playford, not send through the mail when he is requested to send by express; nor by ordinary letter, when a registered letter is called for; nor by any unusual conveyance involving extra risks, without direction: and, whenever exact compliance with the seller's orders is impossible, he should tell him so, and get a change of direction, rather than employ any more hazardous course of transmission.<sup>1</sup> Payment of a debt is not proved merely by showing that the amount was duly deposited in the post-office, directed to the creditor, unless that mode was authorized by the creditor expressly, or by implication from the contract and the usual course of dealing; but the risk continues the vendor's until the money is duly received at its place of destination.<sup>2</sup> But a tender of cash payment for goods sold is usually made to the seller or his agent on the spot where the buyer is bound to accept them; acceptance and payment being simultaneous acts, and the seller or his representative putting himself before the buyer to receive what is due him. The time and place of payment are, therefore, easily fixed in the majority of cash sales. Should the buyer have agreed to pay at any particular time or place, his undertaking will be construed after the same fashion as the seller's promise to deliver;<sup>3</sup> and he will be bound strictly to perform as promised.

L. R. 5 Ex. 165; 7 Ex. 98; Martineau v. Kitching, L. R. 7 Q. B. 436; Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78; 54 Wis. 389.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, § 400.

<sup>4</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 365-374.

A tender of money should be, as we have seen, in the lawful coin of the country, or such paper-money as the constitution and laws may have legalized for that purpose: but a tender in bank-notes, or even foreign money, will answer, if not objected to at the time; and the buyer's check is frequently accepted in payment, on the supposition that it will be duly honored at the bank on which it is drawn.<sup>4</sup> But

<sup>1</sup> Williams v. Carpenter, 36 Ala. 9; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2; Gordon v. Strange, 1 Ex. 477; Caine v. Coulson, 1 H. & C. 764.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Gurney v. Howe, 9 Gray, 404.

<sup>3</sup> Bac. Abr. Tender, B. 2; McClartey v. Gokey, 31 Iowa, 505; supra, §§ 385, 386; Beauchamp v. Archer, 58 Cal. 431.

<sup>4</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 365, 367; Hallowell Bank v. Howard, 13 Mass. 234; Pickard v. Bankes, 13 East, 20; Ehrensperger v. Anderson, 3 Ex. 148; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457; Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421; Polyglass v. Oliver, 2 Cr. & J. 65; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2.

parties may expressly agree that payment shall only be made in coin of a certain kind, or in a certain commodity.<sup>1</sup> The exact amount due should be tendered, — that is to say, an amount of money equal to the price of the goods ;<sup>2</sup> not less than the proper amount, under any circumstances, save that one who owes several distinct debts may always make a tender sufficient for any one of the debts he chooses to specify.<sup>3</sup> But a tender of more than the amount due is good, on the maxim that the greater always contains the less, though not to the extent of putting an unwilling creditor to the trouble of making change ; since it is the debtor, and not the creditor, who has that duty to perform.<sup>4</sup> A tender of a gross sum due on several demands, without designating the amount tendered upon each, is sufficient.<sup>5</sup>

This duty of payment or tender on the buyer's part is subject to the qualifications usually attendant upon the performance of a condition precedent.<sup>6</sup> A legal tender, strictly speaking, requires the production of the money in the seller's presence ; and yet the latter's conduct may amount to a waiver of its production, and so exonerate from strict performance a buyer who has done all that the case fairly admitted. The cases are quite numerous as to what is or is not a sufficient waiver of full tender on the creditor's part. They establish that a debtor must, in general, not only have the money about him, but actually produce it before the seller ; that it is not enough for some one else to have the money who can readily be summoned, nor that the debtor

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 340 ; Legal Tender Cases, 12 Wall. 457 ; ib. 687.

There might be a barter instead of a strict sale. Or, again, the price might be payable partly in other chattels and partly in money. Supra, § 211 ; Cummings v. Dudley, 60 Cal. 383. Sometimes a buyer may agree as part payment to assume certain debts of the seller. Sonstiby v. Keeley, 11 Fed. Rep. 578.

<sup>2</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 365, 366 ; 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 439 ; Dixon v. Clarke, 5 C. B. 365.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. ; Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2 ; Dean v. James, 4 B. & Ad. 546 ; Watkins v. Robb, 2 Esp. 711.

<sup>5</sup> Thetford v. Hubbard, 22 Vt. 440.

<sup>6</sup> Dickinson v. Shee, 4 Esp. 68 ; Leatherdale v. Sweepstone, 3 C. & P. 342 ; Hazard v. Loring, 10 Cush. 267 ; Searight v. Calbraith, 4 Dall. 325 ; Bakeman v. Pooler, 15 Wend. 637 ; Sargent v. Graham, 5 N. H. 440 ; Knight v. Abbott, 30 Vt. 577.

has it in his own pocket. The sight of money will often tempt a hesitating creditor to yield; and hence, if the correct sum in cash can be shown him in such a manner that the creditor may examine and count it over, the debtor should not stop short of so producing it before him; though it would be for the creditor, and not for the debtor, to count it over, and verify the amount. Where the money is contained in a bag, purse, or package, which requires to be opened, it is safer for the buyer to open it, and bring forth the contents, in order that the tender may be full at all points; and, if he does not show plainly just what he has, he should, at any rate, state its amount. But where the creditor checks the tender by positively refusing to take the money, or by leaving the buyer's presence, the debtor having done all he reasonably could, meanwhile, by making known his purpose and beginning to execute it, the actual production of the money will be dispensed with, and the debtor becomes entitled to the legal advantage of a tender.<sup>1</sup> So may a waiver of full tender be inferred where the seller refuses to take the sum which is offered him, and requires costs or other additional charges to be added which the debtor is under no obligation to pay.<sup>2</sup>

§ 417. The Same Subject.—A tender, to be good, must be free from all superfluous conditions or qualifications to which a creditor might rightfully object. Thus a debtor cannot insist, according to some authorities, that the creditor shall admit in receiving the amount tendered him that nothing more is due, or give an acquittance in full of all demands; nor, indeed, would it be essential for the buyer's own protection, in making the payment, that the receipt should be in full.<sup>3</sup> But the debtor may exclude any harsh legal presumption against himself by his method of tender-

<sup>1</sup> Breed v. Hurd, 6 Pick. 356; Douglas v. Patrick, 3 T. R. 683; Alexander v. Brown, 1 C. & P. 288; Wheeler v. Knaggs, 8 Ohio, 169; Thorne v. Mosher, 5 C. E. Green, 257.

<sup>2</sup> See Ashburn v. Poulter, 35 Conn. 553.

<sup>3</sup> Eckstein v. Reynolds, 7 Ad. & E. 80; Bowen v. Owen, 11 Q. B. 130; Hepburn v. Auld, 1 Cr. 321; Brooklyn Bank v. DeGrauw, 23 Wend. 342; Richardson v. Boston Chemical Laboratory, 9 Met. 42.

ing : he may say, without insisting upon an acknowledgment from the other party, that he tenders this in full of all demands.<sup>1</sup> So, too, is a tender good, though accompanied by a protest that the amount paid was not lawfully due.<sup>2</sup> It would appear, too, notwithstanding the adverse attitude of some of the earlier decisions, that the debtor has a right to request a receipt for what he pays over.<sup>3</sup> But the right to require a receipt might depend upon circumstances. Large sales of personal property, as, for instance, of a cargo of merchandise, are often accompanied by invoices and other vouchers which are transferable upon receipt of payment : in small sales by retail, delivery of the goods will often sufficiently show that the cash has been paid ; while, again, it is quite customary in a sale to give the buyer a bill of items which the seller receipts at the foot upon getting his money.

The object of a tender is to relieve the buyer from the imputation of default, and to save all possible accruing damages and interest ; not, of course, to avoid the liability of ultimately paying the principal sum. It means, in a sale, that the buyer admits himself bound to pay a certain amount in discharge of the seller's claim, and no more. Hence, if his tender is once refused, the debtor must hold himself still ready to pay over whenever the creditor finally concludes to accept the sum offered, and demands it at any reasonable time or place.<sup>4</sup> If suit be brought for the price, the practice is to pay the money into court, and abide by the result of the trial.<sup>5</sup> Meantime the buyer may keep it, or put it on deposit ; though it should be added, that he cannot compel the creditor to look to any depositary for the money, but must charge himself with the duty of fetching it. If the debtor, upon the creditor's subsequent reasonable demand,

<sup>1</sup> Robinson v. Ferraday, 8 C. & P. 752 ; Bull v. Parker, 1 Q. B. 409 ; Bowen v. Owen, 11 Q. B. 130. But see Sutton v. Hawkins, 8 C. & P. 259.

<sup>2</sup> Scott v. Uxbridge R. R. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 596.

<sup>3</sup> In England, the point is settled by legislation in the buyer's favor.

Stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, §§ 3, 4 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2. See Richardson v. Jackson, 8 M. & W. 298 ; Wood v. Hitchcock, 20 Wend. 47.

<sup>4</sup> Town v. Trow, 24 Pick. 168.

<sup>5</sup> See James v. Vane, 2 E. & E. 883.

does not pay or tender what is due, he will lose the benefit of his previous tender.<sup>1</sup>

The result may be modified in a given case by the acts and conduct of the parties. Thus, payment is good where the person to whom it is made refuses to accept, if the money is left with him against his wish, and he afterwards refuses to give it up.<sup>2</sup> But the debtor should see that his tender is accepted as he made it, if at all; for if one tenders to his creditor a sum of money in full of all legal claims which the latter may have against him, and the creditor receives it, protesting that it is not enough, but that he will pass it to the debtor's credit upon account, the debtor, by not dissenting to this mode of acceptance, remains liable still for whatever the creditor may afterwards recover against him in excess of the amount tendered.<sup>3</sup>

§ 418. Payment by a Present Adjustment not in Cash; Various Modes.—(2d.) As to payment by a present adjustment not in cash. By paying in whatever circulates as money, the intention manifested is to make a cash adjustment for the goods: and so substantially is it when the buyer gives an ordinary check; for this is merely a convenient method of effecting the same practical result.<sup>4</sup> But when a bill or note is given, there is no cash adjustment of the price; either the instrument stands as a postponement of payment, or its accepted substitute.<sup>5</sup> Which of these it shall be is always a question of intention. Now, a buyer may give his own note simply, or his note strengthened by

<sup>1</sup> Town v. Trow, 24 Pick. 168; Middlesex v. Thomas, 5 C. E. Green, 39.

<sup>2</sup> Rogers v. Rutter, 11 Gray, 410.

<sup>3</sup> Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342. As to application of payments, see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 371.

<sup>4</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 367. The contract, interpreted in the light of sound usage, may determine as to whether one's check is good payment. Where the buyer's check is refused on delivery by the seller, a reasonable time to get the cash is fairly allowed at large business centres. See Bass v. White, 65 N. Y. 565. Such, however, is not the invariable rule, especially in places remote from banks. And the tender of another person's check stands somewhat on the footing of the tender of another person's note. It is, of course, no proper tender, per se. See Beauchamp v. Archer, 58 Cal. 431; post, § 420.

<sup>5</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 367; Cary v. Bancroft, 14 Pick. 315; Ward v. Smith, 7 Wall. 447.

indorsement or other security, or some one else's note; and a similar principle applies to a bill of exchange; each of which three modes should be distinguished when we treat of adjusting the price.

§ 419. Buyer's Own Note or Acceptance, whether Absolute or Conditional Payment. — Where a buyer gives his own note, or accepts the bill which the seller has drawn against the goods, and the goods are thereupon delivered up, the presumption of the common law would be that the seller takes the instrument, not by way of absolute discharge of the price, but as a postponement of payment only; the result of which is that the seller's right to sue for the price revives on the non-payment of the paper at maturity.<sup>1</sup> But in some States the rule is, that, where one indebted gives his note or acceptance for the debt, there is primâ facie an absolute payment made to the creditor.<sup>2</sup>

There is, however, never more than a primâ facie presumption; and any presumption, on the one side or the other, may be rebutted by evidence that the parties intended otherwise.<sup>3</sup> It is a reasonable custom, well established to be sure, that where one sells upon a long credit, and for a large amount, the buyer shall give him his note for the price; this being

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 369; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2; Owenson v. Morse, 7 T. R. 64; Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680; Story Sales, § 219. This is the rule in England; also in New York, New Jersey, and many other American States. Ib.; 2 Chitty Contr. 11th Am. ed. 1135 and notes. See Middlesex v. Thomas, 5 C. E. Green, 39; Smith v. Miller, 43 N. Y. 171; Archibald v. Argall, 53 Ill. 307; Nat. Bank v. Bigler, 83 N. Y. 51; 76 N. Y. 521; Brown v. Olmsted, 50 Cal. 162; Walsh v. Lennon, 98 Ill. 27; Matteson v. Ellsworth, 33 Wis. 488; Bragman v. McGuire, 32 Ark. 733. See also Supreme Court of United States in Kimball, The, 3 Wall. 37.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 219; Fowler v.

Bush, 21 Pick. 230; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 369; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 5 Cush. 158; Ferry v. Baxter, 13 Vt. 452; Paine v. Dwinel, 53 Me. 52; Ward v. Bourne, 56 Me. 161; Smith v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254; Mata-see v. Hughes, 7 Oreg. 39. Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Indiana are among the States which are committed to this rule. In other States, such as Rhode Island, it is stated to be a question of fact. 11 R. I. 617. As this rule of presumption is stated with reference to debts generally, and not payment of price only, and the doctrine itself shifts readily, the reader should carefully consult the general authorities of his own State on this point.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 369.

no more onerous to an honest buyer, while positively advantageous to the seller in affording written proof of the debt, and giving him something upon which he may raise the money elsewhere.<sup>1</sup> But, since we are regarding intention, the effect of giving such a note or bill may be shown in any case to mean that the buyer will be no longer liable for the price of the goods, although he may still be liable on the instrument, or, again, to mean the reverse; and among circumstances which lead to the former conclusion, or, in other words, warrant the inference, that payment was meant to be absolute, and not conditional, is the fact that the buyer had offered to give his time note for the price, or pay cash less discount, and the seller chose the former in preference.<sup>2</sup> In any event, the seller is bound to account for the instrument he has taken, so as to save the buyer harmless, before he can recover for his price; <sup>3</sup> and any holder must take the proper steps for presentment on maturity, so as not to endanger the rights of the buyer with reference to other parties, else the instrument may operate as absolute payment.<sup>4</sup>

If a buyer adjusts the price by giving his note or acceptance with security, it is still a matter of evidence whether this was taken by the seller as an absolute or a conditional payment; but the former might well be presumed. One mode of enlarging the buyer's obligation to pay the price is by giving negotiable paper on which is the name of some other party.<sup>5</sup> The seller must here, as before, pursue his rights so as not to deprive the buyer of his own remedies against others, nor subject him to special risks beyond what he had agreed to assume.<sup>6</sup>

A mode of payment not uncommon in England, where a large quantity is to be delivered by instalments, is for the

<sup>1</sup> See Whitney v. Eaton, 15 Gray, 225.

<sup>2</sup> Cowasjee v. Thompson, 5 Moore, P. C. 165.

<sup>3</sup> Price v. Price, 16 M. & W. 232; Bunney v. Poyntz, 4 B. & Ad. 568.

<sup>4</sup> See Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; Mehlberg v. Fisher, 24 Wis. 607; Hopkins v. Ware, L. R. 4 Ex.

268; Middlesex v. Thomas, 5 C. E. Green, 39; Story Sales, § 434.

<sup>5</sup> Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 153; Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; Mehlberg v. Fisher, 24 Wis. 607; Peacock v. Pursell, 14 C. B. n. s. 728; Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691.

<sup>6</sup> Ib.

buyer to accept the seller's time drafts against inspectors' and wharfingers' certificates, showing that the goods are ready for shipment. In such cases, the seller may require the buyer's acceptance as a condition precedent or concurrent to giving the certificate.<sup>1</sup>

§ 420. Adjustment of Price where a Third Party's Obligation is given. — An adjustment of the price by another party's bill, note, or other obligation, follows much the same course as sales for a price payable in stock, clothing, and the like commodities; the giving of such equivalent amounting to absolute payment in most instances.<sup>2</sup> A negotiable note thus taken is at all events prima facie evidence of payment.<sup>3</sup> Wherever securities thus given turn out to be forged or counterfeit, the seller can rescind the adjustment, on the ground that the consideration has failed; and if, though genuine, they were worthless, and the buyer knew them to be so, the imputation of fraud might afford relief in like manner.<sup>4</sup> And, since the question of payment must still be viewed in the light of mutual intention, even the buyer's good faith in passing over a worthless security will not always cause the transaction to stand as a satisfaction of the debt.<sup>5</sup> But the buyer's rights must still be respected, whatever the character of the adjustment; and if the creditor fails to exercise due diligence in collecting the security, or to give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to pursue his legal remedies against the parties liable thereon, the buyer will be relieved from further obligation; for either the seller took the instrument in question absolutely and as a full equivalent of the price, or else, receiving it conditionally, he thus discharges the buyer by his own laches.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gunn v. Bolcklow, L. R. 10 Ch. 491.

<sup>2</sup> See Humaston v. American Telegraph Co., 20 Wall. 20; supra, § 212; Wise v. Chase, 44 N. Y. 337; Read v. Hutchinson, 3 Camp. 352; Gidney v. Altman, 27 Mich. 226; Hale v. Hays, 54 N. Y. 389.

<sup>3</sup> Ely v. James, 123 Mass. 37.

<sup>4</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 462, 470;

supra, § 318; Goodrich v. Tracy, 43 Vt. 314.

<sup>5</sup> See Roberts v. Fisher, 43 N. Y. 159, where the note of a party already insolvent was given; Weddigen v. Boston, &c. Fabric Co., 100 Mass. 422, the case of a third person's worthless check. Cf. Wright v. Lawton, 37 Conn. 167; supra, § 418.

<sup>6</sup> Camidge v. Allenby, 6 B. & C. 373; Smith v. Mercer, L. R. 3 Ex. 51.

Where a seller has agreed to receive the notes of a third party in payment for the goods sold, he is not bound to deliver up the goods upon tender of the notes if such third party has become meanwhile insolvent.<sup>1</sup> The case is somewhat analogous to that of lien or stoppage in transitu against an insolvent buyer.<sup>2</sup>

§ 421. Compound or Optional Adjustment; Miscellaneous Points.—The adjustment of price agreed upon may be partly in cash, and partly on credit; or it may have been optional as between the two modes on either side.<sup>3</sup> So may a sale be made with the price payable partly in cash and partly in notes; this, too, being left optional or not; according to the facts.<sup>4</sup> But, whatever the mode adopted for absolute or for conditional payment, the buyer is bound to perform strictly as he has agreed to do; otherwise the seller's remedies are left open for recovering without delay the full contract price.<sup>5</sup> The rule of negotiable paper here finds expression; and where the buyer is primarily liable on an instrument, and has lost no recourse against others nor incurred special hazard by the seller's acts with reference to the security given, he cannot set up the seller's laches to prevent the enforcement of his own express obligation.<sup>6</sup>

Payment in fine may be, under mutual agreement, made in specific articles, as representing the price; and here the price fixed upon appears to be what a court will consider in case of suit for default.<sup>7</sup>

§ 422. Sales on Credit; General Rules stated.—(3d.) As

<sup>1</sup> Benedict v. Field, 16 N. Y. 595. And see Chalmers, Ex parte, L. R. 8 Ch. 289.

<sup>2</sup> See c. 14, post; supra, c. 4.

<sup>3</sup> Rugg v. Weir, 16 C. B. n. s. 471; Gray v. White, 108 Mass. 228.

<sup>4</sup> Gray v. White, 108 Mass. 228.

<sup>5</sup> Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691; Gray v. White, 108 Mass. 228; Rugg v. Weir, 16 C. B. n. s. 471.

<sup>6</sup> See Atkinson v. Handon, 2 A. & E. 628; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2. And see, generally, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. pt. 3, cs. 7, 8. Where a sale was made on an adjustment by bills at two and four months, Lord Ellenborough once held that the seller was bound to accept the bills offered within a reasonable time; and that five days was a period unreasonably long for that purpose. Hodgson v. Davies, 2 Camp. 530. The mercantile expression "approved bills" is here held to mean bills which in reason ought to be approved as unobjectionable.

<sup>7</sup> Heywood v. Heywood, 42 Me. 229. See §§ 211, 212.

to sales on credit. Here the mutual understanding is, that the buyer shall have full right and title to the thing sold, and that the seller shall wait for his pay. Credit may be given for a definite or for an indefinite period, in which latter case a reasonable time is to be presumed; and it may either rest in an express agreement, or be inferred from the parties' course of dealing and other circumstances. As the giving of credit derogates from the seller's rights, it should never be presumed, where the buyer was an utter stranger to him; for the foundation of credit is the personal confidence which the creditor reposes in his debtor's honor and ability to pay when the time comes round. As to sales of this character, delivery is completed, and the buyer has all the advantages of ownership: but he is not obliged, in turn, to pay before the expiration of the term; and if he gives his note in postponement of payment, by way of evincing the length of the term, the seller must wait till the time runs out before he can sue.<sup>1</sup> Where no time of credit definitely fixed by express agreement or custom can clearly be shown, payment on the seller's demand seems to be the legal requisite; in which case the seller should put the buyer in default, by sending his bill or other notification that he desires settlement for the goods,—a course prudent in any case of expired credit.<sup>2</sup> The buyer's duty as to payment or tender, on the lapse of his term of credit, is substantially the same as in the other cases we have just considered.

If the seller has given credit conditionally,—as, for instance, upon the buyer's giving him certain periodical acceptances or notes,—and the buyer breaks the condition, the consideration for the credit fails; and the seller may thereupon sue at once for his price, without awaiting the expiration of the proposed term of credit.<sup>3</sup> But the seller may in any case, by waiving exact fulfilment of a condition, enlarge the buyer's opportunity for performance.<sup>1</sup> Where goods are sold on credit, a notice by the buyer before the expiration of the credit that he will not be able to pay does not waive the credit on his behalf.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 236, 237, 403; Stedman v. Gooch, 1 Esp. 5; Rugg v. Weir, 16 C. B. N. S. 471; Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691.

<sup>2</sup> See Hodgson v. Davies, 2 Camp. 530.

<sup>3</sup> Rugg v. Weir, 16 C. B. N. S. 471; Rice v. Andrews, 32 Vt. 691; Story Sales, § 434.

§ 423. Payment through Agent of Buyer or Seller.—Payment may be made through agents as well as their principals; but to make sure that one has authority, as the seller's agent, to receive the price or modify the terms of payment, is the practical difficulty. One who acts within the reasonable scope of his powers as held out by his principal may fitly be recognized by the buyer, where the latter is not aware of special instructions given to the contrary;<sup>3</sup> even if, as respects the principal himself, the so-called agent's acts be indefensible. Thus it is reasonably safe for the buyer who calls at the seller's place of business to make payment to the seller's cashier or a clerk upon the premises apparently invested with the affairs of the concern, but not to a mere porter or errand-boy, or any third person the buyer may happen to find there; and, if the transaction be a heavy one, he ought to be especially careful how he pays the cash to any one but the seller himself, or some one manifestly in the seller's confidence for handling money. A check made out to the seller's order, and handed over in adjustment of the price, might, if not objected to, clear the buyer of perplexity when dealing with doubtful third parties.<sup>4</sup> So, too, if payment be demanded at the buyer's own door, the party who delivers the goods may often be deemed the proper party to receive payment, though not necessarily, since men are chosen to deliver because of bodily strength; and a receipted bill of parcels for the price of the goods can hardly fail of being a sufficient credential

<sup>1</sup> See Hutchings v. Munger, 41 N. Y. 155.

<sup>2</sup> Keller v. Strasburger, 90 N. Y. 379. See post, cs. 12, 13.

<sup>3</sup> See Story Agency, §§ 60, 209, 226-228.

<sup>4</sup> Kaye v. Brett, 5 Ex. 269; Barratt v. Deere, M. & M. 200; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2. Parke, B., observed, in Kaye v. Brett, that if a shopman, who is authorized to receive payment over the counter only, receives money elsewhere than in the shop, the payment is not good: but this is, of course, prima facie only; for a shopman is frequently authorized to go outside to collect bills for his employer.

empowering him whom the seller may have sent with it to receive the money; yet any special restriction of authority which is brought to the buyer's notice before he pays must not be disregarded.<sup>1</sup> The buyer's tender of payment after the usual manner may be made, in any event, to one who is the duly authorized agent of the seller; and, even though the agent denies his authority, the tender will be good for all legal purposes.<sup>2</sup>

§ 424. Rule of Payment where Brokers, Factors, etc., are employed.—Brokers, factors, and attorneys are classes of agents, each with a certain understood scope of employment which the law of agency assumes to define. They are not vested in all respects with co-ordinate powers: for it is said that a factor is intrusted with the goods, and so may give discharge of payment; while a broker has no possession of the goods, and therefore may not.<sup>3</sup> But the course of employment of all such parties will vary according to the temporary local usage; and it is a generally received opinion, that, where an agent has by law a lien upon the property in his possession, payment to the principal will not absolve the buyer from liability to satisfy the agent's lien.<sup>4</sup> There is some conflict, in the adjudged cases, upon the question of a factor's authority to sell on credit; but, while the English rule might still appear a stringent one, the weight of American authority favors the assumption that he may sell on credit, unless a contrary usage is shown.<sup>5</sup> Where a factor takes a negotiable note of the buyer, payable to his own

<sup>1</sup> Ib.

<sup>2</sup> McNiffe v. Wheelock, 1 Gray, 600.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2; Story Agency, § 209. And see post, c. 18, as to auction sales; auctioneers being likewise agents in a sale, with an understood scope of employment.

<sup>4</sup> Ib.; Robinson v. Rutter, 4 E. & B. 954; Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 1 C. P. 186; L. R. 2 C. P. 368; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 383, 385.

<sup>5</sup> Story Agency, § 209, and n.; Riley v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 189; Dwight

v. Whitney, 15 Pick. 179; Daylight Burner Co. v. Odlin, 51 N. H. 56; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 654 et seq.; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2; Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 1 C. P. 186, per Keating, J. But while Catterall v. Hindle, supra, laid down the English law somewhat strictly, that case was reversed on appeal (L. R. 2 C. P. 368), on the ground that the question was one rather of fact than law, to be submitted to the jury, business usage being properly taken into consideration in such cases.

order, for the price, he does not thereby bind himself to his principal personally for the debt, if the buyer who gave the note was in good credit;<sup>1</sup> and the same is affirmed likewise of auctioneers.<sup>2</sup> But neither broker, factor, nor auctioneer can sell, especially as between himself and his employer, in any mode unusual in the business as then and there prevalent, nor inconsistently with the authority plainly conferred upon him;<sup>3</sup> nor should he place himself in an attitude antagonistic to the seller's interests.<sup>4</sup>

§ 425. Agent's Authority in settling on Seller's Behalf.—

We may add, that, under most circumstances, a third person empowered to receive payment on behalf of the seller is presumed to have authority to receive cash in hand only; and though an agent may doubtless be invested with full powers of settlement, so as to take the buyer's notes with or without security, to receive some commodity as an equivalent, to extend the time for payment, and even to forbear or compromise, it is only an attorney at law or some party with powers very clearly conferred, expressly or by inference of law, who can handle the seller's privileges with such freedom.<sup>5</sup>

Where an agent has sold for an undisclosed principal, the buyer is justified in dealing with the agent as seller, and settling for the goods, subject to such offsets as may be proper against the party personally.<sup>6</sup> But the material

<sup>1</sup> Dwight v. Whitney, 15 Pick. 179; Kidd v. King, 5 Ala. 84; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 662.

<sup>2</sup> Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh, 174; Corlies v. Cummings, 6 Cow. 181.

<sup>3</sup> Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 226; Benny v. Rhodes, 18 Mo. 152; 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 662; Story Agency, § 209; Williams v. Evans, L. R. 1 Q. B. 352.

<sup>4</sup> See this rule applied to a broker's sale of stock. 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 505, and cases cited. This is a doctrine of general application as between an agent or fiduciary, and the party for whom he acts.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. But see Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302, as to a sale made by a surety, to whom the owner gave the property as security with authority to sell, if opportunity offered, indemnify himself, and use the rest of the proceeds for specific purposes. Payment made to a travelling salesman, who made the sale on a three months' credit, is held good in Putnam v. French, 53 Vt. 402. Business usage must necessarily affect all such transactions.

<sup>6</sup> Ramazotti v. Bowring, 7 C. B. N. S. 851.

issue here is, whether the real owner has so conducted himself as to warrant the buyer in dealing with the agent as the real owner; for, if not, the case is simply one of misappropriation by a party in possession of the chattels, and an invalid sale. Carelessness in ascertaining the true state of facts recoils upon the purchaser: if he rejects evidence which shows the sale to be that of an agent, his conduct is inexcusable; nor can he treat himself as indebted personally for the price to either principal or agent, as may best suit his convenience.<sup>1</sup>

To enter fully into the general rules of agency is, however, foreign to the purpose of this work.

§ 426. Roman Law of Payment and Tender.—The Roman law closely resembled our own as to payment and tender. The creditor was, in general, bound to make a demand of payment at a suitable time and place, and the debtor to respond accordingly; but wherever the sum due was fixed, and the mode and time of payment clearly ascertainable by mutual agreement or through legal construction, no demand was requisite. The judge (or prætor) decided what was suitable in a disputed case according to the evidence before him.<sup>2</sup> There was this further provision for the debtor's benefit, that, if the creditor refused to accept his rightful tender of payment, he might pay the sum over to certain public officers, and so stand acquitted of the debt;<sup>3</sup> a mode of procedure still to be traced in the modern codes of Continental Europe, which permit the debtor in such a case to deposit at the public treasury, upon observing certain preliminary for-

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Pratt v. Wiley, 2 C. & P. 350; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2. An agent may, however, be empowered to sell for various principals; and in an English case where a broker went into insolvency, who had sold lots of goods belonging to different principals, receiving from the buyer a payment on account large enough to discharge either debt, but not enough to pay both, which he had not appropriated specifically, the court appropriated the payment between the principals pro ratâ, leaving each to sue the buyer for his unpaid balance. Favenc v. Bennett, 11 East, 36.

<sup>2</sup> Dig. 40, 5, 26, § 1; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Cod. 4, 32, de Usuris, 19; Benj. Sales, bk. 4, pt. 3, c. 2.

malities by way of giving the creditor notice of his intention to make such deposit.<sup>1</sup>

§ 427. Miscellaneous Costs and Expenses attending a Sale.

— A contract of sale frequently necessitates other costs and expenses in the course of its due execution, besides the simple payment of price by the buyer; such as the commissions of agents engaged in negotiating the sale, transportation and warehouse charges, and customs duties. The contract may, expressly or by implication, manifest the mutual intent in such matters; though presumably each one pays the charges of his own negotiating agents, while the expenses strictly incidental to transferring custody from the seller after a bargain is consummated are to be borne by the buyer.<sup>2</sup> But, for special expenses which the seller may have incurred in putting the property into a deliverable condition, the buyer is not legally answerable in the absence of an express agreement to that effect, inasmuch as such items may well be supposed to have entered into the price consideration; and accordingly, where wool lying on the seller's premises was sold, payable on delivery by weight, the seller was not allowed to reimburse himself for the cost of labor in putting the wool into sacks furnished by the purchaser, the understanding of the parties being that the wool was not to be weighed until after it was put into the sacks.<sup>3</sup> Usage is sometimes available, where the contract is silent, as to the party who should pay miscellaneous expenses.<sup>4</sup>

---

CHAPTER IX.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS; CONTRACTS OF SALE EMBRACED.

§ 428. Common Law of Sales is modified by Legislation.— Hitherto we have dealt with sales of personal property as

<sup>1</sup> Benj. ib.; Code Civ. art. 1257 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> See Rugg v. Minnett, 11 East, 210; Welch v. Moffat, 1 Thomp. &

C. (N. Y. Supr.) 575; Fick v. Runnels, 48 Mich. 302.

<sup>3</sup> Cole v. Kew, 20 Vt. 21.

<sup>4</sup> Howe v. Hardy, 106 Mass. 329.

a branch of common-law jurisprudence, regardless of modern legislation; but, now that the reader has been carried through the successive stages of formation and full performance of the contract, we may next examine in detail the important changes in the mode of performance which have followed in the wake of the Statute of Frauds, the most famous act of legislation which affects our law of sales. The investigation will occupy this and the two succeeding chapters.

§ 429. Statute of Frauds; its History; Language of 17th Section.—The act 29 Car. II., c. 3,<sup>1</sup> is the original Statute of Frauds, which takes its name from the object of its enactment as avowed in its preamble,—to wit, “for the prevention of frauds and perjuries;” the general policy of its framers being to throw about the most momentous transactions of life the safeguards of written proof, instead of permitting them, as formerly, to be evidenced by naked words and acts, whose feeble import invited dispute, and led to inevitable uncertainty. This act, which has well stood the test of two centuries in England with but little variation, is the accepted ground-work of local legislation in perhaps every State of the American Union. Of the circumstances attending its passage in Parliament little is known with certainty. The honor of originating so wise a measure has been claimed on behalf of the eminent Sir Matthew Hale (who died about the time the bill passed, and left some loose notes behind him which appear to have given color to such a claim<sup>2</sup>), in connection with others of lesser promi-

<sup>1</sup> None of the text-books from which such information might be expected appear to give us the date of passage of this act. Various uncertainties arise in this connection with reference to parliamentary routine so near the time of the Restoration. According to 8 Brit. Stats. at Large, Cambridge ed. (1763), the year was 1676; but the later revised folio edition (1819), sanctioned by Parliament, states it as 1677. This, however, probably refers to the royal assent and enrolment at the close of the session; and there is good reason for supposing that this Parliament was continued by various prorogations, from May 8, 1661, to Feb. 15, 1677. Cf. editions of Stats. at Large above cited. The year 29 Car. II. is, properly, 1676–77. Burnet's Life of Sir Matthew Hale, printed in 1682, mentions the date of Hale's retirement from office as “28 Car. II., 1675–76.”

<sup>2</sup> See Bishop Burnet's Life of Sir

nence.<sup>1</sup> Lord Eldon, however, brought to light in later times an opinion of Lord Nottingham, rendered June 13, 1678, less than two years after the passage of this act, in which he claimed the chief glory of its enactment for himself; though admitting that the bill received some additions and improvements from the judges and civilians after he had first introduced it into the House of Lords.<sup>2</sup> But, whoever first put into shape a measure which jurists must have worked upon and public sentiment breathed into long before Parliament sanctioned its passage, Lord Nottingham's declaration, that every line was worth a subsidy, shows that he appreciated in advance the workings of what was later commended from Matthew Hale (1682), which gives a list of the MSS. left by that distinguished judge; making, however, no especial mention of this statute.

<sup>1</sup> Wynne's Life of Sir Lionel (or Leoline) Jenkins, 53 (1724), claims that this eminent authority in ecclesiastical law had a hand in the statute, more especially as to the part which relates to nuncupative wills. For Lord Keeper Guilford, 1 North's Life 108 (1740), claims especial credit in "urging" the bill; and here the chief authority in framing the act is ascribed to Sir Matthew Hale; an important admission in a book which shows no little envy of the Lord Chief Justice and his reputation. Chief Baron Gilbert, in a chancery case in 1721, records it that Sir Matthew Hale and Sir Lionel Jenkins "prepared this statute," and chose to take the plan from the civil law. Gilb. Eq. 171.

In view of these nearly contemporaneous authorities, and the uniform traditions of the English bench and bar, it seems highly probable that the greatest judge, law reformer, and man of legal learning, of his times, Sir Matthew Hale, bore a prominent part in the inspiration, if not the passage, of this famous statute. Lord Mansfield's statement in 1 Burr. 418 (1757), which has been so long cited to the contrary without comment, was probably a careless one. As Lord Hale did not resign until February, 1676, nor die until Christmas Day of that year, the statement that the act was passed after his death is most likely incorrect, while it seems certain that the act was at least under consideration in Parliament during his life. Nor did Lord Mansfield change the traditional views on this point in his own court; for the famous Lord Ellenborough reiterated in 1804 the opinion of Lord Hale's authorship. See 5 East, 17.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 1; Story Sales, § 256; 2 Swans. 87, n.; Ash v. Abdy, 3 Swans. 664, appx. Swanston admits (accepting Lord Nottingham's own statement as decisive) that there may have been foundation for the tradition that Sir Matthew Hale and Sir Leoline Jenkins "assisted" in preparing this statute. Gilb. Eq. 171. And Lord Chancellor Nottingham, who was well worthy of the chief responsibility in procuring this remarkable statute, clearly intimates as much. See, further, Am. Law Rev. (1884) for an article by the present writer upon the authorship of the Statute of Frauds.

the abundant experience of the English courts as "one of the wisest laws in our statute-book."<sup>1</sup>

The only section of the Statute of Frauds which bears directly upon sales of personal property is the 17th, which runs in the original act as follows: "No contract for the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandises, for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment, or that some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain be made, and signed by the parties to be charged by such contract, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized."<sup>2</sup> The phraseology of this section has since suffered change, and all important modifications will be noticed in their proper place hereafter. So, too, the legislatures of most American States, in re-enacting its provisions, have made alterations, by no means uniform, to better adapt the law, in their judgment, to the wants of a later age and a newer country.<sup>3</sup> But, in the main, the spirit of the above enactment is retained, which, it is observable, applies the requisition of written proof with these two leading limitations: first, that the subject-matter of sale shall be beyond a designated value; second, that other oral formalities, plainly evincing a sale, shall not have been pursued.

<sup>1</sup> Lord Ellenborough, in Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 17; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 1, n.; Browne Stat. Frauds, Introduction.

<sup>2</sup> Act 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 17. This section, as expressed, was to take effect from and after June 24, 1677. See also "Lord Tenterden's Act," 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 7, cited post, § 440.

<sup>3</sup> See Browne's Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx., for American legislation on this section in detail. Many of these statutes, as in Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and Vermont, copy the English model closely, though with verbal differences, and fixing the price at various amounts. But in New York the statute is thrown into a new shape; and California, Iowa, and Wisconsin pursue substantially the same form. Delaware, Illinois, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, and Virginia, do not appear to have legislated directly on this subject. Some of the peculiar changes of legislation will appear in detail hereafter.

§ 430. Policy of such Legislation as to Sales; Writing, etc., not always essential. — Our first observations upon the policy of this section, then, are, that the ordinary law of sales is still allowed free play in transfers of small value, though the practical limit of value at this day, when we have so many kinds of incorporeal chattels, is not uniform; and that the written requirement of the statute need not be complied with, provided certain prescribed oral formalities are fully pursued by the parties. In other words, the transfer of personal property is only partially and sub modo hampered by the Statute of Frauds, so far as concerns the necessity of writing in a contract of sale.

§ 431. Legal Consequences of a Non-Compliance; Conflicting Theories. — But now comes a more difficult inquiry, and one which the courts have not yet fully disposed of: namely, What are the legal consequences which ensue from non-compliance with the terms of this section, in cases to which it applies? It is often said that the statute effects its declared purpose of preventing fraud and perjury by putting an end to contracts which do not conform to its requirements; and so accurate a thinker as Mr. Smith has observed that “a parol contract, unaided by any of the formalities mentioned in the 17th section as equivalent to writing, is totally and entirely void.”<sup>1</sup> But opposed to this view of the situation is eminent authority. Says Mr. Browne of the 17th section, in his treatise on the Statute of Frauds: “That enactment does not declare that the contracts embraced by it are illegal or void, unless put in writing. It does not in any way affect their substance or ingredients, but simply prescribes, as a rule of evidence, that, in cases where they are sought to be enforced, oral proof of them shall not be received.”<sup>2</sup> There are late decisions in Massachusetts and

<sup>1</sup> Smith Contracts, 117. And see Channell, B., in M'Lean v. Nicoll, 7 Jur. n. s. 999; Bigelow, J., in Marsh v. Hyde, 3 Gray, 331.

<sup>2</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, § 115 and n. In the fifth edition of Mr. Browne's work (1895), the learned author, still adhering to the substance of the above statement as correct, prefers to restate the statute operation as follows: “No enforcement of the contract can be had, while the requirements of the statute remain unsatisfied, if the party against whom

Vermont, which, upon precisely this ground, permit the party sued to so waive his immunity under the statute as to stand bound by the contract.<sup>1</sup>

When we turn to the statute itself, and read it over, we find that the original section 17 declares that "No contract" for the sale, &c., "shall be allowed to be good," except in the cases meant, — an equivocal expression, truly;<sup>2</sup> and upon these words are based not only the English adjudications, but those of many American States: whereas the expression of the New York enactment, which certain other State legislatures have copied, is, that every contract of sale shall be "void" unless the specified requirements are met.<sup>3</sup> "The expression 'allowed to be good,'" says Bramwell, B., in Noble v. Ward, "is not a very happy one; but whatever its meaning may be, it includes this, at least, that it shall not be held valid or enforced."<sup>4</sup> Much of the difficulty, then, seems to arise upon the ambiguity of the legislative expression; which fact being taken for granted, it becomes a legitimate inquiry how far the language of other sections in enforcement is sought choose to insist upon this defence; the statute does not make the contract illegal; a contract which was legal and actionable before the statute is legal since and notwithstanding the statute, and is also actionable or enforceable if the making of the contract be followed by compliance with the requirements of the statute." Browne Stat. Frauds, § 115 a, 5th ed. And see Maddison v. Alderson, 8 App. Cas. 467, 488.

<sup>1</sup> Montgomery v. Edwards, 46 Vt. 151; Middlesex Co. v. Osgood, 4 Gray, 447. And see Townsend v. Hargraves, a still later Massachusetts decision, 118 Mass. 325.

<sup>2</sup> Act 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 17; supra, § 429.

<sup>3</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx. And yet it is said, in Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114, that the Statute of Frauds does not condemn verbal contracts for the sale of goods. In Brown v. Allen, 35 Iowa, 306, the court lays stress on the circumstance that the Iowa statute does not (like some others) declare that sale void which fails to comply with requirements.

"By the enactment of this statute, the legislature interposed a few safeguards against mistakes and frauds in certain kinds of contracts, by making certain additional things indispensable to the remedy. The security thereby afforded makes the remedy depend upon proof which shall not rest upon the recollection or integrity of witnesses, but upon something reliable to which the parties may resort for a solution of all their doubts and disputes." Virgin, J., in Williams v. Robinson, 73 Me. 186.

<sup>4</sup> Noble v. Ward, L. R. 1 Ex. 117. "Shall be good or valid," is the statutory expression used in Massachusetts and some other States. See Browne, ib. appx.

the original statute (applicable to conveyances, devises, and bequests by will, collateral undertakings, and the like) might be invoked in furtherance of the construction of section 17. But, while one English act covers the whole ground, in most of the United States the substance of the various sections has been, in fact, embodied in several entirely separate acts of legislation.<sup>1</sup> In no event should a local construction be given to such a provision without reference to the important changes which may have been wrought by the local legislation in the phraseology of this section.

§ 432. The Same Subject; Contract exists but is unenforceable.— There might be objections to the view that the Statute of Frauds operates, in its 17th section, merely to exclude oral proof of the contract, in a case of non-compliance: for this seems to narrow down too much the natural import of legislative language; and it might lead, besides, to mischievous consequences (particularly as concerns third persons), to treat the property as passing upon an oral contract which the original parties might afterwards evince by their writing or not, at their election.<sup>2</sup> But far more objectionable is Mr. Smith's view, with which, indeed, the English decisions are plainly inconsistent; for to regard the contract as void where statute formalities fail of observance is to place the broadest possible interpretation upon the language of the original act, and make the legislature's rebuke of oral sales exceedingly harsh. That no such disastrous consequences fairly ensue will better appear when we examine what sort of writing satisfies the statute.<sup>3</sup> But there either is or is not a contract of sale existing in legal contemplation when the common-law requirements are fulfilled, notwithstanding the statute fails of compliance; and the most rational course appears, on the whole, to be, to accept the fact of its existence, and then to regard a non-compliance with

<sup>1</sup> See Browne, §§ 115, n., 365.

<sup>2</sup> See 9 Am. Law Rev. 434, 456, where some of the objections are stated at length to Mr. Browne's view. And see Mr. Browne's re-statement of the rule (1895), § 431, note.

<sup>3</sup> Infra, c. 11.

the statute formalities as rendering the contract simply unenforceable for the time being.

This midway doctrine vindicates the policy of the act, puts a reasonable construction upon the language of the 17th section, and better harmonizes the decisions than any other yet adduced; though none, perhaps, can do so absolutely. To quote Mr. Justice Williams: "The effect of that enactment is, that, although there is a contract which is a good and valid contract, no action can be maintained upon it, if made by word of mouth only, unless something else has happened; e.g. unless there be a note or memorandum in writing of the bargain, signed by the party to be charged. As soon as such a memorandum comes into existence, the contract becomes an actionable contract."<sup>1</sup> And Channell, B., has said: "The more correct view is, that the contract still exists, but that it cannot be put in force."<sup>2</sup>

§ 433. How Sale Contract becomes good by Subsequent Compliance with Statute.—We may notice, in passing, that a sale contract, so far from requiring some contemporaneous writing to give it force, may be made good and enforceable by acts afterwards done by the defendant in compliance with the statute; and the better opinion is that the contract thereupon takes effect, quoad hoc, by relation back to the date of the oral agreement. Thus, in Bailey v. Sweeting, the defendant verbally bought glasses to be paid for on delivery by the carrier. The glasses were damaged in transit; and the defendant refused, at first, to take them, but afterwards made such a writing as amounted to a satisfaction of the statute. The decision was, that the defendant had become liable to pay the full price for the goods sold; and this upon the familiar principle, doubtless, that, the bargain for specific goods being completed, the risks of safe transit are presumed to fall upon the buyer.<sup>3</sup> This squares with

<sup>1</sup> Bailey v. Sweeting, 9 C. B. n. s. 843, 859.

<sup>2</sup> Channell, B., in M'Lean v. Nicoll, 7 Jur. n. s. 999. This view is confirmed by Maddison v. Alderson, 8 App. Cas. 467, 488 (Lord Blackburn).

<sup>3</sup> Bailey v. Sweeting, 9 C. B. n. s. 843. And see Vincent v. Germond, the theory that a contract of sale exists, but may be unenforceable for non-compliance. There is, however, a rule set out in Bill v. Bament, to the effect that compliance with the statute, after action brought, cannot render the contract sued upon enforceable; but this case is an anomalous one, and may, perhaps, be explained by the rules of practice.<sup>1</sup> A still later English decision of the Queen's Bench may be cited, where a memorandum in writing, made by the defendant after the goods had been delivered to a carrier, and had been totally lost at sea while in his hands, was held sufficient to take the case out of the statute.<sup>2</sup>

But an interesting point not noticed in this last case—whether the statute compliance comes too late after the goods have ceased to exist—was afterwards raised in Massachusetts upon a state of facts quite similar, and decided in conformity with our proposition.<sup>3</sup> An action was brought for the price of thirty-seven bales of wool sold by oral contract while the wool was in the hands of a warehouseman. Nineteen of these bales were afterwards entirely destroyed by fire while in the warehouse. The remaining eighteen had been sent to the buyer, who accepted them; though, as the testimony appeared to establish, not until after the destruction of the other bales. The question was raised, whether a part acceptance of goods, such as the statute permits as one form of compliance with its terms, can take place so as to render the contract valid and enforceable. Now, had this contract been void until the statute was complied with, there could have been nothing for a court to enforce; for the sale would have been thus attempted of property not in actual existence, which, we have shown, fails for want of a subject-matter.<sup>4</sup> But treating the section as one which renders a contract simply unenforceable while non-compliance continues, which affects the remedies but does not deny that there is a con-

11 Johns. 283; Seymour v. Davis, 2 Sandf. 239.

<sup>1</sup> Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36; Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. 9. But see Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1, per Willes, J.

<sup>2</sup> Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140.

<sup>3</sup> Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325.

<sup>4</sup> See supra, c. 1.

tract, the court found that the statute compliance came not too late, though the unaccepted portion of the goods had been meanwhile destroyed ; for, if there had been a completed contract according to common-law rules, the property, as we have also shown, vested in the purchaser, and a right to the price in the seller as soon as the contract was made, subject to the seller's lien, and right of stoppage in transitu.<sup>1</sup> It is worthy of mention, that this court declared its opinion that the Statute of Frauds "only affects the mode of proof as to all contracts within it ;" but the context shows that the judgment rested fairly enough on the modern English view, which has seemed to us preferable in expression, that the statute admits an existing contract as to the parties which it refuses to enforce until compliance is made with its provisions.<sup>2</sup> The statute, on either hypothesis, is thus established to affect the remedy of the contract, and not its validity.

§ 433 a. Sale Contract if fully executed stands unaffected.

— It is further observable, in proof of the view just stated, that where the contract has been fully executed on both sides, the rights, duties, and obligations of the parties which result from the completed performance are unaffected by the Statute of Frauds. The status of the parties under such circumstances cannot be altered, unless equity should intervene to relieve against fraud or fundamental error.<sup>3</sup>

§ 434. Conflict of Laws as to Statute ; the Remedy affected.

— On the ground that the remedy and not the validity of the contract is affected by this 17th section of 29 Car. II., it has been held that an oral contract, good by the law of the place where made, but objectionable under this section, will not be enforced in the courts of Great Britain.<sup>4</sup>

§ 435. Unenforceableness extends to Note given for Price.

— Since a contract which fails to comply with the Statute

<sup>1</sup> See supra, c. 2.

<sup>2</sup> Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325, 334, per Colt, J. But see Vincent v. Germond, 11 Johns. 283.

<sup>3</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, § 116, and cases cited ; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481 ; Niland v. Murphy, 73 Wis. 326 ;

Haussman v. Burnham, 59 Conn. 117 ; Webster v. Le Compte, 74 Md. 249.

<sup>4</sup> Leroux v. Brown, 12 C. B. 801. See, in general, Story and Wharton on the Conflict of Laws ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 291-299.

of Frauds is such an undertaking that the seller cannot sue for his price, neither can a promissory note given by him in consideration of damages claimed by the buyer for non-delivery of the goods be enforced, so far as these original parties to the contract are concerned.<sup>1</sup>

§ 436. Leading Divisions to be observed in considering Statute of Frauds.—The relation of the Statute of Frauds, section 17, to contracts of sale, will now be considered under these three leading divisions: I. The contracts embraced under the statute; II. Oral acts of compliance with the statute; III. Written compliance with the statute. To the first division we shall devote the remainder of this chapter, the other divisions receiving treatment in the two chapters next succeeding.

The convenient method will be pursued throughout this discussion of basing our running commentary upon the English statute, which, the reader will perceive, first sets forth the contracts upon which the statute operates, and then announces three modes of satisfying its requirements: (1) by acceptance and receipt; (2) by giving earnest or part payment; both of which are oral; and (3) by making a written note or memorandum.

§ 437. Contracts of Sale embraced under the Statute, 17th Section.—I. As to the contracts embraced under the 17th section of the statute. The language of the original enactment suggests three leading inquiries, to be taken up in order: (1st) what are “contracts for the sale of,” etc.? (2d) what classes of personal property are comprehended under the denomination of “goods, wares, and merchandises”? (3d) what standard of “price” or “value” brings a case within the statute? Of these inquiries in their order.

§ 438. “Contracts for the Sale of,” etc.; whether Executory Contracts are included.—(1st.) What are “contracts for the sale of,” etc.? In earlier times, when the policy of this statute was seriously questioned, and courts inclined to restrain its practical operation, the point was made that “executory contracts" for the sale of goods, etc., did not come within its legislative provision.

<sup>1</sup> Hooker v. Knab, 26 Wis. 511.

§ 439. The Same Subject; English Decisions reviewed.—The English decisions prove somewhat contradictory in this respect, and the line zigzags as this or that policy gives it direction. Towers v. Osborne, decided in 1724, leads off; a case where the defendant "bespoke a chariot," and the contract was considered to be without the spirit of the enactment.<sup>1</sup> Lord Mansfield, in 1767, commended this decision, referring to the rule therein laid down by Chief Justice Pratt, that the Statute of Frauds relates only to contracts for the actual "sale of goods" "where the buyer is immediately answerable without time given him by special agreement, and the seller is to deliver the goods immediately." And in the present case—Clayton v. Andrews—the court held that the statute could have no application to a contract for the sale of wheat at so much a load, to be delivered about one month later, payable on delivery; the wheat being as yet unthrashed.<sup>2</sup> Groves v. Buck was decided in 1814 on a similar principle; Lord Ellenborough declaring that a parol agreement to purchase oak-pins which were not yet cut out of the slabs did not come within the statute, since the subject-matter was incapable of present delivery.<sup>3</sup> But it is observable, that, in all three of these cases, the contract was of something more than a merely "executory" character; and this idea Lord Ellenborough put forward more clearly than his predecessors had done. The thing was actually incapable of a present delivery and acceptance: it was not a chariot, or a heap of corn, or a lot of oak-pins already in existence, whose delivery happened to be postponed by mutual consent to a future day, but a chattel not existing at all when the contract was made,—a chariot to be built, corn to be thrashed, oak-pins to be cut out.

On the other hand are early cases which claim shelter of the statute, without being in principle clearly distinguished from the foregoing decisions. Thus, Rondeau v. Wyatt, which was decided in 1792, enforced the statute provision upon a state of facts showing that the defendant, a mill proprietor, had verbally agreed to sell and deliver three thousand sacks of flour to the plaintiff; the flour to be put into sacks which the latter was to furnish, and then shipped by such vessels as he should send. The contract was held to be unenforceable against the mill proprietor. Lord Loughborough, who rendered judgment in this case, would not admit, as the plaintiff's counsel requested, that this was an "executory contract." It was singular, he said, that an idea could prevail that this statute applied only where the bargain was immediate: indeed, the statute provision would not be of much use unless it were to extend to executory contracts; for it is from bargains to be completed at a future period that the uncertainty and confusion will probably arise which the statute was designed to prevent. This being a contract for specific existing flour, Lord Loughborough decided rightly: but, in the apparent effort to avoid collision with Lord Mansfield, he distinguished the former cases of the chariot and unthrashed corn from the present on a slim suggestion,—that the one was for work and labor to be done, and materials and other necessary things to be found; and the other required some work to be done; namely, thrashing,—though "this, perhaps," he was forced to add, "may seem to be a nice distinction."<sup>1</sup> In Cooper v. Elston, decided only four years later, Lord Kenyon took occasion to express his satisfaction that Lord Loughborough's very able decision had brought the construction of this clause of the Statute of Frauds back to the manifest intention of the legislature. Here it was decided that the case of wheat sold by sample, to be delivered at a later date, came within the requirements of the statute; and Lord Mansfield's doctrine was thrown still farther into the background. The remarks of Grose, J., as to "executory contracts" in this same case are quite pertinent, and might be thrown into this form: "If you mean contracts for sale to be executed at a future day, you repeal the statute; but if only such contracts as are incapable of being executed at that time, then you are right.”<sup>1</sup> But Garbutt v. Watson, decided in 1822, and very briefly reported, goes a step farther; for here was brought within the statute provision an agreement relating to one hundred sacks of flour not at the time “prepared” (as the reporter says) “so as to be capable of being immediately delivered to the defendant.” But while the contract related to that which then existed in the shape, not of flour, but of unground wheat, the opinion of Abbott, C. J., intimates that the bargain was not for so much flour to be manufactured from such materials as the seller might supply, but for a specific lot of unground wheat which required to be ground up into flour; in other words, for an identified quantity of unground wheat estimated as equivalent to so much flour; an important circumstance, if true, which the later cases have not noted.<sup>2</sup> The court in this case, otherwise so strongly resembling Clayton v. Andrews, showed a clear disposition to repudiate Lord Mansfield’s celebrated decision altogether; and the Chief Justice pronounces even Towers v. Osborne an extreme case. The opinions as reported are all quite brief; Bayley, J., announcing distinctly what the other judges probably accepted as the true test,—that the question is, whether this was a contract for the sale of goods, or for work and labor and materials found. That it was for the sale of goods they all agreed.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Towers v. Osborne, 1 Strange, 2101. And see Alexander v. Comber, 506. 1 H. Bl. 20.

<sup>2</sup> Clayton v. Andrews, 4 Burr.

<sup>3</sup> Groves v. Buck, 3 M. & S. 178.

<sup>1</sup> Rondeau v. Wyatt, 2 H. Bl. 63.

§ 440. The Same Subject; English Rule affected by Act 9 Geo. IV. c. 14.—Whatever the lurking doubts of English lawyers as to the true footing of “executory contracts” under the statute, in the sense of “contracts for a future delivery,” they were dispersed by the act of 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 7, known as Lord Tenterden’s Act, which plainly declares such

<sup>1</sup> Cooper v. Elston, 7 T. R. 14 (A. D. 1796).

<sup>2</sup> Garbutt v. Watson, 5 B. & Ald. 613. Says Abbott, C. J.: “In Towers v. Osborne, the chariot which was ordered to be made would never but for that order have had any existence.

But here the plaintiffs were proceeding to grind the flour for the purposes of general sale, and sold this quantity to the defendant as part of their general stock.”

<sup>3</sup> Garbutt v. Watson, 5 B. & Ald. 613.

contracts within the mischief intended to be remedied by the 17th section. This enactment, which followed close upon Garbutt v. Watson, is decisive of the controversy for Great Britain; for it provides that the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds shall extend "to all contracts for the sale of goods of the value of ten pounds sterling and upwards, notwithstanding the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time, or may not at the time of such contract be actually made, procured, or provided, or fit or ready for delivery; or some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof, or rendering the same fit for delivery."<sup>1</sup> This statute is now a part of the English Statute of Frauds, and the later cases in that country comment upon Lord Tenterden's Act and the old 17th section as the joint exposition of the Parliament's policy.<sup>2</sup>

But, notwithstanding Lord Tenterden's Act, the discussion soon broke out anew, as to what should be pronounced contracts of sale whose non-compliance with the statute must necessarily interfere with their enforcement; for the old cases had left their trail. Clay v. Yates, decided in 1856, raised the point; the plaintiff in this case, a printer, having verbally contracted with the defendant to print the second edition of a work, finding his own paper and materials, and a quarrel arising between them, when the book was nearly ready, because the printer refused to print what he thought a libellous dedication: whereupon the defendant refused to pay him for any of the printing. The Statute of Frauds was pleaded. It was held that this was not a contract for the sale of a thing to be delivered at a future time, nor a contract for making a thing to be sold when completed, but a contract to do work and labor, furnishing certain materials; and that the case was not governed by Lord Tenterden's Act, nor within the Statute of Frauds.<sup>3</sup> There was manifest justice in deciding this case so as to compel the defendant to pay for what was printed before the quarrel arose ; and, as a precedent, the decision has not been questioned. But, in the several opinions pronounced in this case were some passages which called for criticism in Lee v. Griffin, which, following in 1861, is the latest reported English case on the subject. A dentist brought a suit against the executor of a lady's estate for making to the lady's order two sets of artificial teeth. One defence set up was the Statute of Frauds. It was decided that the dentist could not recover.<sup>1</sup> The opinions here rendered clash somewhat with those of Clay v. Yates, — a case which, however, was admitted to have presented a state of facts sui generis, entitling the plaintiff to recover ; and the doctrine that the statute does not apply where work is the essence of the contract, rather than materials furnished, is here discarded. But the truth is, the facts in the present case were likewise peculiar ; for the lady who ordered the artificial teeth did so on the understanding that they were to be fitted to her mouth ; she died before they were fitted, and hence the contract failed of fulfilment, and this through no fault of hers.<sup>2</sup> The printer in the former case, not owning the copyright in the defendant's book, would have had nothing valuable left in his hands if cut off by the Statute of Frauds from pursuing his remedies ; but even in the latter case, admitting that the statute found the plaintiff much better off, two sets of artificial teeth, made to fit a particular mouth, it must be allowed, are not a sort of commodity to be easily passed off at a current price to the next customer.

<sup>1</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx. Co., 12 M. & W. 33; Haman v. Reeves, 18 C. B. 587.

<sup>2</sup> Scott v. Eastern Counties R. R. <sup>3</sup> Clay v. Yates, 1 Hurl. & N. 73.

§ 441. The Same Subject; Latest English Decisions reviewed. — The chief value of Lee v. Griffin appears to be in the opportunity which it afforded members of the court, and Judge Blackburn particularly, of bringing a distinctive test to bear upon contracts of sale under the 17th section. We have seen that it discards a theory which Pollock, C. B., is thought to have favored in Clay v. Yates, — that the value of the skill and labor, as compared with that of the material supplied, is a just criterion ; that case, however, showing that the most important material, namely, book manuscript, was supplied, not by the workman, but by the party for whom the work was to be done.<sup>1</sup> The test for which Lee v. Griffin pronounces is this: If the contract be to deliver a thing, which, when completed, would have resulted in the sale of a chattel for a price, the Statute of Frauds operates upon it. To use Judge Blackburn's own words: "The question is, whether the contract was one for the sale of goods or for work and labor. I think that in all cases, in order to ascertain whether the action ought to be brought for goods sold and delivered, or for work and labor done and materials provided, we must look at the particular contract entered into between the parties. If the contract be such that, when carried out, it would result in the sale of a chattel, the party cannot sue for work and labor; but if the result of the contract is that the party has done work and labor which ends in nothing that can become the subject of a sale, the party cannot sue for goods sold and delivered."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Lee v. Griffin, 1 B. & S. 272.

Griffin, supra, which lays stress upon

<sup>2</sup> See opinion of Hill, J., in Lee v. these facts.

This latest exposition of English law on the subject (which borrows support from an earlier decision of Tindal, C. J.<sup>3</sup>) appears to bring the influence of the 17th section to bear upon all cases where the substance of the contract was goods to be sold and delivered, stopping short at cases which are essentially for work and labor done and materials furnished;

<sup>1</sup> It is by no means clear that Pollock, C. B., in Clay v. Yates, supra, meant to set up any such general test as that which Crompton, J., assumes for the purpose of refuting in Lee v. Griffin. This is the language of Pollock, C. B.: "It may happen that part of the materials is found by the person for whom the work is done, and part by the person who does the work; for instance, the paper for printing may be found by the one party, while the ink is found by the printer. In such cases, it seems to me that the true criterion is, whether work is the essence of the contract, or whether it is the materials supplied." Nor, even supposing him to have referred to the supply of work and all the materials by the workman, was this claimed to be a test beyond deciding whether the contract could be sued upon for work, labor, and materials, as well as for goods sold and delivered. All of the propositions in Clay v. Yates are put forward in a tentative style, and as though for the purpose of meeting the peculiar facts of the case. But cf. Benj. Sales, 1st ed. bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 1, p. 79.

<sup>2</sup> Blackburn, J., in Lee v. Griffin, 1 B. & S. 272.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Tindal, C. J., in Grafton v. Armitage, 2 C. B. 336, distinguishing Atkinson v. Bell, 8 B. & C. 277.

“and the reason,” as Pollock, C. B., has observed, “why no cases on this subject are found in the books is, that, before Lord Tenterden’s Act passed, the Statute of Frauds did not apply to the case of goods not actually made, or fit for delivery.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 442. The Same Subject; American Rule as to Executory Contracts. — Turning to the American decisions on the subject, we find various tests put forward by the courts of the several States, but nothing which can be claimed as authoritatively settling the application of the statute. We are confronted at the outset by numerous legislative enactments not in perfect accord, nor supplemented by such explanatory acts as that of Lord Tenterden. The earlier decisions of New York and some other States refused to apply the statute provision to sales of cut nails not yet manufactured, unthrashed wheat, and other cases of commodities not yet existing in specie; thus recognizing Lord Mansfield’s rule in the sense understood by Lord Loughborough: but the better opinion in other States is against extending that principle of statute exclusion beyond the case of articles sold which in a measure require preparation for delivery by one’s work and labor.<sup>2</sup> Garbutt v. Watson, and Chief Justice Abbott too, are cited against Lord Mansfield in some of our later cases; and we may, at all events, assume that the old exemption from the statute, of contracts to deliver hereafter a commodity already in existence, has no present footing in the United States.<sup>3</sup> It appears to be the New York doctrine that an agreement for the sale and delivery, now or hereafter, of articles

<sup>1</sup> Clay v. Yates, 1 H. & N. 15.

<sup>2</sup> Sewall v. Fitch, 8 Cow. 215; 2 Kent Com. 511; Story Sales, § 260; Crookshank v. Burrell, 18 Johns. 58; Eichelberger v. M’Cauley, 5 Harr. & J. 213; Mattison v. Westcott, 13 Vt. 261; Allen v. Jarvis, 20 Conn. 38; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 306. And see Rentch v. Long, 27 Md. 188; Downs v. Skillinger, 23 Wend. 270; Hight v. Ripley, 19 Me. 137; Ellison v. Brigham, 38 Vt. 64. The Maryland settled rule has been that where work and labor are to be bestowed by the seller upon the article before it is to be delivered, the contract is not within the statute. Bagby v. Walker, 78 Md. 239, 246. See also to similar effect, Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294; Prescott v. Locke, 51 N. H. 94.

<sup>3</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, § 305; Cason v. Cheely, 6 Ga. 554; Hooker v. Knab, 26 Wis. 511.

already existing, is within the statute, but not an agreement to sell and deliver articles which have no existence, and are to be made hereafter.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Story inclines to follow the English rule announced in Clay v. Yates, without noticing the later qualifications which Lee v. Griffin introduced.<sup>2</sup> Some of our latest State decisions adopt Judge Blackburn's test in substance.<sup>3</sup> And, upon the whole, the American courts appear to have groped steadily along by the light of the English precedents; some halting by the way, others passing on.

But, in Massachusetts, a peculiar construction has been given in the Statute of Frauds, and to this effect: "That a contract for the sale of articles already existing, or such as the vendor in the ordinary course of his business manufactures or procures for the general market, whether on hand at the time or not, is a contract for the sale of goods, to which the statute applies. But, on the other hand, if the goods are to be manufactured especially for the purchaser, and upon his special order, and not for the general market, the case is not within the statute."<sup>4</sup> This rule was first <sup>1</sup> See Crookshank v. Burrell, 18 Johns. 58; Bellows, J., in Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 299; Higgins v. Murray, 73 N. Y. 252. An exposition of the New York rule, as one distinguishable from the latest English and the latest Massachusetts rules, will be found in Cooke v. Millard, 65 N. Y. 352; Parsons v. Loucks, 48 N. Y. 17; Warren Chemical Co. v. Holbrook, 118 N. Y. 586. Consistently with this rule, where a chattel contracted for is at the time in existence, although the seller is to do some work upon it to adapt it to the uses of the buyer, the contract will be deemed one of sale under the statute. Cooke v. Millard, supra. And see 6 Daly, 429; Bennett's note to Benj. Sales, 4th Am. ed. § 110, discussing further the New York rule.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 260; and see this statement corrected in Bennett's n., 4th ed.

<sup>3</sup> See Pitkin v. Noyes, 48 N. H. 294. And see Finney v. Apgar, 2 Vroom, 266; Prescott v. Locke, 51 N. H. 94. In this last case, the legislative prohibition was allowed full play: for the contract to purchase such walnut spokes, at a certain pro rata price, as the plaintiff should saw at his mill and deliver, was held to be a contract of sale within the statute, and not one for work and labor; though it was observed that the agreement did not contemplate the peculiar skill, care, or labor of the maker.

<sup>4</sup> Ames, J., in Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 430. But an oral contract for plank is within the statute, notwithstanding a stipulation that the seller shall saw the logs into plank under the buyer's direction. Clark v. Nichols, 107 Mass. 547. The Massachusetts rule finds recent approval in Wisconsin. Meincke v. Falk, 55 Wis. 427. Here the dis-promulgated in Mixer v. Howarth, and has been followed since in a series of decisions, culminating in the important one of Goddard v. Binney, where the conflicting doctrines of the whole subject are clearly and succinctly stated.<sup>1</sup> It is curious that both the first and the last of these cases should be found quite similar to the ancient English one of the chariot, which has so frequently proved a stumbling-block, but which here finds favor. In Goddard v. Binney, the plaintiff had agreed to build a buggy for the defendant, according to his directions: he did so, marking the carriage with the defendant's initials, as requested. The buggy was destroyed by fire when finished, and after the defendant had pronounced it satisfactory. The plaintiff sued for his price, and the defendant set up the Statute of Frauds. It was held that the statute did not meet the case. The court did not deny that this Massachusetts doctrine differed from that of New York, on the one hand, and the English, as set forth by Judge Blackburn, on the other. Some of the late Maine and New Hampshire cases appear to indicate a judicial leaning in the same direction.<sup>2</sup>

§ 443. Summary as to whether Executory Contracts are included.—To sum up the present results. There is no prin-tion is pursued to the conclusion that a "contract for the sale of," &c., is not within the statute where without the special contract the thing would never have been made in the particular manner, shape, or condition it was; so that the contract is essentially for special skill, labor, or workmanship.

<sup>1</sup> Mixer v. Howarth, 21 Pick. 205; Lamb v. Crafts, 12 Met. 353; Gardner v. Joy, 9 Met. 177; Waterman v. Meigs, 4 Cush. 497; Clark v. Nichols, 107 Mass. 547; Goddard v. Binney, 115 Mass. 450. And see May v. Ward, 134 Mass. 127; 124 Mass. 480.

<sup>2</sup> See Hight v. Ripley, 19 Me. 139; Edwards v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co., 48 Me. 379. In the latter case, all the wood that the plaintiff would make for a season was contracted for, and this was held to come within the statute; but, in the former, a contract to make implements after a certain pattern was pronounced without the statute. This is the rule by which the cases are reconciled, as stated in Edwards v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co.: "The fact that the article contracted for does not exist at the time of the contract, but is to be made or manufactured, will not necessarily take the case out of the statute. It must also appear that the particular person who is to manufacture it, or the mode and manner, or materials, enter into and make part of the contract." This case is approved in 54 Me. 105. And see Crockett v. Scribner, 64 Me. 447.

ciple yet found which can quite reconcile the decisions; and this naturally enough, since an act which the earlier courts disrelished, and sought to hedge in by construction, has, in time, been admitted to justify the wisdom of its framers. Putting ourselves where the legislators of this celebrated section stood, we should say that the words "no contract for the sale of" would bear either of these two interpretations, — (1st.) That where the chattel contracted for does not yet exist in specie, but requires to be manufactured and brought into being under the contract, there is no contract of sale within the statute; this being consistent with the idea, that there is no sale, properly speaking, within the intent of the statute (whatever agreement might be entered into), until the parties are ad idem upon an existing subject-matter. This is the narrow construction, suitable to a policy of disfavor of the statute; one which justifies most of the earlier English cases, — possibly even Garbutt v. Watson itself, — and, though now repudiated in England, maintaining a strong footing, seemingly, in New York.<sup>1</sup> (2d.) That whatever contract, whether as to chattels existing or chattels non-existing, may have been entered into, which in substance is for goods to be sold and delivered, and not work, labor, and materials only, — that is to say, which, when properly carried out, will result in the sale of a subject-matter for a price, — comes within the statute as a contract of sale.<sup>2</sup> This, too, the latest English exposition of the doctrine, which is plainly based upon the policy of giving the widest possible operation to the enactment, justifies the language of the written law. But this latter construction, for which a writer of our day strongly contends, expressing his surprise that "a rule so satisfactory and apparently so obvious" should not have been suggested earlier,<sup>3</sup> antagonizes the decisions of such eminent

<sup>1</sup> T. W. Dwight, Com., in Cooke v. Millard, 65 N. Y. 352, 359, says that according to the New York rule the word sale, in "no contract for the sale of," refers to the time of entering into the contract, while by the latest English rule of Lee v. Griffin sale refers to the time of delivery as contemplated by the parties. See preceding section.

<sup>2</sup> The delivery to be made of goods purchased is not "work and labor" to be done to them. Browne, § 302, notes and citations.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 1.

jurists as Mansfield, Loughborough, and Ellenborough, and looks to the future for vindication, and is, at the same time, open to the objection that a statute which suffers many to escape the obligation of honest performance, because of informalities, practically promotes the fraud which it theoretically seeks to prevent. Midway between these extremes lies the Massachusetts rule; which, on the score of policy, is preferable to either of the others. (3d.) That the statute applies to contracts for the sale of articles already existing, or such as the seller ordinarily makes or procures for the general market, but not to a contract for an article to be manufactured especially for the purchaser and upon his special order. This statement has the happy faculty of hitting between wind and water; and on the whole, while admitting discrepancies, the rule brings more of the earlier and later cases into good fellowship than any other yet put forward: but the objection is, that it distorts the legislative expression, and gives to the words "contracts for the sale of" goods, etc., a meaning which the statute framers could never have remotely intended.

As between these three rules, which (though each has its own merits) are not to be reconciled with one another, the courts are put to their election, until legislation shall assert itself in the premises more positively; for better guiding principles of construction are hardly to be looked for where the original language stands unaltered.<sup>1</sup>

§ 444. Auction Sales included under the Statute.—Auction sales, it is now settled, are within the policy of the Statute of Frauds; though this was, in Lord Mansfield's time and up to the present century, made a matter of doubt. Not only sales by common auctioneers are thus covered; but sheriffs' sales on execution, and public sales generally, to the same extent as private sales.<sup>2</sup> The phraseology of the old

<sup>1</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 299–308, passim, on this subject. For the rule under the Iowa code, see Brown v. Allen, 35 Iowa, 306.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 540; Browne Stat.

Frauds, § 293; Story Sales, § 264; Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558; Kenworthy v. Schofield, 2 B. & C. 945; Morton v. Dean, 13 Met. 385; Brent v. Green, 6 Leigh, 16; O'Don-

17th section justifies this interpretation ; while, in some of the corresponding American statutes, auctioneers' sales are expressly referred to.<sup>1</sup>

§ 445. Chattel Mortgages, Miscellaneous Agreements, etc., whether included.—Whether a mortgage of goods, wares, etc., is within the statute, is a matter of doubt ; for loans, whether secured by lien, pledge, or mortgage, or unsecured, are distinct from sales. But some are of opinion that a mortgage would come within the denomination of contracts of sale, as being a sort of conditional or defeasible sale.<sup>2</sup> The legal status of chattel mortgages is by no means firm, as we have elsewhere seen ; their growth is comparatively modern ; and a sale which is accompanied by a proviso for repurchase, or which keeps the title vested in the seller pending payment, is no mortgage at all, though much resembling it.<sup>3</sup>

An agreement between two parties to be partners in a sale of goods is a partnership agreement, and not within the statute.<sup>4</sup> Nor is a verbal contract for A. to advance money from time to time to enable B. to purchase an article, though it be further agreed that A. shall have a lien on the article as his security ; for this agreement involves a loan upon security, and not a sale.<sup>5</sup> Nor is a co-ownership agreement as to goods.<sup>6</sup> Nor is a compromise of conflicting money claims.<sup>7</sup> Nor ought the payment of a loan by goods to be considered within the nell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158 ; infra, as to auctions. See Lord Mansfield, in Simon v. Motivos, 1 W. Bl. 599.

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., New York, Michigan, and California statutes ; Browne Stat. Frauds, appx.

<sup>2</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, § 294 ; Gleason v. Drew, 9 Greenl. 79 ; Clark v. Duffey, 24 Ind. 271.

<sup>3</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 415-417 ; Williams v. Burgess, 10 A. & E. 499 ; Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446.

<sup>4</sup> Buckner v. Ries, 34 Mo. 357 ; Bullard v. Smith, 139 Mass. 497. Aliter, where one partner buys out the other and resells. Brown v. Slauson, 23 Wis. 244. See as to an arrangement of partners not within the statute, by way of rescinding a former contract of sale, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 29 Conn. 600 ; Wulschner v. Ward, 115 Ind. 219. An oral agreement of rescission may, in general, be sustained as part of the original and executed contract of sale ; though with an independent and subsequent agreement of resale or rescission it would be otherwise. See 36 Hun, 481 ; Johnston v. Trask, 116 N. Y. 141.

<sup>5</sup> Brown v. Allen, 35 Iowa, 306.

<sup>6</sup> Templeman v. Gibbs, 86 Tex. 358.

<sup>7</sup> Mygatt v. Tarbell, 78 Wis. 351 ; 147 Penn. St. 267.

statute.<sup>1</sup> But where one says, "If you will do" such a thing "to the article, I will give you" so much "for it," and the owner replies, "I will do it," this imports a contract of sale, which, to be enforced, must comply with the statute.<sup>2</sup> And, notwithstanding stipulations on either side which go to make the sale a complex one, the statute applies (with the reservations already noticed) so long as the contract is one of sale; that which is really embarrassing being to determine how far the special stipulations themselves call for an exact compliance, in addition to the simple bargain upon which they are engrafted.<sup>3</sup>

§ 446. Entirety of a Contract under the Statute; Sale by Parcels, etc. — The entirety of a contract — a principle which constantly confronts us in the law of sales — is an element not to be lost sight of, when subjecting a case to the statute. A single transaction may embrace a number of items; as where a customer selects several articles, and bargains for them all at one time; and if the parties footed the account, and made some distinct agreement concerning the price, as a sum total, all the more clearly must this have been designed as an entire contract.<sup>4</sup> Nor matters it that the goods were in different places, or differed in their deliverable condition, or in kind and quality, provided one contract covered them in as components of a single transaction.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, the purchase of successive lots as they are offered, with a distinct price for each, may raise the presumption of a distinct contract for each one; and particularly is this true of an auction sale, where each lot knocked down to a bidder is almost universally presumed to be the subject of an entire contract.<sup>6</sup> But in private sales, where the same seller con-

<sup>1</sup> See Browne, § 293*b*; Woodford v. Patterson, 32 Barb. 630; contra, Sawyer v. Ware, 36 Ala. 675.

<sup>2</sup> Bates v. Coster, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 580; Bowers v. Anderson, 49 Ga. 143.

<sup>3</sup> See infra, c. 11.

<sup>4</sup> Baldey v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 37; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 431.

<sup>5</sup> Bigg v. Whisking, 14 C. B. 195;

Scott v. Eastern, &c. R. R. Co., 12 M. & W. 33; Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 170; Story Sales, § 464; Gault v. Brown, 48 N. H. 183. But cf. Price v. Lea, 1 B. & C. 156.

<sup>6</sup> See Emmerson v. Heelis, 2 Taunt. 38; Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250; Field v. Runk, 2 Zab. 525; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 431; Wells v. Day, 124 Mass. 38.

tracts with the same buyer on a single occasion, the intention to make the contract an entire one should be more readily assumed than in cases of public sale, where an auctioneer, from the nature of his business, holds himself out, when offering a number of lots at one vendue, as ready to make successive contracts, not with any individual specified, but with such successive parties, whoever they may be, as shall prove the highest bidders on the separate lots; his course of employment, moreover, making him constantly the selling agent of several distinct owners on the same occasion.<sup>1</sup>

The question of entirety is, at all events, one of evidence, and open to proof, whether the sale be private or public. Where, on a single occasion, a bargain is struck on one article, and the parties simply discuss terms as to another, an entire sale contract can hardly arise.<sup>2</sup> Even as to auctions, we shall find cases where the successive accepted bids of the same person for various articles put up for auction are taken together as constituting an entire contract; the articles all belonging to one owner, and being offered at a single auction sale, upon the same terms and conditions, by way of disposing of his whole personal property on certain premises, and one bill being made out to the purchaser for the whole.<sup>3</sup>

If we would ascertain truly whether a given contract of sale is entire or not, we must follow the course of the parties far enough to take in their mutual intent in all its bearings. We must interpret their contract in its true spirit, and not with reference to any single point of the negotiation. Did they mean a number of distinct contracts, or one indivisible contract covering several items? Time is the most decisive circumstance of all. If the purchases were made simultaneously, this goes very strongly to prove that the contract was meant to be a single entire transaction. But, on the other hand, there is no rule which absolutely declares two purchases distinct contracts, because they were not made on one

<sup>1</sup> See auction sales, c. 18, post.

<sup>2</sup> Price v. Lea, 1 B. & C. 156.

<sup>3</sup> Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63;
Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 431.

and the same interview with the seller.<sup>1</sup> Nor is the rule invariable, that purchases on one occasion constitute an entire transaction.<sup>2</sup>

From the cases may be deduced this other important consideration, that the parties might start as though there should be separate sales, and yet conclude the transaction as an entire sale.<sup>3</sup> For it is the final review and adjustment of terms with the seller that constantly rounds the bargain, and consolidates what before were separate sale contracts into one entire transaction. We shall observe, as we proceed, that it is sometimes for the advantage and sometimes for the disadvantage of the enforcing party to have the contract of particulars construed as entire; advantageous where the issue is part performance by the buyer's acceptance and receipt, but disadvantageous wherever the standard of price or value is to be fitted to the contract to ascertain whether it comes within the scope of the statute; and the judicial disposition in any event to give the enforcing party the benefit of every doubt as to his right to sue on the contract may best explain, under this head, whatever tendency to confusion is found in the decisions.

§ 447. "Goods, Wares, Merchandises;" what Property is included.—(2d.) What classes of personal property are comprehended under the denomination of "goods, wares, and merchandises?" That these words are naturally confined in significance to personal property, and do not extend to real estate, is certain.<sup>4</sup>

§ 448. The Same Subject; Unsevered Crops; 4th and 17th Sections compared.—But when a contract of sale designates

<sup>1</sup> "It has been asked," says Baldey, J., in the leading case of Baldey v. Parker, "what interval of time must elapse between the purchase of different articles in order to make the contract separate; and the case has been put of a purchaser leaving a shop after making one purchase, and returning after an interval of five or ten minutes and making another. If the return to the shop were soon enough to warrant a supposition that the whole was intended to be one transaction, I should hold it one entire contract within the meaning of the statute." Baldey v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 337.

<sup>2</sup> See auction cases, supra, same section.

<sup>3</sup> See Best, J., in Baldey v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 337.

<sup>4</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 16.

corn, potatoes, or other chattels, which as yet are ungrown, and unsevered from the soil, is it a case under the 17th section, or not? This is an inquiry which sometimes presses on comparison of the 17th with part of the 4th section of the same statute, whose purport is, that contracts for the sale of lands, or any interest in or concerning them, must be in writing; the one section applying to personal, the other to real, property.<sup>1</sup> The requirements of these two sections, it is perceived, are quite different: for the 17th always permits oral acts of performance, and eliminates contracts involving a small value or price altogether; whereas a writing is rigidly exacted, without regard to value or oral acts, wherever the 4th section takes effect.

§ 449. Cases reviewed as to Unsevered Crops.—Said Lord Ellenborough, in Warwick v. Bruce: “Here is a contract for the sale of potatoes at so much per acre; the potatoes are the subject-matter of sale, and whether at the time they were covered with earth in the field, or in a box, still it was a sale of a mere chattel.”<sup>2</sup> In this, as in a former decision, he and his associates appear to have relied upon the fact that the contract was confined to the sale of the potatoes, and contemplated the transfer of no further salable interest.<sup>3</sup> Evans v. Roberts is a later case where potatoes were contracted for, which the seller was to raise at the buyer’s request, and deliver at a future period; the buyer to have, meanwhile, no interest in the land, of course, amounting to a possessory right of the premises. It was held that the incidental benefit of the soil which the buyer necessarily took under his contract was no such “interest in land” within the meaning of the statute as to make the contract other than a contract for chattels.<sup>4</sup> In progressing thus far from full-grown to ungrown potatoes, the courts had somewhat shifted the line of argument; but the principal idea developed was that an “interest in land” under section 4, properly speaking,

<sup>1</sup> See Bouv. Dict. “Frauds, Statute of;” 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4.

<sup>2</sup> Warwick v. Bruce, 2 M. & S. 205 (A.D. 1813).

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362.

<sup>4</sup> Evans v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 829.

involves the transfer to the buyer of some exclusive right to the soil, at least temporary, so as to enable him to make his profit of the growing surface.<sup>1</sup> Upon this distinction were carried certain cases where the purchaser of growing grass, who, under his contract, was to mow the grass and otherwise possess the soil, was held to have acquired thereby an interest in lands within the 4th section.<sup>2</sup> Combined with this consideration, appeared in succeeding cases another, that of a mutual contemplation as to the state in which the article was to exist at the time of delivery;<sup>3</sup> Tenterden, Abinger, and Baron Parke lending to these later decisions a weighty sanction. The policy now upheld was to refuse to bring contracts for mere industrial crops within the legislative enactment concerning "interests in land;" that is to say, to uphold the contract, though verbal, if possible, rather than suffer it to fail.

But in 1839 came Jones v. Flint: a case decided in the same way, though upon a more involved state of facts than hitherto; for not only did the contract relate to crops of corn and potatoes, with a right given the buyer to come upon the land for the purpose of harvesting and carrying them away, but there was a still more questionable stipulation presented concerning lay grass, which the court got rid of by construing upon the facts that the parties had manifested no intention to sell grass which the buyer was to mow.<sup>4</sup> Here the court held that this right of entering upon the land to harvest and carry off the corn and potatoes did not so materially affect the case as to render the sale here, more than in other instances, one of an "interest in lands" within the statute. This was an important advance from former decisions, and so the court esteemed it; but Lord Denman's position was thus stated: "We agree that the safer grounds of decision are the legal character of the principal subject-matter of sale, and the consideration whether, in order to

<sup>1</sup> See Bayley, Holroyd, and Little-dale, JJ., in Evans v. Roberts, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Crosby v. Wadsworth, 6 East, 602.

<sup>3</sup> Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446; Sainsbury v. Matthews, 4 M. & W. 343.

<sup>4</sup> Jones v. Flint, 10 Ad. & Ell. 753.

effectuate the intentions of the parties, it be necessary to give the vendee an interest in the land.”<sup>1</sup> This test, and the circumstances under which it was to be applied, brought into plain view a common-law distinction to which Little-dale, J., had adverted, after a somewhat discursive fashion, some thirteen years before; namely, between certain crops, the regular produce of the soil, such as grass, which the common law made part of the soil; and growing crops, fructus industriales, the product of annual industry, such as corn and potatoes, which, as Lord Coke said, was a personal chattel, independent of and distinct from the land.<sup>2</sup> It is upon this latter view of the doctrine that Joy, C. B., had in 1832, in an Irish case, disposed of the whole controversy. His admirably clear and concise language is substantially as follows: The general question, whether the contract concerns an interest in lands, under the Statute of Frauds, or goods and chattels, resolves itself into another, — whether or not a growing crop is goods and chattels. We must leave the fine distinction of the old cases, and have recourse to a criterion. “At common law growing crops were uniformly held to be goods; and they were subject to all the legal consequences of being goods, as seizure in execution, etc. The Statute of Frauds takes things as it finds them; and provides for lands and goods, according as they were so esteemed before its enactment. In this way the question may be satisfactorily decided.”<sup>3</sup> That fructus industriales sold with regard to their prospective severance, however long they are to remain in the soil to complete their growth, are chattels, whose sale is not within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, is now the settled rule of England and America.<sup>4</sup>

§ 450. The Same Subject; Distinctions as to Annual Crops, or Fruits of Industry. — The first principle here noticeable

<sup>1</sup> Ib.

<sup>2</sup> See Evans v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 829, per Little-dale, J.

<sup>3</sup> Joy, C. B., in Dunne v. Ferguson, Hayes, 540 (Irish Ex.).

<sup>4</sup> See Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 550; Kingsley v. Holbrook, 45 N. H.

313; Story Sales, § 263 a, 4th ed., Bennett's n.; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 1; Bryant v. Crosby, 40 Me. 22; Ross v. Welch, 11 Gray, 235; Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212; Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65; Bricker v. Hughes, 4 Ind. 146; Westbrook is, therefore, that fructus industriales, or annual crops, the fruits of periodical industry, are treated under the Statute of Frauds, not as interests in land, but as chattels; and that contracts for their sale are not governed by the 4th section of the statute of Charles II. The natural inference is, that they fall within the scope of the 17th section, as "goods, wares, and merchandises;" but, though certain dicta take this for granted, the precise point is not settled by authority; and Blackburn, J., on the contrary, declares the proposition, that such chattels, while still growing and unsevered (and with sole reference to such unsevered condition), are goods, wares, and merchandises, "exceedingly questionable."<sup>1</sup>

§ 451. The Same Subject; Cases further reviewed; Natural Products, etc.—In all the foregoing cases where fructus industriales were held to be chattels, and not interests in lands under the Statute of Frauds, the legal purport of the decision was in furtherance of the reasonable intent of the parties. They treated the subject sold as chattels; just as in our every-day mercantile transactions, where coal, corn, sugar, wood, and various other commodities, are to be supplied on contract, neither party dreams of questioning the character of the property as personal and not real, though he knows perfectly well that the article to be delivered is as yet unsevered from the soil. Now, these fructus industriales

v. Eager, 16 N. J. L. 81; Moreland v. Myall, 14 Bush, 474.

<sup>1</sup> Blackb. Sales, pp. 19, 20; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 2; contra, Bayley, J., and Littledale, J., in Evans v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 829; Joy, C. B., in Dunne v. Ferguson, Hayes, 540. And see Blackb. Sales, 9, 10. It may be well to state that annual crops, the fruits of periodical industry, are such as corn, peas, beans, tares, hemp, flax, cotton, melons, and potatoes, which yield an annual profit in return for annual labor; whilst timber, fruit-trees, grass, and clover, are fructus naturales, whose periodical crops are of a more permanent and spontaneous yield. See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 100–104; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 102; Co. Litt. 55 b. But certain artificial grasses which are quite frequently renewed, also hops (from a consideration paid to the special yearly culture which must be bestowed upon them, though they come from permanent roots), are now brought within the legal benefits of fructus industriales, and hence, as we may fairly suppose, claim exemption from the requirements of the 4th section. Ib.; Graves v. Weld, 2 Nev. & M. 725; Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 503; contra, Waddington v. Bristow, 2 B. & P. 452.

are not in every case without the provisions of the 4th section; for there are instances in the reports which might justify the remark of Littledale, J., that "where the land is agreed to be sold, and the vendee takes from the vendor the growing crops, the latter are considered part of the land."<sup>1</sup> We must search out some broader principle as a basis.

This necessity becomes the more apparent when we turn to the decisions under the statute concerning fructus naturales; for they by no means establish the converse rule, that such crops are invariably within section 4 as "interests in land." Take, for instance, the law as laid down with reference to trees and timber. Growing timber was the subject of a case very early reported, which the English Common Pleas decided in 1697. The question was, whether the sale of timber growing upon the land ought to be in writing under the Statute of Frauds, or might be by parol; and the court appeared to have held that it might be by parol, "because it is but a bare chattel."<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Surman, decided in 1829, reviews the same subject more fully; but the conclusion arrived at Lord Abinger later interprets in this modified form: "It appears that a contract to sell timber growing was not held to convey any interest in the land; but that was where the parties contracted to sell the timber at so much per foot, and from the nature of that contract it must be taken to have been the same as if the parties had contracted for the sale of timber already felled."<sup>3</sup> The agreement was, in fact, to sell standing timber, which the owner had already begun to cut down, at so much a foot.<sup>4</sup> Some stress has been laid in later cases upon the circumstance that the seller was to cut down the timber, and hence convert the property into a chattel by his own act;<sup>5</sup> a fact, however, whose true importance we think depends upon the light it throws upon the mutual in-

<sup>1</sup> Littledale, J., in Mayfield v. Wadsley, 3 B. & C. 366; Earl of Falmouth v. Thomas, 1 Cr. & M. 89.

<sup>2</sup> Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 182.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561;

Lord Abinger, C. B., in Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 501.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Surman, supra.

<sup>5</sup> See Bayley, J., in Earl of Falmouth v. Thomas, 1 Cr. & M. 105.

tent of the parties in passing property of this or that intrinsic character.<sup>1</sup> In Rodwell v. Phillips, a written sale of fruit upon the trees, which evidently meant to convey the property before severance from the soil, was held to be the sale of an interest in lands; and to the same effect are several other English decisions concerning growing grass, standing undergrowth, and the like.<sup>2</sup> These justify the position that an oral contract of fructus naturales, contemplating the transfer of the seller's property while they are still annexed to the soil, is within the 4th section as an interest in land; while the oral sale of such products in the ground, but awaiting a severance before property can pass to the purchaser, is only a chattel sale.<sup>3</sup>

Our American decisions have not in all instances kept the fine thread of distinction plainly in view: the cases regarding

<sup>1</sup> Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. D. 35, justifies this statement.

<sup>2</sup> Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 501; Campbell v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 248; Washburn v. Burrows, 1 Ex. 107; Scovell v. Boxall, 1 Y. & J. 396. Some late American authorities incline to giving a crop of fruit, such as peaches, the practical benefit of fructus industriales in this connection. Purner v. Pierce, 40 Md. 212.

<sup>3</sup> See Rolfe, B., in Washburn v. Burrows, supra; Lord Abinger, in Rodwell v. Phillips, 9 M. & W. 501; Blackb. Sales, 9, 10; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 2. The recent case of Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. D. 35, confirms the view of the text. A sale of growing timber, to be taken away as soon as possible by the purchaser, was treated here as not within the 4th section; here, too, the purchaser was to cut down, instead of the seller (as in Smith v. Surman, supra). An idea conveyed is, that, even supposing the property to have passed before severance, there was no "interest" or profit to be derived in the land therefrom, but only a license to come and take the trees, so far as the buyer was concerned. See Lord Coleridge, C. J., ib. 39, approving Wms. Saund. 395. The sale was made in mid-winter of trees whose cutting commenced early in March. Lord Coleridge laid stress on the fact that in winter, when the sap is out of the tree, and it stands as if it were dead, the buyer gets no "interest" in the land; but that it would be otherwise where at the time of the contract it was contemplated that the purchaser should derive a benefit from the further growth of the thing sold, from further vegetation, and from the nutriment afforded by the land. It is possible, however, that the decision rested upon the fact that no property was to pass to the purchaser before a severance.

Coleridge, C. J., admits as to the construction of the 4th section, "contract or sale of lands, . . . or any interest in or concerning them," that precedents have established tests which perhaps the framers of the statute never contemplated, but which cannot now be disregarded. Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. D. 35, 38, natural products under the Statute of Frauds are usually found to be irreconcilable; and in New York and several other States it is laid down emphatically, that the sale of growing trees, with the right given the purchaser to enter and remove them hereafter, is the sale of an interest in lands within the statute, and must invariably be expressed in writing.<sup>1</sup> But, on the other hand, there are numerous opinions among our later reported cases to justify the inference, that all contracts for the sale of trees or timber, still annexed to the soil, are susceptible of explanation; that if, on the one hand, the parties meant to grant a present property to the unsevered trees, there is a sale contract concerning an interest in lands, which must be put in writing; but if, on the other hand, their obvious meaning was to sell trees whose property should not pass to the purchaser until the thing had been dissevered so as to exist as a chattel, the contract is not within the operation of this section as an interest in land, and necessarily unenforceable because wholly oral.<sup>2</sup> Nor, upon this latter construction of the rule, is the circumstance, that the purchaser shall cut the trees instead of the vendor, decisive of the sale as one of an interest in lands.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 550; Howe v. Batchelder, 49 N. H. 204; Harrell v. Miller, 35 Miss. 700; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Penn. St. 206. A parol contract for the sale of growing timber amounts merely to a revocable license. Armstrong v. Lawson, 73 Ind. 498. See Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. 138.

<sup>2</sup> See opinions in Kingsley v. Holbrook, 45 N. H. 313; Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 306; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Met. 313; Owens v. Lewis, 46 Ind. 488; White v. Foster, 102 Mass. 375, 378; Byassee v. Reese, 4 Met. (Ky.) 372; Killmore v. Howlett, 48 N. Y. 569; Edwards v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co., 54 Me. 105. Killmore v. Howlett (which distinguishes Green v. Armstrong) makes it plainly the New York rule, that a contract to cut trees, standing upon the vendor's land, into cord-wood, to be delivered at so much a cord, is not a contract for the sale of an interest in lands. Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212, justifies a similar construction of the law with reference to intent of the transaction, and whether parties mean to sell specifically timber or other produce of the land, such as a crop of fruit. And see Cain v. McGuire, 13 B. Mon. 340; McClintock's Appeal, 71 Penn. St. 365; Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 306, 308, per Barrett, J.

When the title or property passes to the buyer in such cases is sometimes considered in this connection; e.g. upon a severance, or when the thing becomes a personal chattel. See Drake v. Wells, 11 Allen, 141; Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157; Cutter v. Pope, 13 Me. 377.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. And see Story Sales, 4th ed. § 263 a, Bennett's n.

§ 452. General Summary as to Unsevered Products; whether within the Statute.— Upon the whole, then, the current of English and American authorities, at the present day, seems to set in favor of some such rule as Judge Blackburn has laid down; to wit, that the crucial test is, whether the parties intended that the property in the thing should pass before or after its severance from the soil. To quote from this able writer: “It seems pretty plain upon principle that an agreement to transfer the property in something that is attached to the soil at the time of the agreement, but which is to be severed from the soil and converted into goods before the property is to be transferred, is an agreement for the sale of goods within the meaning of the 9 Geo. IV. c. 14 (Lord Tenterden’s Act), if not of the 29 Car. II. c. 3. The agreement is, that the thing shall be rendered into goods, and then in that state sold; it is an executory agreement for the sale of goods not existing in that capacity at the time of the contract. And when the agreement is, that the property is to be transferred before the thing is severed, it seems clear enough that it is not a contract for the sale of goods; it is a contract for a sale, but the thing to be sold is not goods. If this be the principle, the true subject of inquiry in each case is, When do the parties intend that the property is to pass? If the thing perish by inevitable accident before the severance, whom do they mean to bear the loss? for in general that is a good test of whether they intend the property to pass or not; in other words, if the contract be for the sale of the things after they have become severed from the land, so as to become the subject of larceny at common law, it is, at least since the 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, a contract for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise within the 17th section. On the whole, the cases are very much in conformity with these distinctions, though there is some authority for saying that a sale of emblements or fixtures, vesting an interest in them whilst in that capacity and before severance, is a sale of goods within the meaning of the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, and a good deal of authority that such a sale is not a sale of an interest in land within the 4th section, which may, however, be the case, though it is not a sale of goods, wares, and merchandise within the 17th.”<sup>1</sup> To which Mr. Benjamin adds, from a study of the later English cases: “Nothing is to be found in the cases reported since this perspicuous exposition was published, to affect its accuracy, or to shake the deductions drawn by the learned author from the authorities then extant.”<sup>2</sup>

The point for which these eminent writers contend appears to be well taken; though perhaps the doctrine as above set forth might better rest upon a lower substratum of legal principle, which we often encountered when studying heirlooms, emblements, and fixtures, in our first volume,—that a thing with the physical attributes of real property may become personal property by legal construction, because the parties have agreed to treat it as such, and bargain for it as a severed article; the law furthering their intention; and so vice versâ, with that which is physically a chattel, whose annexation to the soil, so as to become real estate, they have mutually contemplated.<sup>3</sup> And in the United States, where we have not Lord Tenterden’s act re-enacted in the several States, the question of an “executory contract” may, as to the 17th section, further complicate the issue.<sup>4</sup>

Our conclusion from all the authorities, English and American (if one assumes to reconcile them at all), may be stated in these propositions: (1st.) Contracts for the sale of fructus industriales, or crops the product of annual labor (which the common law treated as essentially chattels, with the usual incidents thereof, as to attachment during the owner’s life, and transmission upon his death, even while annexed to the soil and unsevered), come within the provision, not of the 4th, but rather of the 17th section; that is, at least, to say, they are certainly not contracts for the sale of interests in land, under the Statute of Frauds. (2d.) Contracts for the sale of fructus naturales, still unsevered and annexed to the soil (to which the common law imputed

<sup>1</sup> Blackb. Sales, 9, 10.

101, 114. And see ib. § 133, as to the doctrine of equitable conversion.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 2.

<sup>3</sup> See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 94,

<sup>4</sup> See supra, §§ 438–443.

no chattel character), come, on the contrary, within the 4th section, as involving the sale of interests in land. (3d.) But contracts of either class are made further subject to this qualification, that if the mutual intent was to transfer the seller's property with attendant risks after a severance, and not before,—in other words, not until the thing should physically exist as a chattel beyond a peradventure,—the law favors the mutual intent, so far as to regard the sale as without the provision of the 4th section altogether. (4th.) So, too, it would appear, that, vice versâ, a contract for the sale of an ungathered and unsevered crop, though coming within the denomination of fructus industriales, requires treatment as an interest in land within the meaning of the 4th section, if the parties clearly intended to pass property in it simply as part of the soil.<sup>1</sup>

§ 453. Contracts for the Sale of Fixtures, Buildings, etc., whether under Section 17.—Contracts for the sale of fixtures are to be construed on corresponding principles. Any chattel which is intended for a fixture to the soil is, by destination, real estate; and a contract which purports not merely to sell, but to annex the thing so that it shall be permanently incorporated with the soil, cannot be pronounced a mere contract for the sale of goods within the 17th section.<sup>2</sup> Nor is the mere sale of removable fixtures, as for instance, those of a tenant, already annexed to the ground, within the 17th section. “Fixtures,” says Cockburn, C. J., “although they severance to bear, already stated in the text, whether the parties meant a sale of the thing (whatever the property right and risks) as a chattel, as a severed article, and not as something unsevered?

<sup>1</sup> As to this last proposition, see Earl of Falmouth v. Thomas, 1 Cr. & M. 89; Mayfield v. Wadsley, 3 B. & C. 366, cited supra. It is perceived from some of the latest of the cases cited in the two preceding sections that a further test qualification may exist: namely, that whether the property or title in the thing might or might not have passed before a severance, the sale conferred no “interest” in the land to the buyer beyond a mere license to come and take the thing. Is it not better, then, to bring this test of constructive

<sup>2</sup> Cotterell v. Apsley, 6 Taunt. 322; Clark v. Bulmer, 11 M. & W. 243. Tenant's fixtures to the freehold are not “goods, wares, and merchandise.” Lee v. Gaskell, 1 Q. B. D. 700. And see more fully, as to emoluments and fixtures, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. pt. 2, cs. 5 and 6.

may be removable during the tenancy, as long as they remain unsevered, are part of the freehold, and you cannot dispose of them to the landlord or any one else as goods and chattels, because they are not severed from the freehold, so as to become goods and chattels.”<sup>1</sup>

Whatever the foregoing expression of the court, the basis of reasoning is that fixtures were sold to remain<sup>a</sup> in the ground ; and perhaps if the sale purely contemplated a sale to a third person, not interested in the land, as of things to be severed and taken away, the sale would be not only one of chattels, but of chattels following the analogy of fructus industriales.<sup>2</sup> In our American States the tendency appears decidedly to regard the intention of parties in all such cases. And as to buildings (as probably to fixtures also)<sup>3</sup> it is ruled in various instances that when parties sell with the idea that the thing sold shall be severed and moved from the realty (a very common mode of selling old structures), the sale is one of “goods” or chattels, and the Statute of Frauds applies in its 17th section.<sup>4</sup> Real estate difficulties may occur in practical connection with such questions, which we need not examine.

§ 454. Whether Section 17 applies to Incorporeal Chattels; Bills and Notes, Stock, etc.—Another important inquiry, arising in the present connection, concerns the application of the 17th section to choses in action, or incorporeal personality. In England, it is well settled that such property comes not under the denomination of “goods, wares, and merchandises,” and hence that contracts for the sale of an incorporeal chattel of any species need not comply with the statute. The first important case in point is Humble v. Mitchell, decided in 1839, with reference to bank-shares. Said Denman, C. J. : “Shares in a joint-stock company like

<sup>1</sup> Lee v. Gaskell, 1 Q. B. D. 700.

<sup>2</sup> See editorial comment upon Lee v. Gaskell, in late English edition, Benj. Sales, § 127.

<sup>3</sup> See 3 Day, 476 ; 1 Crompt. M. & R. 266 ; Horsfall v. Hey, 2 Ex. 778 ; Browne, § 234.

<sup>4</sup> Curtis v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 154 ; Shaw v. Carbrey, 13 Allen, 492 ; Hartwell v. Kelly, 117 Mass. 235 ; Keyser v. District, 35 N. H. 477 ; Long v. White, 42 Ohio St. 59 ; Strong v. Doyle, 110 Mass. 92 ; Central Branch R. v. Fritz, 20 Kans. 430.

this are mere choses in action, incapable of delivery, and not within the scope of the 17th section.”<sup>1</sup> And the principle of that decision has since been extended to various other incorporeal rights; so that (notwithstanding some doubts formerly entertained on the subject) the question is no longer considered an open one in the English courts.<sup>2</sup>

This construction, which seems most in conformity with the legislative intent as expressed in the time of Charles II., when incorporeal rights had no recognized status as the subject of legal sale and transfer, has been pursued in some parts of the United States.<sup>3</sup> But the circumstances attending our later legislation on this subject might raise new questions as to the policy of the law-makers; since incorporeal property comes as much within the reason of an enactment against fraud as corporeal chattels, save as to the peculiar formalities which attend a complete transfer. In New York, kindred legislation has put equitable choses in action on a like footing with goods;<sup>4</sup> and in several States the Statute of Frauds, as adopted, expressly provides for “things in action;”<sup>5</sup> while again, in Florida, is to be found the preferable and sweeping expression “personal property,” which might in every State well supersede the ancient tautological phrase elsewhere clung to, and make our modern policy plain and consistent.<sup>6</sup>

But in Massachusetts the court became the reformer, and,

<sup>1</sup> Humble v. Mitchell, 11 Ad. & E. 205.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 2; Tempest v. Kilner, 3 C. B. 249; Duncuft v. Albrecht, 12 Sim. 189; Watson v. Spratley, 10 Ex. 222; Powell v. Jessop, 18 C. B. 336; Colonial Bank v. Whinney, 30 Ch. D. 283; Knight v. Barber, 16 M. & W. 66; 1 Ex. 856. But see earlier cases: Com. Rep. 354; Prec. Ch. 533; Sel. Cas. Ch. 113. It was held by the English Court of Chancery, before the American Revolution, that shares in a corporation were “goods, wares, and merchandise” within the statute. Gray, C. J., in Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 285, citing Prec. Ch. 533; Sel. Cas. in Ch. 41. But the point seems to have been regarded by these earlier cases as practically unsettled. See Com. Rep. 354, passim, reign of Geo. I.

<sup>3</sup> See Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484; Vawter v. Griffin, 40 Ind. 593, where the statute expression is “goods” only.

<sup>4</sup> Artcher v. Zeh, 5 Hill, 200; 86 N. Y. 630; 56 N. Y. 230.

<sup>5</sup> See statutes of Alabama, California, and New York, in Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

<sup>6</sup> Southern Life, &c. Co. v. Cole, 4 Fla. 339.

just before Lord Denman and his associates pronounced their contrary opinion, declared, for this State, that the words "goods, wares, and merchandise" should properly embrace incorporeal personalty. There had already been intimations in various parts of America that contracts for the sale of stock must comply with the terms of the 17th section; an opinion which a Maryland court seems to have adopted, without giving reasons, as early as 1810.<sup>1</sup> Tisdale v. Harris is the leading Massachusetts case, and indeed the leading American one, on this side; and the opinion therein rendered by Shaw, C. J., has since served as a counterpoise to the contrary utterances of the English Queen's Bench.<sup>2</sup> A contract for the sale of shares of stock was here held to require proof by writing in the absence of the other requisites.<sup>3</sup> The same principle was later extended in the same State to promissory notes, notwithstanding the English rule had by this time become manifestly opposed; and so the Massachusetts courts deliberately chose to follow Tisdale v.

<sup>1</sup> See Colvin v. Williams, 3 Har. & J. 38. But see Webb v. Baltimore R., 87 Md. 92, adopting the English rule, contra.

<sup>2</sup> Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. 9 (A.D. 1837-38). Admitting that the question had not already been clearly adjudicated in Great Britain, and adverting to an early case of the kind, where twelve judges appear to have been equally divided, the court thus proceeds: "Supposing this a new question, now for the first time calling for a construction of the statute, the court are of opinion that, as well by its terms as its general policy, stocks are fairly within its operation. The words 'goods' and 'merchandise' are both of very large signification. Bona, as used in the civil law, is almost as extensive as personal property itself, and in many respects it has nearly as large a signification in the common law. The word 'merchandise' also, including in general objects of traffic and commerce, is broad enough to include stocks or shares in incorporated companies. . . . There is nothing in the nature of stocks or shares in companies, which in reason or sound policy should exempt contracts in respect to them from those reasonable restrictions designed by the statute to prevent frauds in the sale of other commodities. On the contrary, these companies have become so numerous, so large an amount of the property of the community is now invested in them, and as the ordinary indicia of property arising from delivery and possession cannot take place, there seems to be peculiar reason for extending the provisions of this statute to them."

<sup>3</sup> Ib. Boardman v. Cutter, 128 Mass. 388, confirms the rule of Tisdale v. Harris, supra; and the fact that the plaintiff, in an action for the refusal to take the shares in pursuance of an oral agreement, has been induced to become a stockholder

Harris, rather than Humble v. Mitchell.<sup>1</sup> This Massachusetts doctrine has received the distinct support of Connecticut and Maine.<sup>2</sup> In New Jersey, furthermore, the sale of a bond and mortgage is held to be within the statute.<sup>3</sup>

The strength of the Massachusetts doctrine lies in its conforming with the spirit of the law. That this view is adapted to the age in which we live is confirmed by the fact that so many States have so amended the English statute in re-enacting its provisions as to let in incorporeal property. Nor elsewhere is the argument unworthy of notice, that an act passed by a State legislature in the nineteenth century might bear a nineteenth-century interpretation. But to construe statutory language on a general principle is always unsafe; and the reasoning of Tisdale v. Harris, from the supposed extensive signification of such words as "goods" and "merchandise," has not gone undisputed, even in the United States.<sup>4</sup> And a contract for the sale of stock in a prospective company, not yet organized, is held to be without the statute.<sup>5</sup>

§ 455. Statute Provision as to Standard of "Price" or "Value."
—(3d.) What standard of "price" or "value" brings a by the defendant's promise to buy the stock of the plaintiff whenever he wished to sell, is held immaterial. See Fay v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 292, contra, which seems to regard the promise to take back as part of the original undertaking, which by acceptance at all events was taken out of the statute.

<sup>1</sup> Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Met. 365.

<sup>2</sup> North v. Forest, 15 Conn. 400, as to shares of stock; also Pray v. Mitchell, 60 Me. 430. A sale of bank-bills is within the statute. Gooch v. Holmes, 41 Me. 523; 2 Cranch C. C. 143. Cf. Dudley (Ga.), 28.

<sup>3</sup> Greenwood v. Law, 55 N. J. 168.

<sup>4</sup> Vawter v. Griffin, 40 Ind. 593; Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484. And see Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 296-298; Story Sales, § 263; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 16, 17, 47, 58.

Even under the Massachusetts rule, it is held that an oral agreement for the sale of an interest in an invention, before letters-patent are obtained, is not a contract for the sale of "goods, wares, or merchandise," within the statute. Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279. And such an agreement is accordingly enforceable by bill in equity. Ib. See also Burke v. Partridge, 58 N. H. 349, 353; Blakeney v. Goode, 30 Ohio St. 350; Burr v. De la Vergne, 102 N. Y. 415; Dalzell v. Watch Case Co., 149 U. S. 315 (a recent case of great authority). But see 29 Conn. 98.

<sup>5</sup> Green v. Brookins, 23 Mich. 48; Mehan v. Sharp, 151 Mass. 566. These and the cases in the foregoing note suggest a doubt of the statute application to mere money rights or choses in action which are assigned.

A contract for the sale of gold as a commodity is within the statute. Peabody v. Speyers, 56 N. Y. 230.

case within the statute? This is the final inquiry suggested under the present branch of our subject. We say "price" or "value," because legislation at this day employs sometimes the one word and sometimes the other. "Price" was used in the original act of 29 Car. II.; but, in England, Lord Tenterden's Act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 7, has substituted the less precise and technical word "value" in reaffirming and amending the 17th section; the effect of which appears to be, not so much to substitute a different test as to give wider expression to the policy upon which this whole legislation against frauds and perjuries rests.<sup>1</sup> "Price" is the word still to be found upon the statute-books of most of our American States;<sup>2</sup> which perhaps except for its more technical and narrower meaning we might regard as synonymous with "value."

As to the standard of price or value, local legislation varies, naturally enough. For the price or value of "£10 and upwards" has always been the English rule.<sup>3</sup> In the United States, the preference has been shown for a similar standard, as computed in Federal money; varying, however, in precise amount, from thirty up to the round sum of fifty dollars, as local legislation may dictate, while a few States carry the exemption as high as two or even three hundred dollars;<sup>4</sup> but "any value" is the standard of one or two States.<sup>5</sup> Any contract of sale, therefore, which imports a price up to or beyond the statute standard (and, if no price was definitely fixed by the contract, the law will assume that a reasonable price, as measured by the reasonable value of the goods, was mutually intended<sup>6</sup>), is incapable of enforcement while the statute provision fails of compliance.

The price or value is not to be presumed to reach the statutory sum: on the contrary, he who claims protection of the statute must show affirmatively that his case falls under

<sup>1</sup> Act 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 7; Harman v. Reeve, 25 L. J. C. P. 257.

<sup>2</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

<sup>3</sup> Act 29 Car. II. § 17; Act 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 7.

<sup>4</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

<sup>5</sup> See Bennett's note, Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 149, referring to Florida and Iowa statutes.

<sup>6</sup> See supra, § 216.

it.<sup>1</sup> But the statute appears to cover a contract for the sale of articles for which a sum rising to the legislative standard proves eventually payable by way of price, even though, consistently with their contract as made, the parties might have hoped to keep the price down below it; and they cannot agree to leave in uncertainty the actual amount payable without altogether endangering their means of reciprocally enforcing the bargain. The decision in Watts v. Friend involves this principle, though the point was not specially taken by counsel or court.<sup>2</sup> At all events, under a statute which substitutes the word "value" for "price," a case may, upon proper proof, be brought within the operation of its provisions, notwithstanding the contract itself leaves it doubtful whether a price less than the statute standard might not have been agreed upon.<sup>3</sup>

§ 456. The Same Subject; Rule of Entirety of Contract here applied.— But litigation, under the present head, is chiefly concerned with cases which call for the application of that doctrine concerning the entirety of contracts to which we have elsewhere alluded.<sup>4</sup> One purchases several things from the same person; and the inquiry arises, whether the standard which the legislature has fixed shall apply to the cost of each thing considered separately, or to the amount payable for the whole as a single sum total. Now, if there be an entire contract of sale involving several items, the statute must apply wherever the price or value of all together foots up to the standard prescribed by legislation; but if each item be a separate transaction, and the subject of a separate contract,

<sup>1</sup> Crookshanks v. Burrell, 18 Johns. 58; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 311.

<sup>2</sup> Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 3; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 312. The reporter's note to this case, which involved the sale of turnip-seed, the future product of seed not yet sown, calls attention to a point not discussed in it: viz., that, when the bargain was made, it was uncertain whether the value of the seed to be produced would reach £10; and that, under the 4th section, it has been held that cases depending on contingencies which may or may not happen within the year are not within that section, though the event does not, in fact, happen within the year. We may, then, infer that the 17th section differs from the 4th in respect of the rule stated in the text.

<sup>3</sup> Harman v. Reeve, 25 L. J. C. P. 257.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, § 446.

no single one of them involving a price which reaches the standard, the statute is satisfied; and, once more, if the price of any article rise to the standard, and consequently the total price likewise, so long as each article was the subject-matter of its own contract, the statute takes effect only against the excessive item, without paying regard to the price or value of the whole. The criterion is, what was the total price or value of all the articles embraced under a single sale transaction?

To illustrate the rule, in Baldey v. Parker the defendant went into the plaintiff's shop and bargained for several articles. A separate price was agreed upon for each, and none exceeded in cost £10, the statute standard. The defendant asked to have an account for the whole sent to his house; which was done, showing a total cost of £70. This sum the defendant refused to pay, thinking it too large; and asked a discount from the whole bill, which the plaintiffs declined to make. A controversy followed, terminating in a lawsuit; and the defendant pleaded the Statute of Frauds. The court held the plea to be good, inasmuch as the bargain as concluded showed that the contract was an entire one for goods, embraced under different items, for the sum total of £70. Said Bayley, J.: "It is conceded here that on the same day, and indeed at the same meeting, the defendant contracted with the plaintiffs for the purchase of goods to a much greater amount than £10. Had the entire value been set upon the whole goods together, there cannot be a doubt of its being a contract for a greater amount than £10 within the 17th section of the statute; and I think that the circumstance of a separate price being fixed upon each article makes no such difference as will take the case out of the operation of that law."<sup>1</sup>

§ 457. The Same Subject.—Transactions of this kind must be viewed in their whole breadth in order to resolve the mutual intention. We have shown that an auction sale of effects is usually thought to raise a separate contract with the purchaser on each successive lot knocked down.<sup>1</sup> This is not invariably the case, however; for an auctioneer may so adjust the price in concluding with the purchaser of several lots at one vendue as to render the price computable under the statute as a sum total. A New Hampshire case goes quite far in this direction; holding—contrary to the usual rule, and upon the suggestion that auction sales of goods are conducted in this country much the same as any other sales—that where the furniture and stable stock of a proprietor were sold at the same auction, and all upon the same terms and conditions, a purchaser who bought in separate articles upon separate bids and at separate and distinct prices, and on different days had made an entire contract at an aggregate price exceeding the limit for cases without the statute.<sup>2</sup> There may, of course, be an entire sale for a certain price with delivery by instalments.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Baldey v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 37. see Story Sales, § 261; Gilman v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311; supra, § 446; Holroyd, J., and Best, J., ib. And Allard v. Greasert, 61 N. Y. 1.

We may further remark, that, where a single contract of sale which falls within the statute rule by reason of an excessive price or value stipulates something further, the entirety of the contract forbids a separation of its parts; but the good portion and the bad portion are inseparable, and both must fall together. Thus, if the oral contract be partly for the sale of goods at a price which reaches the statute standard, and partly for the keeping of cattle, non-enforcement is the result as to the whole contract.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, if the contract be not entire, and the sound part be separable from the unsound, the sound part will be enforceable.<sup>5</sup>

Where the price or value fixed is uncertain, the statute test applies according to the price or value as ultimately ascertained.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See § 446; Wells v. Day, 124 Mass. 38.

<sup>2</sup> Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63; supra, § 446.

<sup>3</sup> Gault v. Brown, 48 N. H. 183.

<sup>4</sup> Harman v. Reeve, 25 L. J. C. P. 257; Irvine v. Stone, 6 Cush. 508. So, if an entire agreement be made as to both real and personal property, and the agreement as to the one fails of support under the statute, that as to the other becomes equally unenforceable. Hodgson v. Johnson, El., Bl. & El. 685; Gould v. Mansfield, 103 Mass. 408.

<sup>5</sup> Rand v. Mather, 11 Cush. 1. The usual analogies of the law of contracts must here apply, which we need not pursue in detail.

<sup>6</sup> Brown v. Sanborn, 21 Minn. 402;

CHAPTER X.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS ; ORAL COMPLIANCE.

§ 458. Two Methods of Oral Compliance to be considered.

— II. Our present chapter considers, as concerning sale contracts, oral acts of compliance with the Statute of Frauds. These, as reference to the original 17th section will show, are two in number: (1st.) The buyer's acceptance and actual receipt of part of the subject-matter; (2d.) The giving of earnest or part payment. One or the other of these modes will suffice. In either alternative, the enactment is satisfied by a merely partial performance; and the buyer, rather than the seller, is looked to as the party who must do the requisite thing; though mutual assent to the act of part performance is doubtless contemplated. These topics will be successively discussed.

§ 459. Compliance by Buyer's Part Acceptance and Actual Receipt. — (1st.) Concerning the buyer's acceptance and actual receipt of part of the subject-matter. Says the Statute of Charles the Second: "Except the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same."<sup>1</sup> This is, in substance, the language of American legislation likewise; but, in States whose codes make express mention of incorporeal chattels, a slightly different turn has been given to the phrase, without changing the main result.<sup>2</sup>

8 Ind. 58; Carpenter v. Galloway, 73 Ind. 418, where the sale was of all the mules that a certain jack should breed during the season, at $46 each, and the "price," as ascertained, depended upon the number of mules actually bred.

<sup>1</sup> 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 17; supra, § 429.

<sup>2</sup> "Shall accept and receive part of such goods, or the evidences, or some of them, of such things in action." See enactments of California, New York, &c., in Browne's Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx. The Iowa statute is peculiar: requiring a part delivery, but saying nothing of a part acceptance. See 13 Fed. Rep. 345.

The obvious force of language like this is to exact the most scrupulous oral performance on the buyer's part in order to save the contract from failure: he must not only receive a portion of the subject-matter, but he must accept it. Hence, too, the seller must have made a thorough delivery of that portion of the goods which is claimed to satisfy the statute. The legislature is, indeed, silent as to acts of performance by the seller; but so strenuously does it insist upon such acts of the buyer as would naturally follow delivery, that, as the irresistible conclusion, the seller must have fully delivered; and furthermore, the contract continues insecure until the buyer has supplemented such performance by his unequivocal receipt and acceptance.

We have shown that the common law of delivery or tender of goods under a contract of sale does not go so far as to postpone the seller's remedies to the period when a transfer of possession is finally effected; for there may be a transfer of property before a transfer of possession, and he need not surrender custody until the price has been satisfactorily paid or secured. But there can be no delivery under the Statute of Frauds, irrespective of a full surrender of possession; there can be no compliance, such as the text we have quoted recognizes, while the seller merely tenders possession to the buyer; none while the seller's lien remains; none, perhaps, while one's right continues to return the goods because of their non-correspondence with the contract in kind and quantity.<sup>1</sup> The statute is not satisfied if the seller asks instructions for shipment, and the shipment is not made;<sup>2</sup> nor if the goods are shipped to the buyer, but lost on the way.<sup>3</sup> And the buyer's acts of fulfilment so far hinge upon the seller's precedent act of delivery as to require that the acceptance and receipt shall be in pursuance of such delivery as the seller has made, not for some temporary purpose, but with the intent of divesting himself of possession as owner in the buyer's favor.<sup>4</sup> It is when the buyer's acts

<sup>1</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 316-333; Story Sales, § 276.

<sup>2</sup> Marsh v. Rouse, 44 N. Y. 643.

<sup>3</sup> Maxwell v. Brown, 39 Me. 98.

<sup>4</sup> See Brand v. Focht, 1 Abb. N. Y. App. 185. But see infra, §§ 463, 464.

show that both the seller and himself have rendered part performance that the statute becomes fully satisfied.

§ 460. The Same Subject; what is Acceptance and Actual Receipt.—To turn now to the buyer, the party whose acts are decisive of oral compliance with the statute. Delivery of possession is good as far as it goes; but delivery will not take a single case out of the statute, nor is it in the seller's power to render the contract enforceable by any oral act of his own independently of the buyer's performance.<sup>1</sup> What the buyer must do under the statute is briefly epitomized,—to accept, and to actually receive. These two acts must concur as to the same identical portion of the subject-matter embraced under the contract: neither is acceptance satisfactory without actual receipt, nor actual receipt without acceptance. A carrier, we know, may actually receive goods, while it is not within his sphere to accept them on the buyer's behalf: moreover, instances have already been cited where a buyer accepted a thing as satisfactory before actually receiving it. But the Statute of Frauds permits of no half-way work: there must be acceptance, and actual receipt besides.

The preponderance of authorities at this day decidedly favors a discrimination between acceptance and actual receipt, thus justifying the framers of the enactment;<sup>2</sup> though some eminent judges have thought the terms equivalent.<sup>3</sup> The language of the statute is plain; but the decisions are in a confused state, and not easily to be reconciled; which is doubtless owing, in great part, to a long fluctuation of opinion as to the propriety of observing this distinction, and a frequent disposition to assert a rule for the one class of cases which applies to the other. Not only are the terms "accept-

<sup>1</sup> See Nichols v. Morse, 100 Mass. 523; Marsh v. Rouse, 44 N. Y. 643; Maxwell v. Brown, 39 Me. 101; Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114; cases cited, post. Mere words are insufficient. Shepherd v. Pressey, 32 N. H. 55; Bowers v. Anderson, 49 Ga. 143.

<sup>2</sup> See Blackb. Sales, 22, 23; Benj.

Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1; § 467, post; Page v. Morgan, 15 Q. B. D. 228, and authorities cited.

<sup>3</sup> Cockburn, C. J., and Crompton, J., in Castle v. Swarder, 6 H. & N. 832; Erle, J., in Marvin v. Wallis, 6 E. & B. 726.

ance" and "actual receipt" often interchanged in legal discussion, but the statute is construed as though it put as a test the seller's act of delivery, instead of the buyer's performance.<sup>1</sup> This, however, ought not to be applied where oral compliance is set up for binding the buyer; for the statute requires, in the absence of a writing, this distinct part acceptance and receipt as clear evidence of his intent to be bound by the contract.

§ 461. The Same Subject; Doctrine of Entirety applied.—Some legal principles may be asserted of both classes taken together. Thus the doctrine of entirety renders the part acceptance and receipt of a single lot, though various lots were covered into the transaction, a sufficient compliance with the statute; and this time it is the enforcing party, instead of the defendant, who reaps the advantage of the doctrine; for the area of performance which satisfies the enactment becomes reduced to the fractional part of a fraction.<sup>2</sup> And so favorably do the courts incline to regard part performance as operating to take a contract out of the statute, that they have not only construed an auction sale of separate lots into one entire transaction, but even recognized performance as to an existing portion of goods, notwithstanding the remainder has no existence, but must be made to order. Thus, where ready-made lamps were ordered at the same time with others to be made to order, the acceptance and receipt of the former were held to take the latter out of the statute.<sup>3</sup> It matters not that the entire contract covers articles of different kinds and qualities; for the part acceptance and receipt, as to a single item of one kind or quality, will suffice to bear up the other items, whatever be their character, provided only all were embraced in a single transaction.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Pollock, C. B., in Holmes v. Hoskins, 9 Ex. 753.

<sup>2</sup> Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 170; Scott v. Eastern, &c. R. R. Co., 12 M. & W. 33; Gault v. Brown, 48 N. H. 183; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 431; Jenness v. Wendell, 51 N. H. 63.

<sup>3</sup> See Jenness v. Wendell, supra; Scott v. Eastern, &c. R. R. Co., supra.

<sup>4</sup> Elliott v. Thomas, 3 M. & W. 170. And see supra, § 446. But see Price v. Lea, 1 B. & C. 156.

§ 462. The Same Subject; Test of Part Acceptance, etc.—The acceptance and receipt of a part will satisfy the statute as to the whole; and though such part acceptance and receipt would not, of course, legally amount to delivery of the balance, so as to justify one in suing as for goods sold and delivered, the seller is thus enabled to sue on the whole contract as for goods bargained and sold;<sup>1</sup> and since the buyer binds himself in such a case, so, too, does the seller become bound to deliver the residue of the goods under the contract.<sup>2</sup>

As to part acceptance and receipt, the statute imposes no arbitrary test: any substantial part, be it never so small in comparison with the whole amount contracted for, is capable of affording a full compliance with the law. A half-pound parcel out of a hogshead of sugar, which the buyer accepts and receives as part of the entire quantity, has been held sufficient.<sup>3</sup> But while some of the earlier cases appear to have indulged the enforcing party so far as to let a mere sample or specimen package lift the entire bulk out of the statute, the rule, as stated by Lord Ellenborough, was, that such a parcel must have been accepted and received by the buyer as part of the goods sold, notwithstanding the additional intent of the parties that it should be a sample or specimen of quality; that the total must have been diminished, as the parties understood it, by so much quantity or bulk as the parcel represented.<sup>4</sup> This test, then, evidently excludes, as it ought, from the advantages which wait upon compliance, every case where a mere sample or specimen was given to the buyer as no part of the specific quantity or lot actually bargained for, but rather to induce a bargain afterwards.<sup>5</sup> Nor should the correspondence of such sample with

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 279; Atwood v. Lucas, 53 Me. 508.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Richardson v. Squires, 37 Vt. 640.

<sup>3</sup> Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558. And see Rohde v. Thwaites, 6 B. & C. 388.

<sup>4</sup> Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558;

Klinitz v. Surry, 5 Esp. 267; Gardner v. Grout, 2 C. B. n. s. 340. And see Knight v. Mann, 118 Mass. 143; Kibble v. Gough, 38 L. T. n. s. 204; Rickard v. Moore, 38 L. T. n. s. 841.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. And see Remick v. Sandford, 120 Mass. 309.

the bulk actually sold be enough to satisfy the statute. A just regard for the intention of the law-makers requires, we think, that the statute provisions shall not be evaded by any judicial misconstruction of acts and conduct which had substantial reference to gifts or samples merely as such; and that satisfactory performance, to come within the present exception, must consist in the acceptance and receipt by the buyer of some part, however small, as strictly on account of the whole; the question being one of fact, with the burden upon the party who alleges performance.<sup>1</sup>

§ 463. Whether accompanied necessarily by Transfer of Title.—Courts and text-writers are well agreed that the statute compliance by part acceptance and part receipt which we are considering presupposes a very thorough transfer of possessory rights from seller to buyer as concerns that portion of subject-matter which proves so delegated as to save the contract. By “accept and actually receive,” say some jurists, we are to understand a complete appropriation of the whole or a part by the purchaser;<sup>2</sup> a statement whose force must depend upon the sense in which “appropriation” is used, but indicating a very decisive assumption of control. And since acceptance is the larger act, which draws in actual receipt, and declares one’s final intention to retain the thing delivered as satisfactory, it must continually result that the buyer has become a full owner; that a complete transfer has

<sup>1</sup> See Smith v. Hudson, 6 D. & S. 431; Bush v. Holmes, 53 Me. 417; Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257; Davis v. Eastman, 1 Allen, 422; Stone v. Browning, 51 N. Y. 211; 53 Me. 508. One of several joint purchasers may accept and receive in part, so as to render the contract enforceable against all. Smith v. Milliken, 7 Lans. 336.

As concerns the sale of incorporeal personalty (see § 454), acceptance and receipt under the statute are satisfied, where a stock certificate, indorsed in blank by the seller, by way of assignment, is received with apparent satisfaction by the buyer. Meehan v. Sharp, 151 Mass. 564.

<sup>2</sup> See Story Sales, § 276. “There must be an acceptance and an actual receipt; no absolute acceptance [necessarily], but an acceptance which could not have been made except on admission of the contract, and that the goods were sent under it.” Brett, L. J., in Kibble v. Gough, 38 L. T. n. s. 204. And it is further stated that there may be a power to reject the goods as not equal to the sample, and yet a sufficient acceptance of the part sent under the Statute of Frauds. Ib. And see post, § 465, and notes.

taken place of possession, the right of possession and the right of property, when a chattel is both received and accepted by the buyer. But does this consequence necessarily follow? Is it an indispensable incident of statutory compliance that a full transfer of title should have taken place? The decided cases do not, thus far, seem to have given this question a careful consideration. Our former chapters show that here in America the courts have again and again sustained conditions in a sale that no property right in the subject-matter shall pass from seller to buyer, until the price is fully paid, though the buyer be allowed to take full possession.<sup>1</sup> It may be quite important to understand whether an oral contract of this kind is enforceable or not so soon as a portion of the goods has been accepted and received by the buyer. Then, again, there are other conditional contracts of sale which postpone the divestment of a seller's title,—on approval, on trial, and the like,—where the legal effect of part acceptance and receipt seems never to have been determined.

A little reflection may convince a candid mind that the part acceptance and receipt which legislation admitted as one mode of putting the whole contract upon an enforceable footing meant to keep the question of payment out of sight; since a seller would rarely make a part delivery under an entire contract without meaning to wait for his pay until he had delivered the whole: he could hardly ask for his full price while there was more to deliver, nor would he be very likely to have stipulated for a pro ratâ payment. Part payment was one alternative presented under the statute for binding the purchaser, standing by itself; part acceptance and receipt its correlative and equally independent mode of satisfying the enactment. Why, then, should this right of property be thought a test of compliance at all, and thus perplex legal inquiry under what proves but a precautionary measure adopted by the legislature for making weighty bargains rest upon available proof? For it is to the possessory rights that such words as "delivery," "receipt," and "acceptance" immediately relate,—to acts which parade the intention of the parties as to a contract of sale in plain sight ; not to the more abstract question of full-title transfer, inclusive of the right of property, which doubly baffles the inquirer when brought down to the fractional part of goods delivered. It seems to us a rational view of the subject, independently of all legal precedent, that acceptance and actual receipt under the 17th section should be taken to mean such acceptance and receipt, as, agreeably with the terms of the particular contract of sale, pass the present possessory rights from seller to buyer, and establish the contract of sale as clearly intended to be a binding one ; but that if the contract as to the whole subject-matter were complex instead of simple in its stipulations, conditional instead of absolute as concerned the transfer of the seller's full title in the whole subject-matter sold, the buyer might well accept and receive a part (supposing no special conditions had attached to that specific portion), with the full possessory rights contemplated, and thereby render the contract enforceable. In other words, our present oral compliance with the statute is not incompatible with a transfer of property conditional instead of absolute, provided only the buyer take full possessory rights in a whole or a part of the goods accordingly.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See supra, §§ 292-303.

§ 464. The Same Subject. — Under such a rule, part acceptance and actual receipt could be given of chattels sold under an entire contract containing a condition,—as where the sale is of sixty machines on a six months' trial (the property presumably remaining in the seller for six months after delivery), and one of these machines is received and accepted. This point appears not to have been definitely decided ; but intimations favorable to the rule are not wanting.<sup>2</sup> A sale, however, under condition, as an entire transaction, must not,

<sup>1</sup> See § 470 and cases cited which confirmed (1896) the idea expressed in the text.

<sup>2</sup> See Williams v. Burgess, 10 A. & E. 499,—a case involving written compliance with the statute. Cf. Fay v. Wheeler, 44 Vt. 292, and Boardman v. Cutter, 128 Mass. 388 ; Kibble v. Gough, supra, § 463.

in such a connection, be confounded with an absolute sale which superadds some stipulation for a resale; for this is not a conditional, but a compound sale.<sup>1</sup>

Of far more practical importance is the application of this rule to sales accompanied by delivery upon condition that the seller's title shall not pass until payment or adjustment of the price; and so constantly are sales thus made, especially in America, as the current of decision goes, that the privilege of satisfying the statute by part acceptance and part receipt can avail little, if our principle fails. Yet the authorities by no means concede harmoniously the principle. There can, of course, be no acceptance and receipt while a vendor's lien remains, — meaning that lien which the seller intends shall prevent his possessory right from passing to the buyer; and upon this tenable ground several decisions are based.<sup>2</sup> But, on the suggestion that "actual receipt" is to be tested by the loss of the seller's lien, there appears to be a disposition in some quarters to regard every sale with the title transfer conditioned upon payment, as a sale with such a price-lien operating as must render the statute compliance impossible.<sup>3</sup> The criterion, which loss of the seller's lien here affords, seems to us, however, most properly restricted to the keeping alive of his possessory right, — to that lien which prevents, not the transfer of property (which may have passed already, or may not pass for some time to come), but the transfer of the right of possession to the whole or the specific part whose acceptance and receipt are at issue.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Watts v. Friend, 10 B. & C. 446.

<sup>2</sup> Baldev v. Parker, 2 B. & C. 37, per Holroyd, J.; Holmes v. Hoskins, 9 Ex. 753; Safford v. McDonough, 120 Mass. 290.

<sup>3</sup> See Maberley v. Sheppard, 10 Bing. 99; Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & Ald. 680; Carter v. Toussaint, 5 B. & Ald. 855; Earl, C., in Stone v. Browning, 51 N. Y. 211; Castle v. Sworder, 29 L. J. Ex. 235; s. c. 30 L. J. Ex. 310. In Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 2, it is said: "It is safe to assume as a general rule, that wherever no fact has been proven showing an abandonment by the vendor of his lien, no actual receipt by the purchaser has taken place." But the cases commented upon by this eminent writer show the limited scope of this word "lien;" and that, by parting with the possession, the seller parts with his lien.

<sup>4</sup> Thus, in a recent New Hampshire case, where, however, the distinction does not appear to be clearly put, may

§ 465. Statute satisfied by Part Acceptance and Receipt; whether Contemporaneous with Sale or not.—Part acceptance and part receipt being once conjoined in the same subject-matter, the statute becomes satisfied; and it is no longer in the buyer's power to recall such act, or to change the contract as originally made, independently of the seller's consent, notwithstanding the remainder of the goods still awaits delivery.<sup>1</sup> But the buyer's acceptance and receipt can have no effect in furnishing compliance, if the seller has already disaffirmed the parol contract, and brought such disaffirmance to the buyer's notice.<sup>2</sup> be found a sustaining precedent; for here it is directly ruled, as upon a novel question, that there may be such acceptance and receipt as satisfies the statute, even though the goods were sold upon condition that the property therein should not pass until the price was paid; that the passing of an absolute legal title is not essential. Pinkham v. Mattox, 53 N. H. 600. And see Dodsley v. Varley, 12 Ad. & E. 632, where it was said by Lord Denman, C. J.: "The plaintiff had not what is commonly called a lien, determinable on the loss of possession, but a special interest, sometimes, but improperly, called a lien, growing out of his original ownership, independent of the actual possession, and consistent with the property being in the defendant." And Williams, J., observes, in Wright v. Percival, 8 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 258, — where a carriage, made to order, was regarded as fully accepted and received, although bad weather had prevented the buyer from taking it away at once from the seller's premises, — that "the fact of a lien being reserved is not a complete criterion of acceptance; it is a circumstance, but it is not the governing feature of the case." See also Howes v. Ball, 7 B. & C. 484; Kibble v. Gough, supra, § 463.

<sup>1</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, § 339; Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257; Rap-

pleye v. Adee, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 126.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1; Taylor v. Wakefield, 6 E. & B. 765. Acceptance after action brought cannot be shown, semble. Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36. The language of the local statute may affect the question. See Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 336.

Mr. Benjamin draws a distinction between the formation and performance of the contract in respect of the statute part acceptance and receipt. Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 149, citing Morton v. Tibbett, 15 Q. B. 428. "The acceptance to let in parol evidence of the contract appears to us to be a different acceptance from that which affords conclusive evidence of the contract having been fulfilled." Per Lord Campbell, ib. But see Gilfillan, C. J., in Simpson v. Krumdick, 28 Minn. 352, contra. Devens, J., observes in Remick v. Sandford, 120 Mass. 309: "There may undoubtedly be an acceptance, which will not afford conclusive evidence that the contract has been fulfilled, and its terms complied with, and which will yet satisfy the statute and let in evidence of those terms, which otherwise could only be proved by writing. If the buyer accepts the goods as those which he purchased, he may afterwards reject them if

It is well settled that the buyer's acceptance and receipt may suffice, notwithstanding both be subsequent to the agreement of sale, if not unreasonably later.<sup>1</sup> Nor is it necessary for the acts of acceptance and receipt to be contemporaneous; and most naturally acceptance would follow the receipt, though it may sometimes precede.<sup>2</sup> But both acts should be performed before the contract is sued upon;<sup>3</sup> and acts of performance may relate to the whole as well as to a part of the subject-matter of sale.<sup>4</sup>

§ 466. As to Part Acceptance; Doctrine considered in Detail. — We now proceed to examine the two classes of cases separately: the first under acceptance, the next under actual receipt.

What, then, is partial acceptance, such as the statute contemplates? To quote from Judge Blackburn's treatise: "In the absence of authority, and judging merely from the ordinary meaning of language, one would say that an acceptance of part of the goods is an assent by the buyer, meant to be final, that this part of the goods is to be taken by him as his property under the contract, and as so far satisfying the contract. So long as the buyer can, without self-contradiction, declare that the goods are not to be taken in fulfilment of the contract, he has not accepted them. And it is immaterial whether his refusal to take the goods be reasonable or not. If he refuses the goods, assigning grounds false or frivolous, or assigning no reasons at all, it is still clear that he does not accept the goods, and the question is not whether he ought to accept, but whether he has accepted them. The they were not what they were warranted to be, but the statute is satisfied." See post, § 467. Kibble v. Gough, 38 L. T. N. s. 204, confirms this view. And see Rickard v. Moore, 38 L. T. N. s. 841; 15 Q. B. D., 228.

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 280; Bush v. Holmes, 53 Me. 417; Marsh v. Hyde, 3 Gray, 331; McKnight v. Dunlop, 5 N. Y. 537; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 337; McCarthy v. Nash, 14 Minn. 127; Amson v. Dreher, 35 Wis. 615.

<sup>2</sup> Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y.

661; Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299 (where acceptance preceded receipt); Marsh v. Hyde, 3 Gray, 331; Buckingham v. Osborne, 44 Conn. 133; Schmidt v. Thomas, 75 Wis. 529; Hewes v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472, 484.

<sup>3</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 338, 348; Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36; Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. 9.

<sup>4</sup> See Saunders v. Topp, 4 Ex. 390; Simmonds v. Humble, 13 C. B. N. s. 258.

question of acceptance or not is a question as to what was the intention of the buyer as signified by his outward acts.”<sup>1</sup>

§ 467. The Same Subject; Specific and Unascertained Goods distinguished. — The decisions concerning acceptance accord in general with this statement of principle; their variance with one another being mainly in the application of the rule to particular facts, and accordingly in the strength of proof requisite for showing one's intention. Acceptance may precede the delivery and receipt of the goods; as, for instance, where the customer, before ordering specific merchandise sent to his address, has inspected and tested its quality, and is satisfied.<sup>2</sup> But where no specific goods are selected in advance of their actual receipt, and the buyer has simply ordered any articles to be sent of a certain description, the acceptance of a whole or part is contemporaneous with, or rather follows immediately upon, its receipt; the buyer thereby announcing, in fact, that the thing supplied him meets his approval.<sup>3</sup> If the goods were sent to a certain place, and there received, and the buyer orders them sent to another place, where he examines and pronounces them “all right,” the statute is satisfied at the second place, even if an acceptance at the first place be insufficiently proved.<sup>4</sup> Acceptance is an act, which, from its nature, requires more deliberation and involves more consequences than receipt; and, unless given in advance, it ought not to be expected before the buyer has had reasonable time and opportunity under all the circumstances to examine and decide that all is right. There is a late Maryland case in point, where the buyer received a quantity of butter, unpacked the boxes, and upon examination objected to accepting the lot because of its poor quality; and the court ruled, that, if he only kept the goods long enough to examine their quality and quantity, no binding acceptance, within the Statute of Frauds, could be inferred.<sup>5</sup>

The more reasonable view, therefore, appears to be, that

<sup>1</sup> Blackb. Sales, 22, 23.

<sup>4</sup> Saunders v. Topp, 4 Ex. 390.

<sup>2</sup> Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299.

<sup>5</sup> Hewes v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472.

<sup>3</sup> See Nicholson v. Bower, 1 E. & Cf. § 490.
E. 172.

acceptance under the statute is not only an act of wider import and significance than actual receipt, but, in order to be intelligently rendered, requires so much more deliberation and such closer acquaintance with the property, that a suitable time and opportunity should be allowed the buyer in general, according to the circumstances, and the nature of the contract as involving specific or non-specific subject-matter, for exercising the option of keeping or rejecting, before the statute will hold him; and that the buyer's "acceptance" is not necessarily contemporaneous with his "actual receipt" of a whole or a part of the subject-matter, but may precede or follow such receipt, with any reasonable interval.<sup>1</sup> The dictum of Lord Campbell in Morton v. Tibbett, to the effect that "acceptance is to be something which is to precede or at any rate to be contemporaneous with the actual receipt of the goods, and is not to be a subsequent act after the goods have been actually received, weighed, measured, or examined," ought, therefore, to be taken with such qualifications.<sup>2</sup> It must be admitted, however, that the English courts are not in full accord upon the range of acceptance; and that while some judges evidently think that an acceptance and receipt, to satisfy the statute, need not go so far as to preclude the buyer from objecting to the goods, others (including the most recent) establish that there can be no acceptance where there has been no opportunity of rejecting.<sup>3</sup> But, at all events, acceptance always takes much wider scope where the subject-matter was unascertained when the contract was formed, than in sales of specific ascertained chattels; and the nature of the act depends upon the nature of the contract. That the goods merely came into the buyer's possession is not enough. But acceptance of a specific thing sent home to the buyer

<sup>1</sup> See Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; Stone v. Browning, 51 N. Y. 211; Knoblauch v. Kronschnabel, 18 Minn. 300; Gilman v. Hill, 36 N. H. 311; Gorham v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 528; Maxwell v. Brown, 39 Me. 98; Knight v. Mann, 118 Mass. 143; 120 Mass. 219; 14 Hun, 149; § 465.

<sup>2</sup> Morton v. Tibbett, 15 Q. B. 428, per Lord Campbell, C. J. (1850).

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1, citing Cockburn, C. J., in Castle v. Swarder, 6 H. & N. 832; Martin, B., in Hunt v. Hecht, 8 Ex. 814; Pollock, C. B., Bramwell, B., and others, in Coombs v. Bristol, &c.

might involve scarcely more than looking into the package to make sure that the identical thing was there.<sup>1</sup>

§ 467 a. The Same Subject; Sample Sales. — If the sale were by sample, which carries with it the right to inspect and to reject the goods if found not equal to the sample, there can be no acceptance, under the statute, of any portion of the bulk, until the buyer has had time to inspect the article, and see whether it corresponds with the sample.<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, as the latest English cases rule, there may be an acceptance by the buyer, which is enough to satisfy the statute, and yet does not preclude his closer inspection, so that he may reject later the goods as actually unequal to the sample.<sup>3</sup>

§ 468. Whether Carrier or Other Agent may accept. — An agent with authority from the buyer to receive is not necessarily the buyer's authorized agent for statute acceptance; since acceptance is the larger act, and requires the larger authority. Thus, delivery by the seller to a common carrier, and the latter's actual receipt of the goods, although carrying over the right of property and risks upon the usual principles of the law of sales, constitute no such acceptance as would bind the purchaser and satisfy the statute.<sup>4</sup> This rule is well settled; and the same may be said of wharfingers and others similarly employed by the seller for mere purposes of custody.<sup>5</sup> Even though the buyer should designate the particular carrier, this would import authority for the carrier to

R. R. Co., 3 H. & N. 510; also Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; contra, Blackburn, J., in Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299; Crompton, J., in Currie v. Anderson, 2 E. & E. 592; Crosby Hardwood Co. v. Tester, Wis. (1895). And see Parker v. Wallis, 5 E. & B. 21; supra, §§ 463, 465, notes.

<sup>1</sup> See Willes, J., in Bog Lead Mining Co. v. Montague, 10 C. B. n. s. 481.

<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; supra, § 462.

<sup>3</sup> Page v. Morgan, 15 Q. B. D. 228, citing Kibble v. Gough, and

Rickard v. Moore, 38 L. T. n. s. 204, 841.

<sup>4</sup> Coombs v. Bristol, &c. R. R. Co., 3 H. & N. 510; Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1; Norman v. Phillips, 14 M. & W. 277; Hopton v. M'Carthy, 10 L. R. Ir. 266; Rodgers v. Phillips, 40 N. Y. 519; Story Sales, § 276; Maxwell v. Brown, 39 Me. 98; Johnson v. Cuttle, 105 Mass. 447; Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 29 Md. 287; supra, §§ 272, 396.

<sup>5</sup> Hart v. Bush, E., B. & E. 494; Hunt v. Hecht, 8 Ex. 814; Quintard v. Bacon, 99 Mass. 185.

receive only, and not to accept.<sup>1</sup> But, as an agent's powers may be enlarged by means of authority appropriately conferred by his principal, so is it true that a carrier, wharfinger, or other party whom the buyer has duly authorized to accept the goods on his behalf, may make such acceptance, and so fulfil the statute requirements ;<sup>2</sup> for, of course, the buyer's authorized agent to receive and accept may receive and accept accordingly.<sup>3</sup>

§ 469. The Same Subject ; Fact of Acceptance ; how evinced, etc. — Acceptance, to satisfy the statute, should be distinct and unequivocal ; but it is well settled that the buyer's own acts and conduct may be construed into a binding acceptance. Some subtle distinctions are furnished by the decisions, which, like jury verdicts, are apt to differ, and cannot be safe precedents. If the buyer, upon inspection, or after specific goods have come to hand, declares his satisfaction with the goods, and his intention to retain them, in unmistakable terms, he, of course, accepts them in the fullest sense.<sup>4</sup> But, as the evidence is not usually so clear as this, the accepting intention must, in general, be otherwise shown : and very strong proof of this intention is furnished by some decisive act of ownership on the buyer's part ; as where he sells to another person, pledges, lends, gives, or consumes the articles, takes exclusive possession as his own, or otherwise clearly assumes dominion over them.<sup>5</sup> And as acquiescence may be silent, while disapproval requires positive expression, the buyer is further shown to have accepted the goods within the statute whenever he has unreasonably delayed returning them, or

<sup>1</sup> Allard v. Greasert, 61 N. Y. 1 ; Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 29 Md. 287 ; Johnson v. Cuttle, 105 Mass. 447 ; Fontaine v. Bush, 40 Minn. 141.

<sup>2</sup> See Snow v. Warner, 10 Met. 132 ; Spencer v. Hale, 30 Vt. 314. But one cannot be an agent of both buyer and seller to make a binding acceptance under the statute. Caulkins v. Hellman, 14 Hun, 330 ; 47 N. Y. 449.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. ; Barkley v. Rensselaer R., 71 N. Y. 205.

<sup>4</sup> See Simmonds v. Humble, 13 C. B. n. s. 258 ; Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299 ; Saunders v. Topp, 4 Ex. 390 ; Schmidt v. Thomas, 75 Wis. 529.

<sup>5</sup> Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 192 ; Beaumont v. Brengeri, 5 C. B. 301 ; Morton v. Tibbett, 15 Q. B. 428 ; Pinkham v. Mattox, 53 N. H. 604 ; 10 N. Y. 285 ; Hill v. McDonald, 17 Wis. 97 ; 55 Geo. 633 ; Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. D. 35.

giving notice of their rejection.<sup>1</sup> Such conduct, while resting upon the least direct testimony, unless conjoined with some of the other circumstances mentioned, affords, also, presumptive proof that the buyer has assumed to act as owner.

On the other hand, numerous instances might be cited in which the proof of acceptance was held an insufficient fulfilment of the statute; as where one, on receipt of the goods, distinctly refused to accept, without delaying his decision longer than was reasonable for inspecting the goods upon their arrival, as he had a right to do, to ascertain their correspondence in kind, quantity, and quality, with the contract.<sup>2</sup> Sending a prompt message to the seller expressive of dissatisfaction repels the idea of a binding acceptance.<sup>3</sup> And, as acceptance is not usually given before one's goods are in a suitable condition for inspection, the buyer's conduct, with reference to a subject-matter but partially completed, or requiring to be separated from a larger quantity, or otherwise incapable of immediate delivery, is not presumed to constitute an acceptance within the statute; neither can anything be truly accepted in our present sense (whatever might be said of the waiver of one's rights) while the subject-matter is still unascertained, and unappropriated to the contract of sale.<sup>4</sup> Nor are slight acts of apparent ownership over the subject-matter, offers of resale and the like, which are quite consistent with the purpose of preserving the seller's rights unimpaired under the contract, to be deemed conclusive proof of a statute acceptance.<sup>5</sup> So long as the buyer continues to have a right to object to the goods, and neither transcends his reasonable time, nor exercises in the interim

<sup>1</sup> Coleman v. Gibson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 168; Farina v. Home, 16 M. & W. 119; Meredith v. Meigh, 2 E. & B. 364; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1; Hunter v. Leavitt, 36 Ind. 141; Treadwell v. Reynolds, 39 Conn. 31; Thompson v. Menck, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 400; Rappleve v. Adees, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 126.

<sup>2</sup> Hunt v. Hecht, 8 Ex. 814; Hewes

v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472; Hopton v. McCarthy, 10 L. R. Ir. 266.

<sup>3</sup> Caulkins v. Hellman, 47 N. Y. 499.

<sup>4</sup> Hunt v. Hecht, 8 Ex. 814; Maberley v. Sheppard, 10 Bing. 99.

<sup>5</sup> Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & Ald. 680; Holmes v. Hoskins, 9 Ex. 753; Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 29 Md. 267. And see § 467.

inconsistent acts of dominion over the subject-matter, he is not presumed to have accepted within the meaning of the statute; and the right to inspect involves the right to have the goods put into a condition fit for inspection.<sup>1</sup> Pending his decision as to acceptance, the buyer may make a preliminary examination, and thereupon suspend his final judgment to a further period not unreasonably distant; in which case his acts and conduct throughout are to be construed together for determining whether a final acceptance was reached;<sup>2</sup> though there is such a thing as a statute part acceptance which comes short of a final acceptance, such as would conclude all right of inspection.<sup>3</sup> In short, equivocal acts on the buyer's part are not readily construed into a statute acceptance, unless aided by the lapse of time or other favoring circumstances.<sup>4</sup>

Keeping unreasonably long the indicia of title, such as bills of lading, may amount to a statutory acceptance of the goods which they represent; and this upon the principle already noticed, that a buyer, to stand aright, should have exercised promptly and becomingly whatever right to object to the goods his contract gives him. More especially is this true where the buyer acts in other respects as owner of the goods.<sup>5</sup> But conclusive acceptance is not shown by the mere fact that the bill of lading was left with the buyer's clerk in the buyer's absence; there being no testimony showing any unreasonable delay on the buyer's part in objecting to the goods, or more positive acceptance, or the exercise of dominion over the goods on his part, and the clerk appearing to have no authority to receive either the bill or the goods on the buyer's behalf.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Curtis v. Pugh, 10 Q. B. 111; Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; Howe v. Palmer, 3 B. & Ald. 321; Hanson v. Armitage, 5 B. & Ald. 557; Hewes v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472; Nicholson v. Bower, 1 E. & E. 172.

<sup>2</sup> See Nicholson v. Bower, Hewes v. Jordan, supra; Saunders v. Topp, 4 Ex. 390.

<sup>3</sup> Page v. Morgan, 15 Q. B. D. 228, 230.

<sup>4</sup> Shindler v. Houston, 1 Comst. 261, and cases cited.

<sup>5</sup> Currie v. Anderson, 2 E. & E. 592; Meredith v. Meigh, 2 E. & B. 364.

<sup>6</sup> Quintard v. Bacon, 99 Mass. 185. Whether marking the goods with the § 470. The Same Subject; Conclusion as to Part Acceptance.—Upon the whole, the statute part acceptance is mainly a question of fact; and a jury, under the guidance of the court, will naturally weigh all the circumstances which tend to show the buyer's real intention in the premises, and render their verdict accordingly.<sup>1</sup> And as the latest cases rule, this partial acceptance need not be an absolute acceptance such as concludes a complete sale; for all that is essential is an acceptance which could not have been made except upon admission that a contract existed, and that the goods were sent to fulfil that contract.<sup>2</sup> And the mental condition appropriate to such acceptance is to be inferred from circumstantial proof.

§ 471. As to Actual Part Receipt; General Doctrine.—The class of cases remaining to be considered is that which teaches us what is actual receipt. "The receipt of part of the goods," says Judge Blackburn, "is the taking possession of them. When the seller gives to the buyer the actual control of the goods, and the buyer accepts such control, he has actually received them. Such a receipt is often evidence of an acceptance, but it is not the same thing; indeed the receipt by the buyer may be, and often is, for the express purpose of seeing whether he will accept or not."<sup>3</sup> Much of the law, as to the statutory receipt, we have incidentally touched upon already; and as much of the discussion in the courts in cases of dubious intent centres upon "acceptance," or "delivery and acceptance" (as though the statute had used the word "delivery" instead of "actual receipt"), a full acceptance may usually be expected to carry the taking purchaser's name or initials should constitute acceptance or not seems to depend upon the surrounding circumstances, and especially upon the buyer's participation in such act. It is a fact susceptible of explanation, and not conclusive of acceptance in itself, though often strongly corroborative of other testimony tending in this direction. See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 1, citing Anderson v.

Scott, 1 Camp. 235, n., disapproved by Saunders v. Topp, 4 Ex. 390; Rapleye v. Adees, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 126.

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 278; Hopton v. McCarthy, 10 L. R. Ir. 266 and cases cited; Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 563; 89 Wis. 86.

<sup>2</sup> Page v. Morgan, 15 Q. B. D. 228, 230; 120 Mass. 309.

<sup>3</sup> Blackb. Sales, 22–24.

of possession along with it. Actual removal of the goods in part or wholly, from seller's to buyer's custody, is a common, though, as we shall soon see, not an invariable accompaniment of this "actual receipt" by the buyer; but, whatever be the buyer's method of receiving possession, the seller must finally part control, so far as he is concerned, and that with the intention of vesting the right of possession in the buyer.<sup>1</sup> There may be a receipt of indicia, such as bills of lading, sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds;<sup>2</sup> but this, to be effectual, must consist with the seller's intention of surrendering the same; nor can one who takes possession of a bill of lading without permission, and insists upon retaining it against the seller's remonstrance, avail himself of the instrument as a means of enforcing the oral contract.<sup>3</sup> Preparations to receive constitute an insufficient receipt; there must be a partial receipt in fact, even though of bulky goods like a pile of timber.<sup>4</sup>

The goods of which the buyer receives possession under the statute may, at the time, be in his own custody, or in a third person's custody, or in the custody of the seller.

§ 472. Rule applied where Goods are already in Buyer's Custody.—Where the goods are already in the buyer's custody, it is by virtue of some agency or bailment; and his actual receipt as seller then occurs when the character of the possession changes, and the buyer, with the seller's consent, ceases to hold as agent, and begins to hold as owner. The difficulty in such cases is, not in the principle, but in proving that a virtual receipt has taken place. Parol evidence is admissible, however, as to facts and circumstances, of whose effect the jury may form an estimate. A leading case under this head is Edan v. Dudfield, where the court upon full consideration declared that one person in possession of another's goods might become their purchaser by parol, and

<sup>1</sup> See supra, § 459; Maberley v. Sheppard, 10 Bing. 99; Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & Ald. 680; Phillips v. Bistolli, 2 B. & C. 511.

<sup>2</sup> Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 192.

<sup>3</sup> Brand v. Focht, 1 Abb. N. Y. App. 185.

<sup>4</sup> Harris v. Rousevel, 61 N. H. 250; Shindler v. Houston, 1 Comst. 261.

might, without any writing between the parties, do subsequent acts amounting to the statute compliance. The facts here showed that the defendant, who held possession of the plaintiff's goods and acted as his custom-house agent, was his creditor to a considerable amount: whereupon it was mutually agreed, first, that the agent might sell at a certain price for his principal; and afterwards that he might himself buy the goods in for less than the cost price; in pursuance of which agreement, the sale was accordingly made.<sup>1</sup> But, to make out such a case, the conduct of the former agent or bailee, in dealing with the goods in his possession, should consist with the supposition that his former possession has changed into ownership.<sup>2</sup> Actual receipt is effected, in this class of cases, without any substantial removal, or change of position, of the goods themselves.

§ 473. Rule applied where Goods are in a Third Person's Custody.—Where the goods are in a third person's custody, there are three distinct parties concerned in effecting a transfer of possession; and the question is, how far their acts and conduct should blend together in order to fulfil the statute. Here, too, there need be no removal of the goods from the custodian's control; for whenever seller, buyer, and custodian all agree that the custodian shall cease to hold for the seller, and shall thereafter continue to hold for the buyer, there is an actual receipt by the buyer which satisfies the law, though the goods themselves remain undisturbed: in other words, the custodian, having been agent of the seller, does some act by way of attorning over and becoming agent of the buyer, wherever no immediate removal is contemplated; and thereby a legal change of possession is completely wrought.<sup>3</sup> The only real discrepancy in the authorities concerns this third party's necessary participation in the transfer in order to take the case out of the statute. If the buyer actually removes the goods, or a part

<sup>1</sup> Edan v. Dudfield, 1 Q. B. 302.

<sup>2</sup> See Lillywhite v. Devereux, 15 M. & W. 285, and Taylor v. Wakefield, 6 E. & B. 765, where the evidence of a change of possession was deemed insufficient.

<sup>3</sup> Blackb. Sales, 28, 29; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 2.

of them, with the tacit or express permission of both seller and custodian, the case, of course, is clear as concerns receipt; but if he has not concluded matters with the custodian, and yet has received the goods so far as the seller's own act could aid him in obtaining possession, the English cases require an attornment to the buyer, so to speak, from the custodian; while in some parts of this country it is, on the other hand, thought to be enough for the buyer to give the custodian notice that he has received the indicia of title from the seller: but neither in England nor in America is the buyer's receipt of indicia from the seller held to be a full compliance with the statute, so long as the custodian utterly fails of being recognized in the matter.<sup>1</sup> Thus, supposing the seller to have given the buyer a delivery order upon his warehouseman or other bailee, so soon as this order is presented, and the bailee assents and agrees to hold the goods on the buyer's account, there is within the statute a sufficient receipt of the goods by the buyer. But the best authorities assert that it is not enough for the buyer to notify the custodian that he holds this order, and tell him to follow his directions; that, on the other hand, these goods must, in pursuance of the order and the custodian's assent, be placed within the new owner's control.<sup>2</sup> The Massachusetts rule, on the contrary, appears to let the buyer's notice to the third person that he holds the order afford compliance against the seller's attaching creditors; but not the buyer's receipt of the order without giving such notice.<sup>3</sup> Between such conflicting authorities, the local courts must decide for themselves. We may add, that the custodian who wrongfully refuses to attorn over to the buyer, in order to enable the latter to receive, might render himself liable in damages for the ill consequences ensuing; so that the party holding the

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 4, § 2; Story Sales, § 277; Searle v. Keeves, 2 Esp. 598; Simmonds v. Humble, 13 C. B. N. s. 258; Bentall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 424; Farina v. Home, 16 M. & W. 119; Marsh v. Rouse, 44 N. Y. 643; Bassett v. Camp, 54 Vt. 232.

But see Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353.

<sup>2</sup> Bentall v. Burn, Farina v. Home, and Marsh v. Rouse, supra.

<sup>3</sup> Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353.

indicia is not altogether remediless, even though he fails to procure the custodian's assent to the proposed change.<sup>1</sup>

Where the goods are at the time upon a third person's premises, such person not having their actual custody, or are in some public place equally accessible to buyer and seller alike, oral compliance with the statute may be established, according to the circumstances; and the buyer's actual receipt could be inferred from the seller's permissive acts, in placing them at his disposal;<sup>2</sup> but not, however, if it appeared that some further acts were mutually contemplated to precede the actual transfer of possession.<sup>3</sup>

§ 474. Rule applied where Goods are in the Seller's Custody.—

Where the goods are in the seller's custody (which is the usual case), it often becomes extremely difficult to say at what precise moment the buyer may be said to receive the goods at his hands. By this we refer to instances of constructive receipt, where the intention that a change of possession shall take place is not evinced by some decisive act; for were the goods actually removed and taken bodily into the buyer's custody, apart from the seller, in every case, the statute compliance would easily be proved. Taking possession, with the seller's acquiescence, of the whole or part of the subject-matter, and carrying it away, is evidence, not only of actual receipt, but of the exercise of an important act of ownership, and can hardly fail to be conclusive of the issue.<sup>4</sup>

Constructive receipt may be shown where the seller holds the goods at the time of the bargain, and then changes his possession so as to become the buyer's bailee and continue to hold in that character: here his original rights as seller are gone, and proof of the change ought to be distinct and clear. Thus, where the purchaser of horses from a dealer leaves them with the seller on livery, with the latter's consent, the dealer's possession is converted into that of a bailee;<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Bentall v. Burn, 3 B. & C. 423, per curiam.

<sup>2</sup> Tansley v. Turner, 2 Bing. N. C. 151; Cooper v. Bill, 3 H. & C. 722.

<sup>3</sup> Shindler v. Houston, 1 Comst. 261; Young v. Blaisdell, 60 Me. 272.

<sup>4</sup> Chaplin v. Rogers, 1 East, 192; Vincent v. Germond, 11 Johns. 283.

<sup>5</sup> Elmore v. Stone, 1 Taunt. 458.

and where sheep are selected out of a shepherd's flock, purchased, marked, and then turned back into the sheep-fold, we are to presume that the seller meant to become the buyer's custodian.<sup>1</sup> If there be a plain alteration in the character of the possession,—if, for instance, the horse-dealer takes the horse from his sale-stable and ties him up in his livery-stable, or the shepherd puts the sheep into a separate enclosure for a time,—the changed character in which the seller continues to hold the chattel becomes the more clearly marked; but there might be evidence enough to go to a jury, though the position of the subject-matter had suffered no change, and the seller retained it.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rappleve v. Adee, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y. Supr.) 126.

<sup>2</sup> See Elmore v. Stone, 1 Taunt. 458; Marvin v. Wallis, 6 E. & B. 726; Beaumont v. Brengeri, 5 C. B. 301; Castle v. Swarder, 30 L. J. Ex. 310; Janvrin v. Maxwell, 23 Wis. 51. In Beaumont v. Brengeri, a carriage which the defendant had purchased was allowed to remain in the seller's shop for convenience; and it was held, upon the facts shown, that the seller had changed his character to that of warehouseman, and that there was an actual receipt by the buyer within the statute. Beaumont v. Brengeri, 5 C. B. 301. In Castle v. Swarder—a case where the decision of the English Exchequer Court was in 1861 reversed on appeal—will be found an exhaustive discussion of the subject of constructive receipt, with full affirmation of the doctrine as applied to a sale on a term of credit. Castle v. Swarder, 29 L. J. Ex. 235; 30 ib. 310, and 6 H. & N. 832. Martin, B., had quite pointedly expressed himself to the contrary in the lower court: "Now it does seem to me a most extraordinary thing to say that a man accepted and actually received goods as vendee, whilst all the time they were in the possession of the vendors, and whilst they had a right to them until the defendant paid the price. As these goods were sold subject to the payment in six months, if the six months for payment elapsed, though the defendant had a right to the possession of the goods or might have brought an action within the six months, nevertheless it is clear when the six months elapsed the lien would revive." Castle v. Swarder, 29 L. J. Ex. 235. But Cockburn, C. J., on appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, thus put the case on its true footing: "For six months the buyer was entitled to claim the immediate delivery of the specific goods appropriated to him. The question then arises whether the possession which actually remained in the sellers was a possession in the sellers by virtue of their original property in the goods, or whether it had become a possession as agents and bailees of the buyers." Accordingly, not meaning to overrule the lower court as to the expiration of a term of credit and its legal effect, the appellate tribunal found that there were certain facts proven which warranted sending the case to the jury to ascertain whether the character of the seller's possession had not changed while he held the goods. Castle v. Swarder, 30 L. J. Ex. 310.

But where the seller retains possession of the purchased goods, there should be distinct proof of this intended change of ownership, and no countervailing circumstances, in order to satisfy the statute; for whether it be in destroying a seller's lien for his price, or in tempting the sale parties to fraudulent collusion between themselves in order to defeat the rights of others, the doctrine is fraught with mischief.<sup>1</sup>

§ 475. Constructive Receipt and Delivery by Agents, Carriers, etc.—Actual receipt implies actual delivery; and as there may be constructive receipt, so may there be constructive delivery. If the seller undertakes to forward the goods to the buyer, the goods are received by the latter as soon as his own agent receives them; and the extent of this principle may be studied in the light of decisions which have been elsewhere adduced respecting the transportation of purchased goods. A common carrier is not, ordinarily, an agent empowered to accept, but he is a suitable agent to receive on the buyer's behalf; and to this extent his actual receipt will satisfy the statute.<sup>2</sup> So, too, may a warehouseman, or any other middleman, be constituted an agent for the same purposes.<sup>3</sup> And, since acceptance might have preceded the seller's act of delivery, an oral compliance is sometimes irrevocably fixed as soon as the carrier has received a part of the goods at the seller's hands.<sup>4</sup> But delivery upon the seller's vessel, or to any carrier who really represents the seller, for the purpose, it may be, of securing his rights, during the

And see Barrett v. Goddard, 3 Mas. 107; Dodsley v. Varley, 12 Ad. & E. 632. Safford v. McDonough, 120 Mass. 290, intimates that the intention of the seller to abandon his lien should be clear where acceptance and receipt, with the goods remaining in the seller's possession, are relied on. But cf. Townley v. Crump, 4 Ad. & E. 58, which is consistent with Castle v. Sworder on appeal, supra. See further, post, c. 14, as to seller's lien.

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 278; Blackb. Sales, 28, 29.

<sup>2</sup> Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299; Smith v. Hudson, 4 B. & S. 431; Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y. 661; supra, §§ 396, 468. Under the Iowa statute, which uses the word "delivered" under a somewhat peculiar phraseology, but says nothing of part "acceptance," it is held that delivery to a carrier not designated by the buyer will suffice. Bullock v. Tschergi, 13 Fed. Rep. 345.

<sup>3</sup> See Hunter v. Wright, 12 Allen, 548; supra, § 473; Moore v. Hays, Ind. (1895).

<sup>4</sup> Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y. 661.

transit of the subject-matter, and pending payment, or to the seller's private teamster, is inconsistent with the idea of putting the buyer into immediate possession; nor, under such circumstances, can the latter be said to have actually received the goods, personally or through his representative. So, too, if one sells goods to be delivered by himself at a specified place, there is no change of possession or an actual receipt by the buyer until the goods arrive at the specified place.<sup>1</sup>

§ 476. Compliance by giving Earnest or Part Payment. — (2d.) Concerning the giving of earnest or part payment. The statute, as its language shows, awaits here, as before, an oral compliance by the buyer; for, to use the words of 29 Car. II., the buyer must "give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part payment;"<sup>2</sup> two modes being thus presented, of which the former has so fallen into disuse, that earnest and part payment are often treated at the present day as meaning the same thing;<sup>3</sup> while some of the United States have the local enactment requiring that the buyer shall simply "at the time pay some part of the purchase-money,"<sup>4</sup> omitting the word "earnest" altogether.

The giving of earnest and part payment are, however, two distinct things, if we may trust to the analogies of the civil law, which required, for earnest, a "thing," such as a ring, as a sign, proof, or symbol, that the bargain was concluded, being usually a gift or token; whereas part payment was something in money, and, if given by way of earnest, went properly towards discharging the price.<sup>5</sup> Examples of the custom which made such a distinction are to be found in the old English reports; but it now appears to be well settled,

<sup>1</sup> Astey v. Emery, 4 M. & S. 262; Smith v. Hudson, 6 B. & S. 431; 9 Daly, 363. And see supra, §§ 272, 398.

<sup>2</sup> Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 17; supra, § 429.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 5; Story Sales, §§ 273-275; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 341. "The idea of 'earnest' in connection with contracts was taken from the civil law.

. . . As used in the Statute of Frauds, 'earnest' is regarded as a part payment of the price." Chapman, C. J., in Howe v. Hayward, 118 Mass. 54.

<sup>4</sup> See stats. N. Y., Cal., Wisconsin, &c.; Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.; Organ v. Stewart, 60 N. Y. 413.

<sup>5</sup> Dig. 19, 1, 11, § 6; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 5.

that, under our Statute of Frauds, whatever is given must be in money or money's-worth, and computable accordingly. It must be something of value, however slight that value.<sup>1</sup> Whether the buyer means it as an extra gift, or in part payment, he must at least part with what he tenders: he cannot cross the seller's hand with a coin, and then put the coin back into his pocket.<sup>2</sup> And, as our statute puts it upon the buyer to comply in this instance, it is of little practical avail to know that the seller could have given that earnest under ancient law.<sup>3</sup>

The object of the statute is fairly met, as it would appear, notwithstanding the giving of earnest or making part payment takes place subsequently to the oral bargain; its effect being, as in the other instances we have noted, to render a bargain enforceable which before could not be sued upon; so that when it is given or made, and accepted upon a full understanding of the parties, the statute becomes fulfilled.<sup>4</sup>

§ 477. The Same Subject.—The fulness of oral compliance is here contemplated, as in acceptance and receipt; and <sup>1</sup> A good check delivered in part payment, which is paid on presentation, operates as a part payment. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549. So, too, the transfer of a third person's bill or note in part payment would seem to be sufficient, if received accordingly. Griffiths v. Owen, 13 M. & W. 58. See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 367-369. But not the buyer's promissory note, if without consideration and not governed by the law-merchant. Krohn v. Bantz, 68 Ind. 277.

<sup>2</sup> See Goodall v. Skelton, 2 H. Bl. 316 (A.D. 1794); Blenkinsop v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 597; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 341.

<sup>3</sup> Dig. 19, 1, 11, § 6; Benj. Sales, supra.

<sup>4</sup> See Parke, B., in Walker v. Nussey, 16 M. & W. 302; Dewey, J., in Thompson v. Alger, 12 Met. 428; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 343; Story Sales, § 273; 48 N. H. 183, 189. Sem-

ble, that, under the New York statute (notwithstanding the peculiar phraseology as to time noted supra, § 476), part payment need not be invariably "at the time" of making the contract. Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114, per Andrews, J.; Bissell v. Balcom, 39 N. Y. 275. But it is since held that an after payment is insufficient to validate the contract under the statute, where there is no restatement or recognition of the essential terms of the contract; but if the parties do thus reaffirm or restate, the part payment is made "at the time." Hunter v. Wetsell, 57 N. Y. 375; s. c. 84 N. Y. 549. Under a similar Wisconsin statute, payment at a subsequent time is not payment "at the time;" though semble the New York distinction above stated would be recognized. Per Cole, J., Bates v. Chesebro, 32 Wis. 594; Paine v. Fulton, 34 Wis. 83.

though the buyer in the present, and unlike the former case, naturally takes the initiative, the statute is not satisfied until the seller in his turn accepts and receives the earnest or part payment; and as to the portion upon which the law fastens, there must be a consistent mutual understanding.<sup>1</sup> Hence, if the buyer transmits money in part payment, which the seller immediately returns as a token of his refusal to accept it, no sufficient part payment takes place.<sup>2</sup> A mere offer or tender of earnest or part payment is insufficient compliance with the statute; and so likewise a mere memorandum purporting the intent to give leaves the contract of sale as unenforceable as before;<sup>3</sup> and the same holds true of any mere promise to pay.<sup>4</sup> Nor can any owner of goods obstruct third parties by putting an assignment on record in favor of a non-concurring person.<sup>5</sup>

The seller's act in receiving payment, like the buyer's in making it, may be performed through an agent; and the law of agency permits of subsequent ratification, as well as previous authority, on the principal's part; though the proof of authority should be established without resort to the verbal agreement which depends for enforcement upon it.<sup>6</sup> Nor does it unfrequently happen that there has been both part payment and part acceptance and receipt, so as doubly to remove the case from the operation of the statute.<sup>7</sup>

The deposit of money with a third person by the parties to an oral sale, to be by him paid to either of them as a forfeiture if the other neglects to fulfil his part of the bargain, is not a giving of earnest or part payment such as the statute permits.<sup>8</sup>

§ 478. As to Sufficiency of Part Payment where Mutual Debts are reckoned.—The decisions under our present head turn chiefly upon the sufficiency of part payment when the

<sup>1</sup> Hicks v. Cleveland, 48 N. Y. 84;
Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114;
Edgerton v. Hodge, 41 Vt. 676.

<sup>2</sup> Edgerton v. Hodge, supra.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.

<sup>4</sup> Artcher v. Zeh, 5 Hill, 205; Krohn
v. Bantz, 68 Ind. 277.

<sup>5</sup> Hicks v. Cleveland, 48 N. Y. 84.

<sup>6</sup> Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114.

<sup>7</sup> Richardson v. Squires, 37 Vt.
640; Allen v. Aguirre, 3 Seld. 543.

<sup>8</sup> Howe v. Hayward, 108 Mass. 54;

Noakes v. Morey, 30 Ind. 103.

discharge of a debt due from the seller, as well as payment of a price by the buyer, has entered into the calculation of the sale. Where chattels are sold under an oral contract which comes within the purview of the statute, and it is part of this contract that the buyer shall, in consideration of the sale, offset a debt due him from the seller, and pay the residue, this offset stipulation alone has not the effect of a part payment by the buyer.<sup>1</sup> But we are not thereby to infer that the statute means to discountenance the application of mutual debts in operating satisfaction; for the reason of the rule is, that an oral bargain with this contemporaneous stipulation as part of the verbal agreement really extinguishes no debt, but is part of the unenforceable contract itself. It may be well inferred, notwithstanding, that any subsequent agreement to set off against the price the seller's debt, or an entirely independent contract contemporaneous with the sale of like import, would constitute part payment within the statute, if thereby the debt be actually discharged; and so, in fact, has it been decided.<sup>2</sup> If, moreover, the buyer pay the price, or part of it, to a third party, a creditor of the seller, so as to discharge the seller's debt, and this with the concurrence of seller and creditor, the statute is satisfied.<sup>3</sup>

§ 479. Giving Earnest or Part Payment does not necessarily transfer Full Title.—That compliance which the giving of earnest or part payment affords, we may add, does not necessarily involve the transfer of a legal title from seller to buyer; another proof, in addition to those already adduced, that it is the acquisition of possessory rights by the buyer, and not the right of property, that the 17th section makes its direct concern.<sup>4</sup> The true rule, as to vesting the seller's

<sup>1</sup> Walker v. Nussey, 16 M. & W. 302; Archer v. Zeh, 5 Hill (N. Y.), 500; Matthiessen Refining Co. v. McMahon, 38 N. J. L. 536; Mattice v. Allen, 3 Keyes, 492.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 5; Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108; Cotterill v. Stevens, 10 Wis. 422; Story Sales, § 273, 4th ed., Bennett's n. Cf. supra, § 476.

<sup>3</sup> Cotterill v. Stevens, 10 Wis. 422. Aliter, where there is a mere agreement with the seller to pay such a debt without the creditor's knowledge or consent. Paine v. Fulton, 34 Wis. 83. And see supra, § 476.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 2, pt. 2, c. 4; Bach v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409; Nesbit v. Burry, 25 Penn. St. 208; Groat v. Gile, 51 N. Y. 431; supra, § 464.

rights of ownership in the buyer, is, that the test is found, not in the circumstance that earnest or part payment was given, but in the contract of sale itself, as rightly interpreted, which was thereby rendered enforceable.<sup>1</sup>

---

CHAPTER XI.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS; WRITTEN COMPLIANCE.

§ 480. Written Compliance with Statute of Frauds; General Rule stated.—III. It remains, in the present chapter, to treat of written compliance with the Statute of Frauds, so far as concerns sale contracts. The important exception under consideration, which receives much attention from the courts of England and America, reads in 29 Car. II. as follows: "That some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain be made, and signed by the parties to be charged by such contract, or their agents thereunto duly authorized."<sup>2</sup> But in some of the United States the requirement runs, that "a note or memorandum of such contract be made in writing, and be subscribed by the parties to be charged thereby."<sup>3</sup>

§ 481. Compliance by Party against whom Enforcement is sought is the Requisite.—At the threshold we may observe, that, while oral compliance rests upon some decisive act of the buyer in which the seller has concurred, the written compliance we are now to consider necessitates an act, not by both parties, nor by either buyer or seller in particular, but simply by the party against whom an enforcement of the oral contract is sought. If this party alone or his agent be shown to have made and signed the requisite writing, the bargain will hold, even though the enforcing party had not committed himself to paper at all. Sometimes it is the buyer who is thus charged, and sometimes the seller: the seller's mere memorandum cannot be produced to enforce the bargain against the buyer, nor the buyer's memorandum as against the seller. Mutual concurrence, therefore, such as part acceptance and receipt or part payment must imply, becomes, with reference to written compliance, of no consequence; the writing, whenever given, so it be given seasonably to sue upon, binds the maker and signer to the bargain.

<sup>1</sup> But see contra, Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558, per Lord Ellenborough.

<sup>2</sup> 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 17; supra, § 429.

<sup>3</sup> See statutes of New York, California, and Wisconsin; Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

§ 482. Memorandum thus distinguished from Written Contract of Sale. — It follows that the enactment against frauds does not treat the written memorandum as the real contract of sale, nor as any contract at all; for, should the parties go through the formalities of a written contract of sale, that contract, unaided by a memorandum, would afford of itself quite a sufficient assurance against fraud and perjury: but its intent is, that some memorandum, made contemporaneous with or subsequent to the oral contract whose enforcement is sought, shall, in all sale transactions involving a considerable amount of money, be capable of production against the party who means to evade the bargain, and has rendered no conclusive oral fulfilment thereof; which memorandum upon its face shows that the bargain existed in his own contemplation.<sup>1</sup> And in the oral bargain itself, and that writing which takes the case out of the statute as to the party making and signing it, we have two distinct things which should not be confounded.<sup>2</sup>

§ 483. Common Rules of Interpretation apply. — The method of interpreting a note or memorandum which serves for written compliance follows the leading rules as to evidence in writing; the Statute of Frauds not seeking to vary these

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 412; Williams v. Tucker, 47 Miss. 103; Parton v. Crofts, 33 L. J. C. P. 678; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493.
<sup>2</sup> Ib.
 189; 16 C. B. n. s. 11; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. 341; Hoar, J., in rules, but meaning to leave the legal effect of the writing as at common law.<sup>1</sup> Into the law of evidence we shall not enter, except as questions may incidentally arise. But the distinction we have just pointed out suggests that there is likewise a marked difference between proving a contract of sale and proving compliance with the Statute of Frauds. Various questions must, in the latter case, arise as to the sufficiency of memoranda, their mutual connection, and their bearing upon the original oral contract of sale; whereas, were the original contract itself in writing, different memoranda, executed at subsequent times, to which both parties were not privy, could have no effect in varying its terms, but would merely evince or explain them.<sup>2</sup> A contract, to be binding, ought to be mutual in obligations, so that neither party could sue upon it without the other; but the statute memorandum comports with the theory that one may enforce an oral bargain against the other, though it could not have been enforced against himself.

§ 484. Classification of the Subject for this Chapter. — With these preliminary remarks, we proceed to consider in this chapter the statute exception of written compliance, under these heads, — (1st) the written note or memorandum to be made; (2d) what it should contain; (3d) how and by whom it should be signed; (4th) delivery of the note or memorandum; (5th) compliance by means of agents.

§ 485. As to the Written Note or Memorandum under the Statute; of what it may consist. — (1st.) As to the written note or memorandum. The statute requires no formal written agreement of the parties; but simply, on the part of him who is to be charged, a writing which consistently imports a sale contract. Waiving, for the present, the proper contents of such a writing, we may observe as a form, that it may be expressed by letter, or acknowledgment of invoice, or bill of parcels, or telegram, besides the more formal memorandum; that it may be gathered from various writings, which have the intelligent and consistent purpose running through them ; that it may even consist of the defendant's written proposal, if supplemented by parol proof of acceptance by the plaintiff ; and that the writing need not have been intended as a memorandum by the defendant, nor actually addressed to the plaintiff.<sup>1</sup> Additional forms of written memorandum under the statute, as by an auctioneer's or broker's entry, or bought and sold notes, will be studied in their proper place.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; cases infra.

<sup>2</sup> See Patteson, J., in Siewewright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 103.

Of written compliance by letter there are numerous instances ; and the uniform doctrine of England and the United States, that the party to be charged is the only one who needs sign, renders this, especially as between bargaining parties who live at a distance from one another, the most convenient method for drawing buyer or seller into a position where the law will hold him.<sup>3</sup> So proof of sending a telegram, and a letter of acceptance by mail besides, as it is held, sufficiently complies with the statute ; and so would it be, we suppose, with the sending of a telegram alone.<sup>4</sup> The buyer's written acknowledgment of a seller's invoice or bill of parcels may, together with such instrument, constitute a suitable memorandum, if given pursuant to a bargain ;<sup>5</sup> but not where the so-called invoice appears to have been forwarded as a mere circular to induce a sale, and the buyer's acknowledgment was merely of its receipt as such, without evincing that any bargain was closed.<sup>6</sup> A memorandum made and signed by one party is available to the other, even though it state the bargain after the form of a mutual agreement,<sup>7</sup> or be drawn up in duplicate, one copy only being signed by the buyer, and the other by the seller.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 345-351, 354 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, §§ 1, 2 ; cases infra.

<sup>2</sup> Infra, compliance by agents.

<sup>3</sup> See Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140 ; Wilkinson v. Evans, L. R. 1 C. P. 407 ; Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307. But as to the requirement of "signing," applied to telegrams, see post, § 503.

<sup>5</sup> Saunderson v. Jackson, 2 B. & P. 238 ; Wilkinson v. Evans, L. R. 1 C. P. 407 ; Buxton v. Rust, L. R. 7 Ex. 1 ; s. c. L. R. 7 Ex. 279.

<sup>6</sup> M'Lean v. Nicoll, 7 Jur. n. s. 999.

<sup>7</sup> Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493.

<sup>8</sup> Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 412.

§ 486. The Same Subject; Several Writings.—So, too, the note or memorandum which the statute contemplates may consist of several writings, physically apart, which are logically connected, so long as they have unity of purpose in evincing the bargain, require nothing parol to connect them together, and are consistent with one another. For, as Lord Westbury has said: “In order to embody in the letter any other document or memorandum, or instrument in writing so as to make it part of a special contract contained in that letter, the letter must either set out the writing referred to, or so clearly and definitely refer to the writing, that, by force of the reference, the writing itself becomes part of the instrument.”<sup>1</sup> But, where two or more papers are thus taken together, the import of all must be, not a mere negotiation, but a concluded bargain.<sup>2</sup>

§ 487. Written Proposal and Parol Acceptance; and the Reverse.—A written proposal, signed by the party to be charged, and accepted by parol by the party to whom it is made, is a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute.<sup>3</sup> With the one-sidedness of such a doctrine legislation is not concerned, since all it seeks is ground to justify enforcing a bargain which was mutually entered into. No violence is done thereby to the policy of our legislation; because, as Willes, J., has said, no one can enforce his remedies in a case of this sort, without proving that he did or was ready to do his part to entitle him to performance as to the other party.<sup>4</sup> And the only limitation to be noted is, that the writing in question should manifest a genuine offer which the other party had a right to accept.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Peek v. North Staffordshire R. R. Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 472. And see Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, § 1; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 350-353; Caton v. Caton, L. R. 2 H. L. Cas. 127; Story Sales, § 272; Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558; Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 412; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 272; M'Lean v. Nicoll, 7 Jur. n. s. 999.

<sup>3</sup> Reuss v. Picksley, L. R. 1 Ex. 342; Himrod Furnace Co. v. Cleveland, &c. R. R. Co., 22 Ohio St. 451; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474, per Bigelow, C. J.

<sup>4</sup> Reuss v. Picksley, L. R. 1 Ex. 342.

<sup>5</sup> See Himrod Furnace Co. v. Cleveland, &c. R. R. Co., 22 Ohio St. 451.

On the other hand, an oral proposal by the party to be charged, followed by a written acceptance by the other party, is insufficient, where it leaves the whole contract to be established by parol evidence and the charging party's own writings.<sup>1</sup>

§ 488. Intention not Material; nor Address of the Memorandum.—That the writing which renders the bargain enforceable need not have been intended by the defendant as a statute memorandum is a plain inference from the decided cases, which constantly show that the party sued, so far from drawing up a memorandum for the purpose of establishing the oral contract, was unwittingly led into making such written recognition of the bargain as enabled the other to hold him to it; and, with such clear proof of a bargain actually entered into, it would promote fraud, instead of checking it, for the courts to rule otherwise. In making the oral contract of sale enforceable under circumstances which establish such admission or recognition on the part of a defendant, the latest cases side strongly with the plaintiff who seeks a remedy,—more so than formerly.<sup>2</sup>

Nor is the note or memorandum which the statute requires addressed, of necessity, to the enforcing party or his agent; though this would be usual; but a third person may be its recipient. Gibson v. Holland, decided in 1865, is the leading case on this point, wherein it was ruled (upon the analogy of chancery precedents) that a note or letter addressed by the seller to his own agent, which contained directions to carry the agreement into execution, was sufficient to render the contract enforceable against him.<sup>3</sup> Less even than this

<sup>1</sup> Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 62 Me. 341.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Bailey v. Sweeting, 9 C. B. n. s. 843; Story Sales, § 272; Wilkinson v. Evans, L. R. 1 C. P. 407; Buxton v. Rust, L. R. 7 Ex. 1, 279; Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140, with Richards v. Porter, 6 B. & C. 437 (1827), and Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561 (1829). And see Ellis v. Deadman, 4 Bibb, 467; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493. But cf. § 489 a.

<sup>3</sup> Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1, citing Sugd. Vend. & P. 14th Eng. ed. 139, § 39; Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 335; Argus Co. v. Albany, 55 N. Y. 495; Moore v. Mountcastle, 61 Mo. 424; Kleeman v. Collins, 9 Bush, 467.

On the other hand, it is held that when a memorandum has been delibwill in some cases suffice; as, for instance, a record on the sued party's own books.<sup>1</sup>

§ 489. Writings not Contemporaneous; Evidence to support them, etc.—As the whole memorandum may be of subsequent date to the oral bargain, so, too, the several papers which sometimes constitute a memorandum need not all be contemporaneous. "The memorandum," says Hoar, J., "may be supplied by documents and letters written at various times, if they all appear to have relation to it, and if coupled together they contain by statement or reference all the essential parts of the bargain."<sup>2</sup> Any paper or papers which constitute a statute memorandum will suffice, if procured before the party sues to enforce the oral contract, so far as the point of time is concerned; but, after the action has been brought, it is too late, according to the old rules of practice, to supply what has not already been obtained.<sup>3</sup>

Where the memorandum is to be supplied by separate written papers, such as letters, memoranda, and telegrams, they must be connected, either physically, or by such reference from one to the other as to show a mutual relation, and make their contents, without the aid of parol evidence of the intention to so connect, a consistent compliance with the statute.<sup>4</sup> But of the admissibility of parol evidence to erately made, executed, and delivered in conformity with the statute, and its terms are sensible and free from all ambiguity, it cannot be varied as to its substance by parol. Virgin, J., in Williams v. Robinson, 73 Me. 186, 196.

<sup>1</sup> Colt, J., in Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 335; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546; Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653. And see § 499, post, as to delivering the memorandum.

<sup>2</sup> Hoar, J., in Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 412; 99 N. Y. 29; Coe v. Tough, 116 N. Y. 273.

<sup>3</sup> Bill v. Bament, 9 M. & W. 36. See supra, § 433. See also Bird v. Munroe, 66 Me. 347; Lucas v. Dixon, 22 Q. B. D. 357.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558; Peek v. North Staffordshire R. R. Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 473; Lerned v. Wannemacher, 9 Allen, 417; Johnson v. Buck, 6 Vroom, 344; Story Sales, § 272; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 350; Smith v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685; Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229. And see Beckwith v. Talbot, 95 U. S. 289, per Mr. Justice Bradley; Frank v. Miller, 38 Md. 450; Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 83; Cave v. Hastings, 7 Q. B. D. 125; Smith v. Jones, 66 Ga. 339. "Unless the essential terms of the sale can be ascertained from the writing itself, or by reference in it to something else, the writing is not a compliance with the statute; and if the agreement be explain the contents we shall speak hereafter. There might be several papers thus connected, any one of which would fully answer the purpose of a memorandum.<sup>1</sup> Oral evidence, too, is often admissible for the purpose of identifying another document which is referred to, but not sufficiently described, in the memorandum.<sup>2</sup> But, whether the memorandum be made out from one or several papers, the import should be a concluded bargain, not that a negotiation is merely progressing; and whatever stops short of this will fail to take the case out of the statute.<sup>3</sup>

§ 489 a. Admissibility of Parol Evidence.—The intent of the statute being not to affect transactions by written contract, but to admit the enforcement of an oral contract which was evinced by some sufficient note or memorandum, parol thus defective, it cannot be supplied by parol proof, for that would at once introduce all the mischiefs which the statute was intended to prevent.” Mr. Justice Bradley in 95 U. S. 456.

<sup>1</sup> Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653.

<sup>2</sup> Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas. 238. See Kekewich, J., in Oliver v. Hunting, 44 Ch. D. 205, 209, which discusses the modern rule of parol evidence as applied to the connection of separate writings. “Wherever parol evidence,” he says, “is required to connect two written documents together, then that parol evidence is admissible. You are entitled to rely upon a written document which requires explanation. Perhaps the real principle upon which that is based is, that you are always entitled in regarding the construction and meaning of a written document to inquire into the circumstances under which it was written, not in order to find an interpretation by the writer of the language, but to ascertain from the surrounding facts and circumstances with reference to what, and with what intent, it must have been written.” See also Beckwith v. Talbot, 95 U. S. 289, 292, which also relaxes the cardinal rule of the text, though perhaps modified by 95 U. S. 456. But Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229, 232, argues that a defective reference can no more be cured by parol than any other defective part of the memorandum. “There is reason to fear,” the court concludes, “that in this country, as well as in England, the favor with which some statutes, and the dislike with which others, have been regarded by the courts have enlarged the distinction between strict and loose construction with reference to the legislative intent, and introduced a variable standard that exposes the province of the legislature to judicial invasion.”

Some good authorities maintain the distinction between signed and unsigned papers in considering their connection by oral evidence; and they hold that the signed paper ought to draw the unsigned, by reference, and not vice versa. Bennett’s note to Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 209, and cases cited; [1893] 2 Q. B. 65.

<sup>3</sup> See Story Sales, § 272.

evidence may show in any case that the writing which purports to be such note or memorandum is not the record at all of any parol contract of value.<sup>1</sup> So parol evidence may be admitted, according to various authorities, to show that the writing was a note or memorandum of only part of such parol contract, or otherwise imperfect as to actual terms or the mode of performance; or, for explaining doubtful language and applying it by showing the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances of the transaction; though not, in general, for substituting something quite different.<sup>2</sup>

§ 490. As to what the Written Memorandum should contain; Essentials.—(2d.) As to what the written note or memorandum should contain. The legislature has said that there should be a written note or memorandum “of the said bargain;” and hence our purpose is to ascertain what will be a sufficient memorandum of the bargain under the statute. The identical parties to the sale should appear in the memorandum; also the essential terms and subject-matter of the oral contract; though, as between essential and non-essential matters of description to be embraced in the writing, the cases leave much room for dispute.

§ 491. The Same Subject; Identity of Buyer and Seller as such.—The memorandum should show for a certainty who is seller, and who is buyer; in other words, it must identify both contracting parties. The party chargeable is, of course, made manifest because of his signature; but who the other party is must also be shown in the writing, otherwise the writing is no statute memorandum of the bargain;<sup>3</sup> and the mere mention of names is insufficient, unless the memorandum enables the court besides to distinguish buyer from

<sup>1</sup> Pym v. Campbell, 6 E. & B. 370; Clever v. Kirkman, 24 W. N. 159; Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 4 App. Cas. 311, 320.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, §§ 208-219, and cases cited; post, § 493, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, § 1; Allen v. Bennett, 3 Taunt. 169; Champion v. Plummer, 3 B. & P. 252; Bailey

v. Ogden, 3 Johns. 399; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 476; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653; Calkins v. Falk, 1 Abb. N. Y. App. 291; Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229; Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100; Lewis v. Wood, 153 Mass. 321; 56 Conn. 102; McElroy v. Leery, 61 Md. 397.

seller.<sup>1</sup> There is an English case, decided upon a peculiar state of facts, which goes so far, apparently, as to require not only that the seller's name should be mentioned in a memorandum made by the buyer, but mentioned or made clear in the capacity of seller; treating a note as insufficient which mentioned that A., the buyer, agrees to buy a lot of goods "purchased by B." But this reference to B. (who was, in fact, the other contracting party) was not to B. distinctly as seller, but merely as a party who had once purchased the lot, and hence the memorandum proved an identification rather of subject-matter than of contracting parties; and, though the court may have appeared finical in passing upon the facts without drawing a larger inference, the case was not an exceptional one in principle.<sup>2</sup> Later and earlier cases are to be found, at first sight conflicting with this decision, in which the brief entry afforded by mercantile books, aided by slight oral evidence bearing upon the significance of book-keeping expressions and the collocation of words, has been received as a sufficient designation of the parties named in the mutual relation of seller and buyer; though the words unexplained, taken apart from the books, might not have established it.<sup>3</sup> As, for example, in a case where the reference to A., the buyer, was thus made by B., the seller: "N. 32 sacks cutlasses @ 39s., 280lbs. to await orders. (Signed) B."<sup>4</sup> It was well said in a Massachusetts case, that the seller's memorandum need not say who is purchaser; for a "stipulation to deliver merchandise to a person clearly indicates that he is the purchaser."<sup>5</sup> Abbreviation or the informal mention of names, if intelligible, finds favor in various decisions.<sup>6</sup>

The principle to be gathered from the accumulated deci-

<sup>1</sup> See Bailey v. Ogden, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Vandenburgh v. Spooner, L. R. 1 Ex. 316.

<sup>3</sup> See Sarl v. Bourdillon, 1 C. B. n. s. 188; Newell v. Radford, L. R. 3 C. P. 52; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436; Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. God-

dard, 14 How. 446; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653; Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229.

<sup>4</sup> Newell v. Radford, L. R. 3 C. P. 52.

<sup>5</sup> Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474.

<sup>6</sup> Lee v. Cheney, 88 Tenn. 707.

sions appears to be, that the buyer and seller must, upon reference to the memorandum, be distinguishable as bearing that mutual relation, each being indicated in his own capacity; but that resort may be had, not to mere literal expressions alone, but likewise to the context and the general character of the writing. If the writing describes the parties so as to show that A. is the buyer, and B. the seller, the identity of A. or of B. as being the party intended by the written description is, of course, always open to oral proof; for this would be, as in other cases of written instruments, simply to apply the document to the subject-matter in controversy.<sup>1</sup>

§ 492. Subject-matter and Essential Terms of Bargain should appear.—The memorandum should further show the subject-matter and essential terms of the oral contract of sale. But what are the essential terms of a bargain? In applying different sections of the Statute of Frauds, the courts have been led into distinguishing between the writing which under the present section must show the “bargain,” and that which, under the 4th section, quite similarly expressed (as to charging one with the debt of another), evinces an “agreement” of the parties. Wain v. Warlters—a case decided in 1804, which turned upon a construction of another (or the 4th) section of this statute—promulgated the rule, that the memorandum should set forth the “consideration” moving to as well as the promise made by the party to be charged.<sup>2</sup> But this principle would hardly apply with the same strictness to “bargains” under the 17th section, so as to render an expression of the “price” indispensable to the sufficiency of the memorandum; for we have seen that price is often implied in a contract of sale as something reasonable, and not expressed.<sup>3</sup> And the rule established for present guidance appears to be, that, if the oral contract of sale expressly fixed a specific price, that price must appear on the face of the memorandum or writings connected therewith, as an essential part of the bargain; but that if the parties fixed no price, as frequently happens, and stood upon the implied or reasonable price, the memorandum can afford to be silent in like manner; and that, while resort cannot be had to parol evidence for the purpose of supplying a fixed price to complete the memorandum, it can be had in order to show that there was a price fixed which ought to have appeared in the memorandum to make it available as a means of enforcing the bargain.<sup>1</sup> So much, then, for "consideration," under the 17th section. As for any further adaptation of the rule of Wain v. Warlters to the extent of necessitating the written expression of all that the enforcing party to a "bargain" had orally promised, the two sections of the statute are still to be kept apart; for, as Cresswell, J., observed in Sarl v. Bourdillon, where objection was made, on the buyer's behalf, that the memorandum for the sale of candlesticks omitted a special stipulation orally made on the seller's part to attach shade-holders to them: "We do not feel obliged to yield to this argument. The memorandum states all that was to be done by the person charged." And, referring to preceding authorities, he added: "That is sufficient to satisfy the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, though not to make a valid agreement in cases within the 4th section."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, § 2; infra, as to agents. But see Calkins v. Falk, 1 Abb. (N. Y.) App. 291, as to the effect of a complete misnomer of a contracting party.

<sup>2</sup> Wain v. Warlters, 5 East, 10; Story Sales, § 270 n.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 216. That the 4th section requirement as to expressing the “consideration” is not a criterion for the present or 17th section, see Benj. Sales, 3d ed., § 232, and American notes.

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, § 2; Acebal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376; Hoadly v. McLaine, 10 Bing. 582; Elmore v. Kingscote, 5 B. & C. 383; Ide v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685; Ashcroft v. Butterworth, 136 Mass. 511; Stone v. Browning, 68 N. Y. 598, 604; Hanson v. Marsh, 40 Minn. 1; Goodman v. Griffiths, 1 H. & N. 574; Ashcroft v. Morrin, 4 M. & Gr. 450. See Story Sales, § 222; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 376, 387-408. A memorandum which specifies the sale of 800 to 1000 tons of ice at $2 per ton is sufficient as to price and quantity. Williams v. Robinson, 73 Me. 186. The price may be stated in any words or figures which indicate clearly, as applied to the subject, and in the light of prevailing usage, what that price is. Gowen v. Klous, 101 Mass. 449; Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446. But cf. James v. Muir, 33 Mich. 223.

<sup>2</sup> Sarl v. Bourdillon, 1 C. B. N. S. 188. And see Egerton v. Mathews, 6 East, 307, per Lord Ellenborough.

But the more we encumber the simple "bargain," or contract of sale with special stipulations on the part of seller or buyer, contemporaneous or later, the more does it grow to resemble rather a contract or "agreement," properly so called. And yet a written note or memorandum of the oral bargain is all the statute seeks. The cases do not consistently maintain, as an inflexible rule, that the enforcing party's stipulations may be omitted from the memorandum; and too closely are the mutual obligations of seller and buyer interwoven to make this a safe precept to go by, save in what are decidedly special and unusual stipulations on either side. It is constantly said, on the other hand, that all the terms of the bargain, substantial, material, or essential (each of these adjectives being interchangeably used by the courts in the present instance), must appear in the memorandum. Hence such omissions from the memorandum as a stipulated term of credit, a fixed date of performance, a sale by sample, or a condition that the party defendant should first approve the quality, have, in the courts of this country, been held fatal to the instrument's sufficiency;<sup>1</sup> not, avowedly, because it was the stipulation of the sued instead of the suing party (which often happens to have been the case), but upon the ground that a substantial part of the bargain did not appear in the memorandum.<sup>2</sup> Even an express warranty of quality by the seller which was left out of the memorandum has been held to invalidate it;<sup>3</sup> though it might be questioned, in the light of the latest decisions, whether such purely collateral

<sup>1</sup> And yet as to cash payment, or the date of performance, any contract of sale may be silent; and whatever stipulations the law supplies when parties have not expressed themselves need not appear in a memorandum. See Hawkins v. Chace, 19 Pick. 502; 61 Md. 558. Where the memorandum specifies no time of delivery, a reasonable time will be inferred; and so too, where no place of delivery is stated, the buyer's usual place of business, or the customary place of delivering goods of the description. Mr. Justice Nelson in Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446.

<sup>2</sup> Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. 341; Story Sales, § 270; Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353; Buck v. Pickwell, 27 Vt. 157; Elfe v. Gadsden, 2 Rich. 373; Soles v. Hickman, 20 Penn. St. 180; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158; Nelson v. Shelby Co., Ala. (1893); Wright v. Weeks, 25 N. Y. 158; 120 Mass. 214; Kriete v. Myer, 61 Md. 558; 82 Mo. 215.

<sup>3</sup> Peltier v. Collins, 3 Wend. 459.

representations of the suing party need be so strictly expressed in writing. There should be words indicating a sale or bargain.<sup>1</sup> The general idea, indeed, which pervades the decisions is, that, while the memorandum need not show each particular incident of the bargain, nor implied terms, it must show all the main points of the particular contract of sale mutually agreed upon; and as to brokers' entries, we shall find the rule quite a strict one with reference to material terms.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, collateral stipulations between seller and buyer independent of the oral sale itself, need not appear in the statute note or memorandum.

§ 493. The Same Subject.—Substance, and not form, is to be regarded in all such cases. The memorandum must not falsify by showing a bargain different in essence from that orally entered into; it must not be made up of contradictory statements; and it must, on the whole, import a bargain.<sup>3</sup> Hence the sufficiency of the memorandum being at issue, it is competent to show by parol evidence whether or no the writing offered correctly states the material terms of the oral contract, though such evidence cannot be adduced to aid or vary those written terms.<sup>4</sup> And, with regard alike to the parties, the essential terms, the subject-matter of the bargain, and the fact that a sale is constituted, the prevailing tendency is to admit extraneous evidence of trade usage, in furtherance of the true meaning of the parties, wherever the memorandum furnishes a terse statement, such as is usual in mercantile contracts; this from favor to business men, and

<sup>1</sup> Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474. Cf. Butler v. Thomson, cited § 507.

<sup>2</sup> Pitts v. Beckett, 13 M. & W. 743; infra, § 500 et seq.

<sup>3</sup> See M'Lean v. Nicoll, 7 Jur. n. s. 999; Cooper v. Smith, 15 East, 103; Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561; Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474; Goodman v. Griffiths, 1 H. & N. 574. But, semble, a slight variation on immaterial points from the oral contract will not vitiate the memorandum. Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray, 387. The party who offers the memorandum in proof must not discredit it by showing that it does not contain essential terms; though it is open to the defence to thus establish its imperfection by parol proof. M'Mullen v. Helberg, 4 L. R. Ir. 94; 6 L. R. Ir. 463; Remick v. Sandford, 118 Mass. 102.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; Pitts v. Beckett, 13 M. & W. 743; Acebal v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436; § 489 a.

out of a liberal disposition to uphold bargains evinced by what they would readily understand among themselves as in substance a perfect memorandum.<sup>1</sup> Even surrounding circumstances have been admitted in evidence for the purpose of identifying the subject-matter, explaining some technical expression contained in the memorandum, and in general for removing an ambiguity upon its face; as, for instance, to show that a $5 price is a pro rata and not total price;<sup>2</sup> that so many "barrels" means barrels of a special dimension;<sup>3</sup> that the "ice" referred to was ice of a certain kind;<sup>4</sup> and so on; not thereby contradicting or varying the written terms, nor supplying substantial matters omitted from the memorandum. Subject to these qualifications, the general rule is, that the writing or writings resorted to as a memorandum must, in order to satisfy the statute, so substantially express the bargain as to enable the court to make out what it was, without resorting to parol evidence.<sup>5</sup>

§ 494. Whether a Writing which repudiates can be a Memorandum.—It is sometimes asked, whether a writing which

<sup>1</sup> Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446; Newell v. Radford, L. R. 3 C. P. 52; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436.

<sup>2</sup> Spicer v. Cooper, 1 Q. B. 424.

<sup>3</sup> Miller v. Stevens, 100 Mass. 518. And see Macdonald v. Longbottom, 1 E. & E. 977; Johnson v. Raylton, 7 Q. B. D. 438; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546.

<sup>4</sup> Williams v. Robinson, 73 Me. 186. The signature to the memorandum here implied the kind. Ib.

<sup>5</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; Story Sales, § 269; 2 Kent Com. 511; Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229; Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 62 Me. 341; Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 Mich. 610; 55 Tex. 401; May v. Ward, 134 Mass. 127; McElroy v. Buck, 35 Mich. 434.

There has been much conflict of late in different States as to whether the statute requirements of a written memorandum shall be strictly insisted upon or not. In Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446 (1852), the majority of the Supreme Court of the United States insisted on relaxing these requirements (and semble those, too, of a signature by the party to be bound) for the sake of upholding an imperfectly drawn mercantile memorandum. The minority opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Curtis sought to hold to a more literal compliance with the statute. The influence of this important decision has been very great in bringing the expression of "essentials" to a standard highly favorable to the enforcing party, so far as American tribunals are concerned. But some States are reluctant to follow such a precedent. See, e.g., 58 N. H. 229; 122 N. Y. 491, 497. Even the same United States tribunal has later cast doubt upon the adjudication. 99 U. S. 100, 111.

repudiates an oral bargain can be a sufficient memorandum of it. On this point the earlier and later cases appear to be at variance; the former taking the negative, the latter the affirmative, side. In Richards v. Porter, an English case decided in 1827, Lord Tenterden ruled that a letter from the buyer to the seller of hops, which said, in substance, "I have received your invoice, but I insist upon it the hops have not been sent in time," was an insufficient memorandum under the statute, even though taken in connection with the invoice.<sup>1</sup> The idea entertained by the court seems to have been, that the written repudiation of a bargain cannot be said to import a bargain.<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Surman, which followed in 1829, presented some similar points; the decision, however, turning upon an inconsistency in the letters which had passed between the parties, so as to leave the real terms of the bargain in dispute.<sup>3</sup> Archer v. Bayles, decided in 1850, is a case where letters construed together were held not to constitute a memorandum; for here was not only a distinct refusal on the buyer's part to take the things, but a repudiation for a cause which went to the essence of the contract; the admission being, in effect, of no more than that the buyer had bought on some contract.<sup>4</sup>

But the current has since set in an opposite direction: for Bailey v. Sweeting, decided in 1861, permitted a letter to take the contract out of the statute, which in effect said, "I made a bargain with you for the purchase of chimney-glasses at the sum of 38*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, but I declined to have them because the carrier broke them."<sup>5</sup> Still more emphatic was Wilkinson v. Evans in expressing the same doctrine. An invoice of cheese and candles was sent to the buyer: the buyer returned the invoice to the seller, with a note on the back, saying, "The

<sup>1</sup> Richards v. Porter, 6 B. & C. 437.

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., Goodman v. Griffiths, 1 H. & N. 574.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Surman, 9 B. & C. 561.

<sup>4</sup> Archer v. Bayles, 5 Ex. 625.

<sup>5</sup> Bailey v. Sweeting, 9 C. B. n. s. 843. Says Erle, C. J.: "Now, the first part of the letter is unquestionably a note or memorandum of the bargain. It contains the price and all the substance of the contract, and there could be no dispute that if it had stopped there, it would have been a good memorandum of the contract within the meaning of the statute."

cheese came to-day, but I did not take them in for they were badly crushed. So the candles and cheese is returned." The court treated the invoice and note as a sufficient memorandum.<sup>1</sup> Lastly comes Buxton v. Rust, but recently decided in England, to confirm the doctrine beyond a doubt; the seller this time becoming the bounden party defendant. A memorandum of the terms of the sale had been given by A. to B. for the purchase of wool. B. afterwards wrote A. that it was now twenty-eight days since they had contracted, and that he should consider the bargain off because of A.'s failure to complete his part of the contract. On A.'s asking for a copy of the memorandum, B. enclosed a copy thereof, saying "I beg to enclose a copy of your letter." It was decided that B. had, by signing the letter and enclosing the copy to A., so recognized the contract on his part as to enable A. to sue upon the contract. For this was as much as to say, while repudiating the bargain, "We made a certain oral contract; and this memorandum copy which I enclose shows what we agreed upon." And the court rightly refused to give so narrow an interpretation to the seller's acts as to make it a mere affirmation that the buyer had given a memorandum which the seller did not mean should evince a recognition on his own part.<sup>2</sup>

The result of the English decisions, therefore, is to establish, as the present rule, that a writing, made and signed by the defendant, may alone, or in connection with other writings, furnish the requisite memorandum, although, in effect, amounting to a repudiation of the oral bargain and non-performance, provided it contains a distinct recognition that such bargain had been actually entered into. For, under such circumstances, it is in furtherance of justice to permit the oral contract to stand thus evinced, and then determine, by the ordinary tests, whether the defendant had proper reasons for repudiating; and, in general, as to the legal consequences of the evinced bargain. The American courts do not appear to have passed upon the question.

<sup>1</sup> Wilkinson v. Evans, L. R. 1 C. P. 407 (1866).

<sup>2</sup> Buxton v. Rust, L. R. 7 Ex. 1; s. c. 7 Ex. (Ex. Ch.) 279. See Blackburn, J. (ib. Ex. Ch.), who

assents to this view, correcting Blackb. Sales, 66, contra. See also Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546.

§ 495. Application of Statute where Original Bargain is modified.—Another interesting inquiry concerns the application of the statute rule where subsequent modifications of a bargain which stands evinced in writing as originally made are introduced. The validity of a memorandum will not be affected by the circumstance that the defendant had a right to superadd to the sale something resting upon an entirely separate agreement, which would not properly have been expressed until it had ripened into a sale; and if he never, in fact, availed himself of this right, the original memorandum may well be silent on the subject.<sup>1</sup> And it is a general rule, that no verbal agreement between the parties to a suitable writing, made before or at the time of completing such an expression of mutual intent, is admissible to vary its terms: for all such verbal agreements are merged in the writing.<sup>2</sup> Now, as to an oral agreement, subsequent to the written memorandum, the doctrine of Massachusetts and some other States appears to be, that the writing is not conclusive, but that any subsequent oral agreement may enlarge the time of performance, or vary other terms of the contract, or show its waiver and discharge altogether;<sup>3</sup> and this follows the common-law rule, which permits the oral variance of a written contract not under seal.<sup>4</sup>

But the better opinion at this day is, that a written memorandum which falls within the Statute of Frauds cannot be varied by any subsequent agreement which is not expressed in writing; and that parol evidence is inadmissible to show a change in the time or place of delivery, or other modification

<sup>1</sup> Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436.

<sup>2</sup> See Cummings v. Arnold, 3 Met. 486.

<sup>3</sup> Cummings v. Arnold, 3 Met. 486; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. 31. And see Kribs v. Jones, 44 Md. 396. See also Richardson v. Cooper, 25

Me. 450; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 409-428; Negley v. Jeffers, 28 Ohio St. 90; 28 Penn. St. 426; and various analogous cases arising under other sections of that statute.

<sup>4</sup> See Denman, C. J., in Goss v. Lord Nugent, 5 B. & Ad. 65.

of the original bargain. Such is the doctrine of the late English cases, though the former tendency was otherwise.<sup>1</sup> Whether a complete abandonment and rescission of the contract might not appear by verbal testimony is as yet unsettled.<sup>2</sup> But it is decided in England, that, where the parties enter into a new oral agreement whose effect would be incidentally to rescind the previous written contract by essentially modifying its terms, the modification is inoperative as a rescission of the written contract, which may, therefore, be enforced.<sup>3</sup>

§ 496. The Same Subject.— Even the so-called Massachusetts doctrine, which many regard as opposed to the foregoing, may not be (to take decisions rather than dicta) far different in this respect. It seems still to recognize that a party ought not to be allowed to sue partly on a written and partly on an oral agreement; and only adds, that, in defending an action on the written contract, the defendant may show that he has performed it according to an oral agreement for a substituted performance, or, being ready to do so, was prevented by the plaintiff's act.<sup>4</sup> There is a recent decision of the English Queen's Bench which supports the first branch of the same exception. Here was a verbal order for goods to be sent from London to Rotterdam; and on account of precautions, rendered necessary during a European war and a state of blockade, a different route from that orally given was chosen by the seller, who then sent an invoice with a letter stating the facts. The buyer, after receiving the letter, signified, by words or conduct amount-

<sup>1</sup> Stead v. Dawber, 10 Ad. & E. 57; Marshall v. Lynn, 6 M. & W. 109; Noble v. Ward, L. R. 1 Ex. 117; s. c. L. R. 2 Ex. 135; contra, Cuff v. Penn, 1 M. & S. 21. And see Clifford, J., in Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 272; Dana v. Hancock, 30 Vt. 616.

<sup>2</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 409-428.

<sup>3</sup> Noble v. Ward, L. R. 1 Ex. 117; s. c. app. L. R. 2 Ex. 135; Moore v.

Campbell, 10 Ex. 323. As to mere forbearance, see Ogle v. Earl Vane, L. R. 2 Q. B. 275; s. c. L. R. 3 Q. B. 272. And see, as to interlineations, Stewart v. Eddowes, L. R. 9 C. P. 311.

<sup>4</sup> See Hoar, J., in Whittier v. Dana, 10 Allen, 326, explaining Cummings v. Arnold, 3 Met. 486; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. 31. See also the circumstances stated in Kribs v. Jones, 44 Md. 396.

ing to a waiver, that he had no objection to the change of route. The ship containing the goods was stranded, and the goods were spoiled. At a later date the buyer wrote a letter which distinctly referred to the seller's letter, and clearly admitted what is stated; but he added that the seller ought to have obtained his sanction to the change of route. This last letter was held to be a sufficient recognition by the buyer to take the contract out of the statute; and in response to the argument that this letter gave no written assent to the substituted mode of delivery, and hence failed to assent to the substituted contract, the court responded, that the seller relied, not upon the substituted, but upon the original contract, and held that by acts and conduct the buyer had assented to the substituted delivery. "I cannot see," says Blackburn, J., "why the assent to a substituted mode of performing one of the terms of a contract need be in writing, and may not be by parol; though the original contract must have been in writing. They are quite different things, the proof of a substituted contract, and the proof of a ratification or approval after performance, of the substituted mode of performance."<sup>1</sup>

§ 497. As to signing the Memorandum; How and by whom.—(3d.) As to how and by whom the written memorandum should be signed. The party to be charged must in some part of the memorandum place his name, and this is usually at the foot; though the requirement of "signing" is satisfied with a signature at the top or the bottom or in the body of the instrument.<sup>2</sup> But some States have altered the statute expression so as to require the writing to be "subscribed" instead of "signed;" the effect of which is to restrict one's authentication to writing his name at the end of the memorandum.<sup>3</sup> A mark is sufficient, or a signature by another, if

<sup>1</sup> Leather Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140. Cockburn, C. J., here advances similar views to Blackburn, J.

<sup>2</sup> Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653; Allen v. Bennett, 3 Taunt. 169; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 355, 358;

Story Sales, § 266; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 444.

<sup>3</sup> See California and New York

bonâ fide and as the authorized and intended signature to the memorandum of the party himself.<sup>1</sup> Nor can it be reasonably doubted that the party may use a lead pencil instead of ink.<sup>2</sup> Signature by initials is sufficient; parol evidence being admissible as to the party's identity.<sup>3</sup>

But, whether the signature of the defendant party or his agent be by full name or initials or by mark, and wherever the place of its insertion, the theory of the statute is that it must have been intended to denote a signature, and not merely to serve by way of personal description;<sup>4</sup> and, where the name appears in an unusual place or after an unusual form, the intention of the party, in so putting it as a signature, becomes a material question of fact. Words of mere description—as the mother's subscription of a letter to her son, "Your affectionate mother"—are held not to satisfy the statute.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, a fanciful, fictitious, or assumed name or abbreviation, will answer all the statute purpose if placed as the party's signature.<sup>6</sup>

There may be a signature by printing or stamping, so as to fulfil the statute requirement, if the circumstances of the case be such as to give the printed or stamped name a significance beyond that of an unused blank, and equivalent, in fact, to a memorandum in actual use with the name as part of it. The case is not unlike that of writing one's name in blank to documents, to be filled up as emergency may require: invalid as a signature except as brought into use. Schneider v. Norris illustrates the rule, which at this day statutes, Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. 341.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Kent, 511; Helshaw v. Langley, 11 L. J. Ch. 17; Bickley v. Keenan, 60 Ala. 293.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 266; Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. 102; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484; Geary v. Physic, 5 B. & C. 234; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6.

<sup>3</sup> Phillimore v. Barry, 1 Camp. 513; Caton v. Caton, L. R. 2 H. L. 127. per Lord Westbury; Barry v.

Coombe, 1 Pet. 640; Story Sales, § 266; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Denio, 478.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 7.

<sup>5</sup> Selby v. Selby, 3 Mer. 2.

<sup>6</sup> Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481; Angur v. Couture, 68 Me. 427; 6 Hill, 443, and cases cited. In Fessenden v. Mussey, 11 Cush. 127, the omission of the signer's middle name was considered of no consequence, since he intended a full signature.

has become quite important. Here a bill of parcels printed with a blank for the purchaser's name was held to be sufficiently signed, after the seller had written in the name of a certain purchaser with his own hand, and made the instrument a bill of parcels as to that particular sale; and this notwithstanding the seller's name appeared only as part of the printed bill. By filling up the bill, the seller had, in effect, recognized his printed name as his own signature to the memorandum.<sup>1</sup> But Lord Ellenborough was further of the opinion that the printed signature would have been of doubtful sufficiency under the statute, had this case rested merely on the printed name, unrecognized by and not brought home to the party as having been printed by him or his authority, so that the printed name would have stood unappropriated to the particular contract.<sup>2</sup>

§ 498. The Same Subject.—Since the written memorandum may be made up of two or more papers which bear a mutual relation, a signature which governs the whole by suitable reference may suffice, though actually placed only upon one of the papers; as in the case of a memorandum which is shown by a correspondence, or by the defendant's letter referring to an invoice or bill of parcels.<sup>3</sup> A letter signed by the party to be charged has been deemed sufficient to embrace a copy of a memorandum signed by the other party, which is enclosed and referred to, but not otherwise authenticated by the party who forwards it.<sup>4</sup> It would appear from the English decisions that the reference to connect two papers or two clauses so as to make one signature apply to both must be from what is signed to what is unsigned, and not the reverse.<sup>5</sup>

Subscription or signature by the party to be charged

<sup>1</sup> Schneider v. Norris, 2 M. & S. 286. Seem that the invoice or bill of parcels would bind equally, when filled out by one's authorized agent. See Hawkins v. Chace, 19 Pick. 502; 14 How. 446.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. And see Saunderson v. Jackson, 2 B. & P. 238; Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546. As to proof when or how a writing was stamped, see Boardman v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353; Brayley v. Kelly, 25 Minn. 160.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 486.

<sup>4</sup> Buxton v. Rust, L. R. 7 Ex. 1, 279.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 7, citing Caton v. Caton, L. R. 2 H. L. Cas. 127.

thereby is all that the statute requires; the effect being to leave the party who has not signed free to enforce the contract or not, as he may elect.<sup>1</sup> And herein is seen quite clearly the effect of the section we are considering, both in making the oral contract of sale not a void but only an unenforceable contract, while its terms are not complied with, and in resting the bargain and its consequences finally upon the oral contract itself, and not upon the memorandum which evinces it.<sup>2</sup> While some of the later cases exhibit, doubtless, an anxiety to find a sufficient signature as well as a sufficient memorandum of terms from one or more writings, taken as a whole, the more conservative rule must be that a writing is no part of the memorandum required by the statute, unless it is either signed by the defendant, or made, by annexation or reference, a part of a writing signed by him.<sup>3</sup>

§ 499. As to Delivery of the Note or Memorandum; Unauthorized Memoranda, etc.—(4th.) As to delivery of the note or memorandum. The party against whom enforcement is sought has usually delivered the note or writing upon which he is sued. And a paper drawn up and signed, but retained secretly by the signer and never delivered, would not appear admissible under the statute; since to construe this into a sufficient memorandum would be too much like making a case out of the defendant's unuttered thoughts.<sup>4</sup> Nevertheless, it is observable that the 17th section says nothing as to a delivery or interchange of writings;<sup>5</sup> and in several instances where the memorandum was not strictly private and secret to the party sought to be charged, but rather a business entry or statement, produced from his custody or that of his agent, as a fair memorandum of the transaction, <sup>1</sup> Allen v. Bennett, 3 Taunt. 169; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 7; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 365; Story Sales, § 266. One of a firm may sign so as to bind the partnership to the memorandum. 14 How. 446, per Mr. Justice Nelson.

<sup>2</sup> See supra, § 431.

<sup>3</sup> Brown v. Whipple, 58 N. H. 229;

Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 346-348, 371-376; Morton v. Dean, 13 Met. 385.

<sup>4</sup> See Grant v. Levan, 4 Penn. St. 393, a case which arose concerning real estate under another section of the Statute of Frauds; a long time elapsing before the writing was brought to light.

<sup>5</sup> Supra, § 481.

and meant to be such, the writing has been held sufficient, though never delivered to the enforcing party.<sup>1</sup>

As against the party who is sought to be charged, however, a written memorandum, made without his knowledge, assent, or authority, cannot be set up, as we have already intimated. It has been held, moreover, not only that the party not assenting to the making of such memorandum cannot be bound, but that he may prove the terms of the parol contract for the very purpose of showing that the memorandum does not state the real contract between the parties, and so defeat a recovery upon it under the statute for want of a sufficient note or memorandum thereof in writing.<sup>2</sup>

§ 500. As to Statute Compliance by Agents; General Rule.—(5th.) As to compliance by means of agents. The 17th section expressly provides that the written memorandum may be made and signed, not only by the parties to be charged, but likewise by “their agents thereunto lawfully authorized;” and although, as enacted in some of the United States, the statute makes no especial mention of agents, precedent and reason both favor compliance by an agent as legally representing his principal.<sup>3</sup>

The law of agency controls this subject; and, while the party thus acting must be lawfully authorized, the statute does not insist upon an appointment in writing; nor need the authority have been previously conferred, if the agent’s

<sup>1</sup> That the memorandum may be addressed to a third person, such as one’s agent, see supra, § 488. And see post, as to signature by agents. In Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653, the defendant made the note of the sale in his own book, and got the plaintiff to sign it. In Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1, a letter was addressed by the defendant to his own agent, directing the transaction to be carried out. In Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546, the defendant’s book, recording the sale, was produced from the custody of the book-keeper who had made the entry for one of the firm; though in this case a letter from the firm to the plaintiffs was taken in connection with such record to complete the memorandum. In these cases the written admissions of the defendant furnished strong proof of the sale. Nor could it be strictly said that one’s private and secret papers were drawn out of his possession to establish a case against him.

<sup>2</sup> Taylor, J., in Wiener v. Whipple, 53 Wis. 298; Holmes v. Mitchell, 7 C. B. N. S. 361; Benj. Sales, 3d ed. §§ 209, 212.

<sup>3</sup> Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

act be subsequently ratified.<sup>1</sup> The authority may be specially conferred, but it is also deducible from the course of the agent's employment; and the latter method is especially marked in the case of brokers and auctioneers. If there be two sellers, the agent must be agent of both, or neither will be bound; and the same may be said of buyers.<sup>2</sup>

A memorandum may thus be signed by or on behalf of both seller and buyer. And though a person should sign in his own name, yet, if he is mutually understood to sign as agent for one of the contracting parties, the signature takes binding effect accordingly.<sup>3</sup> And indeed one who was an "agent duly authorized" might sign the memorandum in his individual name on behalf of his undisclosed principal, so as to bind or benefit the latter.<sup>4</sup>

§ 501. The Same Subject; Implied Agency for such Purposes.—One whose employment is essentially on behalf of the seller will not readily be supposed to have authority to bind the buyer likewise by a written memorandum. Thus, where a person, employed as traveller or agent to solicit business, made a bargain with a certain party, and, at the latter's request, signed a memorandum on the buyer's book, it was held that the memorandum could not be used against the buyer.<sup>5</sup> The evidence of agency for the buyer has been deemed insufficient, even though the seller's traveller wrote the order in duplicate, handing one copy to the buyer, and keeping the other; there being on the buyer's part no recognition of the traveller as his agent.<sup>6</sup> "I think that it is extremely important," says Pollock, B., "in all those cases <sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 267; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Browne Stat. Frauds, §§ 367-370; Newton v. Bronson, 3 Kern. 587; Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. 102; Hunter v. Giddings, 97 Mass. 41; 101 Mass. 449; Salmon Falls Man. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446.

<sup>2</sup> Smith v. Neefus, 53 Barb. 63.

<sup>3</sup> Wiener v. Whipple, 53 Wis. 298. Here the seller signed a memorandum, made in his own memorandum-book, while the buyer's agent signed in his own name; and it was held that both parties were bound. Doubtless, however, the usual and preferable course is for the agent to sign as such for the party he represents.

<sup>4</sup> Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray, 387.

<sup>5</sup> Graham v. Fretwell, 3 M. & Gr. 368; Graham v. Musson, 5 Bing. N. C. 603.

<sup>6</sup> Murphy v. Boese, L. R. 10 Ex. 126 (1875). But cf. Durrell v. Evans, 1 H. & C. 174.

in which it is attempted to prove an implied agency, or that there is evidence from which an agency may be inferred, to take into account the character of the parties and their usual course of dealing. The act requires that the note of the bargain should be signed by an agent of the party to be charged. At first sight it would seem odd, that, where two contracting parties meet together, that one who is in a position somewhat adverse to the other should be his representative and agent. But no doubt such a thing may happen."<sup>1</sup>

But the authority of an agent under the statute, as it need not appear in writing at all, is a matter of evidence, and may be established upon oral proof. Of its sufficiency a jury may be permitted to judge. Auctioneers and brokers, we shall presently see, are quite frequently empowered to bind both parties by a memorandum; and so may it be with others. In Durrell v. Evans it was decided upon appeal, reversing the decision of the lower court, that there was evidence to go to the jury of authority in the seller's factor to bind the buyer by a certain memorandum made at the time of sale, the buyer appearing to have shared in its preparation; though the case was a close one, as the conflicting opinions show. The factor, in whose presence the bargain was concluded by both parties, had given a "bought" memorandum to the buyer, tearing it from his book, and made a corresponding "sold" entry on the stub of the book.<sup>2</sup>

As between the seller's agent and the seller, or the buyer's agent and the buyer, the authority which is given to make a contract of sale usually carries with it an authority to sign the statute memorandum for that purpose; and, after the agent has signed the memorandum in such a case, the principal cannot withdraw; though there might be exceptions where the agent's authority in this respect had been meanwhile revoked by his principal, and notice thereof brought home to the other party.<sup>3</sup> But the extent of the agent's

<sup>1</sup> Pollock, B., in Murphy v. Boese,
supra.

1 H. & C. 174. But cf. Murphy v. Boese, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Durrell v. Evans, 6 H. & N. 660;

<sup>3</sup> See Heyman v. Neale, 2 Camp. 337; Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray, 387.

powers in making the sale — as being limited or general — is often material to the issue;<sup>1</sup> and, if a seller gives a special or personal authority to one to be his agent, that agent (though he be an auctioneer or broker) cannot delegate the authority, so as to empower his sub-agent to bind the seller by making the memorandum.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, as the authority of an agent to sign the memorandum may be proved by parol, so the original authority to buy or sell need not be expressed in writing.<sup>3</sup> These are general principles of the law of agency, which the language of the Statute of Frauds does not contradict. So, too, is it a familiar doctrine of agency, that the subsequent adoption of an unauthorized act is as good as a previous authority.<sup>4</sup>

§ 502. The Same Subject; whether Agent signs as such, etc. — When the signature required by the statute is not placed upon the memorandum by the party himself against whom the contract is sought to be enforced, but a third party's writing is offered in its place, we are to ask, not only whether the third party was lawfully authorized, but whether he signed in the capacity of agent; for if the signature thus made was only as a witness to the writing, or to evidence a bargain made on his personal account, it will not answer.<sup>5</sup> The agent may, however, not only express the principal's name, but may write his own name instead, for the purpose of binding the principal; parol evidence being always competent to show, when buyer or seller is sued, in what capacity the third party intended to sign.<sup>6</sup> A signature made by an authorized agent is as valid, (if intended as such,) whether

<sup>1</sup> See Pitts v. Beckett, 13 M. & W. 743; Henderson v. Barnewall, 1 Y. & J. 387; Browne Stat. Frauds, § 370; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436.

<sup>2</sup> Henderson v. Barnewall, 1 Y. & J. 387; Pierce v. Corf, L. R. 9 Q. B. 210, per Blackburn, J.

<sup>3</sup> Soames v. Spencer, 1 D. & R. 32; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. 102.

<sup>4</sup> Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722;

Newton v. Bronson, 3 Kern. 587; § 500.

<sup>5</sup> Gosbell v. Archer, 2 Ad. & E. 500; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Noakes v. Morey, 30 Ind. 103.

<sup>6</sup> Trueman v. Loder, 11 Ad. & E. 589; Soames v. Spencer, 1 D. & R. 32; Kenworthy v. Schofield, 2 B. & C. 945; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 474; Williams v. Bacon, 2 Gray, 387; Story Sales, § 267; Baldwin v. Bank of Newbury, 1 Wall. 234; 53 Wis. 298.

its position be at the head or at the foot or in the body of the memorandum, and whether written in lead pencil or ink; as would be that of the principal party himself.<sup>1</sup>

§ 503. The Same Subject; Rule applied to Telegrams, etc.— With regard to telegraphic despatches, which have so lately revolutionized business, it would appear that the telegraph clerk or operator may sign the name of the sender of the message, with the same effect, in respect to taking the contract out of the statute, as a signature by any other lawfully authorized agent of the sender; and if, as is customary, the sender leaves his own draft message at the telegraph-office, all the more manifestly is there a sufficient memorandum.<sup>2</sup>

§ 504. Agent cannot be the Charging Party himself, etc.— But the agent of the party to be charged cannot be the charging party himself for the purposes of the statute, but is necessarily some third person; and where the plaintiff had made a memorandum of the bargain in writing, the defendant looking over him as he wrote, and suggesting an alteration of figures, it was held that the plaintiff could not be treated as the defendant's agent.<sup>3</sup> There might be great abuse if, in ordinary private sales, one party or his private clerk or agent, could be set up as authorized to bind the other. So, too, the memorandum of one who signed as agent for an undisclosed principal, — there being, in point of fact, no principal in the transaction, — was not permitted to enforce the bargain upon this writing.<sup>4</sup> An agent who has contracted in his own name will not be permitted to contradict the writing for the purpose of showing that he meant to bind his

<sup>1</sup> Merritt v. Clason, 12 Johns. 102; supra, §§ 497, 498. "Subscribed," as we have seen, is the requirement of some statutes. § 497.

<sup>2</sup> Godwin v. Francis, L. R. 5 C. P. 295; Trevor v. Wood, 36 N. Y. 307; Olson v. Sharpless, 53 Minn. 91.

<sup>3</sup> Wright v. Dannah, 2 Camp. 203; Farebrother v. Simmons, 5 B. & A. 333; Sharman v. Brandt, L. R. 6 Q. B. 720.

<sup>4</sup> Sharman v. Brandt, supra. Where an agent signs in his own name with-

cut mentioning his principal, it is not competent for him to introduce parol proof to show that he did not intend thus to bind himself, because this would be to contradict what he had written; but it is competent for the other party to show that the contract was really made with the principal, who had chosen to describe himself by the name of his agent, just as it would be admissible to show his identity if he had used a feigned name. Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 238.

principal, and not himself. No doubt it may be shown that one or both of the contracting parties acted on behalf of others, so as to give the benefit of the contract, on the one hand, to unnamed principals, or charge them, on the other hand, under the Statute of Frauds.<sup>1</sup> "It does not deny," says Parke, B., "that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind; but shows that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement, in pursuance of his authority, is in law the act of the principal." "But, on the other hand," he adds, "to allow evidence to be given, that the party who appears on the face of the instrument to be personally a contracting party, is not such, would be to allow parol evidence to contradict the written agreement, which cannot be done."<sup>2</sup> A memorandum which is drawn up by a third party in terms essentially different from what the principal parties authorized him to state cannot be afterwards used against a party who does not adopt the modifications;<sup>3</sup> and one who signs a memorandum, either as agent for a non-existing principal, or nominally on behalf of one who never authorized him to act, will be personally bound.<sup>4</sup>

§ 505. Auctioneers and Brokers may make a Memorandum binding both Parties.—Written compliance with the statute by means of agents is most commonly afforded by auctioneers and brokers,—two classes of persons whose ordinary employment places them in such reciprocal connection with buyer and seller as to enable them constantly to make a memorandum of sale which shall be efficacious on either side; and such persons are accordingly favored as in a sense disinterested and publicly trusted.

§ 506. Auctioneer's Memorandum considered.—An auctioneer's authority to bind the buyer as well as the seller is founded in the method of conducting a public sale: namely, by knocking down the article to the highest bidder, and

<sup>1</sup> See § 500.

<sup>3</sup> Pitts v. Beckett, 13 M. & W. 743.

<sup>2</sup> Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834.

And see Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen, 477; Wiener v. Whipple, 53 Wis. 298.

<sup>4</sup> See Kelner v. Baxter, L. R. 2 C. P. 174; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 6, § 2.

making a memorandum on the spot.<sup>1</sup> But it is only when the hammer falls that he becomes agent for the buyer; up to which time he continued the agent of the seller exclusively. Nor does his agency to sign for the buyer extend beyond the time of the sale; and, unless he made a good and sufficient memorandum on that occasion, he cannot hold the buyer without the latter's distinct authority for making a subsequent writing. In fact, while he is the seller's agent throughout, by virtue of his employment, he is the buyer's only for a memorandum made contemporaneous with the acceptance of his bid.<sup>2</sup> So, too, may the auctioneer's conduct be such as to repel the inference that the transaction made him the buyer's agent for satisfying the statute; as where the auctioneer makes a private sale of the articles, or puts them up at auction for settling the price at which the purchaser is to take them under a bargain already made.<sup>3</sup> The memorandum may be made on the spot by the auctioneer's clerk, as well as by the auctioneer personally,<sup>4</sup> unless the circumstances of the case forbid it.<sup>5</sup> The statutes of some States, we may add, expressly provide that the auctioneer's memorandum-book shall be deemed a note of the contract of sale;<sup>6</sup> and further require that such a book be kept.<sup>7</sup>

In pursuance of this rule, it has been held that where an

<sup>1</sup> Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558; Emmerson v. Heelis, 2 Taunt. 38; c. 18 post, auction sales; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Johnson v. Buck, 6 Vroom, 338; Burke v. Haley, 2 Gilm. 614.

<sup>2</sup> Mews v. Carr, 1 H. & N. 484, per Pollock, C. B.; Horton v. McCarty, 53 Me. 394; 52 Wis. 113.

<sup>3</sup> Mews v. Carr, 1 H. & N. 484; Bartlett v. Purnell, 4 Ad. & E. 792.

<sup>4</sup> Bird v. Boulter, 4 B. & A. 443; Cathcart v. Keirnaghan, 5 Strobh. 129; Alna v. Plummer, 4 Me. 258; Johnson v. Buck, 6 Vroom, 338; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653.

<sup>5</sup> Peirce v. Corf, L. R. 9 Q. B. 210. And see Henderson v. Barnewall, 1

Y. & J. 387. Where the purchaser delays and finally refuses to sign a memorandum of sale, the auctioneer's memorandum may sufficiently bind him to specific performance. Sims v. Landray [1894], 2 Ch. 318.

<sup>6</sup> See statutes of New York, California, Michigan, and Wisconsin; Browne Stat. Frauds, 3d ed. appx.

<sup>7</sup> Such statutes are not complied with, by making entry on a piece of paper, and afterwards transferring to the book; a questionable practice, in any case, if the piece of paper, which is the essential memorandum, be destroyed. See 12 Wend. 548; 1 Cal. 415.

auctioneer or his clerk enters in a suitable auction-sale book, as fast as the bids are accepted, the article sold, the name of the buyer, and the prices at which he purchases, the memorandum satisfies the statute, and renders the contract of sale enforceable against the bidder.<sup>1</sup> But an auction sale upon conditions, or essential stipulations, requires a memorandum stating those conditions or stipulations, or else referring distinctly to the paper which contains them; and where an auctioneer at a sale of horses sold a horse subject to conditions set forth in the catalogue, and neither affixed the catalogue nor expressed the conditions, nor made reference thereto, in entering the note of sale upon his sales ledger, it was held that the buyer could take advantage of the Statute of Frauds, as there was no sufficient written memorandum of the sale.<sup>2</sup>

The theory upon which the auctioneer's sale memorandum is accepted as a satisfaction of the statute appears to be, that the entry was part of the auction transaction, and the memorandum so openly made in the usual course of business, that the bidder, if not actually inspecting the record, might have done so. Stealthy entries made by an auctioneer or his clerk, entirely apart from the buyer and upon a strictly private book, are not so obviously the memorandum of the buyer's duly authorized agent, in any just sense.<sup>3</sup>

§ 507. Broker's Memorandum considered; Broker's Book; "Bought and Sold Notes," etc.—The occupation of brokers has not been quite so distinctly defined in this respect as that of auctioneers. But a broker is one who negotiates mercantile and other contracts between parties; and, properly speaking, he is a mere negotiator in a certain line of transactions, though sometimes in the special employ of one party. Brokers, so far as their business brings them into mutual relation with buyer and seller, are agents for both parties,

<sup>1</sup> See Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 553.

<sup>2</sup> Peirce v. Corf, L. R. 9 Q. B. 210. And see Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 558; Kenworthy v. Schofield, 7 East, 558; Norris v. Blair, 39 Ind. 90; Mor- ton v. Dean, 13 Met. 385; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 526.

<sup>3</sup> See Blackburn, J., in Peirce v. Corf, supra. See, further, Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467; sales at auction, post, c. 18.

duly empowered by virtue of their employment to make a sufficient memorandum which shall bind each principal.<sup>1</sup>

But there are cases in which a broker has been treated as broker for one party, and not for the other, and with his authority to sign limited accordingly;<sup>2</sup> and, in some respects, local usage must still influence the extent of their rights and liabilities. Thus, brokers in most parts of the United States keep a memorandum-book, and make entries of each sale transaction therein, using brief expressions; and these entries, however concise, if not at material variance with the oral contract, nor making material omissions, are quite favorably regarded.<sup>3</sup> In England, however, until 1870, there were statutes, particularly with reference to brokers in London, which required each broker not only to give bond and keep a memorandum-book, but to deliver, upon request, a contract note to both buyer and seller; and upon rules and regulations, thus made imperative, have most of the decisions in that country turned.<sup>4</sup> As between these contract notes, and the memorandum-book kept by the broker for evincing a contract under the statute, there has been much difference of opinion at different periods in the English courts; and in the same connection have arisen numerous disputes as to the legal effect of "bought and sold notes," with which the contract notes may or may not be properly classed, but which, at all events, were of various kinds, and, instead of profess-v. Spooner, 13 Allen, 353; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484. A broker's memorandum of a contract of sale binds both parties to the transaction, although expressed as "sold," &c., after the tenor of a sold note, and using no such corresponding word as "bought." In other words, if a broker's memorandum expresses that the thing has been "sold" by the one party, it imports that it was "bought" by the other. Butler v. Thomson, 92 U. S. 412. See Newberry v. Wall, 65 N. Y. 484; 84 N. Y. 576.

<sup>1</sup> See Bigelow, C. J., in Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 442; Story Agency, § 28; Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Brett, J., in Fowler v. Hollins, L. R. 7 Q. B. 616; Heyman v. Neale, 2 Camp. 337; Hinckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362; Clason v. Bailey, 14 Johns. 484. As to memoranda describing the seller by a fictitious name, see Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481.

<sup>2</sup> Moore v. Campbell, 10 Ex. 323; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. 341; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436; M'Mullen v. Helberg, 4 L. R. Ir. 94.

<sup>3</sup> See Story Sales, § 267; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 436; Hinckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362; Boardman

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8; Blackb. Sales, 98.

ing to be an exact transcript of the broker's memorandum, were rather corresponding written expressions of the bargain, in most cases, to suit the convenience of the respective parties, one beginning "Bought," and the other "Sold."<sup>1</sup> The real terms of the bargain were manifest, if the bought and sold notes or contract notes and broker's memorandum all corresponded; but where the notes differed essentially from one another, or from the memorandum, the legal effect of the variance occasioned much controversy.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Benjamin submits the following propositions as deducible, on the whole, from the English authorities; admitting, however, that some of the points are not finally settled. Firstly. The broker's signed entry in his book constitutes the contract between the parties, and is binding on both. Heyman v. Neale, 2 Camp. 337; Thornton v. Charles, 9 M. & W. 802; Sievevright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 115. Secondly. The bought and sold notes do not constitute the contract. Thornton v. Charles, and Sievevright v. Archibald, supra. Thirdly. But the bought and sold notes, when they correspond and state all the terms of the bargain, are complete and sufficient evidence to satisfy the statute, even though there be no entry in the broker's book, or, what is equivalent, only an unsigned entry. Sievevright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 115. Fourthly. Either the bought or sold note alone will satisfy the statute, provided no variance be shown between it and the other note, or between it and the signed entry in the book. Parton v. Crofts, 16 C. B. n. s. 11. And see Thompson v. Gardiner, 1 C. P. D. 777. Fifthly. Where one note only is offered in evidence, the defendant has the right to offer the other note or the signed entry in the book to prove a variance. Hawes v. Forster, 1 Moo. & Rob. 368; Parton v. Crofts, supra. Sixthly. As to variance: This may occur between the bought and sold notes where there is a signed entry, or where there is none. It may also occur when the bought and sold notes correspond, but the signed entry differs from them. If there be a signed entry, this entry will, in general, control the case, because it constitutes the contract of which the bought and sold notes are merely secondary evidence, and any variance between them could not affect the validity of the original written bargain. If, however, the bought and sold notes correspond, but there be a variance between them taken collectively and the entry in the book, it becomes a question of fact for the jury, whether the acceptance by the parties of the bought and sold notes constitutes evidence of a new contract modifying that which was entered in the book. Thornton v. Charles, 9 M. & W. 802, explaining Hawes v. Forster, supra; Sievevright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 115. And see first proposition stated, supra. Seventhly. If the bargain is made by correspondence, and there is a variance between the agreement thus concluded and the bought and sold notes, the principles are the same as govern variance between a signed entry and the bought and sold notes. Heyworth v. Knight, 17 C. B. n. s. 298. Eighthly. If the bought and sold notes vary, and there is no signed entry in the broker's book, nor other writing showing the terms of the bargain, there is no valid contract. Thornton v. Kempster, 5 Taunt. 786; Gregson

The practice of giving bought and sold notes does not seem to greatly prevail in this country ; and as the means of evincing a bargain in writing under the statute, apart from a broker's memorandum, or some other writing which speaks for itself and satisfies all requirements, it thus far receives with us little favor.<sup>1</sup> But whether it be for the want of a proven contract, or of some sufficient memorandum thereof, bought and sold notes which differ materially are quite unavailable ; and certainly, the fewer the writings which serve as memorandum evidence of a bargain, the less likely is the oral contract to fail of enforcement because of their material discrepancies.<sup>2</sup> Duplicates of the broker's memorandum, which are exact copies, are preferable in such a connection.<sup>3</sup> And we should constantly bear in mind, that the broker's agency to make the particular sale, or to make the memorandum as agent, may be challenged by the party against whom enforcement is sought.<sup>4</sup>

v. Rucks, 4 Q. B. 747 ; Sievwright v. Archibald, supra. Ninthly. If a sale be made by a broker on credit, and the name of the purchaser has not been previously communicated to the seller, evidence of usage is admissible to show that the seller is not finally bound to the bargain until he has had a reasonable time, after receiving the sold note, to inquire into the sufficiency of the purchaser, and to withdraw if he disapproves. Hodgson v. Davies, 2 Camp. 531 ; Cropper v. Cook, L. R. 3 C. P. 194. And Mr. Benjamin adds, that a mere difference in the language of the bought and sold notes will constitute no variance, if the meaning, aided by evidence of mercantile usage, can be shown to be the same, and the two instruments are found to correspond in substance. Benj. Sales, bk. 1, pt. 2, c. 8 ; Bold v. Rayner, 1 M. & W. 342 ; Kempson v. Boyle, 3 H. & C. 763. And see Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722 ; Radford v. Newell, L. R. 3 C. P. 52.

<sup>1</sup> See Coddington v. Goddard, 16

Gray, 436 ; Butler v. Thomson, 11 Blatch. 533 ; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. 341.

<sup>2</sup> Suydam v. Clark, 2 Sandf. 133.

<sup>3</sup> Butler v. Thomson, 92 U. S. 412, favors the idea that upon a broker's memorandum, whether as a "sold" or a "bought" note in form, either party may be sued, so long as the memorandum expresses the essential terms, and the broker was the agent of both parties in the sale. This, in effect, discountenances the supposed sanction of New York courts to the giving of a "bought" and "sold" note by the broker to the respective parties in such a sense that the seller would be obliged to sue on one note and the buyer on the other. See Newberry v. Wall, 65 N. Y. 484 ; 84 N. Y. 576. A broker's note delivered in duplicate to both parties makes a valid contract of sale within the Statute of Frauds, as the latest New York decisions maintain. Newberry v. Wall, 84 N. Y. 576. And see Remick v. Sandford, 118 Mass. 107.

<sup>4</sup> It might be that the broker was

§ 508. The Same Subject; Broker contracting without a Principal.—Where a broker purchased hemp for B., signing as broker a contract note as follows: “Bought for B. of our principals 200 tons of hemp;” and it appeared that the broker had no principal (of which fact B., however, was not informed), it was held that the broker could not sue B. upon such a written memorandum, either because (1) the contract was not intentionally made with the broker as a principal party, or because (2) the broker, if one of the contracting parties, could not sign as the binding agent of B., the other party.<sup>1</sup>

§ 509. Sales as affected by 4th Section of the Statute of Frauds; Collateral Undertaking.—Before leaving this subject of the Statute of Frauds, we may observe that while sales of personal property are peculiarly affected by the 17th section, to which our attention has been confined, they sometimes fall within other provisions of the act. The 4th section brings certain other cases of contract, which at common law could be validly made by oral agreement, under a like requirement as concerns a memorandum to be “in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorized.”<sup>2</sup>

Among the cases therein enumerated are those of a collateral undertaking by one party for another. Precedents of written memoranda under the 4th section, though sometimes adduced under the 17th, are unsafe to go by; for, as we have shown, the courts incline to distinguish between the written memorandum of an “agreement” and that of a “bargain.”<sup>3</sup> But a sale case will sometimes involve the construction of the 4th section. Thus, where F. sold goods on credit to H., who soon after sold the same goods with others regarded merely as the sole agent of the seller, or of the buyer, or as unconcerned in the sale at all, where he had indulged in making the note on his book. Conflicting evidence on such a point of authority may go to the jury. 118 Mass. 107.

<sup>1</sup> Sharman v. Brandt, L. R. 6 Q. B.

(Ex. Ch.) 720. And as to a broker's personal right and liability in similar cases, see Humfrey v. Dale, 7 E. & B. 266; Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 127; Mollett v. Robinson, L. R. 5 C. P. 648; L. R. 7 C. P. 84.

<sup>2</sup> 29 Car. II. c. 23, § 4.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 204, 492.

to a third party, upon the understanding that the latter would in consideration of the sale pay the debt of H. to F., it was held that the sale was a good and sufficient consideration for the promise, that it was not such a collateral undertaking as the statute requires to be expressed in writing, and that F. might sue thereon in his own name.<sup>1</sup>

If any credit is given to the person to whom goods are delivered, the promise of another to pay for them is collateral and within the statute; otherwise, however, if the sole credit be given to the latter, while delivery is made to the former.<sup>2</sup>

§ 510. The Same Subject; Agreement not to be performed within a Year.—A warranty in a sale of young fruit-trees, to be planted in an orchard for the purpose of raising fruit for the market, that the trees are really harvest-apple trees, and that they will produce early harvest-apples, is construed to mean a present warranty that the trees are such as they are represented to be, and true articles of the kind, rather than a future warranty.<sup>3</sup> But if this were strictly a future warranty, the contract ought probably to be in writing, in compliance with the 4th section, should it appear that in the course of nature the trees would not yield the fruit within a year from the date of sale.<sup>4</sup>

The rule is, that at all events, if an executory promise be capable of entire performance within one year, it is not within the statute; and this doctrine has been invoked as to the sale of certain patent rights.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Flanagan v. Hutchinson, 47 Mo. 237. And see auction sales, infra, c. 18.

<sup>2</sup> Bugbee v. Kendrick, 130 Mass. 437.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, § 332.

<sup>4</sup> Gregory v. Underhill, 6 Lea, 207.

<sup>5</sup> See Blakeney v. Goode, 30 Ohio St. 350; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279. But cf. Packet Co. v. Stiles, 5 Wall. 580.

CHAPTER XII.

SELLER'S REMEDIES BY PERSONAL ACTION.

§ 511. Seller's Remedies for Buyer's Breach; Subject classified.—When a contract of sale is broken by either party, the question becomes, as to the other, one of remedy. Let us, for the present, consider the seller's remedies in case of the buyer's breach; reserving the buyer's remedies under the reverse state of things for a future chapter. The seller's remedies may be of two kinds: I. By personal action against the buyer. II. By proceedings against the goods.

§ 512. Personal Action to be here considered.—I. The present chapter relates to personal actions against the buyer. And here, as elsewhere, in dealing with remedies, it is important to distinguish between cases (1st) where the property transfer has not fully taken place, and (2d) where such transfer has fully taken place.

§ 513. Personal Action for Damages where Property has not been fully transferred.—(1st.) Where the property transfer has not fully taken place, and the property and possession of the goods remain still in the seller, so that he can suffer no loss of identical subject-matter, his remedy becomes reduced to a question of damage sustained in consequence of the buyer's delinquency.<sup>1</sup> For though, theoretically speaking, equity might perhaps be invoked to enforce specific performance of the contract, this course seems never to be taken by a seller in practice; and most probably because damages at law will usually afford him an adequate compensation.<sup>2</sup> The damage which the seller actually sustains under these circumstances, and that for which the law will compensate him, is, in general, the difference between the contract price and the market price of the goods at the time and place of breach and rightful fulfilment; for since the seller may at once sell the goods to another and get the current price, if he does not elect to keep them to himself, this measures his real loss on the broken contract with substantial accuracy. The rule is constantly applied in the courts of Great Britain and the United States.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 1; Story Sales, §§ 433, 438.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent, 487; Kindersley, V. C., in Falcke v. Gray, 4 Drew. 658.

This cause of action is based naturally upon the buyer's prevention of a complete performance of the sale contract. But so long as this prevention applies, and the seller's property in the goods has not been diverted, the actual physical completeness of the goods suits best this rule of damages, whose main object is simply to indemnify the injured party.

§ 514. The Same Subject; General Rule as to Damages.—The fundamental principle here involved is, as in all analogous cases where damages are to be computed, that the injured party shall be indemnified for whatever loss follows immediately and necessarily as the consequence of the delinquent party's misconduct, according to the spirit and intent of the contract; no more and no less. To apply the principle with exact uniformity would be impossible. "I think," says Cockburn, C. J., "that the nearest approach to anything like a fixed rule is this: That to entitle a person to damages by reason of a breach of contract, the injury for which compensation is asked should be one that may be fairly taken to have been contemplated by the parties as the possible result of the breach of contract."<sup>2</sup> Hence is it that the seller's damages for non-acceptance of the goods and non-payment of price may embrace additional items. Thus, the reasonable cost and charges incidental to resell-

<sup>1</sup> Barrow v. Arnand, 8 Q. B. 604; Story Sales, §§ 314, 435, 436; Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341; Hobbs v. London, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 111; Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 294; McNaught v. Dodson, 49 Ill. 446; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Allen v. Jarvis, 20 Conn. 38; Bement v. Smith, 15 Wend. 493; Chapman v. Ingram, 30 Wis. 290; Northrup v. Cook, 39 Mo. 202; Fell v. Muller, 78 Ind. 507; 50 Ind. 303; Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411; Williams v. Jones, 1 Bush, 621.

<sup>2</sup> Hobbs v. London, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 111.

ing in the market should always be reimbursed as part of the seller's damages.<sup>1</sup> So should the charges and costs which properly accompanied the seller's demand for his price under the original bargain; likewise damages by way of interest for delay in obtaining his dues.<sup>2</sup>

The manufacture of goods to order, too, may involve the seller in special losses as a direct consequence of the buyer's refusal to abide by the contract. Where, for instance, one had contracted for a large quantity of leather hose of a certain pattern and for a special purpose, and refused to take it, the manufacturer was permitted to show, for the purpose of computing damages, that he had on hand a large amount of leather cut to the exact size required by the contract; that there was no sale in the market for such hose; and that consequently, on the buyer's refusal to take it, he was compelled to cut it down to a smaller size which could be sold, and that this involved a large loss of leather, as well as labor.<sup>3</sup> And, in general, one who is prevented by the ordering party's fault from finishing what he is supplying to order, should be allowed such damages as will place him where he would have been had he been allowed to complete the contract;<sup>4</sup> or, in other words, give him the probable profits of his undertaking.

§ 515. The Same Subject; ceasing to supply after Contract is broken.—Where the buyer gives distinct notice to one who is manufacturing or supplying articles according to contract that he will receive no more, and countermands the bargain, the other party may treat the contract as rescinded concerning that portion which still remains undelivered: he need not go on making and supplying. Nor, indeed, would it be prudent to thus increase the hazard of expense to the buyer, without benefiting himself. For subsequent damages he would be properly entitled to the difference between the agreed price and the estimated cost

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 436.

<sup>2</sup> See Okey, J., in Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236.

<sup>3</sup> Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall, 726.

<sup>4</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 1; Cort v. Ambergate R. R. Co., 17 Q. B. 127; Frost v. Knight, L. R. 5 Ex. 322; L. R. 7 Ex. 111.

to procure and deliver at the times and places agreed upon.<sup>1</sup> He cannot safely go on making or procuring the articles, and then recover for loss sustained by their exposure to injury.<sup>2</sup>

Where one orders something made or procured, and then countermands the order in advance, breaking his engagement, the manufacturer or dealer may sue at once without making or tendering the thing, and recover damages accordingly.<sup>3</sup> In so simple a case any stipulated time of credit is immaterial. But whether a period fixed for credit, under successive deliveries, can be disregarded upon refusal of the residue is another question.<sup>4</sup>

516. The Same Subject; Duty as to disposing of Goods refused by the Buyer.—The seller is sometimes said to be the agent or trustee of the buyer in disposing of the goods left on his hands complete or incomplete by the latter's breach of the bargain. Whether this be strictly true or no, the seller is certainly bound in all respects to act with reasonable prudence and diligence, and not recklessly; mindful of the buyer's interests so far as consists with the enforcement of his own rights, if the goods are worth anything.<sup>5</sup> If the buyer unreasonably refuse to accept goods which are quickly perishable, the seller ought not to allow them to be spoiled in his own hands, but should sell them quickly, so as to hold the buyer liable for the true difference between the price brought and the price agreed upon.<sup>6</sup> Here, as elsewhere, timely notice to the buyer of his intended acts at every step is fair and judicious, and fixes the defaulting the proper profits under the contract. Eckenrode v. Chemical Co., 55 Md. 51.

<sup>1</sup> Cort v. Ambergate R. R. Co., 17 Q. B. 127; Clement, &c. Man. Co. v. Meserole, 107 Mass. 362; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Bartholomew v. Marwick, 15 C. B. N. s. 711; Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257. And see supra, § 285; 64 Fed. 569.

<sup>2</sup> Danforth v. Walker, supra.

<sup>3</sup> In such a case the measure of damages is the difference between the cost of making or procuring the thing and the contract price; i.e.

<sup>4</sup> See Wayne v. Merwood, 46 L. J. Q. B. 746.

<sup>5</sup> See New York rule, post, § 522.

<sup>6</sup> Story Sales, § 314; Danforth v. Walker, 40 Vt. 257; Brownlee v. Bolton, 44 Mich. 218; Ullmann v. Kent, 60 Ill. 271; and post, c. 13, as to re-sale.

party's liability more completely; though, in case of positive delinquency on the other side, not strictly requisite, especially if the emergency be pressing.<sup>1</sup>

Whether a purchase by the seller at his own sale of the thing would be void, or only at the buyer's instance voidable, is not clearly settled; but, in the absence of statutory direction, it would appear to be merely voidable in modern practice; nor will a technical breach in these respects be readily allowed to defeat the seller's substantial claim of indemnity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 517. The Same Subject; Standard of Damages, etc.—Where no price was definitely fixed, the usual market price becomes the standard in estimating damages under the rule, to which incidental expenses may be added as in other cases; and it would, of course, be unjust to require the seller to take less than this where no definite stipulation to that effect had been entered into.<sup>3</sup> The time to which reference is made for computing a market rate in estimating damages is the time when the goods were to have been delivered and received under the contract; not any earlier time at which the seller may have received notice of the buyer's intention to refuse them.<sup>4</sup> And as to the place for computing the market value, this is the place of agreed delivery and receipt; and the seller has no right to take the refused goods to another and distant market, sell them there at a loss, and then expect to recover the difference between the contract price and the proceeds of such sale,—not even with the deduction of his transportation charges.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 435, 436; Ullmann v. Kent, 60 Ill. 271. But see post, § 522. Where the purchaser is to name the place of delivery under the contract, it is enough for the seller, before suit, to offer to deliver; he stands in the position of readiness to perform, and consequently may sue. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549; supra, § 385.

<sup>2</sup> See post, § 522; c. 13, as to resale; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. 178; Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236.

<sup>3</sup> Althouse v. Alvord, 28 Wis. 577.

<sup>4</sup> Phillpotts v. Evans, 5 M. & W. 475; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 1; Boorman v. Nash, 9 B. & C. 145; Clement, &c. Man. Co. v. Meseroles, 107 Mass. 362; Brownlee v. Bolton, 44 Mich. 218.

<sup>5</sup> Chapman v. Ingram, 30 Wis. 290.

If there be no fixed market price for the article at the time and place of delivery, the seller may prove his actual damage in some other way.<sup>1</sup>

§ 518. Rule where Buyer dies or becomes Bankrupt or Insolvent before Delivery. — Where the buyer dies or becomes bankrupt or insolvent before delivery, the contract of sale is not necessarily rescinded; but his legal representatives have the right to adopt the bargain with its incidental advantages and disadvantages.<sup>2</sup> This will not, of course, prevent the seller from using the proper precautions to avoid parting with his property before the price is paid or secured; and it is held, that, if goods are deliverable by successive instalments, the assignee or trustee of a bankrupt buyer cannot adopt the contract so as to claim further deliveries without paying the price of what was delivered prior to the bankruptcy.<sup>3</sup>

The latest judicial inclination is, furthermore, in England, at least, to regard the buyer's notice of his insolvency as so far an abandonment or repudiation of the contract, that unless the assignee or trustee elects to complete the contract sale by paying cash within a reasonable time, the seller may prove against the bankrupt or insolvent estate for damages resulting from the breach.<sup>4</sup> But such is not the rule necessarily in this country: and some States maintain still that the buyer's insolvency does not necessarily amount to rescission or a breach of contract, but simply relieves the seller from credit stipulations, and entitles him to insist upon cash on delivery.<sup>5</sup>

§ 519. Miscellaneous Points as to Damages. — As the computation of damages is tested by the market value, the result would be the same whether the seller re-sold the goods, or

<sup>1</sup> McCormick v. Hamilton, 23 Gratt. 561; § 514.

<sup>2</sup> Boorman v. Nash, 9 B. & C. 145. Semble, the same privilege applies to a sub-purchaser from such buyer. Stapleton, Ex parte, 10 Ch. D. 586, 590.

<sup>3</sup> Chalmers, Ex parte, L. R. 8 Ch. 289; Mears v. Waples, 3 Houst. 581; 2 Low. 252; next c.

<sup>4</sup> Stapleton, Ex parte, 10 Ch. D. 586; Morgan v. Bain, L. R. 10 C. P. 15.

<sup>5</sup> Pardee v. Kanady, 100 N. Y. 121, 126; 91 N. Y. 153.

retained them, as he might do, at their market valuation; or, if he re-sold, whether the sale was by auction or by private sale, provided the sale were in good faith and sufficiently advantageous.<sup>1</sup> As to the right of thus selling over, it makes no essential difference whether the goods be of a perishable nature or not, since all market values of commodities are subject to sudden fluctuation and change: it is only that the responsibility of delaying is greater, on his part, where there must be of necessity a speedy depression in the market value of that which is on his hands.<sup>2</sup> In any case, the suit here brought is a special action for damages, and not an action upon a general count for goods sold and delivered.<sup>3</sup>

If the price was payable wholly or partly in other goods, the rule of damages and the seller's course of procedure must be adapted to the situation. It has been held, in a case where the seller agreed to take a certain commodity in payment, to be delivered at a specified time, and the buyer failed to deliver as agreed, that the buyer was liable to pay the highest market value of such commodity from the time of breach to the day of trial.<sup>4</sup> The foundation of such a rule is the impossibility of measuring the precise loss to the seller in absence of a standard; in which case the legal presumption is in favor of a maximum loss, and the buyer, who was alone to blame, takes the worst consequences of his delinquency.<sup>5</sup>

As to compelling a seller who is once absolved from performance by the buyer's delinquency, to make a subsequent delivery, the general rule is, that if such pressure was brought to bear upon the seller as would make the renewal of the contract void, as being obtained by duress, then there is no contract, and the buyer's proceeding is a tort for which

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 436.

<sup>2</sup> Ib., § 437.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.

<sup>4</sup> Brasher v. Davidson, 31 Tex. 190; Story Sales, § 445.

<sup>5</sup> See Cummings v. Dudley, 60 Cal. 383.

Where government establishes a suitable tribunal for the redress of private parties with whom it may contract, — as in case of the United States Court of Claims, — an action may be brought by a government contractor to recover damages for its refusal to receive and pay for what it has agreed to purchase. But the

he may be personally liable; but that, if the seller's consent is voluntary, then the contract to which he thus assents is binding, and must control the case; and that from whatever motive the seller may afterwards consent to renew the original agreement, and proceed to its fulfilment, its terms are the same.<sup>1</sup>

§ 520. Rule of Damages where the Goods are worth all or more than the Price; where they are Worthless, etc.—If the market value prove precisely the same as the contract price, the seller gets nominal damages only for the breach; and, if the market value be shown to considerably exceed the price, it is doubtful whether the buyer, who was foolish enough to break the contract, can interpose a claim for the excess; but if the article be of such a character, or the circumstances attending the case so peculiar, that the thing is absolutely worthless on the seller's hands, the seller will recover the whole price.<sup>2</sup> The seller ought to be put in statu quo as far as possible; and it may sometimes be for his advantage to elect to keep the chattel as his own on the buyer's default, bringing no suit at all under the contract, or suing on the basis of its present market value, and watching his chance for a later enhancement.<sup>3</sup>

§ 521. Special Exceptions to the Rule of computing at Market Value, etc.—Special cases may arise which exempt the seller from accounting for the market value of his goods in the computation of damages.<sup>4</sup> Several American decisions are in point; as in the case of stock which was worthless to the seller because already transferred.<sup>5</sup> The rule is thus government is not thereby rendered liable on an implied assumpsit for the torts of its officer, committed while in its service, though apparently for its benefit. Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 269.

<sup>1</sup> Miller, J., in Gibbons v. United States, supra.

<sup>2</sup> See Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 312; Allen v. Jarvis, 20 Conn. 38. See § 521.

<sup>3</sup> See post, § 522; 60 N. Y. 627.

<sup>4</sup> Dunlop v. Grote, 2 Car. & K. 153; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 1.

<sup>5</sup> Thompson v. Alger, 12 Met. 428. Cf. Rand v. White Mountains Railroad, 40 N. H. 79. And see Bement v. Smith, 15 Wend. 493; Ballentine v. Robinson, 46 Penn. St. 177; Story Sales, § 314; Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 383; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 312; Allen v. Jarvis, 20 Conn. 38. For the rule similarly applied in stock transactions where stock is tendered stated by Sargent, J., in Gordon v. Norris:<sup>1</sup> “In a large class of cases, . . . where the plaintiff has made surgical instruments of a particular kind, and according to order, for the defendant who had patented the same, and which would of course be worthless in the hands of the plaintiff, or where a tailor had made a suit of clothes to order, of a particular description, and for a particular measure, or a shoemaker had made boots or shoes to order, of a particular size and pattern, or the carriage-maker had made a carriage in the same way, of a particular style and pattern, or the artist has painted the portrait of an individual to order, or an engineer has constructed an engine according to order for a particular use, etc., though the mechanic or artist may sell the goods, if he choose, and recover of the defendant the difference between the contract price, and the price for which the article was sold, yet it is held that he may if he choose, when he has fully performed his part of the contract and tendered the article thus manufactured to the defendant, or offered it at the place appointed, recover the full value of the article, and leave the defendant to sell or use or dispose of the article at his pleasure; and for the reason, in addition to that already stated,<sup>2</sup> that the article thus manufactured for a particular person, or according to a particular pattern, or for a particular use, may be of comparatively little value to anybody else, or for any other use or purpose; but this class of cases are recognized as exceptions to the general rule, which is to be applied in the sale of ordinary goods or merchandise which have a fixed market value.”

To this lucid exposition it should be added, that other considerations operate in favor of this class of exceptions: such as the care and annoyance to which a seller is exposed who has the burden of either forcing into the market at once an article which requires time and special opportunity for disposal at a fair valuation, or else of watching and waiting for under the contract, see Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 53; Thorndike v. Locke, 98 Mass. 340.

<sup>1</sup> Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 383.

<sup>2</sup> Referring to the fact of its being rather a contract to make something to order than to supply goods already existing.

customers who may never appear; also the possible hope that the buyer may finally conclude to take what ought to be worth more to him than to any one else; and the likelihood, moreover, that the property is not of a character to perish or deteriorate meanwhile. The reason of the exception, on the whole, then, appears to be, the parties' mutual interest in averting the sacrifice of an article not in general market demand, and yet of much use to special individuals, on the one hand, and the injustice, on the other, of requiring the seller, rather than the delinquent buyer, to make an advantageous re-sale; and in this lies, we conceive, the proper limitation of the exception.<sup>1</sup> Wherever the article, in fact, has no ascertainable market value, such special circumstances permit of a recovery by the seller for the whole contract price, leaving the buyer to take or dispose of his own goods as he may.<sup>2</sup>

§ 522. Choice of Remedies for Breach in Local Practice.—But in New York the seller's privileges in case of the buyer's non-acceptance are more broadly announced; and his remedy to sue for and recover the whole contract price, leaving the buyer to sell the thing as he can, is put as available, not by way of exception, but as a general alternative. The seller, in any case, is thus given the choice between these three remedies: (1st.) To sell the thing on behalf of the purchaser upon notice, and recover the difference between the contract price and that realized on the sale. (2d.) To retain the thing as his own, and recover the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time and place of delivery. (3d.) To hold the property for the purchaser, and recover of fulfilling the contract on his part. Ib.

<sup>1</sup> On this principle, the refusal of a buyer to accept a water-wheel manufactured to order, was held to justify the manufacturer in suing for the full contract price, in Bookwalter v. Clark, 10 Fed. Rep. 793. In such a case, observed the court, it seems more just and equitable that the loss and inconvenience of having such a cumbrous article left on hand for sale should fall upon the party who is in fault in

<sup>2</sup> Nor do the latest cases incline to debar the seller from recovering his full contract price, where the goods thus left on his hands accidentally perish, while he took good care of them, and the buyer remained in default. Central Co. v. Moore, 75 Wis. 170.

him the entire purchase-money.<sup>1</sup> If he elects this last remedy, he holds the property as a sort of trustee for the defaulting buyer,<sup>2</sup> but apparently with very little obligation to regard such buyer's interest;<sup>3</sup> and we may well suppose, not only that he is obliged to give it up upon receiving payment of the proper price afterwards, but likewise that he should do nothing towards obstructing the buyer in disposing of the thing to some third party under these untoward circumstances; for the law will not allow even the delinquent party to a contract to be recklessly exposed by the other to a loss greater than naturally results from the breach.

So, too, in certain other States, is the seller permitted to elect among at least two remedies in such cases: he may treat the thing as his own, and, if its market value at the time of the breach is less than the contract price, sue to recover the difference; or sell the thing and sue to recover the deficiency between the market price and that promised under the contract.<sup>4</sup>

§ 523. Rule under a Part Delivery.—The seller should not be allowed to gain instead of losing by the buyer's default; and if suit is brought upon a contract for the sale and delivery of goods, where only a portion of the goods have been delivered and part payment has been made, and the buyer

<sup>1</sup> Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72; Hayden v. Demets, 53 N. Y. 526; Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549. But the seller is put to his election, once and for all, between these remedies. Westfall v. Peacock, 63 Barb. 209. If he elects to retain (2d alternative) he may sell it later for all he can, and the profit will not affect his right of recovery. 60 N. Y. 627.

<sup>2</sup> See Church, C. J., in Hayden v. Demets, supra.

<sup>3</sup> To use the latest judicial expression, the seller thus "abandons" the property and treats it as the buyer's, suing the latter party; and even though the goods be perishable (hops, for instance), the seller is not bound to sell them on the buyer's account. Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549, per Finch, J.

As to computing damages as of time of default in such case, see 44 Mich. 218.

<sup>4</sup> Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236. See next c. as to re-sale. In Illinois he may hold the goods for the purchaser, at his election. Bagley v. Findlay, 82 Ill. 524. See also Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. 19; Rosenbaums v. Weeden, 18 Gratt. 785; Holland v. Rea, 48 Mich. 218; Cook v. Brandeis, 3 Met. (Ky.) 555; Bagley v. Findlay, 82 Ill. 524; Putnam v. Glidden, 159 Mass. 47. Where the seller elects to keep the thing for the defaulting purchaser and sue for the entire contract price, there is no implied contract on such purchaser's part to pay for the expense of its keep. 159 Mass. 47.

refuses to receive and accept the residue when tendered, the seller can recover only nominal damages, provided the undelivered portion exceeds in value the unfunded balance of the purchase price. But the delivery of a portion only of the goods agreed to be furnished under an entire contract may be so accepted and appropriated by the buyer for his own benefit, as to entitle the seller, where he is not at fault, to recover the reasonable worth of the goods delivered, not exceeding the contract price.<sup>1</sup>

One who delivers a portion only of a certain quantity of chattels agreed to be delivered in a certain time, is allowed, in modern practice, to recover the value of the amount delivered, accepted, and used for the buyer's benefit, subject to a recoupment of the damages occasioned by a failure to deliver the whole.<sup>2</sup>

§ 524. Rule of Liquidated Damages under an Agreement.—Parties concerned in a sale may agree in advance as to the amount of damages which shall be payable in case of a breach; in which case the damages are to be assessed in pursuance of the agreement, notwithstanding substantial damages may be thereby awarded where the law would have given merely a nominal sum.<sup>3</sup> But penal and liquidated damages under a contract are to be distinguished; and courts incline, in cases of doubt, to the former construction.<sup>4</sup>

§ 525. Personal Action for Price where Property has passed from Seller to Buyer.—(2d.) Where the transfer of property has fully taken place. In the event of an out-and-out transfer of title, which carries property right, full posses-

<sup>1</sup> Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452. See Christiancy, C. J., ib., as to the buyer's right to recoup his damages for breach of the contract in cases of part performance. And see Bartholomew v. Marwick, 15 C. B. N. S. 710; Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341. In Wayne's Steam Co. v. Morewood, 46 L. J. Q. B. 746, the buyer's interest was regarded, where, under a contract for part deliveries, the seller delivered inferior goods, and then sued before the expiration of the time of credit.

As to a buyer's right to recoup damages when sued, see further, c. 15, post.

<sup>2</sup> Flanders v. Putney, 58 N. H. 358.

<sup>3</sup> See Matthews v. Discount Corporation, L. R. 4 C. P. 228.

<sup>4</sup> See Jemison v. Gray, 29 Iowa, 537, 547.

sion, and possessory rights, to the buyer, the seller cannot sue in a special capacity, but is left in the position of a mere creditor. Nothing remains but for him to sue for his price; attaching, it may be, on mesne process or on execution, as the local practice may permit other creditors to do in actions of contract; taking his place with other creditors to obtain a dividend if the buyer goes into bankruptcy; but, at all events, with no better hold upon the goods he has sold than any other general creditor of the buyer. For the goods are now the buyer's, and part of his general assets; and rights and remedies go accordingly. And herein is seen the disadvantage of selling on credit, and knowingly parting with one's own goods before payment; taking the buyer's promise to pay in lieu of the cash. The seller, being thus driven to sue as for breach of a promise to pay, may recover in a personal action the price promised; to which would fairly be added interest, and the costs of suit, as the ordinary limit of damages.<sup>1</sup>

§ 526. But Rights under Security remain; Conditional Delivery, etc. — But such rights as the seller may possibly have reserved by taking security for the price are still available to him, though from this point he is viewed rather as a creditor than a seller; and furthermore, delivery upon a condition inconsistent with vesting full title in the buyer, so long as it remains unfulfilled, leaves the seller a hold and remedies in rem accordingly. The law of England and America, as we shall hereafter see, supplements the seller's lien by the right of stoppage in transitu; <sup>2</sup> but it does not, like the civil law, go to the extent of justifying the seller in suing, upon the buyer's default, as for rescission of the contract, where no such right had been expressly reserved.<sup>3</sup> The possession acquired by the buyer, which thus puts the seller to his personal action for breach, is a possession with the seller's

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 2; Martindale v. Smith, 1 Q. B. 395; Story Sales, §§ 236, 441. As to the proper counts in an action where the price was to be payable partly in money and partly in chattels, see Cummings v. Dudley, 60 Cal. 383.

<sup>2</sup> Infra, c. 14.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 2.

consent ; for, of course, wrongful possession, though peaceably acquired, before payment, cannot be set up to defeat the seller's remedies against the goods, but, on the contrary, gives him the choice to sue for the money, or bring trespass.<sup>1</sup>

§ 527. Form of Action for Goods sold and delivered.—Where the transfer to the delinquent buyer was completed, the seller sues for his price on the common counts for goods sold and delivered; not, as in the former case, specially for their non-acceptance.<sup>2</sup> But a special declaration is requisite, where payment was to be wholly or in part by bill or note ; and, where the buyer has given a bill in payment, the seller must, in absence of fraud, wait until it matures before suing for his price, and must account for the paper if dishonored.<sup>3</sup> So, where credit was given, he must wait until the time expires.<sup>4</sup> But where the buyer deals fraudulently, as by giving notice on a sale for credit partially executed that he will not carry it out, while retaining the goods sent, the seller is permitted to sue at once upon such a state of affairs.<sup>5</sup> In suing for the price of goods sold and delivered, the seller should prove delivery or a tender at the place agreed, and full performance on his part ; though he need not show acceptance by the buyer.<sup>6</sup> Under the strict common-law practice there can be no action brought as for goods sold and delivered, unless there has been an actual delivery of the goods, or what, in point of law, amounts to a delivery.<sup>7</sup>

§ 528. Action where Property has passed but not Possession ; Lien Advantages to be considered.—Of the seller's damages in

<sup>1</sup> Riley v. Wheeler, 42 Vt. 528 ; Noy Max. 87 ; Story Sales, §§ 430, 431.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 2 ; Story Sales, § 441.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 2 ; supra, § 420 ; Story Sales, §§ 442-444.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. ; Keller v. Strasburger, 23 Hun, 625.

<sup>5</sup> Bartholomew v. Marwick, 15 C. B. N. S. 711. Cf. Wayne's Steam Co. v. Morewood, 46 L. J. Q. B. 746. And see Chamberlin v. Perkins, 55

N. H. 237. So, too, if a security were furnished, there might, semble, be a right to enforce the security notwithstanding the credit, 21 Minn. 374 ; c. 16, post ; supra, § 526.

<sup>6</sup> Nichols v. Morse, 100 Mass. 523. And see McCormick v. Hamilton, 23 Gratt. 561 ; supra, § 523.

<sup>7</sup> Messer v. Woodman, 22 N. H. 172, and cases cited ; Simmons v. Swift, 5 B. & Cr. 857 ; Hart v. Tyler, 15 Pick. 171 ; 78 N. Y. 300 ; 7 R. L. 582.

the intermediate case, where the right of property with risks of ownership has passed to the buyer by the completion of the bargain, and yet the goods remain on the seller's hands with delivery of possession unsundered, the books make little or no special mention. Yet here the title to the goods has passed, not in its fullest, but only in a partial, sense. The proper count would here be that of goods bargained and sold; and the rule of damages appears not unlike that where goods are sold and delivered; namely, that the seller shall recover the contract price of the goods.<sup>1</sup> Once more, the giving of credit and time for payment must be duly regarded where the sale was not for cash;<sup>2</sup> though local practice acts may permit of special counts as for goods thus bargained and sold.<sup>3</sup>

But the lien advantages which the seller further enjoys under his continued possession in this intermediate case may be studied in the succeeding chapters.

CHAPTER XIII.

SELLER'S GENERAL REMEDIES AGAINST THE GOODS.

§ 529. Re-sale, Lien, and Stoppage in Transitu the Subjects for Consideration.—The last chapter, in setting forth the seller's remedies by personal action against the delinquent buyer, drew a distinction between those cases where the property transfer has been made and those where it has not. In pursuing this subject still further, with reference to the seller's remedies against the goods where the title has not passed out of him, we shall presently treat (1) of re-sale, (2) of lien, and (3) of stoppage in transitu.

<sup>1</sup> See Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 376, which discusses this subject; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 312; Thompson v. Alger, 12 Met. 428; Ballentine v. Robinson, 46 Penn. St. 177; Ganson v. Madigan, 13 Wis. 67; Orr v. Bigelow, 14 N. Y. 556; Turner v. Langdon, 112 Mass. 265; Doremus v. Howard, 23 N. J. L. 390. So in Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 1, § 2, the seller's damages are thus stated in general terms, "where the property has passed," without distinguishing between goods bargained and sold and goods sold and delivered. See c. 13, where the seller's remedies in rem are more fully discussed.

<sup>2</sup> Turner v. Langdon, 112 Mass. 265; Dellone v. Hall, 47 Md. 112; Keller v. Strasburger, 90 N. Y. 379.

<sup>3</sup> So much uncertainty attends the issue of a completed transfer of property in a chattel from seller to buyer, that it seems highly desirable, in local practice acts, to permit of suits by the seller for breach of the contract of sale, with alternative counts to meet either theory, whenever the buyer refuses to take the goods; damages being awarded, according to the circumstances, whether by way of contract price or indemnity. See Stearns v. Washburn, 7 Gray, 187; 112 Mass. 265.

§ 530. Unpaid Seller's Rights as Possessor where Property has passed.— But to speak first more generally of the unpaid seller's rights as possessor of goods whose property has passed out of him. We have perceived that as a full transfer of title involves the right of possession and actual possession, as well as the right of property,<sup>1</sup> so there may be an intermediate case where the seller has sold the thing so as to carry over the right of property to the buyer, and yet has not delivered possession. Now, it is with reference to this intermediate case—where, on the one hand, the seller is no more an owner with power to sell over to a new customer, and yet, on the other, keeps the goods in his possession, so as easily to balk the present customer of his full enjoyment—that the law of sales is in perplexity as to remedies. I have sold you a specific bale of cotton or a herd of cattle; and we admit that the loss falls upon you if the bale be burnt up or some of the cattle perish before you acquire custody, because you have the property therein. But, supposing you make default in payment before I part possession, must I sue for damages as my sole recourse for redress? Is it not hard, if, with the chattels still under my control, I cannot make them the means of indemnifying myself against loss upon your breach of contract? Here the common law by subtle contrivance manages to help the seller, who has substantial justice on his side. This contrivance is the recognition of a lien in the seller for his price, so long as he does not part with the goods; in aid of which comes the right of stoppage in transitu.

§ 531. Nature of the Lien Right here conceded to the Seller.— This lien right is efficacious for most practical purposes.

<sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 2, 3.

But, as the theory of a lien right is that the seller does not yet mean to surrender his possession, there come the questions : Does this lien right exist? Or has the seller any kind of a legal hold upon the goods still in possession? if he has once waived this right, and subsequent developments make it for his interest to withdraw the waiver, and insist upon maintaining his right in rem. Thus, if the sale above instanced were plainly on credit, instead of for cash on delivery, am I, as seller, without a legal remedy in rem, because of my waiver of a price down, notwithstanding I learn that the buyer has become insolvent before he has taken the bale of cotton or the herd of cattle out of my custody?

The main question is answered favorably to the unpaid seller; though, in practice, numerous difficulties will occur in applying a principle so obviously just. Bayley, J., in 1825, stated the seller's right as something more than a possessory lien. "The vendor's right in respect of his price," he says, "is not a mere lien which he will forfeit if he parts with the possession, but grows out of his original ownership and dominion. If goods are sold on credit, and nothing is agreed on as to the time of delivering the goods, the vendee is immediately entitled to the possession; and the right of possession and the right of property vest at once in him. But his right of possession is not absolute: it is liable to be defeated if he become insolvent before he obtains possession. If the seller has despatched the goods to the buyer, and insolvency occur, he has a right, in virtue of his original ownership, to stop them in transitu. Why? Because the property is vested in the buyer, so as to subject him to the risk of any accident; but he has not an indefeasible right to the possession, and his insolvency, without payment of the price, defeats that right."<sup>1</sup>

In later English cases, the seller's right of retention has been conceded, while the court inclined against regarding the case as one strictly of lien, but rather as something analogous to the seller's right of stoppage in transitu.<sup>1</sup> But Lord Campbell emphatically repudiated in the House of Lords any supposed analogy between this right and that of stoppage in transitu. "That doctrine," he says, "appears to me to have no more bearing on this case than the doctrine of contingent remainders;" and he proceeds to state, that, in his opinion, it was clearly the revival of the lien which entitled the vendor to exercise his right where the sale was made a waiver of lien, and the buyer afterwards proved insolvent.<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, it has been said that the seller's right to thus retain the goods for security is not properly a lien, but a special interest growing out of his original ownership, independent of the actual possession, and consistent with the property being in the buyer.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941; Bloxam v. Morley, 4 B. & C. 951.

§ 532. The Same Subject.—In this country, where the right is likewise admitted, the ground on which the rule rests has sometimes been stated still differently. Chief Justice Shaw was of the opinion that the waiver of a price lien is only a conditional one. To quote his own words: "The law in holding that a vendor, who has thus given credit for goods, waives his lien for the price, does so on one implied condition; which is, that the vendee shall keep his credit good."<sup>4</sup> But some other American courts appear to favor this right as analogous to stoppage in transitu.<sup>5</sup>

The principle, whatever be its origin and foundation, to which these and similar cases point, is, that, so long as the seller keeps actual possession of the goods, he may treat them as security for his price, and thus avert disaster from the buyer's bankruptcy or insolvency; any previous agreement to waive his usual lien being presumed to have contemplated a continued ability to pay, on the buyer's part, up to the time of receiving possession and a full title.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Crompton, J., in Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680.

<sup>2</sup> McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 2; Story Sales, § 290.

<sup>3</sup> Dodsley v. Varley, 12 Ad. & E. 632.

<sup>4</sup> Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33.

<sup>5</sup> White v. Welsh, 38 Penn. St. 396. And see Thompson v. Baltimore, &c. R. R. Co., 28 Md. 396; Southwestern Freight Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71; Clark v. Draper, 19 N. H. 419; Hull v. Hull, 48 Conn. 250.

<sup>6</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 287, 398;

§ 533. Lien Right as between Unpaid Seller and Insolvent Buyer. — The nature and extent of an unpaid seller's claim on the goods he holds, under the present circumstances, command special attention in the English courts. We may first view the controversy as between the unpaid seller and the bankrupt or insolvent buyer or his assignees, which is the simplest case. It was decided, as early as 1825, that the assignees of an insolvent buyer are not entitled to sue in trover the unpaid seller who has the goods still in his own warehouse, notwithstanding the sale was on credit.<sup>1</sup> In 1833, Miles v. Gorton affirmed the same rule as between the seller and the bankrupt buyer's assignees, although the seller kept the goods in his warehouse, by way of bailment, at the charge of the buyer.<sup>2</sup> A still stronger case was Townley v. Crump, decided in 1836, where the seller had actually given to the buyer an invoice describing the goods and a delivery order which stated distinctly, "We hold to your order" the property in question, rent free for two months. But, while giving this delivery order and invoice, the seller took in return the buyer's acceptance at three months, which became dishonored on maturity by reason of the buyer's insolvency: whereupon the seller, who was still warehouse-keeper, and had not parted with the goods, claimed the right to hold them for the buyer's default. The local trade usage was for the seller of goods in warehouse to hand a delivery-order to the buyer by way of delivering the goods. The court decided, that as between the original seller and buyer — no third party's rights having intervened — the former had not lost his hold upon the

Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 2. Where one sells land for cotton to be afterwards delivered, he has no lien on the land for performance. The non-delivery creates no debt, but only an injury sounding in damages which equity will not liquidate and then declare a lien to pay them. Harris v. Hanie, 37 Ark. 348. It is here observed (speaking more particularly of liens upon land) that a vendor's lien arises to secure the payment of purchase-money, but not to secure the performance of an act whose non-performance would make a claim for unliquidated damages.

<sup>1</sup> Bloxam v. Sanders, 4 B. & C. 941; Bloxam v. Morley, 4 B. & C. 951.

<sup>2</sup> Miles v. Gorton, 2 C. & M. 504; Townley v. Crump, 4 Ad. & E. 58; Grice v. Richardson, 3 App. Cas. 319.

goods by the mere fact of giving the latter a delivery-order while retaining the goods as custodian, though credit was given.<sup>1</sup>

In conformity with this doctrine, it is further decided, that where the buyer's paper is dishonored on maturity, and he goes into bankruptcy, and the seller thereupon refuses to make delivery under the contract, the buyer's assignees can be no better off in respect of damages than the buyer himself would have been; and that at most they can recover no more than the possible difference between the contract price and the market price, if the seller chooses to retain the goods.<sup>2</sup> Nor matters it, as to the seller's right to thus secure himself, that the sale was an executory contract to supply goods instead of the bargain for specific chattels.<sup>3</sup> Upon the whole, the unpaid seller's remedy against the goods remaining in his custody, be it in the capacity of seller still or only of bailee, remains unimpaired until he makes actual delivery; and, even if he gives a delivery-order upon his own warehouseman or bailee who holds them in custody, he may countermand that order, notwithstanding its indorsement by the buyer, until such bailee attorns over.<sup>4</sup>

§ 534. The Same Subject.—The English Chancery Court on appeal lately reaffirmed the doctrine of the unpaid seller's lien under a somewhat novel state of facts. A contract for the purchase of rails stipulated that payment should be made "by buyer's acceptance of seller's drafts at six months' date against inspector's certificate of approval, and wharfinger's certificate of each 500 tons being stacked and ready

<sup>1</sup> Townley v. Crump, 4 Ad. & E. 58. "It is impossible," says Mr. Benjamin, "to imagine a clearer case than this of the vendor's agreement to change the character of his possession into that of a bailee for the buyer; but this sort of delivery was not allowed so to operate as to force the vendor to give up the goods to the buyer's assignees in bankruptcy. Yet it cannot be doubted that the vendor had done all that he was bound to do in performance of his contract before the buyer's insolvency, and that he could have maintained an action for goods sold and delivered." Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 2.

<sup>2</sup> Valpy v. Oakeley, 16 Q. B. 941; Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680.

<sup>3</sup> Griffiths v. Perry, supra.

<sup>4</sup> McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309.

for shipment." Certificates were delivered in exchange for the buyer's acceptances of bills: the seller negotiated the bills, and the plaintiff advanced money to the buyer on the faith of the certificates. The buyer became insolvent, the acceptances were dishonored, and the seller claimed to hold the rails as his own. It was decided that the seller's lien was good, notwithstanding the plaintiff's loan by way of pledge to the buyer.<sup>1</sup> Here the question was one of legal rights under the contract; and the case was to be tried as it would have been tried in an action of trover at law, in case the purchaser, or the purchaser's assignee, had brought such an action. The plaintiff, being only an equitable mortgagee, a mortgagee by deposit, could not have brought it in his own name; and therefore the question was one of legal right. No third person's rights had intervened. The bargain in question was for payment by a buyer's acceptance of a seller's drafts. "Whoever heard of such a thing in a mercantile contract," says Sir G. Mellish, L. J., "when it is said that payment is to be made by buyer's acceptance of seller's drafts, that if the acceptance was dishonored, the right to sue under the original contract did not revive? . . . No doubt, if the buyer does not become insolvent, that is to say, if he does not openly proclaim his insolvency, then credit is given by taking the bill, and during the time that the bill is current there is no vendor's lien, and the vendor is bound to deliver. But if the bill is dishonored before delivery has been made, then the vendor's lien revives; or if the purchaser becomes openly insolvent before the delivery actually takes place, then the law does not compel the vendor to deliver to an insolvent purchaser. . . . The case is the simple ordinary case of a vendor who has sold goods upon credit, and before the time has arrived for the delivery of them the purchaser has become insolvent, and has given notice to all the world and to his creditors that he is insolvent. The vendor cannot rescind the contract, according to the late decisions, but he is entitled to say, I will not deliver the goods until I get actual payment." In the same case it was further held that it makes no difference that the seller has negotiated the bills, because he has no security on the bills, and there is no third party to them.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Gunn v. Bolckow, L. R. 10 Ch. 491, reversing the Vice-Chancellor's decree (1875).

The doctrine in this country, though not developed so fully, tends in the same direction. The seller of goods is held to have the right to refuse or countermand the final delivery, if the buyer prove insolvent, so long as the goods remain in his possession or in the custody of his agents.<sup>2</sup> And where wood was marked off and identified, and the purchaser had a license to go on the land and take it, but did not do so, the seller, upon the buyer's insolvency, was permitted to keep possession of the wood as security for the price against the buyer's assignee in insolvency.<sup>3</sup> But whether the change of capacity under which the seller continues to retain the goods shall affect the issue, appears not yet to be determined. It was intimated some years ago by one of our State courts that a constructive delivery sufficient to defeat the unpaid seller's remedy against the goods might occur, where the party selling had acquired the character of a bailee; the case being instanced of a stable-keeper with a horse to sell, who makes a sale to C. D., and then transfers the horse to his livery-stable to be kept for C. D. at a stipulated weekly hire.<sup>4</sup> But this expression of opinion, by way of obiter dictum, antedates some of the most positive of the English decisions above noted; and it is by no means sure that our American courts, brought to the actual test, would turn a constructive change of possession and custody on the seller's part to his disadvantage, as against the buyer and his assignees, where no actual change had occurred, more readily than those of Great Britain. For, after all, the remark is just, that the vendor still in possession has a higher equity to retain for the price than the assignee of a debtor who has not paid for the chattel has to claim it for the general creditors.<sup>1</sup> But doubtless, after an attornment is once made by the seller's agent or bailee to the buyer, in conformity with the seller's direction, the seller's right to detain under a claim of lien is gone; for the seller's agent, by such attornment, becomes the agent of the buyer.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ib.<sup>3</sup> Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33.<sup>2</sup> White v. Welsh, 38 Penn. St. 396; Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33.<sup>4</sup> Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33, per Shaw, C. J.

§ 535. Where Sale is on Credit, Delivery may be withheld upon Buyer's Insolvency.—Where the buyer becomes insolvent before the contract of sale has become completely performed, the unpaid seller's right to retain possession and withhold delivery is favorably regarded; and this notwithstanding credit for the price may have been agreed upon.<sup>3</sup>

§ 536. Lien Right as between Unpaid Seller and the Buyer's Sub-buyer.—Now to view the subject where the controversy is between the unpaid seller retaining the goods and a subvendee of the buyer. This situation of things is more embarrassing than the former; for it must be admitted that the equity of the seller is less as against a third party who becomes a bonâ fide purchaser for value than where the strife was confined to the original parties and their representatives. But the English cases cover this point likewise; sustaining the seller in his claim to keep the goods for his better security, so long as he does not by his acts and conduct give his express or implied assent to the sub-sale. By merely indorsing over the delivery-order for goods which are not yet surrendered to him, the buyer confers on a third person no greater rights than he has himself; that is to say, no right at all, as against the unpaid seller still in possession.<sup>4</sup> For the seller or his custodian must deliver the goods, or the custodian must attorn in compliance with the order.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ib. And see Tuthill v. Bogart, 79 N. Y. 215; Hull v. Hull, 48 Conn. 250.

<sup>2</sup> See Thompson v. Baltimore, & C. R. R. Co., 28 Md. 396; Hildreth v. Fitts, 53 Vt. 584. As to the slight advantage which the assignee had over the bankrupt himself, under the late U. S. Bankrupt Act, see Rockford, & C. R. R. Co., Ex parte, 3 Low. 345.

<sup>3</sup> See Chalmers, Ex parte, L. R. 8 Ch. 289, a case of delivery by instalments where part had been delivered; supra, § 518; stoppage in transitu, c. 14, post; Tuthill v. Skidmore, 124 N. Y. 148.

<sup>4</sup> McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309.

<sup>5</sup> See supra, § 534.

§ 537. The Same Subject; Estoppel of the Seller by his Own Conduct.—But how may the seller by his acts and conduct so sanction the sub-sale as to be estopped from asserting that his price lien remains? Stoveld v. Hughes, decided in 1841, is instructive on this point. Timber sold by the defendants to one Dixon, the original buyer, was marked with his initials in pursuance of the bargain and by mutual concurrence of the parties: the timber was to be delivered by the sellers at a certain place; and for the price Dixon gave his acceptances at three months, which, however, were dishonored at maturity, Dixon going into bankruptcy. Meantime, and after the sellers had delivered a small portion of the timber, Dixon sold the lot as it lay to the plaintiff, who paid him the price. The plaintiff informed the defendants that he had bought the timber of Dixon: they replied, "Very well," and took the plaintiff to their wharf, where the timber was lying. The plaintiff marked the timber with his own initials, and told the defendants to send no more of the timber to Dixon; to which the defendants made no objection. Upon these facts Lord Ellenborough said: "If that be not an executed delivery, I know not what is so." And the sellers, though unpaid, were held to have no right in the goods as against the plaintiff.<sup>1</sup> Pearson v. Dawson, a much later decision, turned upon a similar state of facts. A party sold sugar in hogsheads, and took the buyer's acceptance for the price. The sugar remained in his bonded warehouse, whence no part could be removed without paying the government duties. This buyer made a sub-sale to the plaintiffs of twenty specified hogsheads, and sent them with a written delivery-order to the original seller, who, upon inspecting it, wrote in pencil on his "sugar-book" the plaintiffs' names opposite the particular hogsheads, and afterwards gave such warehouse orders from time to time, in recognition of the sub-buyers' title, as enabled them to pay duties and take away nearly one-half of the hogsheads before the original buyer's paper went to protest. The original seller claimed a lien for his price on the hogsheads not already taken away by the sub-buyers; but the judges unanimously agreed that he could not hold them for what the original buyer still owed him, after having so recognized the delivery-order and the sale to the sub-buyers.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Stoveld v. Hughes, 14 East, 308.

§ 538. The Same Subject; Lien otherwise Good against Sub-buyer.—But, on the other hand, the unpaid seller's lien claim, even against sub-vendees, is not absolutely defeated where orders or other indicia of title were procured by a sub-buyer irregularly and without the seller's consent.<sup>2</sup> Nor, in general, where the sub-buyer neglects to take actual or constructive possession under the sub-sale.<sup>3</sup> Nor can that which passes between third persons—as, for instance, between the sub-vendee and one mistakenly supposed to be the original seller's agent—be set up as an estoppel to the original seller and owner himself.<sup>4</sup> In short, the unpaid seller must, in some manner, have had the sub-sale brought to his notice, and so acted with reference to the new purchaser, whether by tacit acquiescence or open approval, as naturally led the latter to conclude that all was right in the original transaction, and his own title free from any lien incumbrance; else the seller may reassert his right at any time while the goods remain in his possession unpaid for, and the buyer's credit has become dishonored.

§ 539. The Same Subject; Bills of Lading, etc., not here considered; Bills of Sale.—In what has been said of the seller's lien, we have supposed that no statute intervenes to the contrary; also that such documents as may have passed by way of indicia of title between the parties had no such negotiable characteristics as to carry the rights of ownership necessarily to a bonâ fide transferee for value when unaccompanied by the goods; but that bills of lading might operate to this extent, because of the peculiar qualities conceded to such instruments, while delivery-orders cannot, is sometimes suggested.<sup>5</sup> The latest English decisions treat the seller as

<sup>1</sup> Pearson v. Dawson, E. B. & E. 448.

<sup>2</sup> Craven v. Ryder, 6 Taunt. 433.

<sup>3</sup> Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313.

<sup>4</sup> McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309.

<sup>5</sup> See Lord Campbell, in McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309; Gunn v. Bolckow, L. R. 10 Ch. 491; c. 14, post; Farmeloe v. Bain, 1 C. P. D. 445.

estopped to assert his lien against such transferee of a document issued by the seller which is by the custom of trade (or better still by legislation) or by express contract treated as negotiable.<sup>1</sup> As to bills of sale, and most other documents of title, we may add, that apart from the effect of modern local statutes to be noticed hereafter (or perhaps of express contract or usage), a bill of sale, or document unaccompanied by the manual delivery of chattels capable of such delivery, is not sufficient evidence of title to protect third parties as against a seller who is not otherwise estopped to deny his title.<sup>2</sup>

§ 540. Estoppel as to Third Parties further considered.—The reason of suffering one's lien to be defeated by third parties on the suggestion of estoppel, according to the English cases, is seen in this: that the party claimant, by his acts and conduct, by his express statements, or even by his culpable silence, causes the third party to take a different course from what his interests would have prompted, supposing the buyer from whom he derived title had no right to sell; that the original seller in possession, the party of all others whose duty it was to disclose his lien claim, when called upon,—thereby remitting the sub-buyer promptly to his own remedies against a party in failing circumstances,—lulled him to repose, and suffered him to remain in his fancied security. The principle is a broad one, and, in the interests of justice, may be deemed to extend to general parties in possession of goods protecting adverse claims which they cause the other party to believe do not exist; thus inducing him to divert his course to his disadvantage, while their own interests could not have suffered by a true disclosure of the facts.

The doubt is, however, as to how far one may be held legally responsible for such conduct, where he holds off as though to care for nobody's interests but his own, and takes the attitude of passive indifference: for the cases which apply the rule involve for the most part an active participation of some sort in the affair which so imperils the third party's interests; an encouragement of the latter's course, if not expressed in so many words, at least implied by lending a motive power in that direction.<sup>1</sup> To estop a party by his representation or conduct from setting up his own claim against the other party whom he has misled or diverted, it must generally appear that the former knew, or ought to have known, that the latter would be injuriously misled in consequence of such representation or conduct on his part; also that the latter was so misled; and, if the intention to mislead does not appear, the case must, at all events, show negligence.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Merchant Banking Co. v. Steel Co., 5 Ch. D. 205; a case of iron warrants, which seems to come under the provisions of the Factors' Act of 1877.

238; c. 14, post, where the latest English statutes (Factors' Act of 1877, &c.) are noticed; Keeler v. Goodwin, 111 Mass. 490; Voorhis v. Olmstead, 66 N. Y. 113.

<sup>2</sup> Solomons v. Chesley, 58 N. H.

§ 541. The Same Subject; English Cases.—It is proper to distinguish, in such cases, the separate relations which the seller may bear; as concerns the original buyer, on the one hand, and the sub-vendee or other third party, to whom he has made representations amounting to estoppel, on the other. In Woodley v. Coventry, the defendants had sold so many barrels of flour, to be taken from a larger quantity; the buyer had obtained advances on the flour from the plaintiff, giving him a delivery-order; the plaintiff had presented the order to the defendants, who said, "It is all right," and showed samples of the flour. Trover was brought for the flour, the original buyer having absconded. Had the controversy been between the original buyer and seller, the defence might have been made that the property had not vested for want of a specific subject-matter, and that trover was inapplicable. That defence was here set up; but the court properly ruled it out, because the material question was, as between the original seller and the pledgee, the present parties, whether the former had not, by their admission, recognized the right of the original buyer to dispose of so many barrels in their possession.<sup>1</sup> The later case of Knights v. Wiffen was decided upon a state of facts quite similar. The original seller, and defendant in the suit, said, on receiving the sub-vendee's letter and the delivery-order for barley: "All right: when you get the forwarding note, I will put the barley on the line." Three sacks were weighed; but, by the time the forwarding note was duly presented, the original buyer had become bankrupt. The defendant claimed that no property had passed as against the sub-vendee, who sued as plaintiff for conversion of the barley.<sup>2</sup> In both of these cases the original seller was a warehouseman, holding a large quantity of which an unspecified portion was ordered by the delinquent buyer; and the attempt was made to retain the property as security for an unpaid price, as against a sub-vendee.

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 2; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & E. 475; Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex. 654.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Bigelow Estoppel, 552-577, and cases cited; Cornish v. Abington, 4 H. & N. 549; Manufacturers', &c. Bank v. Hazard, 30 N. Y. 226; Bahia, &c. R. R. Co., In re, L. R. 3 Q. B. 584; cases cited in sections following.

But Knights v. Wiffen goes one step further, in estopping the original seller, than Woodley v. Coventry. In the former case the plaintiff had so far relied upon the defendant's recognition of the sub-sale, that he thereupon made an advance of money; which was very clearly changing his own position within the rule of estoppel. But in the latter the plaintiff, in fact, paid the money before he presented the delivery-order. Had, then, the defendant's recognition of the sub-sale and delivery-order as all right in this latter instance, the effect of placing the plaintiff in a changed position, and making him a sufferer in consequence of the defendant's conduct? The court asserted emphatically that it had; for, as Blackburn, J., suggests, unless the defendant had acted and said as he did, the plaintiff could have gone at once to the buyer and demanded back his money, instead of resting quietly until the buyer became bankrupt. The English courts, therefore, according to this late exposition of doctrine, take high ground as concerns estoppel, and uphold the third party's rights, not only in case of damages clearly resulting as a consequence of the possessing party's conduct, but wherever the third party has been thereby induced to abstain from pursuing active measures which might have afforded him some relief.

<sup>1</sup> Woodley v. Coventry, 2 H. & C. 164.

<sup>2</sup> Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660.

§ 542. The Same Subject; American Cases. — In this country, estoppel, though constantly applied as a legal doctrine, has been less frequently invoked in sale controversies between unpaid sellers in possession and third parties. Scudder v. Worster appears to be at variance with the English cases; but perhaps only on the technical issue, whether there can be an estoppel set up to defeat the seller's lien and in aid of a third party's action of replevin, where the sale was, not of specific goods, but of an unspecified portion, and no appropriation has taken place under either the original sale or the sub-sale. The facts here showed that the sellers had agreed to sell so many barrels of pork to the buyer upon the credit of his mercantile paper, and gave a bill of sale of the quantity; that the buyer made a sub-sale to the plaintiff, issuing a delivery-order for 150 barrels; that the plaintiff thereupon gave the original sellers notice of his purchase, and asked them to hold the same on storage for him, to which they assented; and that, the original buyer becoming insolvent, the sellers refused to deliver to the plaintiff barrels corresponding to the delivery-order. The 150 barrels in controversy were removed from the sellers' storehouse on his writ of replevin. Upon these facts, the court gave judgment for the sellers; and as to the point taken on the plaintiff's behalf, that the sellers were estopped to deny that the 150 barrels were the property of the plaintiff, it was observed by Dewey, J., that, had this been an action to recover damages for the value of 150 barrels of pork, the position might be tenable, and the sellers estopped to deny the plaintiff's property; but it was otherwise with a replevin suit in which the plaintiff claimed these 150 barrels as his own. "To sustain the former, it is only necessary to show a right to 150 barrels generally, and not any specific 150 barrels; but to maintain replevin, the plaintiff must be the owner of some specific 150 barrels.”<sup>1</sup> The assent of the seller to the sub-sale, upon notice thereof, would still appear to be fatal to his claim of price lien, under the original sale, as against a proper suit brought by the sub-vendee, notwithstanding the property in the goods had never passed from himself to the original buyer. And in New York, the English doctrine of estoppel noticed in the preceding section is approved.<sup>2</sup>

It is, then, the title as disclosed, not the title as existing between original parties, which tests one's lien as against any third party knowingly let into the transaction; and where A. puts chattels into B.'s hands, with the understanding that B. shall sell them as his own (for reasons of convenience kept to themselves), and, on B.'s representations of ownership thus authorized, the chattels get attached as B.'s property, it is held that A. is estopped, as against the attaching creditor, from asserting that the property is his.<sup>3</sup> In general, if the seller actively induces the buyer's creditors to believe, by his own words and conduct, that the buyer's title to the thing is absolute and unconditional, he will be estopped from setting up the conditions of that sale afterwards as against such creditors.<sup>4</sup>

§ 543. The Same Subject. — There is a late American bankruptcy case, where manufacturers of engines obtained from the petitioner, as one of their customers, pay in advance of completing the work, on a false representation that the engine had been finished, and delivered to a carrier, to be delivered to the customer. In point of fact, the engine was not finished at the time, nor even in existence; but the manufacturers were at work on two engines precisely alike, either of which

<sup>1</sup> Scudder v. Worster, 11 Cush. 573 (1853). But cf. supra, Woodley v. Coventry, 2 H. & C. 164, and Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660, preceding section.

<sup>2</sup> See Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456; Voorhis v. Olmstead, 66 N. Y. 113.

<sup>3</sup> Drew v. Kimball, 43 N. H. 282.

<sup>4</sup> Wylie's Appeal, 90 Penn. St. 210. But where the buyer's creditors get possession wrongfully, and the seller sues for the wrong by bringing replevin for the chattels, delay of a few months, during which the wrongdoer is at expense in the care thereof, cannot be set up as an estoppel to the seller, if the latter never induced the taking or withholding the chattels. Hull v. Hull, 48 Conn. 250. As to a possession fraudulent against creditors, see post, c. 16.

would have satisfied the contract. The first was finished, and then delivered to another customer. The second was worked upon, being known in the shop as that of the petitioner, and marked with his initials. Within a few hours of the completion of this latter engine, proceedings were commenced which threw the manufacturers into bankruptcy. The assignees refusing to give up the engine, the petitioner claimed it as his own. Lowell, J., granted the petition; one ground of his decision being that the bankrupt and his assignees were equally estopped from asserting that the chattel in question did not exist and was not complete at the date when payment was obtained on the representation that it was done and on its way, unless they could show some other engine to which the representation applied. Nor did it embarrass the case that there were two engines made precisely alike: the bankrupt and his assignees could not say that the present engine was not the one referred to as the petitioner's, or that it had not then an existence, unless they could show some other engine which did exist and was the one.<sup>1</sup>

§ 544. How Warehouseman or other Bailee may be estopped. — Upon the principle of estoppel, warehousemen may sometimes make themselves liable to both the sub-buyer and the original seller: to the former, because of conduct inducing him to take a course otherwise prejudicial to his interests; to the latter, provided such conduct was in no respect under cover of authority conferred by himself, and the goods should have continued in their custody on his behalf.<sup>2</sup> And so is it with others who stand similarly related by way of bailment to different parties. Nor is the measure of liability as to the one party necessarily the standard to be applied with respect to the other. A warehouseman or agent who has once attorned to a party as sub-vendee, whatever might be the rule as between the original seller and buyer, cannot afterwards disaffirm his acts and admissions, and dispute the sub-vendee's title to the goods.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Rockford, &c. R. R. Co., Ex parte, 1 Low. 345.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 2; Story Sales, § 289.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Stonard v. Dunkin, 4 Camp.

§ 545. Law of Re-sale; General Doctrine. — Now as to re-sale considered as a general remedy on the unpaid seller's behalf. We have already shown that a seller is expected to sell goods over for which the buyer defaults payment of the price, provided the property in the goods has not passed out of himself, and then sue for the difference in damages; but that where the property therein has passed, and the goods are delivered out of the seller's possession, the title of the buyer is such that the seller can only sue for the price, attaching like other creditors, and having no right to take the goods again, by virtue of his former ownership.<sup>1</sup>

§ 546. Re-sale where Property has passed but not Possession. — But the intermediate case is one of theoretical difficulty; for — though the seller has an undoubted lien upon the goods while he continues to hold them — to sell them over, and pass title to a new purchaser, involves a rescission of the old contract; and rescission of a contract, we know, is not optional with one, but requires the mutual assent of both parties. The seller of perishable goods, specified and appropriated to the contract, whose property has passed from seller to buyer, but whose possession is still in the seller, is reduced, then, to this dilemma, where his price remains unpaid: he must put the goods upon the market at once, and sell them over, doing what he has, strictly speaking, no right to do; or he must make his lien security worthless by suffering the goods to spoil on his hands.

This intermediate case, the law of which was left in doubt in our last chapter, is now to be studied chiefly in the light of recent adjudications: for how the law stood in England during the first half of this century, as Mr. Blackburn said, no one would answer positively; nor in America, to this day, has the seller's right of re-sale in such a contingency received much critical attention.<sup>2</sup> The main issue is this: How shall an unpaid seller enforce his lien?

344; Hawes v. Watson, 2 B. & C. 456; 66 N. Y. 113. And see Schoul.
540; Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. Bailm. 119.
660; Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y.

<sup>1</sup> Supra, §§ 514, 516, 525.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, § 528; Blackb. Sales, 325.

§ 547. Such Re-sale a Technical Breach of Contract, but available; More than a Mere Lien allowed. — The late English cases have gone far towards determining, that where the bargain is completed, and the property in the goods has passed from seller to buyer, the seller still retaining possession for his price, a default of payment on the buyer's part does not, per se, entitle the seller to re-sell the goods by virtue of the possession in himself; but, if he re-sells, he commits a breach of contract, and is at least liable for nominal damages. He may, however, by having expressly reserved the right to re-sell under such circumstances in the original contract, stand with his remedy perfect. And, after all, since the re-sale is found a very convenient method of giving the seller his rightful dues, and, in the case of fluctuating and perishable commodities particularly, is sufficiently advantageous to the buyer who stands indebted, it would appear that, practically, the seller runs no risk in selling over, beyond being held to an adjustment of mutual demands with the buyer, in which he is likely to suffer less than he would have done by keeping the property to spoil and become worthless.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, the buyer's default, followed by the seller's re-sale, seems to constitute a rescission of the contract in such a sense that the buyer is not permitted to follow the goods into the new purchaser's hands and reclaim them as his own, but must look to his own adjustment of damages with the seller for indemnity, if indemnity be his due. The only hazard worth regarding which the seller runs in the matter is that of assuming the buyer's actual default; for even if he sells over, supposing the buyer in default, and the buyer be not in default, the buyer may maintain trover for the goods wherever he can find them.<sup>2</sup>

We have seen, in our former volume, that the common-law lien gives one a right of holding goods for security, but with very imperfect means of enforcing that right, leaving him, in the absence of some quickening statute, in possession, without the opportunity to sell and get his money's-worth.<sup>1</sup> Hence is the right of an unpaid seller, with the goods in his possession, though commonly called a lien, something in truth better than a lien, because more efficacious; perhaps more analogous to the pawnee's right, which, we have also seen, gives more ample means of enforcement.<sup>2</sup> Judge Blackburn may be quoted in support of the latter view; for of the seller's rights he thus laid down the law as early as 1845: "The better opinion seems to be that in no case do they amount to a complete resumption of the right of property, or, in other words, to a right to rescind the contract of sale, but perhaps come nearer to the rights of a pawnee with a power of sale, than to any other common-law rights. At all events, it seems that a re-sale by the vendor, while the purchaser continues in default, is not so wrongful as to authorize the purchaser to consider the contract rescinded, so as to entitle him to recover back any deposit of the price, or to resist paying any balance of it still due; nor yet so tortious as to destroy the vendor's right to retain, and so entitle the purchaser to sue in trover."<sup>3</sup> Mr. Benjamin, upon a review of the latest English cases, accedes in effect to the same views.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 3;      <sup>2</sup> See Gosling v. Birnie, 7 Bing. Valpy v. Oakeley, 16 Q. B. 941; 339; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 3. Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680.

§ 548. The Same Subject; English Rule of Re-sale.—The English rule, then, is, as enunciated by the latest cases, that to re-sell for the buyer's default in payment, after the property in the goods has legally passed to him, is, on the seller's part, a breach of contract. But what is allowable as damages for so doing? Nothing more than this: that if the buyer sues the unpaid seller for breach of contract in making the re-sale, or for non-delivery, he recovers only the difference, if any, between the contract price and the market value of the goods on the re-sale; and if, as most likely happens, the re-sale value is no more than the contract price, or even less, nominal damages only can be recovered by the

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 385-388.

<sup>2</sup> Blackb. Sales, 325.

<sup>3</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 375, 394, 407.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 3; Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680.

buyer.<sup>1</sup> In other words, the seller makes his re-sale as a pledgee would, and under the liability to account to the buyer for any excess received above the contract price agreed upon. Nor are the seller's interests in such an emergency disregarded; for, as the buyer's default caused the trouble, the law permits the seller to sue for his full contract price, leaving the buyer to a cross-action for damages resulting from the re-sale, or to sue for his net loss on the re-sale.<sup>2</sup>

Even if the seller pursues and tortiously retakes the goods from the buyer because of non-payment, this cannot be set up by the buyer in defence when sued for the price; for, supposing it established that there was no mutual rescission of the bargain by the parties, the seller's act of retaking the goods is not of itself a rescission of the bargain. The buyer must pay his price, and sue separately for the tortious retaking. "In point of law," says Parke, B., "the situation is this: the vendee has had all he was entitled to by the contract of sale, and he must therefore pay the price of the goods. He may bring trespass against the vendors for taking possession of them again, and may recover the actual value of the goods at the time they were taken."<sup>3</sup> And in 1866 Lord Chelmsford said, in Page v. Cowasjee: "There may be cases where the vendor might sell without rendering himself liable to an action; as where goods sold are left in the possession of the vendor, and the purchaser will not remove them and pay the price, after receiving express notice from the vendor, that, if he fail to do so, the goods will be re-sold. But the authorities are uniform on this point, that if before actual delivery the vendor re-sells the property while the purchaser is in default, the re-sale will not authorize the purchaser to consider the contract rescinded, so as to entitle him to recover back any deposit of the price, or to resist paying any balance of it which may be still due. If this is the case where the possession of property sold remains with the vendor, a fortiori must it be so where there has been a delivery, and the vendor takes it out of the possession of the purchaser and resells it.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Valpy v. Oakeley, 16 Q. B. 941; Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680.

<sup>2</sup> Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722; Stephens v. Wilkinson, 2 B. & Ad. 320; Page v. Cowasjee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127.

<sup>3</sup> Stephens v. Wilkinson, 2 B. & Ad. 320. But as to presumptions where goods are retaken, see Sloane v. Van Wyck, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 250.

But the original contract may have expressly reserved the seller's right to re-sell. It follows naturally, as to the seller, that, for loss on the re-sale under a power, his proper remedy is a special action for damages to recover the difference in price and the expenses; and as to the buyer, that, while thus answerable for possible loss upon the re-sale, he can take no profit in case the re-sale nets more than the price he had agreed to give.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Page v. Cowasjee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127.

<sup>2</sup> Lamond v. Duvall, 9 Q. B. 1030. Where an unpaid seller reserves the jus disponendi, as by making the goods deliverable to his own order and retaining the bill of lading for protection, he reserves thereby not merely a seller's lien, but a right of disposing of the goods so long as the purchaser continues in default. Ogg v. Shuter, 1 C. P. D. 47; supra, c. 4.

Mr. Benjamin submits the following as a summary of the English law on the subject: Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 3. (1st.) A re-sale by the seller on default of the buyer rescinds the original sale, when the right of re-sale was expressly reserved in the original sale; but not in the absence of such express reservation. (2d.) His remedy after re-selling under an express reservation of that right, against the defaulting buyer, is to sue in special damages for the loss of price, and expenses of the re-sale; and, if the goods fetch a profit on the re-sale, the buyer derives no benefit from it, except as showing, by way of defence, that his default has caused no damage to the seller. (3d.) The seller's remedy, after a re-sale made in the absence of an express reservation of that right, is assumpsit on the original contract, which was not rescinded by the re-sale. And in this action he may either recover as damages the actual loss on the re-sale composed of the difference in price and expenses; or he may refuse to give credit for the proceeds of the re-sale, and recover that whole price, leaving the buyer to a cross-action for damages for the re-sale. This rule prevails, even in cases where the seller has tortiously re-taken and re-sold the goods after their delivery to the buyer. (4th.) In the case of re-sale, a buyer in default cannot maintain trover against the seller, being deprived by his default of that right of possession without which trover will not lie. Milgate v. Kebble, 3 M. & G. 100. (5th.) A buyer, even if not in default, has no right to treat the sale as rescinded by reason of the seller's tortious re-sale; and cannot get back any part of the price paid, nor refuse to pay the remainder when due. His only remedy is a cross-action in damages. (6th.) A buyer not in default may maintain trover against a seller who has tortiously re-sold; and the seller cannot have the unpaid price deducted from the damages, but must bring his cross-action. Gillard v. Brittan, 8 M. & W. 575. But if the seller is unable to maintain a cross-action for the price, then

§ 549. The Same Subject; American Rule of Re-sale. — The American doctrine on this subject appears by no means elaborated; and the judicial disposition manifested in so many States to treat a sale, with respect to passing the property in the goods, as conditional upon payment of the price, simplifies the situation, and in every way strengthens the unpaid seller's means of enforcing his legal rights, so long as he holds possession. His right to sue for damages, of which we spoke in the last chapter, carries with it, according to most American authorities, large powers as to re-selling the goods or retaining them at a valuation.<sup>1</sup> Beyond this, the question of re-sale receives but slight attention. Says Chancellor Kent: "If the buyer unreasonably refuses to accept of the article sold, the seller is not obliged to let it perish on his hands, and run the risk of the solvency of the buyer. The usage, on the neglect or refusal of the buyer to come in a reasonable time, after notice, and pay for and take the goods, is for the vendor to sell the same at auction, and to hold the buyer responsible for the deficiency in the amount of sales."<sup>2</sup> To this quite general and positive statement of the seller's right of re-sale it might be added, that the later American authorities establish no particular usage, but permit the seller to sell in any ordinary and reasonable manner upon fair notice to the defaulting party;<sup>3</sup> and, as we have already the buyer's recovery in trover will be limited to the actual damage suffered; namely, the difference between the market value of his goods which have been re-sold and the unpaid price. Chinery v. Viall, 5 H. & N. 288. (7th.) An unpaid seller, with the goods in his possession, has more than a mere lien on them: he has a special property analogous to that of a pawnee. But it is a breach of his contract to re-sell the goods, even on the buyer's default, for which damages may be recovered against him; but only the actual damage suffered, — that is, the difference between the contract price and the market value on the re-sale; and, if there be no proof of such difference, the recovery will be for nominal damages only.

<sup>1</sup> Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72; supra, §§ 516, 522.

<sup>2</sup> 2 Kent Com. 504.

<sup>3</sup> Conway v. Bush, 4 Barb. 564; Applegate v. Hogan, 9 B. Mon. 69; Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 378; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 313; Camp v. Hamlin, 55 Ga. 259; Sands v. Taylor, 5 Johns. 395; 50 N. H. 313; Holland v. Rea, 48 Mich. 218. More particularly is such re-sale favored upon the buyer's refusal to receive them, where they are perishable, expensive to keep, or likely to go out of the market; and where the sale seen, the opinion prevails that he is not compelled to realize upon his security, where the property, and not the possession, has passed out of him, but may sue in damages instead for his full contract price,<sup>1</sup> leaving the buyer most probably to his cross-action with respect to the goods.<sup>2</sup> No particular mode of re-sale is prescribed, beyond observing those general rules of fairness and good faith which apply in all trust sales;<sup>3</sup> and while the seller need not re-sell at all, he has the burden, it would appear, of showing, whenever he sells, that he sold fairly and honestly.<sup>4</sup>

§ 550. Notice is Proper before a Re-sale; Modes of Sale. — Both in England and America, the giving of a previous notice before selling over is thought as a rule desirable, if practicable, or evincing the good faith and prudence of the seller, and placing the blame more surely where it belongs. The tender of goods is a notice; and if the seller was not bound to tender, but to wait for the buyer to come and take the goods and pay for them, he may be acquitted of blame if he gives to the buyer express notice that he shall re-sell the goods if not at once paid for. But to sell over without some kind of notice (that is to say, of intention to sell, if not of the particular re-sale) will involve the seller in a breach of is made within a reasonable time and at auction. See supra, §§ 516, 517; 55 Ga. 259.

<sup>1</sup> Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 378; supra, § 528; Barr v. Logan, 5 Har- ring. 52; Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236; Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549.

<sup>2</sup> Where the seller, on the buyer's refusal to accept, after the property, but not the possession, in the chattel has passed, makes a sale to himself against the buyer's objection, and thereafter treats the thing as his own, the sale is invalid, and does not affect the right to recover or the rule of damages where an action is brought to recover damages for such buyer's non-acceptance. Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, §§ 516, 517; Haines

v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Bagley v. Findlay, 82 Ill. 524; Smith v. Pettee, 70 N. Y. 13; Whitney v. Boardman, 118 Mass. 242; McLean v. Richardson, 127 Mass. 339. A public auction sale is a fair one, but public auction is not indispensable; and as "reasonable time" is the standard, the re-sale need not be made with the earliest expedition, even though the market is falling. Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79; 18 Gratt. 785; Smith v. Pettee, 71 N. Y. 13.

If special haste or precaution is needful, the buyer semble should notify the seller and guard his own interest. 71 N. Y. 13. Such a rule applies to the defaulting pledgor when the right of sale arises.

<sup>4</sup> Brownlee v. Bolton, 44 Mich. 218.

contract, nominal certainly, and which may prove serious, unless he can show that the buyer, and not he, was in default.<sup>1</sup> Particularity of notice, however, as to time and place, is less likely to be insisted upon by the courts ;<sup>2</sup> and indeed, wherever the buyer's breach is palpable and apparent, and the seller can show fair reasons for selling without notice, we find our courts disposed to excuse his sale so made.<sup>3</sup>

§ 550 a. Rule of Damages under a Re-sale. — The rule of a seller's indemnity, under this or any other re-sale such as the law justifies him in making, is as already stated ;<sup>4</sup> that is, in general, the difference between the amount thus realized and the original contract price. And where the re-sale is a fair and honest one, under all the circumstances, and especially if it be made at auction or upon public competition, the net result of the sale is considered a fair test, though not necessarily a conclusive one, of market value.<sup>5</sup>

§ 551. Whether Replevin lies on the Unpaid Seller's Behalf. — It is held that the seller cannot maintain replevin for a chattel sold, delivered, and partially paid for, until after an offer to put the purchaser in statu quo, and a demand and refusal of the article.<sup>6</sup> Nor, we may assume, would replevin lie in any case where the property in the chattel had passed from seller to buyer, and the sale was not induced by the buyer's fraud.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Lord Chelmsford, in Page v. Cowasjee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127 ; 2 Kent Com. 504, and n. ; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 316.

<sup>2</sup> Cases, supra.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. And see Holland v. Rea, 48 Mich. 218 ; Pollen v. Le Roy, 30 N. Y. 549 (where the goods were perishable) ; Ullmann v. Kent, 60 Ill. 271 ; Lindon v. Eldred, 49 Wis. 305 (where there was a waiver by the buyer).

<sup>4</sup> See § 513.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed., p. 776, Bennett's note. Not only the auction charges, but an insurance premium on the goods, may be properly allowed the seller. Lewis v. Greider, 51 N. Y.

231. The defaulting buyer's name need not be disclosed in the re-sale, so long as the sale was in fact on his account. Ib. And while the place of re-sale is usually the place where the goods were to have been delivered and paid for, another and better market may be substituted, in the exercise of the seller's fair discretion and good faith, which, after all, furnish the test. Ib. Cf. 30 Wis. 290.

<sup>6</sup> Hamilton v. Singer Man. Co., 54 Ill. 370.

<sup>7</sup> See Bouv. Dict. "Replevin." But as to rescission and replevying the chattel on the ground of fraud, see post, c. 16.

CHAPTER XIV.

SELLER'S LIEN, AND RIGHT OF STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU:

§ 552. Lien and Stoppage in Transitu on a Seller's Behalf.—Lien, and stoppage in transitu, are both to be reckoned as rights rather than remedies, on the seller's behalf, though found serviceable in the event of the buyer's default, and prolonging one after the other, to the farthest possible limit, the seller's opportunity of making the goods sold a means of securing indemnity under the contract. Let us briefly consider the two topics in order.

§ 553. The Seller's Lien; its Nature and Extent.—I. Of liens generally we have elsewhere spoken.<sup>1</sup> Of liens, so called, under the law of sales, whereby the seller is enabled, as of right, to hold the goods as security for his price up to the moment when he parts possession, enough has been said to show that the word "lien" is not here quite aptly applied, and that the seller's remedy is rather analogous to that of a pawnee.<sup>2</sup> A few words may now be added as to the nature and extent of this lien as a right, how it is preserved, and under what circumstances it is finally lost.

Where the property in the goods has not passed out of the seller, it would be illogical to say that he has a lien upon them; for a lien upon goods implies that the property in the goods is in one, and the lien (which is founded in possession) in another; and the seller who has both property and possession needs no lien right in aid of his legal remedies. Hence the seller's price lien is well defined as a right midway between the conclusion of the bargain and the delivery of the subject-matter; the contract of sale meanwhile vesting in the buyer the property in the subject-matter, but giving the seller this right to keep possession for his proper security until he is paid.<sup>1</sup> In general, where goods are sold without stipulation for credit, the common law gives the seller a lien co-extensive with his term of possession; and he need not part with his possession until he is paid.<sup>2</sup> So long, in fact, as the seller or his agent actually retains possession, by virtue of the contract of sale in any stage of the transaction, his possession serves to secure the unpaid purchase-money, whether the property in the goods has gone out of him or not.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 375 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, cs. 12, 13.

What does this lien of the seller cover? It is sometimes said to embrace the price and the charges.<sup>4</sup> But recent English and American decisions appear to restrict it to the price; though incidental expenses, like transportation charges or customs duties, which are really payable by the buyer, under the contract of sale, along with the price, or as part of it, so to speak, would doubtless be still covered by the lien. These decisions oppose extending the original lien, however, to the seller's extra expenses incurred for his benefit by reason of the buyer's default; to such charges, in fact, as the buyer has never agreed to pay; but remit the seller to his personal remedy against the buyer, if a remedy exists at all. "I am clearly of opinion," says Lord Wensleydale, "that no person has by law a right to add to his lien upon a chattel, a charge for keeping it till the debt is paid; that is, in truth, a charge for keeping it for his own benefit, not for the benefit of the person whose chattel is in his possession."<sup>5</sup>

§ 554. How the Lien may have been excluded or waived.—The parties may at the outset have excluded the seller's lien

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 281, 282; Hammonds v. Barclay, 2 East, 235; Shaw, C. J., in Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 38; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; cases passim cited post. For recent statute provisions in certain States on the subject of a lien for the purchase price, see 73 Mo. 256; 36 Ark. 91.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 282; supra, c. 13.

<sup>3</sup> See, among other cases, 83 Wis. 388; Ware, River R. v. Vibbard, 114 Mass. 447; White v. Welsh, 38 Penn.

St. 396; 118 Mass. 443, and cases cited; Crummey v. Raudenbush, 55 Minn. 426 (where agreement was made to sell on credit, and the seller then found that the buyer was insolvent); Robinson v. Morgan, 65 Vt. 37.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 282.

<sup>5</sup> Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., 1 E. B. & E. 353, 367; s. c. 8 H. L. Cas. 338; Crommelin v. N. Y., &c. R. R. Co., 4 Keyes, 90; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4. See Lord Cranworth's remarks on appeal, in by the express terms of their bargain; and any special agreement at the outset or later which is inconsistent with the existence of such lien bars it out.<sup>1</sup> This is a rule common to all liens;<sup>2</sup> but so favorably has the seller's price lien been regarded, that no mere stipulation for credit nor the taking of a negotiable security will irrevocably conclude the seller who is still in rightful possession of the goods when the credit expires.<sup>3</sup> A stipulation for credit argues, nevertheless, a waiver of lien; and, if possession of the goods be surrendered under such agreement, there is an end of the seller's claim to hold them upon a theory of lien. Hence is it said that the seller waives his lien by giving credit, though taking a promissory note, bill of exchange, or other security, payable at a distant day; and, again, that if upon maturity of such obligation, or upon expiration of the credit, the seller still holds possession, his right of lien revives.<sup>4</sup> Of the real force of such observations the reader is already enabled to judge;<sup>5</sup> and it may be deduced from what has already been stated elsewhere, that apart from the buyer's insolvency, the main question is, whether the note was taken in payment or as postponing payment; but that on the buyer's insolvency the seller may assert his lien to the utmost, provided he has retained possession.<sup>6</sup>

Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., ib., as to the seller's personal right to recover irrespective of a lien claim.

<sup>1</sup> Spartali v. Benecke, 10 C. B. 212; Story Sales, § 285; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4. See Outcalt v. Durling, 1 Dutch. 443; Pickett v. Bullock, 52 N. H. 354; Batchelder, Re, 2 Low. 245.

<sup>2</sup> 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 386.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 533; Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 341; Story Sales, § 290; Bunney v. Poyntz, 4 B. & Ad. 568; Valpy v. Oakeley, 16 Q. B. 941; South-western Freight Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71; Milliken v. Warren, 57 Me. 46; Clark v. Draper, 19 N. H. 419; 2 Low. 245; Owens v. Weedman, 82 Ill. 409; Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33; Vasser v. Buxton, 86 N. C. 335;

Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619; Thorpe v. Fowler, 57 Iowa, 541.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, §§ 285, 286; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; Horncastle v. Farran, 3 B. & A. 497; Bunney v. Poyntz, 4 B. & Ad. 568.

<sup>5</sup> The condition of pre-payment on a sale for cash may be waived by the seller so as to pass the title to the buyer; as where on a cash sale, the thing being delivered, and the buyer failing to pay on demand, the seller attaches the chattel for the price; for by so attaching the thing as the buyer's the seller admits that his own title has been divested. Heller v. Elliott, 44 N. J. L. 467; and see next section.

<sup>6</sup> See Farmeloe v. Bain, 1 C. P. D. 445; supra, §§ 533-539.

Cases may arise, it is said, in which the goods remain in the seller's possession, and yet may have been accepted and received by the buyer. But in such cases the seller holds possession, not by virtue of his lien as seller, but under some new contract by which the relations of the parties are changed.<sup>1</sup> Such new contract, to be exclusive of one's right to hold in security for his unpaid price ought to be a clear one. Any unpaid seller's actual possession, after the time of credit has expired, is favored in respect of his lien or security for the price.<sup>2</sup>

§ 555. Up to what Period the Lien extends; Effect of Delivery, etc.— We next ask, Up to what period does the seller's lien extend, so as to enable him to enforce payment against the goods? In general, so long as he holds possession of the goods, and no longer; until he or his agent has delivered them to the buyer or the buyer's agent, or until the buyer has put him at default by tendering payment.<sup>3</sup>

If the seller makes voluntary and unconditional delivery of the goods his lien, of course, is displaced. But whether delivery of part shall constitute a sufficient delivery of the whole, so as to destroy the seller's lien, depends ultimately upon the true intent of the contract. The seller may, if he choose, it is said, give up part, and retain the rest; and then his lien will remain on the part retained in his possession for the price of the whole: but there may be circumstances sufficient to show that there was no intention to separate the part delivered from the rest; and then the delivery of part might operate as a delivery of the whole, and put an end to the seller's possession, and consequently to the lien.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Morton, J., in Safford v. McDonough, 120 Mass. 290, 291; Cusack v. Robinson, 1 B. & S. 299, 308.

<sup>2</sup> Milliken v. Warren, and other cases, supra.

<sup>3</sup> See supra, §§ 533, 535; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 385, 386; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; Arnold v. Delano, 4 Cush. 33; Southwestern Freight Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71; 2 Kent Com. 509; Taylor v. Wakefield, 6 E. & B.

765; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; Muskegon Booming Co. v. Underhill, 43 Mich. 629; Becker v. Hallgarten, 86 N. Y. 167.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; § 556, post; Tanner v. Scovell, 14 M. & W. 28. But see Parke, J., in Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is to be assumed that the delivery of part only of the goods is intended

Possession fraudulently obtained by the buyer cannot be set up against a seller who is reasonably prompt in asserting his rights; nor, of course, can the seller's lien be cut off against his will.<sup>1</sup> But even though the sale were stipulated to be for cash, yet the seller, by afterwards delivering the goods without receiving payment therefor, might be presumed to have waived his lien;<sup>2</sup> and, wherever the goods are taken without his permission, he should be vigilant in following them up for retaking possession, and not suffer his rights to slumber.<sup>3</sup> One's parol reservation of lien under a chattel sale, while he yields possession, has been sometimes denied force against the bonâ fide claims of third parties, without notice;<sup>4</sup> though this subject of giving possession under a condition that title shall not vest until the price is paid is subject to peculiar rules already considered.<sup>5</sup> Nor is a written instrument permitted to defeat the rights of such parties, which aims to create a seller's lien upon surrendered goods, and is not a chattel mortgage.<sup>6</sup> And yet, as between themselves, the buyer and seller may agree specially that the lien, or security of the latter for his price, shall continue after the goods are delivered to the former.<sup>7</sup> to operate only as a delivery of that part and not of the whole. See Cooper, Ex parte, 11 Ch. D. 68, 74. But cf. Douglas v. Shumway, 13 Gray, 498.

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 291-293.

<sup>2</sup> Heller v. Elliott, 44 N. J. L. 467.

Where one sells, reserving a lien for the purchase-money, and the buyer, after receiving the chattel on this understanding, sells it to a third person, the original seller may take the thing into his own possession by virtue of the original lien and recover nominal damages; or he may at his election attach the chattel in an action of trover to recover his full actual damages; on payment of such damages the property will vest in the sub-buyer. Hill v. Larro, 54 Vt. 629.

The seller's action to enforce his lien bars his action of detinue. 146 U. S. 42.

<sup>3</sup> See Bowen v. Burk, 13 Penn. St. 146; Welsh v. Bell, 32 Penn. St. 12.

<sup>4</sup> Gay v. Hardeman, 31 Tex. 245.

<sup>5</sup> See supra, §§ 299-303.

<sup>6</sup> Obermeier v. Core, 25 Ark. 562; Shepardson v. Cary, 29 Wis. 34. See Haskell v. Rice, 11 Gray, 240, as to standing wood carried from one lot to another of the seller's premises. And see Bunn v. Valley Lumber Co., 51 Wis. 376.

<sup>7</sup> Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619. Such a situation of security suggests the pledgor's agency for a pledgee out of possession under similar limitations. See 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 407.

§ 556. Effect on Lien, where Documents of Title are transferred. — The effect on the seller's lien of the transfer and indorsement to the buyer of what are called documents of title is not unfrequently considered. Symbolical transfers of chattels not conveniently situated for manual delivery are effected by such acts under the law-merchant as the delivery of the bill of lading properly indorsed or assigned, or of an invoice as its substitute.<sup>1</sup> But all documents accompanying title have not this full effect so as to divest the seller's lien; nor will even the indorsement or assignment of a bill of lading (according to the latest decisions) debar the owner of the right of stoppage in transitu where no third party's rights have intervened;<sup>2</sup> and as for an unindorsed or unasigned bill of lading, the delivery of the document will not be tantamount to delivery of the goods.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4; Story Sales, §§ 343-346; Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 386; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 848; McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 471, 472; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 399; Gardner v. Howland, 2 Pick. 509, 602; McKee v. Garcelon, 60 Me. 165; The Vaughan, 14 Wall. 258; Dows v. Greene, 24 N. Y. 638; Becker v. Hallgarten, 86 N. Y. 167.

<sup>2</sup> See, post, Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 848. And see Peters v. Ballistier, 3 Pick. 495.

<sup>3</sup> Stone v. Swift, 4 Pick. 389.

Of what are known as delivery-orders, Judge Blackburn has said that the indorsement of the instrument has no effect (independently of legislation) beyond that of an authority to receive possession. Blackb. Sales, 297. The later English cases confirm this view; and what are known as delivery-warrants, wharfinger's certificates, and the like, have been pronounced to be no documents of title representing the goods in any such sense, even with reference to third parties, as to suffice for carrying the complete property and possession out of the seller. Farina v. Home, 16 M. & W. 119; Story Sales, § 344; Gunn v. Bolckow, L. R. 10 Ch. 491; supra, § 392; McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309. See Shepardson v. Cary, 29 Wis. 34. "If a bill of lading is given," says Lord Campbell, "and that is indorsed for a valuable consideration, that would take away the right of the vendor to prevent the delivery of the goods; but that is not so with a delivery-order. . . . It is said that the delivery-order and the subsequent payment of the price by the second vendee take away the lien of the vendors. These acts do not seem to me to do so; for, first, this price was not paid to the original owners; and then to treat what passed between other people as an estoppel to the original owners, is to give the delivery-order the effect of a bill of lading, and thus the argument again and again comes round to that point for which no authority in the usage of trade or in the law can be shown." Per Lord Campbell, McEwan v. Smith, 2 H. L. Cas. 309. And see Lord Ch. Cottenham, ib.

But local mercantile usage, so well

§ 557. How Buyer may put an End to the Lien by tendering Performance, etc.—Since the seller may put an end to his recognized as to have presumably entered into the mutual agreement of parties, has much to do with these questions; and in the United States, and especially in sections largely concerned in inland transportation, warehouse-receipts have, in several instances, been treated as documents of title to much the same extent as bills of lading. Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 384; Shepardson v. Cary, 29 Wis. 34. Nor should the various acts of legislation in both countries be lost sight of, which, for certain specified purposes named, preserve or destroy liens, or give certain classes of these documents of title a quasi negotiable character by the force of positive law. Prominent among such enactments are the English Factors' Act of 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, § 2, and the Bills of Lading Act of 1849, Vict. c. 111, whose features reappear in the codes of some American States. See Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4, where the English statutes on this subject are fully set forth; Barber v. Meyerstein, L. R. 4 H. L. 317; Jessel v. Bath, L. R. 2 Ex. 267; Dows v. Greene, 24 N. Y. 638; Hale v. Milwaukee Dock Co., 29 Wis. 482. And here it should be observed that by the latest English Factors' Act, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39 (1877), numerous changes are made, particularly in the direction of assimilating all documents of title, when in the hands of a bonâ fide transferee for value from the original purchaser, to bills of lading, for the purpose of defeating the seller's lien and stoppage in transitu. Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 809. For the mutual convenience, besides, of owners who wish to secure advances upon collateral security, and the parties so advancing, may be found local statutes, as in New York, which specially provide that any person to whom warehouse-receipts are transferred by indorsement shall be deemed the owner, so far as to give validity to any pledge, lien, or transfer by him. Benj. ib.; Yenni v. McNamee, 45 N. Y. 614; N. Y. Laws 1858, c. 326. And see Mass. Pub. Stats. c. 72, § 1. And the effect of the late English statutes is, in that country, to enable, not only, as formerly, the bonâ fide buyer of goods under indorsement of a bill of lading, but likewise a party who loans or advances money upon the faith of such security, to prevail in title over the original seller who has actually transferred the document and suffered it to go into the market. Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5; Short v. Simpson, L. R. 1 C. P. 248; Barber v. Meyerstein, L. R. 4 H. L. 317; Pease v. Gloahec, L. R. 1 P. C. 219. But independently of legislation, and of special usage shown, the general rule of America, and likewise of Great Britain, appears to be to preserve the seller's lien and possessory rights in goods, notwithstanding the transfer of orders, warrants, or other documents less formal than bills of lading. See supra, § 539; Solomons v. Chesley, 58 N. H. 238. As to warehouse-receipts, for instance, and delivery-orders, the seller has been allowed to countermand and rescind, on ascertaining the buyer's insolvency, at any time before the warehouseman has delivered. Anderson v. Reed, 106 N. Y. 333; Keeler v. Goodwin, 111 Mass. 490.

One who buys or advances on the faith of these documents of title, does not, however, stand as securely as the innocent holder for value of a genuine bill of exchange or promissory note. Honest possession is not always an adequate protection in the instance of these merely quasi negotiable securities; for the indorsement gives the lien by delivery, so may the buyer terminate it by fulfilling, or offering to fulfil, his whole duty under the contract, and so entitling himself to delivery. Hence is it that the buyer's tender of price is held to extinguish the seller's lien, even though the seller refuse to receive the money; for the right is co-extensive only with the object it aims to secure, and cannot be made the means of oppression.<sup>1</sup> But the lien right, Mr. Story says, is a right to retain until the whole price is paid; so that a partial payment will not destroy, but only diminish, the lien, every single portion of property sold being covered by the lien for the smallest fraction of the price.<sup>2</sup> To this it should be added, however, that in part payments, as well as part deliveries, the real intent of the holder in general no such right as to enable him to claim the goods when the bill came to him through a finder or thief who had no right to the document. Gurney v. Behrend, 3 E. & B. 622; Blackb. Sales, 279; Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224. And where the weight is wrongly expressed in the document, Jessel v. Bath, L. R. 2 Ex. 267, or where so many barrels of "salt pork" are therein described as "mess pork," Hale v. Milwaukee Dock Co., 29 Wis. 482, the party who trusted to the document has been permitted to suffer; on the general ground, as it would appear, that unless legislation, usage, or express agreement, make it otherwise, nothing is to be delivered up under the document but the goods which the document actually represented, notwithstanding they were erroneously, but not fraudulently, misdescribed. See, further, 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 471, 472.

Where a bill of lading making the goods deliverable "to order or assigns" is transferred by the consignor and deposited as security for advances made by a third party, and then, upon repayment of the advance, is transferred back to him by the third party, his original remedies under the contract are restored, so as to enable him to sue for a breach committed before or after such re-transfer of the bill. Short v. Simpson, L. R. 1 C. P. 248.

A late decision in the English House of Lords treats of the effect of giving bills of lading in duplicate or triplicate, — a custom which largely prevails among merchants. It was held that the party who first gets one bill of lading out of the set gets the property which that set represents, and need not concern himself about the subsequent bills of the set; and that, while a ship-owner or wharfinger who delivers the goods to the holder of a subsequent bill may be excusable, the fact of such delivery will not affect the ownership of the goods as between the holders of the two bills. Meyerstein v. Barber, L. R. 4 H. L. 317 (1870). See also Glyn v. East India Dock Co., 7 App. Cas. 159; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 471, 472. As to the seller's acts restraining the effect of delivery by exercising the jus disponendi, see supra, c. 4; Craven v. Ryder, 4 Taunt. 433; Cowasjee v. Thompson, 5 Moore P. C. 165.

<sup>1</sup> Martindale v. Smith, 1 Q. B. 389; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 282. See supra, § 555.

contract will control; and several sales embraced under one entire contract must be, here as elsewhere, distinguished from separate and distinct transactions under as many distinct contracts.

§ 558. Right of Stoppage in Transitu; its Nature. — II. The last chance which the law gives the unpaid seller to reclaim his goods as his own, under the original contract of sale, is presented where the goods are delivered up, technically speaking, to the buyer, so that the seller's lien is gone; and yet, being on their transit and in the keeping of an agent, have not yet come into the buyer's actual custody, but continue in that of the carrier or middleman. Here the seller, by a stretch of judicial favor, is permitted, on discovering that the buyer is insolvent, to stop the goods before the buyer acquires possession, and retake them as his own, instead of suffering them to be thrown in among the insolvent's assets. The right of stoppage in transitu is to be carefully distinguished from that of lien, to which in many respects it bears resemblance, and operates as a sort of extension thereof. At the same time, as we have observed, the lien security is stretched practically to its utmost for protecting the seller who finds out, after agreeing to part with possession, that his buyer is insolvent.<sup>1</sup>

This right most likely originated in the law-merchant. It is not peculiar to Great Britain, but receives recognition in the other commercial countries of Europe, as France, Russia, and Holland; and the better opinion regards the rule as one of equity or civil jurisprudence.<sup>2</sup> The doctrine was first announced in England in 1690;<sup>3</sup> and, when equity inclined to abandon it, the common law took it up, and moulded it into its prevailing shape. But the right was generally con-

<sup>1</sup> See §§ 554, 556; Crummey v. Raudenbush, 55 Minn. 426.

<sup>2</sup> See Gibson v. Carruthers, 8 M. & W. 337, per Lord Abinger; Babcock v. Bonnell, 80 N. Y. 244, and cases cited; Wiseman v. Vandeputt, 2 Vern. 203; Story Sales, §§ 318, 399; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5;

Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; 2 Kent Com. 540; Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 312. See Black v. Bakers, 40 Jur. 77 (1867), as to the Scotch law of stoppage in transitu.

<sup>3</sup> See Wiseman v. Vandeputt, 2 Vern. 203.

ceded in the courts of England and the United States long before its consequences as to the respective parties found clear exposition.<sup>1</sup>

§ 559. The Same Subject; Division of this Topic.—Let us consider in order: (1st.) The parties by and against whom the right of stoppage in transitu may be exercised. (2d.) The transit, with its proper limits. (3d.) The method of exercising the right. (4th.) The effect of exercising the right. (5th.) How the right is defeated by the transfer of documents of title. (6th.) Other means of defeating or excluding this right.

§ 560. Parties by whom the Right is exercised; Seller, Consignor, etc.—(1st.) As to the parties by and against whom the right may be exercised. This right is conceded, not only to a seller, but to any consignor who may have bought the goods on his own money or credit, and to whom the buyer may be liable for the price,—in other words, both to sellers and to parties situated as sellers, even though such selling party may be in a certain sense a factor or agent.<sup>2</sup> Among parties thus favored is the seller of an interest in an executory agreement; in fact, any general or special agent whose act is recognized and confirmed by the selling or consigning principal for whom he thus acts;<sup>3</sup> but not a wholly unauthorized party, one who never had dealings with the seller, but stops the goods at a venture, as though bidding for the gratitude of a stranger.<sup>4</sup> Legislation sometimes lets in a surety, so as to permit of his act of stoppage; though the liability of such a party, on general principle, and apart from a settled usage, appears too remote for this purpose.<sup>5</sup> Nor

<sup>1</sup> Gibson v. Carruthers and other authorities, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1; Story Sales, §§ 323, 324; Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93; Ellershaw v. Magniac, 6 Ex. 570; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; cases infra; 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 848 et seq.; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93; Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 272. Cf. Gwyn v. Richmond R., 85 N. C. 429.

<sup>3</sup> Jenkyns v. Usborne, 7 M. & G. 678.

<sup>4</sup> See Story Sales, § 324; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1; Hutchings v. Nunes, 1 Moore P. C. N. S. 243; Bell v. Moss, 5 Whart. 189; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2; Aguirre v. Parmelee, 22 Conn. 473; Reynolds v. Boston, &c. R., 43 N. H. 580; Bird v. Brown, 4 Ex. 786.

<sup>5</sup> Siffkin v. Wray, 6 East, 371;

can a mere lien creditor claim to exercise the right ; for it is the seller's lien only, not that of miscellaneous parties, whose protection is here regarded.<sup>1</sup> Nor can a buyer stop goods in transit, being the adversary party ; though it is allowable for a buyer to countermand the sale with the seller's assent, so as to restore to the latter his property rights, save so far as some third party's rights may be injuriously affected thereby, — this being, in fact, a mutual rescission.<sup>2</sup>

A principal consigning goods to his factor who proves insolvent may stop them in transitu, even though the factor may have made advances, or be jointly interested in the goods.<sup>3</sup> Nor is a consignor deprived of this right by reason of having in his own hands goods of the consignee still unaccounted for, while the account current between them remains unadjusted and the balance is unascertained.<sup>4</sup> But the cases appear to pivot upon the inquiry, whether the party against whom the stoppage is made is still indebted to the stopping party as buyer or not ; the latter taking the benefit of a doubt. Hence is it that a partial payment of the price will not exclude one's right of stoppage ;<sup>5</sup> nor a postponed payment in bills of exchange or other securities ;<sup>6</sup> nor, in general, the fact that credit was given by the seller ;<sup>7</sup> while the taking of securities or any commodity, by way of full and absolute payment of the price, does.<sup>8</sup> When payment, however, has been made for part of the goods under an appor-

Story Sales, § 323 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1, citing act 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 5 ; Imperial Bank v. London Dock Co., 5 Ch. D. 195.

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 323 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1 ; supra, §§ 531, 532 ; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 386-388 ; Kinloch v. Craig, 3 T. R. 119 ; 4 Brown P. C. 47.

<sup>2</sup> See Story Sales, § 324, Bennett's n. ; Grout v. Hill, 4 Gray, 361 ; Sturtevant v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 538 ; Ash v. Putnam, 1 Hill, N. Y. 302. Cf. Bolton v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 431 ; post, c. 17.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1 ; Kinloch v. Craig, 3 T. R. 119 ; Newsom v. Thornton, 6 East, 17 ; Story Sales, § 323.

<sup>4</sup> Wood v. Jones, 7 D. & R. 126. But see Vertue v. Jewell, 4 Camp. 31, explained in Benj. Sales, ib.

<sup>5</sup> Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93 ; Van Casteel v. Booker, 2 Ex. 702 ; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93 ; Story Sales, § 327.

<sup>6</sup> Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 345 ; Feise v. Wray, 3 East, 93. See supra, §§ 418-422.

<sup>7</sup> Clapp v. Sohmer, 55 Iowa, 273 ; supra, §§ 533-535 ; Babcock v. Bonnell, 80 N. Y. 244.

<sup>8</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1 ; Eaton v. Cook, 32 Vt. 58 ; Story

tionable contract, this right of stoppage applies only to the goods unpaid for.<sup>1</sup>

§ 561. Party against whom the Right is exercised; Insolvent Buyer, etc. — The party against whom this right is to be exercised is the buyer, or quasi buyer, provided such party be bankrupt or insolvent and not otherwise. The insolvency of an intermediate party would give to the original owner no right to stop the goods against one not insolvent, with whom he had dealt directly as seller.<sup>2</sup> Insolvency, or a general inability to pay one's debts, can be shown by a variety of circumstances; and one manifest instance is, where the buyer has stopped payment.<sup>3</sup> That the seller need not wait for a formal adjudication of bankruptcy, or even for the institution of proceedings in insolvency is quite clear; and, in case of uncertainty, he runs little risk by acting promptly as his welfare demands. For, if the buyer be insolvent by the time the goods reach their destination, the act of stoppage is justified; though, if he remained solvent to that period, the seller would be bound to deliver the goods, and indemnify the buyer besides.<sup>4</sup> A Connecticut case goes so far as to declare that the buyer's failure must, in point of fact, have been later than the sale; a doctrine which, in other States, however, has been repeatedly disaffirmed;<sup>5</sup> and the general inclination is undoubtedly to limit the inquiry to the point of actual insolvency on the Sales, § 327. Charging a commission for negotiating paper taken by way of postponing payment, does not divest the seller of his right of stoppage. Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93.

<sup>1</sup> Merchant Banking Co. v. Steel Co., 5 Ch. D. 205.

<sup>2</sup> Eaton v. Cook, 32 Vt. 58.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 2; Story Sales, §§ 327, 329; Newsom v. Thornton, 6 East, 17; Dixon v. Yates, 5 B. & Ad. 313; Clark v. Lynch, 4 Daly, 83; Herrick v. Borst, 4 Hill, N. Y. 660; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. 127; Tuthill v. Skidmore, 124 N. Y. 148. The buyer's "absconding" does not necessarily conclude his insolvency. Smith v. Barker, 102 Ala. 679.

<sup>4</sup> See the Constantia, 6 Rob. Ad. 321.

<sup>5</sup> Rogers v. Thomas, 20 Conn. 54, disapproved by Blum v. Marks, 21 La. Ann. 268; Benedict v. Schaettle, 12 Ohio St. 515; Reynolds v. Boston, &c. R. R. Co., 43 N. H. 580; O'Brien v. Norris, 16 Md. 122; Hays v. Mouille, 14 Penn. St. 48; Loeb v. Peters, 63 Ala. 243; White v. Mitchell, 38 Mich. 390; Kingman v. Denison, 84 Mich. 612.

buyer's part, unless it appears that the seller made the bargain with knowledge of the buyer's insolvency, in which case the right would be denied him.<sup>1</sup>

§ 562. The Transit, with its Proper Limits; Intervention of Carrier. — (2d.) As to the transit, with its proper limits. The right we are considering should be distinguished from broader rights of recovery, under a mutual rescission of the sale while goods are on transit, or otherwise, wherever more than a lien for price is to be asserted, and the buyer's insolvency is no essential condition. To allow of the right of stoppage in transitu, there must be, besides those adversely interested as buyer and seller, a third party, — namely, the carrier or middleman in possession of the goods, — acting in one sense as the buyer's agent, but, in truth, a sort of neutral custodian. When he takes possession from the seller as carrier, the transit begins; when he divests himself of possession in such capacity to the buyer, the transit ends; and the stoppage, to be effectual, must occur between these two points.<sup>2</sup> This stoppage right begins only when the lien right ends. It must appear at the outset, so far as the seller's right of stoppage is concerned, that the custodian for the transit is not retained as the seller's agent, as would be the case if the seller reserved the jus disponendi to himself by certain acts, and thus kept himself owner of the goods; nor as the buyer's special and immediate agent, taking and holding custody strictly on his behalf, and subject to his directions; but as the buyer's agent only so far as the law thus treats a carrier or middleman.<sup>3</sup> So long as the carrier's lien

<sup>1</sup> Blum v. Marks, 21 La. Ann. 268; Conyers v. Ennis, 2 Mason, 236; Reynolds v. Boston, &c. R. R. Co., 43 N. H. 580; O'Brien v. Norris, 16 Md. 122; Buckley v. Furniss, 15 Wend. 137; Loeb v. Peters, 63 Ala. 243.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3; Story Sales, § 336.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Van Casteel v. Booker, 2 Ex. 691; Turner v. Liverpool Docks Co., 6 Ex. 543; Schotsman v. Lan- cashire, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 2 Ch. 332; 2 Kent Com. 545; Blackb. Sales, 242; Berndston v. Strang, L. R. 4 Eq. 481; L. R. 3 Ch. 639; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307; Covell v. Hitchcock, 23 Wend. 611; Cabeen v. Campbell, 30 Penn. St. 254; Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 312. See Gwyn v. Richmond R., 85 N. C. 429, which holds that where the contract for transportation is in legal effect with the buyer (the consignor for unpaid freight continues, it will be strongly presumed that he holds the goods as carrier and not so as to exclude a seller's right of stoppage.<sup>1</sup>

The transit ordinarily continues until the goods are actually delivered to the buyer, or to some one whom he designates as his authorized agent to receive the goods on his behalf; and this is usually, but not invariably, postponed to the arrival of the goods at the journey's end. Supposing the transit to require a change of carriers pending the arrival at the ultimate destination,—as where goods en route from Chicago to London pass over different lines of railway, and then require shipment by vessel besides,—the transit may be broken at various points, and the goods may lie over in warehouses, awaiting opportunities to go forward. Now, the main question as to every intermediate agent is, whether he is the buyer's agent to keep the goods, and take the buyer's new orders as to their further disposal and a new destination; or, on the other hand, an agent for the purpose of carrying out the original forwarding intent.<sup>2</sup> In the former case, and where some fresh impulse must be given to the goods, the seller's right of stoppage has ceased: in the latter it continues. A certain point being reached, where the goods come into the hands of parties who await new orders from the original buyer to forward to his own sub-buyer or another, or where they go back again to the original seller to start them under new directions from the buyer, the first transit has been deemed at an end.<sup>3</sup> Not so, however, where the intermediate custody is incidental to the continuous purpose of forwarding to the ulterior point of destination determined upon,<sup>4</sup> even though the buyer's further acting as his agent, though paying in advance for the goods), and the company is liable to the latter for non-delivery, there exists no right of stoppage. Sed qu.

<sup>1</sup> Falk, Ex parte, 14 Ch. D. 446; 7 App. Cas. 584.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 545.

<sup>3</sup> Blackb. Sales, 224, 244; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3; Dixon

v. Baldwin, 5 East, 175; Valpy v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 837; Smith v. Hudson, 4 B. & S. 431; Sawyer v. Joslin, 20 Vt. 172; Guilford v. Smith, 30 Vt. 49. See Bethell v. Clark, 19 Q. B. D. 553; 20 Q. B. D. 615, 617; § 564.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. ib.; Story Sales, §§ 334-336; Coates v. Railton, 6 B. & C. 422; Covell v. Hitchcock, 23 Wend.

directions are awaited as to details in furtherance of that purpose.<sup>1</sup> As preliminary to the main transit, the goods may be so warehoused for temporary purposes, or placed in such neutral custody, by virtue of the seller's undertaking to forward them to the buyer, that the seller must be deemed to have either his original lien upon them, or a right of stoppage in transitu, for security of the price.<sup>2</sup> The fact that the buyer is a passenger on the same ship and transit as the goods, does not exclude this right of stoppage when possession is with the carrier.<sup>3</sup> Nor that the buyer belonged to the firm of the seller.<sup>4</sup>

§ 563. The Same Subject; Buyer may Break Transit and Intercept Goods. — The issue herein involved, which is one of intent, though often obscure because manifested by equivocal acts, is rendered all the more doubtful in the cases, from the circumstance, now readily admitted, that a buyer has the right to break the original transit and intercept his goods, personally or by means of an authorized agent, at any intermediate point. His exercise of this right in good faith and with corresponding intent puts an end to the seller's opportunity of stopping the goods on his own behalf.<sup>5</sup> Carrier and consignee may agree, too, to change the route and vary the place of delivery, and thus shut out the right of stoppage, provided the seller has parted title;<sup>6</sup> nor will a wrongful re-611; Cabeen v. Campbell, 30 Penn. St. 254; Hays v. Mouille, 14 Penn. St. 48; Markland v. Creditors, 7 Cal. 213.

<sup>1</sup> Harris v. Pratt, 17 N. Y. 249.

<sup>2</sup> Mohr v. Boston, &c. R., 106 Mass. 67. The transit contemplated by the terms of the agreement is to be considered; but a liberal rule of construction is here applied. See Watson, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 35; Rosevear Clay Co., Ex parte, 11 Ch. D. 560. "Goods are deemed to be in transitu not only while they remain in possession of the carrier, whether by water or land, and although such carrier may have been named and appointed by the consignee, but also when they are in any place of deposit connected with the transmission and delivery of them, and until they arrive at the actual or constructive possession of the consignee." Abbott Shipping, cited with approval in Kendall v. Marshall, 11 Q. B. D. 364.

<sup>3</sup> Lyons v. Hoffnug, 15 App. Cas. 391.

<sup>4</sup> Cooper, Ex parte, 11 Ch. D. 68.

<sup>5</sup> Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 518; London, &c. R. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 7 H. & N. 400; Mohr v. Boston, &c. R. R. Co., 106 Mass. 67; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2.

<sup>6</sup> London, &c. R. R. Co. v. Bartlett, supra; Wood v. Yeatman, 15 B. Mon. 270.

fusal of the carrier to deliver impair the buyer's right to take full control.<sup>1</sup>

§ 564. Carrier's Acts at Terminus ; what Acts exclude Seller.

— As to the termination of the transit, the simple arrival of the goods at the place of ulterior destination does not per se put an end to the seller's right of stoppage ; but he may overtake them at any time before the buyer has acquired possession. Such acts of the carrier as merely entering at the custom-house do not put the goods into the buyer's possession ; nor partially unloading, and then putting them on board again ;<sup>2</sup> and he might even deliver a portion, and yet leave the seller free to stop the remainder.<sup>3</sup> Nor would the buyer acquire possession so as to defeat the seller's lien by merely marking the goods, going on board and touching them, taking samples, or performing other symbolical acts, where something more explicit is called for ;<sup>4</sup> while, on the other hand, by taking the goods into his personal custody or that of his exclusive agent, whether before the transit begins, or midway, or at the end, he assumes an entire control of possession in such a sense as utterly extinguishes the seller's right to stop them as his own.<sup>5</sup>

What most embarrasses in this connection is to state the precise point on which the transit ends where the carrier has finished the transportation, and yet holds the goods in his keeping ; for he might, upon this state of facts, prove, not a

<sup>1</sup> Bird v. Brown, 4 Ex. 786 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3 ; Blackb. Sales, 259.

<sup>2</sup> Northey v. Field, 2 Esp. 613 ; Mottram v. Heyer, 5 Denio, 629 ; Harris v. Pratt, 17 N. Y. 249 ; Donath v. Broomhead, 7 Penn. St. 301. But warehousing the goods might have this effect. Ib. ; Guilford v. Smith, 30 Vt. 49. And see Parker v. Byrnes, 1 Low. 539 ; Crawshay v. Edes, 1 B. & C. 181 ; Mohr v. Boston & Albany R., 106 Mass. 67.

<sup>3</sup> Crawshay v. Edes, 1 B. & C. 181 ; Buckley v. Furniss, 17 Wend. 504 ; Cooper, Ex parte, 11 Ch. Div. 68 ;

Story Sales, § 332 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3 ; Potts v. New York & New England R., 131 Mass. 455 ; Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 857. See also Jenks v. Fulmer, 160 Penn. St. 527.

<sup>4</sup> Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 518 ; Story Sales, § 338.

<sup>5</sup> Bolton v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 431 ; James v. Griffin, 1 M. & W. 20 ; Naylor v. Dennie, 8 Pick. 198 ; Covell v. Hitchcock, 23 Wend. 611 ; Hays v. Mouille, 14 Penn. St. 48 ; Story Sales, § 333 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3 ; 2 Kent Com. 545.

carrier still, but a mere warehouseman or custodian for the buyer. Such a case must turn, ultimately, upon the facts presented; but the modern tendency is to presume that the transit continues for the seller's benefit, in absence of clear testimony showing that buyer and carrier have come to some mutual understanding for a change in the character of the latter's possession, so as to leave him a carrier no longer. Thus the seller's right of stoppage has been upheld, notwithstanding the buyer went personally on board the vessel on its arrival, or sent his lighter, to get the goods, the captain excusing himself from delivering for one cause or another.<sup>1</sup> Nor does the carrier's notification to the buyer that the goods have arrived end conclusively the transit.<sup>2</sup> So, with reference to railroad and other inland carriers, the seller's right of stoppage has been protected against attaching creditors of the buyer, after the goods were transferred from the train to the freight dépôt, and while the carrier was in no sense the buyer's agent.<sup>3</sup> But, if the carrier once converts himself into a warehouseman for the buyer by virtue of some contract or course of dealing with him, the transit for stoppage is ended.<sup>4</sup>

Another difficulty, which is considered in the latest cases, arises where a fresh transit is to succeed an original transit. Where the transit in question is a transit which has been caused either by the terms of the contract or by the directions of buyer to seller, the right of stoppage in transitu still exists; but if, on the contrary, fresh directions from the

<sup>1</sup> Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 518; Coventry v. Gladstone, L. R. 6 Eq. 44. And see Jackson v. Nichol, 5 Bing. N. C. 508; Cooper, Ex parte, 11 Ch. D. 68.

<sup>2</sup> Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 272.

<sup>3</sup> Calahan v. Babcock, 21 Ohio St. 281; Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 272; Becker v. Hallgarten, 86 N. Y. 173. While goods are stored by the carrier in his warehouse at the place of destination because the buyer fails to pay freight and remove them, the right of stoppage in transitu continues; and this notwithstanding the goods were sold on credit. Clapp v. Peck, 55 Iowa, 270. And see Kendall v. Marshall, 11 Q. B. D. 356; Macon Railroad v. Meador, 65 Ga. 705; Barrow, Ex parte, 6 Ch. D. 783; Miles, Ex parte, 15 Q. B. D. 39.

<sup>4</sup> Sawyer v. Joslin, 20 Vt. 172; Hoover v. Tibbitts, 13 Wis. 79; Covell v. Hitchcock, 23 Wend. 611; Bolton v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 1 C. P. 431; McFetredge v. Piper, 40 Iowa, 627; Williams v. Hodges, 113 N. C. 36.

buyer give the goods a new transit independently of the seller, the new transit makes no part of the original transit and the right of stoppage is gone.<sup>1</sup>

While the buyer or his assignee hesitates or refuses to take the goods, the transit of necessity continues, so as to entitle the seller to stop them;<sup>2</sup> but the buyer's hesitation avails nothing if he finally takes possession while the seller's right slumbers.<sup>3</sup> The right of terminating the transit and taking possession of the goods passes, if the buyer dies, to his executor or administrator,<sup>4</sup> or, if he has gone into bankruptcy, to his assignee,<sup>5</sup> to be exercised by such representative as the buyer himself might have done. But in all such cases the interception by or on behalf of the buyer should show the intention of taking possession as owner, and not for some other limited and inconsistent purpose.<sup>6</sup>

§ 565. Method of exercising Right of Stoppage in Transitu.—(3d.) As to the method of exercising the right of stoppage. No particular method is prescribed by law; and the only thing requisite is, that, during the transit, the seller shall, by some act or declaration plain enough for a carrier to comprehend its import, countermand delivery to the buyer. For, to use the oft-repeated expression of Lord Hardwicke, the vendor is so much favored as to be justifiable in getting his goods back, by any means not criminal, before they reach the possessor of an insolvent vendee.<sup>7</sup> But the stoppage on the seller's account must, in order to be effectual, be made on his own behalf in assertion of his paramount right to the goods.<sup>8</sup>

The usual mode of stopping the goods is by notifying the

<sup>1</sup> See Bethell v. Clark, 19 Q. B. D. 553; 20 Q. B. D. 615, 617; § 562; Becker v. Hallgarten, 86 N. Y. 167; Pottinger v. Hecksher, 2 Grant, 309; Brooke Iron Co. v. O'Brien, 135 Mass. 442; Lewis v. Sharvey, Minn. (1895).

<sup>2</sup> Bolton v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., supra; Grout v. Hill, 4 Gray, 361; Sturtevant v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 538; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 3.

<sup>3</sup> Greaner v. Mullen, 15 Penn. St. 200.

<sup>4</sup> Conyers v. Ennis, 2 Mas. 236.

<sup>5</sup> Ellis v. Hunt, 3 T. R. 467; Inglis v. Usherwood, 1 East, 515.

<sup>6</sup> See post, § 569.

<sup>7</sup> 1 Atk. 250.

<sup>8</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 4; Blackb. Sales, 266; Story Sales, § 325. See Phelps v. Comber, 29 Ch. D. 813 (insufficient notice).

carrier or middle-man, who holds possession, of the seller's claim thereto, forbidding delivery to the buyer, and requiring that the goods be held subject to the seller's further orders. This notice should be given, if possible, to the person already or presently in actual custody of the goods, as the master of the ship or a railroad freight-agent; and, if only to the ship-owner or principal party engaged in the transportation, then in season sufficient for him to transmit the proper orders to his agent which shall overtake the goods; the main object being, that notice shall be brought to the custodian concerned in the transit soon enough to enable him to act upon the seller's countermand.<sup>1</sup> The effect of such notice, seasonably given and sufficiently plain in expression, is to revest the seller's possession and lien; and the carrier is bound to obey, leaving the justification of the stoppage with the seller as concerns the sale parties; since the due exercise of this right is at the seller's, and not the carrier's, peril. The carrier is not to disregard the seller's claim, nor to undertake to solve the dispute between buyer and seller, nor to ask for evidence of the right; but to obey the seller's order implicitly, and thereupon refuse delivery to the buyer.<sup>2</sup> It is only when he is sure that the seller's right must fail of exercise that he can safely disregard the notice; and even here, though practically right, he is theoretically wrong, because of his disobedience to orders: nor, in general, will the carrier's delivery, despite of the countermand received, balk the seller of his rights under the stoppage.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 M. & W. 518; The Tigress, 32 L. J. Adm. 97; Meyerstein v. Barber, L. R. 4 H. L. 317; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 4; Story Sales, § 325; Seymour v. Newton, 105 Mass. 272; Rucker v. Donovan, 13 Kans. 251; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93; Bloomingtondale v. R. R., 6 Lea, 616. If notice is given to the employer, it should be given in time to enable him to send notice to his servant not to deliver. As to giving notice to ship-owners where the transportation is by water, see Falk, Ex parte, 14 Ch. D. 446; 7 App. Cas. 585; Watson, Ex parte, 5 Ch. D. 35.

<sup>2</sup> Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 168; The Tigress, 32 L. J. Adm. 97; Bloomingtondale v. R. R., 6 Lea, 616.

<sup>3</sup> Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 168; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 4; Glyn v. East India Dock Co., 7 App. Cas. 591; Story Sales, § 325. See Walker, Ex parte, cited Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 4, as to the seller's stoppage by entering the goods in his own name at the custom-house.

§ 566. Effect of exercising the Right of Stoppage in Transitu.—(4th.) As to the effect of exercising the right of stoppage. It appears to be now well established, both in England and in the United States, that as the seller's stoppage in transitu may be exercised by simply serving notice upon the carrier, so its effect is, not to rescind the sale, but to restore the goods, so to speak, to the consigning party, and put him in possession again, with the rights of an unpaid seller to hold until he is paid.<sup>1</sup> Upon this ground, that there is still a privity of contract and not rescission, courts of equity take jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> The right of the buyer, on the one hand, to obtain the goods upon promptly paying up, and of the seller, on the other, to re-sell upon notice and after a reasonable delay, as on the buyer's account, follow the principles already laid down with regard to the unpaid seller's lien for price; with only the addition of costs and expenses incidental to the stoppage, seriously diminishing the buyer's chance of a balance.<sup>3</sup> Hence it is held that the seller need not refund a part payment received on the goods before enforcing his right,<sup>4</sup> nor tender back the purchaser's notes given conditionally for the price of goods;<sup>5</sup> and the proceeds of the goods being applied, if re-sold, to the seller's recompense, he must account to the buyer for whatever may remain in his hands, or, in case of a deficiency, may pursue the ordi-

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 320; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 6; Wentworth v. Outhwaite, 10 M. & W. 436; Martindale v. Smith, 1 Q. B. 389; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307; Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93; 15 Me. 314; Patton's Appeal, 45 Penn. St. 151; 7 App. Cas. 581. In Babcock v. Bonnell, 80 N. Y. 244, 251, Church, C. J., observes that whatever uncertainty there may be as to the rule in England upon the point whether the effect is rescission or not, the decisions in this country are quite preponderating in favor of the theory of a lien; though intimating that as an original question the doctrine of rescission commends itself to his judgment as more simple, and usually more just. See 80 N. Y. 244, 251, and cases cited. As we have elsewhere intimated, the right is hardly to be considered as literally that of lien, but as sui generis. Supra, §§ 531, 546, 547, 558.

<sup>2</sup> See Lord Cairns in Schotsman v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 2 Ch. 332.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 320; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 6; 2 Kent Com. 541; cases infra; Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y. 661.

<sup>4</sup> Newhall v. Vargas, 13 Me. 93; 15 Me. 312.

<sup>5</sup> Hays v. Mouille, 14 Penn. St. 48.

nary remedies of a creditor against the buyer for the balance.<sup>1</sup> On the whole, the respective remedies of the parties under a stoppage, although not very clearly settled by decisions, are adjusted on the principle that the sale parties stand substantially as though the seller had not parted possession when the transit commenced. And hence, too, it is held that where stoppage is made of goods sold on credit, the seller ought to hold them until the expiration of the credit, and be able to deliver them upon payment of the price according to the original contract.<sup>2</sup>

The seller's right of stoppage in transitu for his price is paramount to that of attaching creditors to attach; and hence, though the goods be attached while on their transit by creditors of the buyer, the seller may exercise his right before the transit ends with the usual effect, and the attachment must yield to his claim.<sup>3</sup> So, too, is this right of a higher nature than any general claim of the transporting party; and stoppage in transitu will accordingly supersede the carrier's or warehouseman's lien for any general balance against the buyer, but not for his special charges upon the particular goods.<sup>4</sup>

§ 567. How the Right of Stoppage is defeated by Transfer of Documents of Title. — (5th.) How the right of stoppage is <sup>1</sup> Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 312; Story Sales, § 320. And see Stanton v. Eager, 16 Pick. 475. But it is held that the right of stoppage as to goods taken in a vessel chartered by the buyer does not extend so far as to entitle the seller, as against the buyer's other creditors, to claim insurance money which accrues to the buyer because of damage done to the goods in transit. Berndston v. Strang, L. R. 3 Ch. 588. And as to a buyer's claim for freight and charges in transportation on his ship, see Newhall v. Vargas, 15 Me. 312.

<sup>2</sup> Babcock v. Bonnell, 80 N. Y. 244.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 321; Smith v. Goss, 1 Camp. 282; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 1; Seymour v. Newton, 105

Mass. 272; Clark v. Lynch, 4 Daly (N. Y.), 83; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2; O'Brien v. Norris, 16 Md. 122; Wood v. Yeatman, 15 B. Mon. 270; Blum v. Marks, 21 La. Ann. 268. And see Sherman v. Rugee, 55 Wis. 346; post, § 569; Fox v. Willis, 60 Tex. 373; 69 Miss. 282.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 321; Oppenheim v. Russell, 3 B. & P. 42; Benj. Sales, supra. See Mercantile, &c. Bank v. Gladstone, L. R. 3 Ex. 233. A part delivery by the carrier does not, as a rule, prevent him from asserting his lien for lawful freight and charges on every part under the consignment as against the seller who stops in transitu. Potts v. New York & New England R., 131 Mass. 455.

defeated by the transfer of documents of title. The only mode of defeating the seller's right of stoppage in transitu, as yet clearly recognized, appears to be a bonâ fide transfer for value to a third party of the bill of lading, or perhaps, under the influence of late legislation, certain other documents of title of a like quasi negotiable character.<sup>1</sup> As between the original sale parties, the buyer's possession of the bill of lading, in advance of the arrival of the goods, can have no greater effect than to give him the property in the goods, without depriving the seller of his right to stop them on the way.<sup>2</sup> But with the transfer of these documents of title a new party comes into view, who holds the assigning party's rights; and it has long been settled law, that this assignee, if a bonâ fide transferee for valuable consideration, may claim the goods as his own, divested altogether of the seller's right of stoppage.<sup>3</sup> The transferee who could thus hold against the first seller was formerly thought to be, of necessity, a sub-purchaser of the goods; and such is still the general rule, save where legislation (as under the English Factors' Acts) has extended the privileges of bonâ fide holders for value to parties who loan or advance money on security of the goods.<sup>4</sup> But there remains still this practical difference between the transferee of a bill of lading by way of sale and the transferee by way of pledge or mortgage, that in the former instance the seller's right is wholly defeated, while in the latter the seller can stop the goods and retain all interest in them over and above discharging the transferee's security.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 556 and n.

<sup>2</sup> Fraser v. Witt, L. R. 7 Eq. 64; Stanton v. Eager, 16 Pick. 474.

<sup>3</sup> Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 5; Story Sales, § 344; 2 Kent Com. 547, 548; Pease v. Gloahec, L. R. 1 P. C. 219; Coventry v. Gladstone, L. R. 6 Eq. 44; Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 445; Winslow v. Norton, 29 Me. 421; Dows v. Greene, 24 N. Y. 638; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2; Becker v. Hallgarten, 86 N. Y. 167.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 347; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 5; supra, § 556 n.

<sup>5</sup> Westzinthus, In re, 5 B. & Ad. 817; Spalding v. Ruding, 6 Beav. 376; Berndston v. Strang, L. R. 4 Eq. 486, n.; Chandler v. Fulton, 10 Tex. 2; Golding, Ex parte, 13 Ch. D. 628. As to a government store-keeper's certificate, see Mohr v. Boston & Albany R., 106 Mass. 67; 135 Mass. 442.

§ 568. The Same Subject; Transfer must be to Bonâ Fide Third Party for Value.—The bonâ fides of such transferee's title is material. He might know that the goods were not paid for, and yet take the instrument in good faith; since goods are bought on credit as well as for cash. But if he knows the goods are not paid for, and besides that the original buyer is insolvent and cannot pay for them, or other circumstances are brought home to him showing that the bill of lading is not honestly assignable by the buyer, he cannot by taking it exclude the seller from exercising his right of stoppage.<sup>1</sup> A transferee of the bill in trust for creditors of the insolvent buyer must yield, therefore, to the unpaid seller.<sup>2</sup> A late English case goes so far in exacting scrupulous dealings as even to uphold the unpaid seller against any creditor who takes a transfer of the bill of lading from his debtor in consideration of merely releasing some antecedent claim;<sup>3</sup> but the American rule may not be so strict.<sup>4</sup>

§ 569. Other Means of defeating or excluding the Right of Stoppage.—(6th.) Whether other means of defeating or excluding the right of stoppage exist than those already stated, receives some attention. Doubtless the right might be excluded by an express agreement in advance, induced by no fraud as to the buyer's solvency or otherwise; and so, too, might the seller waive his right.<sup>5</sup> The buyer's opportunity <sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 345; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 1, c. 5, § 5; Cuming v. Brown, 9 East, 506; Salomons v. Nissen, 2 T. R. 681; Vertue v. Jewell, 4 Camp. 31. The bonâ fide holder who acquires the bill of lading without knowledge of the buyer's insolvency or of a stoppage in transitu is protected, even though acquiring the document in fact after the stoppage had been made. Newhall v. Central Pacific R., 51 Cal. 345. But this case goes very far.

<sup>2</sup> Harris v. Pratt, 17 N. Y. 249; 2 Woods, 35.

<sup>3</sup> Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte, L. R. 2 P. C. 393. Disapproved in Leusk v. Scott, 2 Q. B. D. 376.

<sup>4</sup> In this country, apparently, one might actually take an assignment in this way, and yet be a bonâ fide purchaser for value. See Lee v. Kimball, 45 Me. 172, and cases cited. But Loeb v. Peters, 63 Ala. 243, has since held that the transfer of a bill of lading as mere collateral security for a pre-existing debt does not make the transferee a holder for value as against a stoppage in transitu; and this, on the whole, seems the sounder view. In Lee v. Kimball, a bonâ fide sale of the goods was said to have been made, the payment of an antecedent debt constituting the consideration.

<sup>5</sup> What has been said supra, §§ 537-544, as to estoppel of the seller as to to intercept the goods we have already considered.<sup>1</sup> But an officer's seizure of the goods by virtue of civil process does not defeat the seller's right ; for this is not an interception in effect by the buyer or his own agent.<sup>2</sup> Nor does the buyer's assignment to his creditors, under circumstances indicating no intention to regard the goods as assets, defeat the seller's right.<sup>3</sup> Nor does the buyer's mere agreement, before receiving the goods, to transfer the same to another.<sup>4</sup> For the act on the buyer's part which concludes the seller must import the assumption of dominion over the goods as his own already. And the buyer's sub-sale of the goods, without his own seller's consent, cannot take effect against this prior right of stoppage, so long as the situation precluded his actual or constructive possession and his delivery of possession to his own purchaser.<sup>5</sup>

CHAPTER XV.

BUYER'S REMEDIES.

§ 570. Leading Instances stated where Buyer may invoke Remedies.— There are three leading instances in which the buyer of chattels finds occasion to invoke his remedies under the sale contract : (1st) where the seller fails altogether to deliver ; (2d) where delivery is made or tendered, but the thing is not, in kind or quality or quantity, what was bargained for ; (3d) where the delivery is unreasonably late. The remedies suitable in these three instances will be separately considered.

§ 571. Where the Seller fails altogether to deliver ; Action for Damages.— (1st.) Where the seller fails altogether to third parties by his own acts, would doubtless apply to the right of stoppage in transitu.

<sup>1</sup> Supra, § 563.

<sup>2</sup> Sherman v. Rugee, 55 Wis. 346 ; supra, § 566.

<sup>3</sup> See Clark v. Bartlett, 50 Wis.

543, which construes the local statute as to voluntary assignments with inventory, &c.

<sup>4</sup> Clapp v. Sohmer, 55 Iowa, 273.

<sup>5</sup> Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307 ; Treadwell v. Aydlett, 9 Heisk. 388 ; 16 Neb. 612 ; 6 Bosw. 77.

deliver, the common remedy is by a personal action against the seller for damages caused by his breach of the contract; and the measure of damages is, in general, the difference between the price contracted for and the market price of the goods at the time when and the place where delivery was due. This is the declared rule of England and America.<sup>1</sup> Even if it appears that the goods could have been bought for less than the price agreed on at the time and place of delivery, the buyer will recover nominal damages; since every breach of contract imports some damage at law, though no actual damage in fact can be shown.<sup>2</sup>

§ 572. Rule of Damages in Such Case. — The main object of the law in awarding damages is to make the injured party whole; and, in the present case, the loss to be made up is, as nearly as possible, what it must have cost the buyer to go promptly into the nearest market and procure the same kind of chattels from some one else, for the purposes of use or of sub-sale, according to the natural or understood import of the transaction. Hence it is not the wholesale price at the place of delivery that we measure by, but the retail price, if the buyer can only procure the goods in the market at retail.<sup>3</sup> The goods which nearest approximate in market value those ordered have sometimes sufficed as the standard, even though somewhat higher priced; <sup>4</sup> and, if there be no

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Sedgwick Damages, 5th ed. 289-340; Story Sales, §§ 430, 431, 448; Barrow v. Arnaud, 8 Q. B. 604-609; Boorman v. Nash, 9 B. & C. 145; Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341; Chinery v. Viall, 5 H. & N. 288; Wilson v. Lancashire, &c. R. R. Co., 9 C. B. n. s. 632; Bartlett v. Blanchard, 13 Gray, 429; Northrup v. Cook, 39 Mo. 202; McHose v. Fulmer, 73 Penn. St. 365; Furlong v. Polleys, 30 Me. 491; Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y. 40; Parsons v. Sutton, 66 N. Y. 92; Knibs v. Jones, 44 Md. 396; Gordon v. Norris, 49 N. H. 376; Thompson v. Woodruff, 7 Coldw. 401; Jemmison v. Gray, 29

Iowa, 537; Crawford v. Manufacturing Co., 88 N. C. 554.

<sup>2</sup> Valpy v. Oakeley, 16 Q. B. 941; Griffiths v. Perry, 1 E. & E. 680; Deere v. Lewis, 51 Ill. 254. It is ruled in Kountz v. Kirkpatrick, 72 Penn. St. 376, that what is called the "market price," or the quotation of the article for the particular day, is not always to be exclusively considered, but that the true value may be drawn from other sources where it is shown that the price for the particular day had been unnaturally inflated. The contract here was to furnish petroleum.

<sup>3</sup> Haskell v. Hunter, 23 Mich. 305.

<sup>4</sup> Hinde v. Liddell, L. R. 10 Q. B. 265.

market price at the precise place of delivery, the nearest practicable market, with the enhanced expenses of transportation thence and analogous items, may be taken into account; the injured party being always supposed to do like any other judicious buyer under the same circumstances.<sup>1</sup> But, if it be absolutely impossible to obtain the article in market, the actual loss naturally sustained by the buyer must be computed approximately in some other way.<sup>2</sup> On an agreement to deliver chattels on demand, the market value at the time of demand is the general rule of damages.<sup>3</sup> If transportation was to have been from a distance, and the seller proves in default, we reckon as between the total intended cost to the buyer and the market price at place of due arrival, not at the foreign place, in many instances; the main intent being still to make the injured party whole under the contract; and this may properly require, from due regard to the mutual understanding, that the expected cost to the buyer of transportation be deducted in the seller's favor.<sup>4</sup> And, in general, where a given place is fixed upon as the place of delivery under the contract, the inquiry as to market prices is limited to that place, or, at all events, starts out from it; while the ascertainment of such price is peculiarly for the jury to determine upon all the circumstances.<sup>5</sup>

But the rule above stated, though a convenient method of giving the buyer full indemnity in most cases, is not inflexible; and, while the Roman law in this respect was more lax than our own, the common law permits the assessment of <sup>1</sup> Haskell v. Hunter, 23 Mich. 305; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 310; Bourne v. Ashley, 1 Low. 27; Shepherd v. Hampton, 3 Wheat. 209; Pearce v. Carter, 3 Houst. 385; Furlong v. Polleys, 30 Me. 491; 13 Nev. 156; 127 Mass. 394; McCormick v. Hamilton, 23 Gratt. 561; Burst v. Burton, 47 N. Y. 167; Grand Tower Co. v. Phillips, 23 Wall. 471, 479.

<sup>2</sup> McHose v. Fulmer, 73 Penn. St. 365; post, same section; Cockburn v. Lumber Co., 54 Wis. 619. But see Jemmison v. Gray, 29 Iowa, 537.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Berry, 18 Me. 122; Eastern Railroad v. Benedict, 10 Gray, 212.

<sup>4</sup> See Heinemann v. Heard, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 666; Crawford v. Manufacturing Co., 88 N. C. 554.

<sup>5</sup> Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 310; Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 900, Bennett's note; Worthen v. Wilmot, 30 Vt. 555; Phelps v. McGee, 18 Ill. 155. As to the element of postponed delivery, see L. R. 10 C. P. 598.

special damages, such as the parties may reasonably be thought to have understood would follow the breach, besides the general damages naturally resulting; or, as it is said, full compensation for the injury of not having the very thing at the time and place at which it should have been delivered.<sup>1</sup> Hence the estimated reasonable profits, lost by the seller's delay, of some chattel, like a ship or a steam-engine, whose keeping is a valuable interest, are sometimes reckoned as special damages, the more so if nothing ready-made can be at once procured in its place, or only an inferior article; and to these might be added special costs thrown upon the buyer, like freight and insurance.<sup>2</sup> And when ice was to be supplied to a butcher, the spoliation of meat for want of the ice was allowed as consequential damage.<sup>3</sup> Even where the buyer, in order to fill out his sub-contract, has been obliged, because of his seller's delay, to procure somewhat higher-priced goods in the market as the best he could do, the extra cost has been allowed him, supposing he acted prudently, and made no special profit out of his customer by so doing.<sup>4</sup> This is a principle which affects the whole law of contracts.

While, however, a special case will be favorably regarded according to the facts presented, it would appear that, in general, the seller must reasonably have apprehended such a loss to follow his own breach. Some notice of the exceptional circumstances, if any existed, ought to have reached him in season to charge him personally, as though upon his

<sup>1</sup> Cutting v. Grand Trunk R. R. Co., 13 Allen, 381, per Gray, J.; Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341-354; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 289.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Fletcher v. Tayleur, 17 C. B. 21; Smeed v. Foord, 1 E. & E. 602; British Columbia Saw-Mill Co. v. Nettleship, L. R. 3 C. P. 499; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; 101 N. Y. 205; Messmore v. N. Y. Shot Co., 40 N. Y. 422; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 5, c. 1, § 1; Jervis, C. J., in Fletcher v. Tayleur, 17 C. B. 21; 25 L. J. C. P. 65; McHose v. Fulmer, 73 Penn. St.

365; Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262; Heinemann v. Heard, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 666; Story Sales, §§ 412, 452; Borries v. Hutchinson, 18 C. B. n. s. 445; Cockburn v. Ashland Lumber Co., 54 Wis. 619.

<sup>3</sup> Hammer v. Schoenfelder, 47 Wis. 455.

<sup>4</sup> Hinde v. Liddell, L. R. 10 Q. B. 265; Haskell v. Hunter, 23 Mich. 305; and other cases cited supra, same section. See, for a special contract where default was made, Serviss v. Stockstill, 30 Ohio St. 418.

acceptance of the special terms, and this more especially in the case of articles readily procurable in general market.<sup>1</sup> The damages actually paid to one's sub-buyer for failure of the sub-sale, or loss of profit by losing the opportunity of the sub-sale, are too remote for a test; at all events, in the absence of special knowledge of the essential facts on the seller's part.<sup>2</sup> Nor can the buyer, who intended to use the chattel for a special purpose, recover loss of profits as for that particular purpose, where the seller supposed it intended for another and more obvious purpose.<sup>3</sup> The price fixed by a written contract is not to be varied by parol evidence showing the special circumstances under which it was made, for the purpose of increasing damages.<sup>4</sup> Nor can the buyer recover for matters incidental to procuring the bargain.<sup>5</sup>

§ 573. Damages where Buyer has paid in Advance.—Where the buyer has paid in advance for the article, some of the older cases incline to give him as damages for non-delivery the best price he could have got at any time up to the trial; <sup>6</sup> but the later and better authorities, so far as they throw light upon the subject, are in most States against permitting payment in advance to affect the rule, unless it be to justify the allowance of interest on the sum actually paid.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Williams v. Reynolds, 6 B. & S. 495; Randall v. Raper, E. B. & E. 84; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. 516; 64 Wis. 338; 48 Penn. St. 407. See Horne v. Midland R. R. Co., L. R. 7 C. P. 583; L. R. 8 C. P. 131; Story Sales, § 412; Hammond v. Bussey, 20 Q. B. D. 79.

<sup>2</sup> Borries v. Hutchinson, 18 C. B. n. s. 445. And see Penn. R. R. Co. v. Titusville, &c. Co., 71 Penn. St. 350; Wetmore v. Pattison, 45 Mich. 439. Even though it was known that the buyer had purchased the goods for the purpose of sub-sale, damages ought not to be assessed so as to include the loss of profit on the sub-sale; the sub-contract not being known to the seller at the time of the sale. Thol v. Henderson, 8 Q. B. D.

457. But cf. Cockburn v. Ashland Lumber Co., 54 Wis. 619, where the seller was held specially liable on his knowledge that the chattels sold were intended for shipment and sale in a certain foreign market. For the New York rule, cf. Messmore v. N. Y. Shot Co., 40 N. Y. 422; Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Mill Co., 60 N. Y. 487.

<sup>3</sup> Cory v. Thames Ironworks Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 181.

<sup>4</sup> Brady v. Oastler, 3 H. & C. 112.

<sup>5</sup> Stevens v. Lyford, 7 N. H. 360. And see Crawford v. Manufacturing Co., 88 N. C. 554.

<sup>6</sup> See Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 292 et seq.

<sup>7</sup> Sedgw. Damages, 304; Hill v. Smith, 32 Vt. 433.

§ 574. Damages where Delivery should have been by Instalments.—The case of breach by the seller, where the bargain was for delivery by instalments, has not as yet been largely discussed. In the absence of evidence on the defaulting seller's part that the buyer could have gone into market and obtained a similar contract on such terms as to lessen the loss, it is held that the measure of damages is the sum of the differences between the market price and the contract price at the several periods of delivery.<sup>1</sup> Inasmuch as the seller's positive refusal to perform may give the buyer the right to sue at once as for a repudiated contract, it may thus happen that suit is brought for a breach before the time fixed for a final delivery; the effect of which is, not to modify the rule of damages, but to leave the jury to estimate the differences of price under future deliveries as well as they can.<sup>2</sup> But sale contracts of this character sometimes provide expressly for the payment of penalties in default of prompt deliveries; and, in general, the dates for partial computation may depend entirely upon a construction of the particular contract.<sup>3</sup> It is a rule, that, where the breach is only partial, damages are to be assessed for the partial and not for an entire breach.<sup>4</sup>

§ 575. When Demand should precede Suit.—Where no time of delivery was expressly or by implication fixed in the contract of sale, the buyer should, in general, demand the goods before bringing suit. But there are circumstances under which a demand would be useless.<sup>5</sup> So, too, where the broken contract provided for delivery to the buyer "on request," the buyer must, as a condition precedent to maintaining his remedy, make this request personally, or by message or letter, in conformity with the mutual under-

<sup>1</sup> Brown v. Muller, L. R. 7 Ex. 319; Roper v. Johnson, L. R. 8 C. P. 167; Llansamlet Tin Plate Co., Ex parte, L. R. 16 Eq. 155.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. See Frost v. Knight, L. R. 7 Ex. 111; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246.

<sup>3</sup> Bergheim v. Blaenavon Iron Co.,

L. R. 10 Q. B. 319; Elbinger Actien-Gesellschaft v. Armstrong, L. R. 9 Q. B. 473.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 5, § 1; Simpson v. Crippin, L. R. 8 Q. B. 14; Story Sales, §§ 448, 451; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; supra, § 308.

<sup>5</sup> Story Sales, § 453.

standing; though here, too, the requirement might be dispensed with, where the circumstances show a waiver, and the formal request would be an idle and useless formality.<sup>1</sup> If the sale was for cash on delivery, the buyer ought to be able to show that he was ready at the time to receive and pay for the goods upon request.<sup>2</sup>

§ 576. Choice of Remedies, where Property has passed; compelling Specific Performance.—While assumpsit for damages may always be brought for the seller's non-delivery, the buyer's right, in case the property in the goods has been transferred to him through the operation of the sale contract in constituting him the owner, is enlarged to a choice of remedies. Instead of letting the goods go, and seeking his money recompense, he may, to a certain extent, insist on getting the goods, and enforcing his claims of ownership. Specific performance is thus an equitable remedy to which the buyer has been allowed to resort, where the subject-matter of sale was an incorporeal chattel, such as shares of stock, or something rare and of marked intrinsic value if corporeal, as a statue, a painting, or an antique vase, and the buyer, with the right of possession in himself, could not be made whole by going to law for damages.<sup>3</sup> This equitable remedy, so useful in these days, where the seller of real estate shirks his engagements, is sometimes enlarged as to things personal by local statute.<sup>4</sup> But otherwise, specific performance has thus far been seldom enforced in chattel sales; the assumption being, apparently, that one who buys corn and other articles of ordinary mercantile traffic, with a market price, is well enough off when he can

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 1; Bach v. Owen, 5 T. R. 409; supra, § 291.

<sup>2</sup> Metz v. Albrecht, 52 Ill. 491.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 487; Falcke v. Gray, 4 Drew. 658; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2; Story Sales, § 413. And see Brown v. Dibbs, 37 L. T. 171, as to the breach of contract of sale of a coal mine; Charingbould v. Curtis, 21 L. J. Ch. 541. Specific performance of a contract to convey a patent right may be decreed. Corbin v. Tracy, 34 Conn. 325; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 287. And so as to stock in peculiar instances. Noyes v. Marsh, 123 Mass. 286; Fell's Appeal, 91 Penn. St. 434. And see 117 Penn. St. 514; 63 Md. 285.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2, citing English act 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97, § 2 (1856).

go and buy something similar, and hold his defaulting seller liable for the difference ; and hence that no interference by a court of equity is needful.<sup>1</sup> The civilians appear to have differed in opinion as to whether the seller of goods could be compelled to deliver.<sup>2</sup>

§ 577. Rule as to suing in Trover, etc., considered.—Trover, too, is maintainable by the buyer where the property in the goods has passed to him. But, in thus suing on the tort for non-delivery of the goods, he recovers no greater damages, as a rule, than he could have done on the contract ;<sup>3</sup> and where, under the contract, the right of possession continues in the seller, — as in the case of his retention of the goods, with a lien upon them, until the balance of the purchase-money shall be paid over, — it is he, and not the buyer, who can sue a third party for their wrongful conversion.<sup>4</sup> A buyer's liability for any part of the purchase price is cancelled by the seller's wrongful re-sale or conversion of the goods.<sup>5</sup>

§ 578. Where there is Delivery, but not of Suitable Kind, Quality, or Quantity. — (2d.) Where delivery is made or tendered, but the thing is not, in kind or quality or quantity, what was bargained for. The cases are here in great confusion, and the buyer's choice of remedies differently stated in different local jurisdictions. This comes from the irreconcilable views entertained in England and parts of the United States as to making distinctions between condition and warranty ; the controversy being over the buyer's right of refusing or rejecting the goods.<sup>6</sup>

§ 579. Confusion of Rules ; Buyer's Right to reject, etc. — The English rule, as we have already shown, discriminates, <sup>1</sup> See Jones v. Newhall, 115 Mass. 248 ; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 287. So, too, in sales of stock procurable in the market. Harris v. De Wolf, 108 Ill. 195 ; 74 Wis. 591.

<sup>2</sup> Story Sales, § 413.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2 ; Chinery v. Viall, 5 H. & N. 288 ; Story Sales, §§ 413, 431 ; Bourne v. Ashley, 1 Low. 27. So, too, where the buyer has paid part of the price, he can only recover the amount so paid unless he can show further damage sustained. Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 Mich. 5. In a suit for conversion, the damages allowed are merely nominal where no loss is sustained. 53 N. Y. 211 ; 81 N. Y. 25 ; 15 Rep. 54.

<sup>4</sup> Lord v. Price, L. R. 9 Ex. 54.

<sup>5</sup> Bowser v. Birdsell, 49 Mich. 5.

<sup>6</sup> Supra, §§ 276, 321.

so as to permit a buyer to refuse the goods offered, in the former case, because the seller has fundamentally failed to perform as promised,—as in sending him tea where he ordered coffee; but not in the latter case,—as where coffee is sent, but of an inferior quality to that ordered,—because the failure goes only to a collateral matter. This presupposes, however, that the property in the goods ordered has already passed to the buyer; and that, in one way or another, the minds of the parties have met upon an identical subject-matter. The English rule is, that the buyer's obligation to accept depends on the seller's obligation to deliver; that where unascertained and uninspected goods are ordered on the faith of the seller's judgment, so as to leave the buyer necessarily to inspect for himself, not at the time of the contract, but at or about the time of delivery, he may demand a reasonable time to make up his mind whether the goods offered are such as he bargained for, and, if they are not, to return them.<sup>1</sup> If the contract of sale contain some condition authorizing a return in an emergency, that condition is to be respected; and a special agreement of the parties may modify rules, an executory contract suspending the transfer of the property in the chattel. But where the minds of the parties have met upon specific goods, and there is neither fraud nor express reservation of a right to return, the general rule of England is, that special stipulations of quality are to be taken as collateral to the contract or as matter of warranty, and that the buyer may not refuse to receive the goods for any such breach of warranty, but must rely on other remedies.<sup>2</sup> And the favorite determining test would appear to be, that the property in such goods has unconditionally passed to the buyer under the contract; though some incline to treat it rather as a simple question between a contract for "any goods" of a description and a contract for specific goods, absolutely denying to the buyer the right to refuse or reject in the latter instance.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2; 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 26, 27. And see Lord Chelmsford, as to sample sales, in Couston v. Chapman, L. R. 2 Sc. App. 250.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2; Street v. Blay, 2 B. & Ad. 456; Dawson v. Collis, 10 C. B. 530; Heilbutt v. Hickson, L. R. 7 C. P. 438; Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858.

In various parts of this country, the English rule as to the buyer's right of rejection appears to prevail, though not, perhaps, with an equally manifest disposition to discriminate between condition and warranty. It seems to be regarded as settled in New York (though perhaps not necessarily determined in any case) that the buyer has no right to return goods for breach of warranty in quality, unless there was fraud in the sale, or some express contract conferred the right to do so.<sup>2</sup> While this certainty holds true of an executed present sale of chattels, there is more doubt as concerning an executory sale;<sup>3</sup> and, in fact, the general distinction seems to be properly taken, as in England, between specific ascertained goods and unascertained goods to be made or supplied to order.<sup>4</sup> But in many of the United States the rule is declared to be, that, to avoid circuitry of action, a warranty may be treated as a condition subsequent at the election of the seller, who is accordingly entitled, upon the seller's breach thereof, to rescind the contract and return the goods. This is the rule of Massachusetts,<sup>5</sup> of Maryland,<sup>6</sup> of Iowa,<sup>7</sup> of Maine,<sup>8</sup> and of other States.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ib. See Heyworth v. Hutchinson, L. R. 2 Q. B. 447, and opinions of Cockburn, C. J., Blackburn, J., and Lush, J., criticised in Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2. And see supra, §§ 316, 317, 344.

<sup>2</sup> Day v. Pool, 52 N. Y. 416 (Church, C. J., Allen and Andrews, JJ., diss.).

<sup>3</sup> Rust v. Eckler, 41 N. Y. 488; Day v. Pool, supra; Parks v. Morris, &c. Co., 54 N. Y. 586.

<sup>4</sup> See Lawton v. Keil, 61 Barb. 558; Messmore v. N. Y. Shot, &c. Co., 40 N. Y. 422. And see Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149; Story Sales, § 455; Freyman v. Knecht, 78 Penn. St. 141; Bunce v. Beck, 43 Mo. 279.

<sup>5</sup> Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 271; Bryant v. Isburgh, 13 Gray, 637; Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 209.

<sup>6</sup> Hyatt v. Boyle, 5 Gill. & J. 121.

<sup>7</sup> Rogers v. Hanson, 35 Iowa, 283; Jack v. Des Moines R., 53 Iowa, 399.

<sup>8</sup> Marston v. Knight, 29 Me. 341; Marshall v. Perry, 67 Me. 78; Marsh v. Low, 55 Ind. 271; Gates v. Bliss, 43 Vt. 299; Osborn v. Gantz, 60 N. Y. 540.

<sup>9</sup> See Jagers v. Griffin, 43 Miss. 134; Ralph v. Chicago, &c. Co., 32 Wis. 177; Youghiogheny Iron Co. v. Smith, 66 Penn. St. 340; Dill v. Ferrell, 45 Ind. 268; Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33.

We have elsewhere shown that goods unascertained must, up to a point, consistently with the rule of caveat emptor, prove satisfactory when tendered to the buyer, — as, for instance, like a sample previously agreed upon, or merchantable under the description; and thus far, if the thing

The confusion still prevalent in the cases under this head appears to result from the uncertain meaning of "warranty," and the dim apprehension with which collateral representation and fundamental undertaking are still viewed in the courts, and especially those of this country. It appears to be a general rule that for fraud in essentials of the sale the buyer may reject.<sup>1</sup>

§ 580. Limit of the Right to reject; its Legal Effect.—But a prompt return of the goods is exacted from the buyer, wherever the right to return exists: he must, under a bonâ fide sale which accords him no special privilege, make up his mind forthwith, having had whatever opportunity to ascertain the character of the goods was rightful, and decide whether to keep or return them; and deciding to return them, he must act without delay upon the decision. He should return the goods altogether or at least offer to do so. If, by his acts and conduct, in consuming an unreasonable time for inspection, or in exercising acts of ownership, or in expressing his satisfaction, or in making no complaint to the seller, he justifies the legal conclusion that he must have accepted the chattels, in whole or part, his right to reject and return them is gone.<sup>2</sup> prove not satisfactory, the buyer ought to refuse acceptance and promptly return it, and not be bound to keep an inferior article for an inferior price. But as to specific and ascertained goods already agreed upon, caveat emptor will often oblige one to keep an inferior article for an inferior price; and even if a collateral warranty were specially given, that should not entitle the buyer to send the goods back if the sale were bonâ fide. That the buyer has no right to refuse goods tendered him, even though the property therein had not already passed, on any mere allegation that they are unsatisfactory to him, is clear, so long as the goods are, in fact, a satisfaction of the contract. Nor, as to chattels bonâ fide tendered, whether under a bargain relating to specific goods or to fulfil some order, — in other words, relating to unascertained goods, — ought the buyer to have a right (independently of the express agreement of the parties) to return the goods, after he has had every chance to inspect or test them which the contract contemplated, and has once fairly accepted them; otherwise the effect would be to suspend indefinitely the execution of the contract, and put it into the buyer's power to use, and possibly damage, the goods, and then throw them back upon the seller. Supra, §§ 316-319. See also Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 888, and Bennett's American note.

<sup>1</sup> Gates v. Bliss, and Freyman v. Knecht, supra; § 605 post.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2; 2 Kent Com. 480; Story Sales, § 455;

On the other hand, where the buyer, with this right of return, refuses the article delivered promptly, as by tendering it to the seller or notifying him to take it away, and consistently stands to his decision of non-acceptance, he is relieved of liability for the price; or, if he has already paid, he may sue to recover the payment back.<sup>1</sup> He has even been allowed, in case the seller refuses to take the goods so tendered, to sell them at the best price obtainable, and make himself whole.<sup>2</sup> If the seller positively refuses to take the chattel back, the buyer is excused from making any effort to return it.<sup>3</sup> But, like the seller in a corresponding situation, the buyer should use reasonable prudence with reference to the article, both as to sending it back and in disposing of it, and not act in headlong disregard of the seller's interests. In case of non-acceptance for cause, the buyer has been permitted to claim the reimbursement of the freight and transportation expenses to which he has been put, and not only to demand a settlement of the same before giving up possession of the rejected goods, but, upon the seller's neglect to reimburse him within a reasonable time after notice given, to sell what may be suitable to make him whole.<sup>4</sup>

§ 581. Buyer may keep Goods and claim Damages for Breach of Warranty.—Whatever may be the buyer's position as concerns his right to reject and return the subject-matter

Fielder v. Starkin, 1 H. Bl. 17; Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858; McCormick v. Sarson, 45 N. Y. 265; Gilson v. Bingham, 43 Vt. 410; Bartholomae v. Paull, 18 W. Va. 771; supra, § 408; Cutler v. Gilbreth, 53 Me. 176; Horn v. Brick, 48 Md. 358; 84 Wis. 53; Ancrum v. Wehmann, 15 S. C. 118. Cf. Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; Gammon v. Abrams, 53 Wis. 323; post, § 588. See as to sufficient rejection of a barge of coal (notice to seller, and a return by the carrier of the bill of lading), 161 Mass. 576.

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Grimoldby v. Wells, L. R. 10 C. P. 391; Hall v. Ætna Co., 30 Iowa, 215; Thornton v. Wynn, 12 Wheat. 183; Pope v. Allis, 115 U. S. 363.

<sup>2</sup> Youghiogeny Iron Co. v. Smith, 66 Penn. St. 340; Barnett v. Terry, 42 Ga. 22; Messmore v. N. Y. Shot, &c. Co., 40 N. Y. 422; Gifford v. Betts, 64 N. C. 62; Jagers v. Griffin, 43 Miss. 13.

<sup>3</sup> Padden v. Marsh, 34 Iowa, 522; Story Sales, § 457.

<sup>4</sup> Barnett v. Terry, 42 Ga. 283; Gifford v. Betts, 64 N. C. 62. The amount paid as freight should, in general, where the buyer rightfully rejects the goods, be recovered, not from the carrier, but from the seller. Jack v. Des Moines R., 53 Iowa, 399. See 151 U. S. 626.

sold, he need not take this course, but may at his option keep the goods, and resort to a money compensation in damages for the seller's breach of express or implied warranty of quality.

§ 582. The Same Subject; Buyer may recoup Damages or bring Separate Action.—The course by remedy in damages resolves itself into a choice between these two methods: (1st.) To set off or recoup against the unpaid seller's claim for price the damages sustained by himself because of the inferiority of the article delivered. (2d.) To bring his separate action for the breach. The former is the most convenient, where the goods are not yet paid for; but as the remedy here does not go beyond defeating the seller's claim upon an initiative suit, the buyer must resort to the latter method wherever his case calls for a more ample indemnity.<sup>1</sup>

§ 583. The Same Subject; Matters of Practice in such Cases.—It is not necessary for the buyer, in pursuing either method, to give the seller notice before thus defending or suing;<sup>2</sup> and while the rule appears to be, that, by keeping the chattel, the buyer makes himself still accountable for its price upon a just abatement for the breach, it has been held in both England and America that the buyer may be relieved from paying any part of the price if he can show that the goods were utterly worthless, notwithstanding he has failed to return or offer to return them.<sup>3</sup> To support the claim of a partial failure of consideration, likewise, no such offer is needed, even though the buyer has retained and used the thing as his own; so far, more especially, as recouping against the price is concerned.<sup>4</sup> If the buyer has offered

<sup>1</sup> See Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858; Davis v. Hedges, L. R. 6 Q. B. 687; cases infra.

<sup>2</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, §§ 454, 455; Kellogg v. Denslow, 14 Conn. 411; Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Fielder v. Starkin, 1 H. Bl. 17; Day v. Pool, 52 N. Y. 416; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149; Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432;

Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33; Rogers v. Hanson, 35 Iowa, 283.

<sup>3</sup> Poulton v. Lattimore, 9 B. & C. 259; Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. 283; Dill v. Ferrell, 45 Ind. 268.

<sup>4</sup> Day v. Pool, 52 N. Y. 416; Vincent v. Leland, 100 Mass. 432; Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33; Raspberry v. Moye, 23 Miss. 320; Cormick v. Dunville, 36 Iowa, 645;

to return the goods for the breach, so much the plainer, of course, is his right to choose as between rescinding with a rejection of the goods and claiming damages while leaving the contract to stand. But, if the facts show acceptance, he has no right to rescind the contract: his claim of damages is his only resort.<sup>1</sup> Even though it was expressly agreed by the seller, as part of the original bargain, that the article might be returned if it did not fulfil the contract, the better opinion is that the buyer may sustain himself in his claim of damages, without sending the article back because of its failure to suit, so long as full acceptance and waiver cannot be imputed from his conduct.<sup>2</sup> But an incorporeal chattel, like stock, must be dealt with somewhat differently; and it is held, that where the seller, upon delivering the certificate, agreed that he would take it back and return the price if requested, the buyer may recover the price without tendering the certificate, but must surrender up the certificate or file it in court before execution can issue.<sup>3</sup>

23 Hun, 408; Doane v. Dunham, 65 Ill. 512; Polhemus v. Heiman, 45 Cal. 573. Whether the seller's right to sue as for breach of warranty is coextensive with his right of recouping to the seller's action where he retains the goods is a matter of doubt; and the line of decisions in one's own State should be carefully considered by the practising lawyer on such a point.

<sup>1</sup> Thornton v. Wynn, 12 Wheat. 183; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149; cases supra.

<sup>2</sup> Douglass, &c. Co. v. Gardner, 10 Cush. 88; Head v. Tattersall, L. R. 7 Ex. 7; contra, Adams v. Richards, 2 H. Bl. 573. And see Aultman v. Theirer, 34 Iowa, 272; Marshall v. Perry, 67 Me. 78. But see Hinchliffe v. Barwick, 5 Ex. D. 177, where there was a condition to return if not satisfactory.

<sup>3</sup> George v. Braden, 70 Penn. St. 56.

Whether the one or the other remedy for money compensation be pursued, the burden of proof is on the purchaser to show that the article supplied did not correspond with the warranty. Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 271. But the seller's knowledge of the bad quality need not, of course, be shown, so long as the issue is not one of fraud and bad faith, but of simple breach of contract. See Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446; Bartholemew v. Bushnell, 20 Conn. 271; Massie v. Crawford, 3 Monr. 218; Tyre v. Causey, 4 Harring. 425. And as a defence against the seller's suit for his price, evidence which fails to prove a rescission of the sale may nevertheless be available to reduce damages. Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205. A variance between the declaration and proof should be material, and not formal merely, to prevent the buyer from recovering in his suit for breach. Phelan v. Andrews, 52 Ill. 486. But as torts and contracts are clearly distinguishable

Where the buyer undertakes to set off his loss by the seller's breach against the unpaid seller's claim for price, he stands on the defensive, with the advantages and disadvantages incidental to this position. The seller has the burden of the suit; while the buyer need only show how much less than what is claimed by the plaintiff he ought to pay, in consideration that the article failed in quality to come up to the standard as warranted. He gains to the extent of abating or completely offsetting the seller's demand sued upon. He loses so far as his own claim of damages may justly exceed that demand.<sup>1</sup> But he is not without further remedy; for it may be generally asserted that the buyer's action for damages resulting from the seller's breach is not barred by his having been allowed an offset on the seller's action for the price, save to the amount of such allowance.<sup>2</sup> Where a seller obtains judgment for his full price in a foreign State by default of the buyer, the latter is not thereby estopped from bringing his special action for damages on the breach.<sup>3</sup> It would appear, however, that if in one suit the full performance was the matter in clear issue, and was there tried and settled, it is not open to be tried again.<sup>4</sup> And upon this ground, where the seller recovered a judgment for the balance of his price, payable under a special contract, without express warranty, to manufacture a certain article to order, the buyer was not permitted to bring a new action of breach upon the same defect which he had alleged in defence of the former suit, and concerning the

as the basis of suits, an allegation of false representation is inconsistent with proof of mere breach of warranty; and, while tort appears to have been the ancient form of suing for false warranty, assumpsit is the modern. Ib.; Massie v. Crawford, 3 Mon. 218; Cooper v. Landon, 102 Mass. 58. As to action for false representation, see c. 17, post.

<sup>1</sup> Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858; Walker v. Hoisington, 43 Vt. 608; Hitchcock v. Hunt, 28 Conn. 343; Westcott v. Rims, 4 Cush. 215; Story

Sales, § 455. The new English practice acts, and those probably of some States, allow special or consequential damages to be recovered by the defendant which may far exceed the amount of the price sued for. See Benj. Sales, 3d ed. § 898.

<sup>2</sup> See Parke, B., in Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858.

<sup>3</sup> Bascom v. Manning, 52 N. H. 132. And see Bodurtha v. Phelon, 13 Gray, 413.

<sup>4</sup> Bascom v. Manning, supra; Davis v. Tallcot, 12 N. Y. 184.

merits of which the former adjudication was complete.<sup>1</sup> Nor, as it has been distinctly ruled, can a buyer, who deliberately intends to claim damages for the breach in excess of the seller's demand upon him, first defend against the seller by way of set-off to the full extent of this remedy, and then bring his action for the balance which he claims; for, as the court gains nothing towards furthering justice by allowing set-off in one action if a cross-action must eventually be brought, the buyer is properly excluded from pursuing a double advantage against the seller.<sup>2</sup>

At all events, where the buyer recoups against the price, the seller may recover what the chattel was really worth.<sup>3</sup>

§ 584. The Same Subject.—There is a growing tendency in American courts to simplify litigation, and get rid of the old circuities which drove parties to their separate common-law suits over the same transaction or an identical course of dealing. Hence we find that in most States the buyer is now permitted to set off his own damages incurred through the seller's breach of warranty; and this, notwithstanding the suit is brought on his negotiable security for the price, provided the seller, or a party who took it from the seller when overdue, be the owner thereof; or, in other words, unless the buyer's paper is in the hands of some party with equities of his own, irrespective of the sale parties.<sup>4</sup> In

<sup>1</sup> Gilson v. Bingham, 43 Vt. 410. See also Huff v. Broyles, 26 Gratt. 283.

<sup>2</sup> Gilson v. Bingham, ib.; O'Conner v. Varney, 10 Gray, 231; Starr Glass Co. v. Morey, 108 Mass. 573. The buyer should not be permitted, in case of cross-actions, to divide his claims for damage as he may see fit between the two, nor have damages assessed in both actions for the same breach. Ib. The splitting up of a single cause of action on an indivisible contract is to be discouraged. Geiser Threshing-Machine Co. v. Farmer, 27 Minn. 428.

<sup>3</sup> Warder v. Fisher, 48 Wis. 338.

<sup>4</sup> Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. 283; Mooklar v. Lewis, 40 Ind. 1; Goodwin v. Morse, 9 Met. 278; Rasberry v. Moye, 23 Miss. 320; Hill v. Southwick, 9 R. I. 299; Coburn v. Ware, 30 Me. 202; Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 639; Geiser Threshing-Machine Co. v. Farmer, 27 Minn. 428; 29 Minn. 341, 373. Local statutes may aid in establishing such practice. See Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33. If the buyer takes up his note on maturity, as to the innocent holder, his remedy against the seller is not barred. Creighton v. Comstock, 27 Ohio St. 548.

fact, then, the buyer may defend a suit for the price by alleging damages for breach of warranty, by way of an offset, and pro tanto.<sup>1</sup> But the former rule, and one still prevalent in England, is, that the buyer cannot defend for breach of warranty where suit is brought, not on the sale, but on the negotiable security, inasmuch as no unliquidated and uncertain claim can be set up against a liquidated and certain demand; the consequence of which is, that the buyer is driven to his separate action for damages.<sup>2</sup>

Recoupment in a suit upon the breach of contract is not in general available for setting off damages founded on the seller's tort.<sup>3</sup> Where the buyer seeks to make the seller's breach of warranty of quality his special cause of action, he may do so; and how far this remedy is still open to him, notwithstanding his choice of other remedies affording but a partial relief, we have just seen. To bring his own suit for damages sustained in the nature of a cross-action to the seller's suit for his price was formerly the regular means of procedure; but though the compensation it awards the plaintiff is found adequate, its chief objection consists in forcing a party unnecessarily out of his stronghold to make a pitched battle. The right of one party to sue for damages occasioned by the other's failure to perform is incidental to contracts of all kinds.<sup>4</sup> And, in case of a sale, neither a failure to notify the purchaser of the defect, nor acceptance and use of the goods, should conclusively bar the claim of a breach of warranty as a partial defence to the price sued for;<sup>5</sup> though this might tend to show actual satisfaction or a waiver.

<sup>1</sup> As to fraudulent sales a like set-off to the price may be made. See § 606. This is not to be deemed a set-off of unliquidated damages, but rather a claim of total or partial failure of consideration by way of reducing or offsetting the amount sued for. 120 U. S. 639.

<sup>2</sup> Agra, &c. Bank v. Leighton, L. R. 2 Ex. 56; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Gerding v. Adams, 65 Ga. 79. And see Phelan v. Andrews, 52 Ill. 486; Massie v. Crawford, 3 Mon. 218; Cooper v. Landon, 102 Mass. 58; cited in preceding section.

<sup>4</sup> See Mondel v. Steel, 8 M. & W. 858; Story Sales, § 454; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2.

<sup>5</sup> Morse v. Moore, 83 Me. 473; Weld v. Dyer, 53 Ark. 155.

§ 585. Measure of Damages recoverable for Breach as to Quality.—The measure of damages recoverable for breach of warranty of quality is, in general, the difference in value between the article actually furnished and that which should have been furnished under the contract at the time and place agreed upon.<sup>1</sup> Thus, in an English case where Manilla hemp was imported, and afterwards found damaged, the court ruled that the buyer should recover the difference between the actual value of the hemp when it arrived and what would have been its value if shipped in a suitable state.<sup>2</sup> So, where suit is brought on the warranty of an animal's soundness, the same test applies.<sup>3</sup> And, as the rule is sometimes stated, the rule of damages for breach of warranty is the difference between the sound value of the thing as warranted and its actual value.<sup>4</sup> Such reasonable expenses as the buyer has incurred in consequence of the breach may be added in making up the estimate.<sup>5</sup> But special, punitive damages, such as interest from the date of the writ, cannot be recovered.<sup>6</sup> As to time, place, and other circumstances, the rule is not essentially different from that already applied to the case of non-delivery.<sup>7</sup> If the article actually sold were thus valueless, the thing which should have been delivered will be set at its full value without deduction;<sup>8</sup> and, while the agreed price aids in the estimate of what the agreed thing to be delivered was worth, it is manifestly no arbitrary standard, but only a

<sup>1</sup> Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. 318; Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197; Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, §§ 449, 454, 455; Whitmore v. South Boston Iron Co., 2 Allen, 52; Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287; Howie v. Rea, 70 N. C. 559; Merri-mack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127. See also Hammond v. Bussey, 20 Q. B. D. 79.

<sup>2</sup> Jones v. Just, L. R. 3 Q. B. 197.

<sup>3</sup> Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287.

<sup>4</sup> Minneapolis Harvester Works v. Bonnallie, 29 Minn. 373; 11 Neb. 143.

<sup>5</sup> Murray v. Meredith, 25 Ark. 164; Furlong v. Polleys, 30 Me. 491; 60 Ga. 148.

<sup>6</sup> Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287; White v. Miller, 78 N. Y. 393. Yet interest from the definite time at which one's right accrued must, on familiar principles, often be an element of just compensation to the aggrieved party. 2 Sedgw. Damages, 7th ed. 185; 29 Minn. 373; 37 Iowa, 9; 53 Wis. 323.

<sup>7</sup> See Furlong v. Polleys, 30 Me. 491; supra, § 572.

<sup>8</sup> Mooklar v. Lewis, 40 Ind. 1.

primâ facie test of value, since the bargain might have been better or worse for either party, and yet the very article as warranted should have been delivered.<sup>1</sup>

Here too, as in non-delivery, the buyer may recover, not only for the direct and natural consequence of the seller's failure to perform according to agreement, but for such damages besides as both parties might reasonably be supposed to have foreseen, at the time of the contract, would flow from such breach.<sup>2</sup> And where an article was expressly warranted to do certain work, the measure of damages is the difference between its value as warranted and its market value for any purpose.<sup>3</sup>

§ 586. The Same Subject. — Supposing the buyer to have made a sub-sale of the defective goods whose quality was warranted : if he has done so with a like warranty, the sum paid on a judgment recovered against him by the sub-buyer for the same breach is primâ facie evidence of the amount to be recovered as special damages on his own suit.<sup>4</sup> To this should be added the taxable costs of the sub-buyer's suit, if the first buyer gave his own seller due notice and afforded him a chance to defend the action, though not the counsel fees incurred in his own defence ;<sup>5</sup> for the law means to cover in such damages under a sub-sale as result from the first seller's breach. But, in general, there is no privity of damage between the original seller and the sub-buyer, as

<sup>1</sup> See Reggio v. Braggiotti, 7 Cush. 166 ; Tuttle v. Brown, 4 Gray, 457 ; Brown v. Sayles, 27 Vt. 227 ; Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597 ; Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. And see Phelan v. Andrews, 52 Ill. 486 ; 43 Iowa, 389 ; Wolcott v. Mount, 7 Vroom, 262 ; Furlong v. Polleys, 30 Me. 491 ; 70 Me. 100. Breach of warranty of a safe as "burglar proof" does not carry as consequential the value of articles stolen from the safe by a burglar. 62 Ala. 180.

Where the case is one of exchange, rather than of sale for a price, evidence of value may not be confined to the warranted chattel ; but it is admissible to show the value of the chattel given in exchange, as tending to show what would have been the warranted chattel's value if as warranted, where the parties do not appear to have settled at the time of exchange the value of either the one or the other chattel. Chaplin v. Warner, 23 Wis. 448.

<sup>3</sup> Himes v. Kiehl, 154 Penn. St. 190.

<sup>4</sup> Reggio v. Braggiotti, 7 Cush. 166 ; Randall v. Raper, E. B. & E. 84.

<sup>5</sup> Lewis v. Peake, 7 Taunt. 153 ; Reggio v. Braggiotti, 7 Cush. 166.

there is none of contract ; and the first buyer may recover for the breach of the first seller's undertaking, upon the usual reckoning of damages and without diminution, notwithstanding he has sub-sold the goods, and his sub-buyer has made no claim upon him for their defective quality; and even though, by the terms of the sub-sale, no corresponding right of action is conferred upon the sub-buyer.<sup>1</sup> The price at which the goods were sub-sold may be evidence tending to show the amount of damages ; but it does not furnish the decisive test.<sup>2</sup>

§ 587. Rule applied to Delivery by Instalments; Miscellaneous Points.—Where suit is brought on an entire contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at stated times by instalments, upon the buyer's premises and at the buyer's expense, the measure of damages for the inferior quality of the goods delivered is the difference between the value of what was delivered on the buyer's premises and what the contract with its warranty called for. The ordinary rule applies, subject to such modifications as a fair interpretation of the peculiar contract may justify.<sup>3</sup>

In assessing damages, whatever injury may have been due to the buyer's own fault should be excluded as against the seller.<sup>4</sup>

§ 588. Waiver of Remedies for Breach.—The buyer may,

<sup>1</sup> Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597 ; Brown v. Bigelow, 10 Allen, 242.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. ; Medbury v. Watson, 6 Met. 257. And see supra, § 572.

<sup>3</sup> Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127 ; supra, § 574 ; Bergheim v. Blaenavon Ins. Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 319 ; 45 L. T. 202.

It is laid down that the buyer who defends in the seller's suit for his price of goods sold and delivered, and at the same time sues in damages for breach of warranty in his cross-action, is not entitled to have the damages assessed in both actions for the same breach of contract, nor to divide his claim for damage as he may see fit between the two suits, so as to set off the two executions. But the entire damages for his breach must be applied, first, to discharge the contract price due under the seller's suit for the goods sold and delivered. If the buyer's damage exceeds that balance, the excess will be returned in a verdict for him in the cross-action ; but, if not, the verdict in the cross-action should be for the seller. Execution for costs will issue accordingly. Starr Glass Co. v. Morey, 108 Mass. 573.

To an action upon one of several notes given for a chattel, a counter-claim may be interposed for the entire cause of action. 29 Minn. 373.

<sup>4</sup> Foot v. Woodworth, 66 Vt. 216.

by failing to inform his seller in season after discovering the defect, and thereby depriving the latter of his reasonable rights, lose his own aggressive remedy upon the breach of warranty.<sup>1</sup> But the question of waiver, upon whatever state of facts presented, must be fairly determined by the evidence.<sup>2</sup> An agreement to take back the goods if found inferior, and give others in exchange, is not uncommon; though the assent of both parties to such a means of rectifying an error must be established in order that it may operate.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, as we have already seen, the mere recoupment of damages by the buyer is not inconsistent with retaining and using the goods and failing to return them altogether.<sup>4</sup>

But it should be borne in mind that warranty is the incident only of a completed sale and has no place as a contract of present vitality and force in an executory agreement of sale. The buyer cannot refuse to pay where goods were delivered conditional upon payment and still hold the goods as for breach of warranty; he should reject and return the goods and claim indemnity thus; or else he should pay for the goods, making delivery complete, and then pursue his indemnity.<sup>5</sup>

§ 589. Remedies for Breach of Warranty of Title. — Breach of warranty of title may be at the foundation of the buyer's suit, instead of breach as to quality. The purchaser of a chattel whose title has failed may either sue the party who warranted for the return of his price, or bring his action for damages on account of the breach;<sup>6</sup> or he may recoup damages for breach of the warranty against the seller's action.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hall v. McEwen, 19 Mich. 95; supra, § 580.

<sup>2</sup> Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127; Gammon v. Abrams, 53 Wis. 323; 50 Wis. 235; Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; supra, § 327.

<sup>3</sup> Woodward v. Libby, 58 Me. 42; O'Donnell v. Allen, 6 Allen, 106.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, § 583.

<sup>5</sup> See Osborn v. Gantz, 60 N. Y. 540.

<sup>6</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 5, pt. 2, c. 2; Story Sales, § 407; Eichholz v. Banister, 17 C. B. n. s. 708; supra, §§ 376-378.

<sup>7</sup> Croninger v. Paige, 48 Wis. 229. For application of the rule as to breach of warranty of title to infringement of patent, see Croninger v. Paige, supra. And as to the failure of title to stock, see Wood v. Sheldon, 42 N. J. L. 421. And see supra, § 373.

But when the third party, claiming to be the true owner, makes his demand upon such purchaser in possession, the latter should call upon the party from whom he purchased to make him whole, or to intervene and defend the suit;<sup>1</sup> and it is held that only nominal damages can be recovered for the breach, where the buyer has suffered no actual damage in the matter.<sup>2</sup> In case the title fails to only a portion of the goods, the buyer is not bound to rescind the contract in toto, but may retain that to which the title is secure, and have his damages under the warranty, either by set-off upon the seller's suit for his purchase-money, or by his own action for the loss of the residue.<sup>3</sup>

It has been held frequently that a buyer who retains the chattel in his possession or converts it to his own use cannot, as a general rule, resist a suit for the purchase price on the ground that his seller had no title.<sup>4</sup> But exception is made in cases of fraud; cases in which recovery has been had against the buyer by one having paramount title; and cases where, without recovery, the buyer has settled with the true owner, or has had his possession disturbed by such party.<sup>5</sup> So, too, is it held that, where the buyer retains and converts the chattel to his own use, he may resist a suit for the purchase price on the ground that his seller had no title, if the adverse claimant, to save a multiplicity of suits, has assumed the defence under an arrangement that the buyer shall pay him for the chattel if the defence prevails.<sup>6</sup>

§ 590. Remedies for Failure in Quantity, etc.—If articles delivered fall so far short of the quantity bargained for as to authorize a rescission of the contract or constitute the failure of a condition precedent, the buyer may recover damages for the deficiency as for a partial failure of consideration.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Burt v. Denny, 40 N. Y. 283; 41 Miss. 370; 18 Me. 314; Krumhaer v. Birch, 83 Penn. St. 426.

<sup>2</sup> Burt v. Denny, 40 N. Y. 283.

<sup>3</sup> McKnight v. Devlin, 52 N. Y. 399. 48 Mich. 469, 471. See next chapter.

See Story Sales, § 407; Riddle v. Gage, 37 N. H. 519. <sup>6</sup> Estelle v. Peacock, 48 Mich. 469.

<sup>4</sup> Vibbard v. Johnson, 19 Johns. 677. See also Matheny v. Mason, 73 Mo.

77; Case v. Hall, 24 Wend. 102; 3 <sup>7</sup> Creighton v. Comstock, 27 Ohio St. 548.

§ 591. Remedies where Delivery is unreasonably late.—(3d.) Where the delivery is unreasonably late. The remedies already noticed here apply, mutatis mutandis; the question for the buyer's decision, upon a tender, being, whether to refuse the goods, or to receive them and claim damages for the injury resulting to himself from the delay.<sup>1</sup> If the latter course, he should make his method of receiving possession such as to show the other party that he does not waive his rights: for receiving goods without objection is, prima facie, a waiver on his part of the right to claim damages for the delayed delivery; while it is otherwise when they are received with an explicit statement that such damages will be claimed.<sup>2</sup> Where the seller is behindhand in a contract for delivery by instalments, the disposition is to go by the fair interpretation of the particular contract; which may sometimes require computation from the dates of the respective periods of delivery, but is sometimes to be construed with reference to the date of final completion.<sup>3</sup>

In a contract of sale, the buyer cannot profit by the seller's negligence where he himself is equally at fault, or more culpable.<sup>4</sup>

§ 592. Action not always based on Contract of Sale.—The buyer's remedies do not always relate strictly to the sale; but in some instances are properly based on subsequent transactions to which the sale was mere matter of inducement.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 450; supra, § 408.

<sup>2</sup> Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127.

<sup>3</sup> See Bergheim v. Blaenavon Iron Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 319; Merrimack Man. Co. v. Quintard, 107 Mass. 127. The doctrines discussed in this chapter are largely applicable to carriers and others, as well as to selling parties, when at default in making delivery under a contract. Schoul. Bailm. §§ 582-584; Parsons and other general writers on Contracts; Sedgwick on Damages.

<sup>4</sup> Woods v. Rocchi, 32 La. Ann. 210. This principle is illustrated in c. 5, supra, as to conditions concurrent and precedent.

<sup>5</sup> See Drysdall v. Smith, 44 Mich. 119.

CHAPTER XVI.

SALES INVOLVING ERROR AND FRAUD.

§ 593. Special Causes of Avoidance; Error, Fraud, Illegality, Mutual Rescission. — Having gone over the general ground of Private Sales of Personal Property, showing what are the constituent parts of such contracts, how they are executed, how far a compliance with the Statute of Frauds is indispensable to their proper enforcement, and the respective remedies of seller and buyer for non-performance according to the mutual intent, we come, at length, to consider those special causes of avoidance which are embraced under the respective heads of, I. Error; II. Fraud; III. Illegality; and IV. Mutual Rescission. The doctrines here applied are those of contracts in general, with such modifications as the peculiar contract of sale requires. Of the first two causes in the present chapter, and the remaining two in our next.

§ 594. Avoidance by Reason of Error or Mistake. — I. Avoidance by reason of error. Error or mistake is, in legal phrase, an unintentional deviation from the truth, as distinguished from fraud; and this innocence of purpose, carried into a sale contract, justifies the law in permitting the contract to be avoided where the one innocent party may be left in as advantageous a position as the other.

§ 595. The Same Subject; Error should be Substantial. — But, in order that a remedy so exhaustive may be successfully invoked, it is, first of all, indispensable that the mistake should be a substantial one, or going to a fundamental point. If the two parties honestly misunderstood one another as to the subject-matter or the price, the error is fundamental and material. Thus, where an annuity is sold dependent on a life which has already ceased without either party's being aware of it, this is cause of avoidance;<sup>1</sup> so is the sale of a claim upon a party which has already been paid off;<sup>1</sup> or of a vessel already sunk at sea.<sup>2</sup> This holds true in every case where there is a common mistake as to the existence of the thing to be sold, and it does not, in fact, exist.<sup>3</sup> So may the mistake be as to quantity, if the price depended upon the quantity: for there is a distinct failure of consideration; as, for instance, where a bar of silver is sold by weight, as reckoned by the assayer, and the assayer proves to have weighed inaccurately, so that there was much less silver in the bar than the price went upon.<sup>4</sup> So may the mistake be one of kind: as in a sale by description, where an article of a certain kind is requested, and that of another kind sent; kind, or matters of essential description or condition precedent under a contract requiring distinction from collateral description or matters of mere quality.<sup>5</sup> So a mistake may arise, fatal to a sale, where the one party reasonably meant the transfer of an article as a sale, while the other as reasonably considered it a loan or a gift.<sup>6</sup> A mutual mistake as to price is a mistake of substance; though, manifestly, it is the seller who is injured by supposing a larger price, and the buyer by supposing a smaller one.<sup>7</sup> And mistake as to the genuineness of a thing — as where a negotiable instrument is sold, purporting to have signatures which turn out false, or professing to be in kind what it is not, and even as, it is held, where accommodation notes are sold for business notes<sup>8</sup> — goes to the substance; for the consideration fails.<sup>9</sup> Any failure of the buyer's title amounting to a failure of consideration may furthermore be regarded as a matter of substance, subject to the limitations which we have elsewhere pointed out.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Strickland v. Turner, 7 Ex. 208.

<sup>1</sup> Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. 63.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas v. Knowles, 128 Mass. 22. And see § 207.

<sup>3</sup> See Ketchum v. Bank of Commerce, 19 N. Y. 502; Story Sales, § 149; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 244. And see Scott v. Warner, 2 Lans. 49; supra, §§ 218, 219, 380.

<sup>5</sup> Supra, §§ 319, 344. And see Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205.

<sup>6</sup> Story Sales, § 150.

<sup>7</sup> Story Sales, § 153.

<sup>8</sup> Webb v. Odell, 49 N. Y. 583.

<sup>9</sup> Burchfield v. Moore, 3 E. & B. 683; Westropp v. Solomon, 8 C. B. 345; Story Sales, § 148; supra, §§ 318, 319.

<sup>10</sup> Eichholz v. Banister, 17 C. B. n. s. 708; supra, § 375.

But where a mistake occurs merely as to the quality of the article sold, this is not so essential as to vitiate the sale ; and it follows, from our previous chapters, that there must have been a warranty of quality on the seller's part, or actual fraud, to enable the buyer to resist successfully.<sup>1</sup> In the absence of warranty, it is said a buyer cannot escape from the obligation of his contract solely because he is disappointed in the quality of the article.<sup>2</sup> So, too, the brand on the exterior of barrels of flour is said not to be of the substance of the contract, where purchase was made of a cargo of flour ; though we apprehend there may be cases where the brand goes to the substance, establishing the genuineness of the thing, and not merely its quality.<sup>3</sup> We must not forget, that, for mere breach of warranty, the law furnishes its own remedies, irrespective of mistake ; and that there can be, in legal contemplation, no failure of consideration where the party gets the thing he really intended to buy, even though it should turn out worthless in point of fact.<sup>4</sup> Nor should we lose sight of the fact that sales are often mutually intended to transfer what is of speculative worth in title or quality.<sup>5</sup>

§ 596. Mistake as to the Party dealt with. — A mistake as to the party with whom the bargain is made may be substantial under some circumstances, and under others quite immaterial. Where one sells out his business, and his successor deals with one of the old customers, who makes a purchase in the store, meaning that it shall go on account to offset a credit of his own against the predecessor, and supposing, with good reason, that he is dealing with that predecessor,

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 156 ; supra, § 343.

<sup>2</sup> See Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, § 351. And see 2 Story Eq. Jur. § 718 ; Paton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. & B. 351 ; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149. Cf. Gardner v. Lane, 9 Allen, 492.

<sup>4</sup> See Lamert v. Heath, 15 M. & W. 487 ; Sully v. Frean, 10 Ex. 535 ; Clarke v. Dickson, E. B. & E. 148 ;

Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99 ; Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 547 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1 ; Bryant v. Pember, 45 Vt. 487.

<sup>5</sup> See Begbie v. Phosphate Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 491 ; 1 Q. B. D. 674 ; 96 Penn. St. 106, as to speculations in patent rights. And cf. 124 Mass. 556, as to the invalidity of the sale of a void patent.

not having learned that he had sold out, this customer may, upon learning his mistake, avoid or refuse to perform the bargain; and this because it was an important element of the consideration that the purchase should go towards an adjustment of accounts, instead of rendering him liable for the full price.<sup>1</sup> Some cases have gone even further, on the suggestion that a party has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent.<sup>2</sup> But where such purchaser had blinded himself against plain evidence that the party he dealt with was a stranger and successor, and not the predecessor, he cannot set up such mistake of parties in his own defence, for he is at fault; and so, too, if he goes on with the contract after once learning his error.

In ordinary cases, there can be no good reason why one party should not be held to his contract if the other honestly acts up to his part, whether he be this or that person; though a seller whose price is unpaid is, of course, safer in dealing with a customer of good, than one of uncertain, standing; and a buyer, on the other hand, under a sale contract which still requires delivery, or may be reopened for breach of warranty or special stipulations, finds the personal status of the seller a matter of moment.<sup>3</sup> On the whole, the common sense of the intended contract is to be well weighed when parties are found in this plight; and the case must be quite exceptional where the mistake as to parties is mutual, and where

<sup>1</sup> Boulton v. Jones, 2 H. & N. 564.

<sup>2</sup> See Boston Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, where A. had ceased to buy of B. on account of dissatisfaction with him, and bought of C. instead, and B. afterwards bought out C.'s business and supplied A. without affording A. knowledge of the transfer; it was held that there was no privity between A. and B., and that B. could not sue for the price. But cf. Stoddard v. Ham, 129 Mass. 383, where the court refused to apply such a rule in the seller's favor, where he supposed the buyer was agent for another, while the buyer did nothing to mislead him, and the sale was made under no such mutual reservation. Here it was incumbent on the seller to inform the buyer that he would sell to him only as agent for such party.

<sup>3</sup> See Boulton v. Jones, 2 H. & N. 564; Mudge v. Oliver, 1 Allen, 74. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1, commenting upon Boulton v. Jones, ib.

the one was not at fault by being too careless, or the other by playing the impostor.<sup>1</sup>

§ 597. General Rule as to Mistake.—In fine, as Judge Blackburn observes in a late case : “Where there has been an innocent misrepresentation or misapprehension, it does not authorize a rescission, unless it is such as to show that there is a complete difference in substance between what was supposed to be and what was taken, so as to constitute a failure of consideration.” And he adds : “As we apprehend, the principle in our law is the same as that of the civil law ; and the difficulty in every case is, to determine whether the mistake or misapprehension is as to the substance of the whole consideration, going as it were to the root of the matter, or only to some point, even though a material point, an error as to which does not affect the substance of the whole consideration.”<sup>2</sup>

§ 598. Rules of Construction; Mutual and One-sided Mistakes.—A contract will be construed according to its reasonable intent ; and hence, if the bargain be honest and clear, and honestly and clearly understood by one party, the other party will not be suffered to deprive him of the advantages thereof on any allegation of his own mistake. Thus, if there be a yacht, “The Dauntless,” which the owner meant to sell, and, moreover, agreed to sell, the buyer cannot back out from the contract on the plea that he had a different yacht in his mind ; and this because the seller’s position is sound, while the buyer’s is unsound, inasmuch as his excuse, even though ingenuous, admits carelessness ; and of two innocent parties, the careless one must suffer. But, on the other hand, had there been two yachts named “The Dauntless,” either of which might, consistently with the contract, have been the yacht stipulated for, the seller’s intention to sell the one, and the buyer’s to purchase the other, would render the mutual mistake sufficient for breaking up the contract.<sup>3</sup> Contrast with this an honest mistake caused by the seller's own carelessness. A case in point is that of a deaf man who came to offer a bid at auction, relying upon the advertised particulars of sale ; and whom the court relieved from the bargain upon a bid made by him in entire ignorance of the fact that the auctioneer, by mere oral statement upon opening the sale, announced a substantial change from those advertised particulars ; which circumstance, had he been aware of it, would have prevented him from bidding.<sup>1</sup> The fault in this case was that of the seller or auctioneer ; and so the court obviously regarded it.

<sup>1</sup> See § 610 ; Lindsay v. Cundy, 3 App. Cas. 459.

<sup>2</sup> Kennedy v. Panama Mail Co., L. R. 2 Q. B. 580. And see opinion in Wheat v. Cross, 31 Md. 99.

<sup>3</sup> See Raffles v. Wichelhaus, 2 H. & C. 906 ; Alexander v. Worman, 6 H. & N. 100 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1 ; Kennedy v. Panama Mail Co., L. R. 2 Q. B. 580.

There may be, then, not only a mutual or two-sided mistake, but a mistake on one side only ; in which latter case we are to ask where the blame lay, and slip the burden along towards the side of him who was at fault ; regarding the possible carelessness of the party pleading mistake, and the possible careless or unfair conduct of the other party inducing the contract ; and keeping sight of the interpretation which should rationally be put upon the contract itself as justifying or not the misconstruction in the case.<sup>2</sup>

Where a party purchased at an administrator's sale a "drill machine," in which, unknown to all parties at the time, were secreted by the decedent money and other valuables, it was held that the sale carried only the machine, and not the money and valuables besides.<sup>3</sup> In such instances, the reasonable intent of the sale contract is decisive of the controversy.

§ 599. The Same Subject.—It is the oft-repeated maxim of the courts, that ignorance of the law, as contrasted with mistake of facts, excuses no one ; a phrase of dubious import, but which seems to exclude the plea of misunderstanding the ordinary law of one's country upon the matter at issue, yet leaving the door open for rectifying mistakes as to an individual's right of ownership.<sup>4</sup> Ignorance and mistake are not synonymous words ; and, even where one's mistake of law

<sup>1</sup> Torrance v. Bolton, L. R. 14 Eq. 124 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 118.

<sup>2</sup> See Doggett v. Emerson, 3 Story, 733.

<sup>3</sup> Huthmacher v. Harris, 38 Penn. St. 491 ; Story Sales, § 151.

<sup>4</sup> Story Eq. Jur. §§ 121-125 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1 ; Wake v. Harrop, has wrought in great measure the failure of consideration, there might be found to concur a mistake of facts sufficient to justify a rescission of the contract.<sup>1</sup>

One party may lead another into error by his own erroneous affirmation as to a material fact ; and this is ground for setting the contract aside at the instance of the injured party, though the misstatement be innocently made.<sup>2</sup> The effect of an innocent misrepresentation on either side usually leaves the injured party to his remedy in damages as for breach of warranty or other contract ; though the party unintentionally causing the injury is not liable in tort, not having committed a wrong.<sup>3</sup>

§ 600. Effect of Mistake upon a Sale.—Now as to the effect of mistake upon a sale. It might be said, that in cases of mutual mistake, going to the substance of the contract, there was no contract at all ; but where execution has followed in ignorance of the mistake, as where the buyer has paid a price, or the seller has handed a thing over, the practical question is one of rescission or avoidance, of putting parties back again to their former posture. If nothing has been done on either side under the contract, and the mistake is seasonably discovered, the simpler course is to refuse performance, and the contract will not be enforced.<sup>4</sup> But if an innocent party has pursued the contract, and suffered some loss or injury in consequence, the law must do more. Thus, in the sale of the annuity (above referred to) upon the life of the party already deceased, the buyer had paid his money : the court, therefore, permitted him to recover it again. And here could be nothing, unless perhaps some instrument in writing, to be given up to the seller.<sup>5</sup> But, in the bar of 6 H. & N. 768 ; Cooper v. Phibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 148–170, per Lord Westbury ; Story Sales, § 157. See Lord Chelmsford in L. R. 6 H. L. 234, as to this ignorance of “law.” In equity courts the line is drawn less sharply than under the common law, between mistakes of law and mistakes of fact.

<sup>1</sup> Ib.

<sup>2</sup> See Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet.

26. But as to intentional misrepresentation or fraud, see infra. And see Hanson v. Edgerly, 29 N. H. 343 ; King v. Eagle Mills, 10 Allen, 551.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 3 ; Kennedy v. Panama Mail Co., L. R. 2 Q. B. 580.

<sup>4</sup> See Torrance v. Bolton, L. R. 8 Ch. 118.

<sup>5</sup> Strickland v. Turner, 7 Ex. 208.

silver case, the seller had parted with a valuable thing; and hence the remedy applied was, not only that the buyer should recover his price, but that the seller should have back his bar of silver.<sup>1</sup> The rule is, as to two innocent parties who have performed acts under a mutual misunderstanding, that the court will allow either to turn back if he can take the other back with him; in other words, the one party may unravel the contract, if he can put the other in statu quo. Therefore the buyer of a chattel who would rescind the sale on this ground, and get back his price, must restore the chattel to the seller, unless he can show that it is of no intrinsic value, and its loss no injury to that party.<sup>2</sup> Even where one has taken a forged or false note, or other security, and claims to be reimbursed for what the other innocent party received from him as its price, there are good reasons why he should be asked to give back the chattel, notwithstanding it may be worthless per se; for it is certainly an injury to the other party for him to retain it.<sup>3</sup> But the situation being a delicate one, it has, for public and private reasons, been in some instances permitted the buyer to produce the note, and offer to return it at the time of trial. Nor is this practically a denial of the honest seller's right to be placed in statu quo.<sup>4</sup>

Restitutio in integrum is, then, the condition upon which the law relieves one mistaken party, where the other was free of blame equally with himself; and, if this be impossible, the contract will not be rescinded upon any such ground as mere error.<sup>5</sup> But circumstances may possibly exist where restitution would not be required.<sup>6</sup>

§ 601. Rule of Restitution applied.—If the articles sold be under an entire contract, the buyer cannot insist upon the validity of the sale as to one portion, and set up the right to

<sup>1</sup> Cox v. Prentice, 3 M. & S. 344.

<sup>2</sup> Clarke v. Dickson, E. B. & E. 148; Blackburn v. Smith, 2 Ex. 783; Dorr v. Fisher, 1 Cush. 271; Smith v. Smith, 30 Vt. 139; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149; 4 Mass. 502; Babcock v. Case, 61 Penn. St. 427.

<sup>3</sup> Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 547; Cook v. Gilman, 34 N. H. 556. Cf. § 605, and cases cited.

<sup>4</sup> Hoopes v. Strasburger, 37 Md. 390.

<sup>5</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1. See cases post, under Fraud.

<sup>6</sup> See § 605.

rescind for mistake as to another portion ; but he must return the whole, or none at all. After so enjoying the consideration in part that entire restitution has become impossible, the party must seek some other remedy for his recompense.<sup>1</sup>

Where goods are forwarded, through the seller's mistake, to a party who had not purchased them, the latter will probably be justified in sending them back through a trustworthy person, or otherwise acting in a reasonable manner : but he has no right to transfer the goods to another, — not even to the broker who was supposed to have negotiated the sale, for the manifest purpose of having such party keep the goods on his own account with the seller instead of returning them ; and if by means of such transfer the seller is defrauded, as by the broker's absconding, the party first receiving them is responsible to the seller.<sup>2</sup> So, if A. purchase goods of B., and C., without B.'s knowledge or consent, delivers his own goods to A., as in fulfilment of the contract between A. and B., there is no relation of buyer and seller between A. and C. ; but the duty of A., on ascertaining the mistake, is to return the goods, and not to sell them over or use them.<sup>3</sup>

§ 602. Avoidance by Reason of Fraud ; Fraud in General. — II. Avoidance by reason of fraud. Fraud differs from mistake, as a ground of avoidance, in relying upon misconduct on the other side, rather than upon one's own innocent error, as the leading motive for setting the transaction aside. The error of the suffering party in a case of mistake borrows, strictly speaking, no assumption of wilfulness from the conduct of the opposite party : but, if the opponent's good faith be seriously impugned, the suffering party must still have made his error, and innocently too, and such bad faith must have induced it, and caused him an injury ; and this latter case is one of fraud. Misrepresentation, wrongful conceal-

<sup>1</sup> Giles v. Edwards, 7 T. R. 181 ; Harnor v. Groves, 15 C. B. 667 ; Devaux v. Connolly, 8 C. B. 640 ; Morse v. Brackett, 98 Mass. 205 ; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 1 ; Story Sales, § 152 ; Lyon v. Bertram, 20 How. 149.

<sup>2</sup> Hiort v. Bott, L. R. 9 Ex. 86.
<sup>3</sup> Randolph Iron Co. v. Elliott, 34 N. J. L. 184. See post, as to rescission for fraud.

ment, imposition, the abuse of confidence, and employment of force, are among the leading causes which justify the interference of the courts for fraud: the one party must do wrong intentionally, and the other act because of such wrong; and it is said that the modes of fraud are infinite, so that courts are indisposed to lay down any definition of the word.<sup>1</sup> But actual fraud should in general be the ground of redress here, and not merely a constructive fraud.<sup>2</sup>

Fraud is good cause for the non-enforcement or avoidance of a contract at the instance of the innocent party who is thereby injured; and, following the general rules applicable to the subject, we find in a sale that the fraud to be remedied is (1st) that of the seller on the buyer, or (2d) that of the buyer on the seller, or (3d) that of both buyer and seller upon some third party.

§ 603. Fraud of the Seller on the Buyer; Caveat Emptor applied. — (1st.) The fraud of the seller on the buyer. The general proposition most pertinent to this instance is, that a fraud cannot be imputed to one who fails to inform the mistaken person of that which he was under no obligation to impart to him. Why this should be well borne in mind appears from a reference to the rule of caveat emptor, which so far departs from the dictates of a rigid morality as very plainly to put upon a purchasing party the necessity of informing himself as to the qualities of whatever specific chattel constitutes the subject-matter of purchase, of drawing no inferences from outside appearances, from the price demanded for the thing, or the seller's failure to point out defects, but exercising his judgment so far as the opportunity permits; and if he desires further assurance, to ask for a warranty.<sup>3</sup> Where the buyer inspects what he purchases, <sup>1</sup> See Story Eq. Jur. § 186; 2 Pars. Contr. 5th ed. 769; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 1; Story Sales, § 158 et seq. As to the action for deceit by the party who has been defrauded, see Clarke v. Dickson, E. B. & E. 148; Queen v. Saddlers' Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 621; post, § 613.

<sup>2</sup> Barnett v. Speir, 93 Ga. 762 (a horse sale).

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 1; Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; Jackson v. Wetherel, 7 S. & R. 422; Gossler v. Eagle Sugar Refinery, 103 Mass. 331. This rule applies to incorporeal as well as corporeal per-

and the defect is apparent, he cannot allege fraud;<sup>1</sup> nor where a defect was not known to be such by the seller, from appearances, and no concealment in order to deceive was practised;<sup>2</sup> nor, of course, where the buyer takes the thing with all faults;<sup>3</sup> nor where it appears, that, instead of trusting to the seller's statements on the point, he verified by his own expert, or employed his own agents, and consummated the bargain upon their report;<sup>4</sup> nor where he makes his own fair examination as to the point, and relies upon his judgment;<sup>5</sup> nor, in general, where the matter was open to his observation, so that, by exercising ordinary diligence and prudence, he could have ascertained the defect.<sup>6</sup> Mere statements of the seller, not amounting to warranty, ought not to be confided in;<sup>7</sup> nor the usual chaffering talk of a bargain which involves estimates and matters of opinion.<sup>8</sup> And, in general, the seller's silence, even though amounting to a passive acquiescence in the buyer's self-deception as to the quality or intrinsic value of the subject-matter bargained for, does not avoid the contract for fraud, but comes within the protection of caveat emptor.<sup>9</sup>

§ 604. But Caveat Emptor does not countenance Fraud.— But where the seller is guilty of wilful misrepresentation as to material points, and thereby induces a party to purchase on terms that would otherwise have been withheld, and so, too, in case of wrongful concealment, the exercise of force, sonalty. Renton v. Maryott, 21 N. J. Eq. 123.

<sup>1</sup> Morse v. Rathburn, 49 Mo. 91.

<sup>2</sup> Cogel v. Kniseley, 89 Ill. 598; 85 Ill. 16.

<sup>3</sup> Pearce v. Blackwell, 12 Ire. 49.

<sup>4</sup> Howell v. Biddlecorn, 62 Barb. 131.

<sup>5</sup> Pattison v. Jenkins, 33 Ind. 87; Stephens v. Orman, 10 Fla. 9.

<sup>6</sup> Brown v. Leach, 107 Mass. 364; Rocchi v. Schwabacher, 33 La. Ann. 1364. If the buyer brings an action for deceit against the seller for false statements as to value, &c., a neglect of his own opportunities for examination may preclude the remedy. Poland v. Brownell, 131 Mass. 138.

<sup>7</sup> Manning v. Albee, 11 Allen, 522; Walker v. Pue, 57 Md. 155. We have elsewhere considered the distinction between misrepresentations inducing a sale, and those as to which the buyer had equal opportunity, or which did not induce the sale. See 13 Wall. 379; supra, § 321.

<sup>8</sup> See Holbrook v. Connor, 60 Me. 578; 63 Me. 14; 131 Mass. 138; 120 Ill. 161.

<sup>9</sup> Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 579. And see § 611.

and fraudulent conduct generally, caveat emptor does not apply; and the sale is so far vitiated, that the deceived party may disaffirm it.<sup>1</sup> The buyer's opportunity to be present, and examine the thing for himself before concluding the sale, has an important bearing upon the issue as to whether he relied upon the seller's alleged false representation.<sup>2</sup> A test left to the seller and fraudulently applied by him vitiates the buyer's option.<sup>3</sup> Another important circumstance is the character of the thing, as one whose qualities may be well known to the seller, but must be taken by any buyer on trust; as in the case of a patented article bought of an expert by one not skilled in machines.<sup>4</sup> Still another is the resort by the seller to some trick or artifice for the purpose of checking examination, or diverting the buyer from the line of inquiry which he would otherwise most likely have pursued.<sup>5</sup> There are even circumstances under which a seller's concealment of facts known to him becomes fraudulent, notwithstanding he says nothing,—where silence carries with it the legal consequences of positive misrepresentation because it was his duty to speak out. One instance is that of selling fodder upon which poison has been spilled;<sup>6</sup> another, that of putting out a prospectus or advertisement with artful concealments, so as to give a false impression;<sup>7</sup> another, that of wilfully hiding some internal defect which rendered the thing worthless.<sup>8</sup> It is fraudulent for a seller to expose property for sale, knowing that there are incumbrances upon the title, and yet concealing such incumbrances;<sup>9</sup> and usage of trade may

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 378-380; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 1; Regina v. Kenrick, 5 Q. B. 49; Paddock v. Strobridge, 29 Vt. 470; Manning v. Albee, 11 Allen, 522. And see supra, §§ 343-366.

<sup>2</sup> Vandewalker v. Osmer, 65 Barb. 556; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26; Bonduant v. Crawford, 22 Iowa, 40.

<sup>3</sup> 86 Tex. 694.

<sup>4</sup> Page v. Dickerson, 28 Wis. 694; Kendall v. Wilson, 41 Vt. 567.

<sup>5</sup> Story Sales, § 381; Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; Roseman v. Canovan, 43 Cal. 110. See also 99 Mich. 326.

<sup>6</sup> French v. Vining, 102 Mass. 135.

<sup>7</sup> Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325.

<sup>8</sup> Paddock v. Strobridge, 29 Vt. 420; Croyle v. Moses, 90 Penn. St. 250; 49 Vt. 297.

<sup>9</sup> Story Sales, § 383; Sweetman v. Prince, 62 Barb. 256.

sometimes require a party to conform by disclosing such defects as are usually made known to customers in that particular calling.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, a buyer has a right to trust the seller as to matters not within his own knowledge; and as any seller may make an express warranty, so is he held to responsibility for his false statements by way of inducement, even though the buyer might have ascertained the falsehood by inquiry.<sup>2</sup> Upon the whole, the courts appear to have vacillated considerably in their decisions, so as to render many of the earlier opinions unsafe as statements of legal doctrine;<sup>3</sup> and it is, after all, the circumstances of a particular transaction that chiefly determine the issue.

§ 605. Buyer must have been deceived; his Avoidance of the Sale.—In order to avoid the sale on the ground of the seller's false representation, the party purchasing must have been deceived by the representation; and, in general, it must appear that the buyer trusted to the inducement which proves fraudulent, and bought on the strength of it.<sup>4</sup>

Within a reasonable time, too, after discovering the fraud, the buyer must act upon his discovery; refusing to complete the purchase if the goods are not yet delivered; otherwise returning or offering to return them, demanding, if they are already paid for, a return of the price.<sup>5</sup> But where the

<sup>1</sup> Horsfall v. Thomas, 1 H. & C. 90; Jones v. Bowden, 4 Taunt. 847; Story Sales, § 384; Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 597.

<sup>2</sup> Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt, 58 Cal. 234; 56 Ala. 202; 12 Met. 549; Pennock v. Stygles, 54 Vt. 226; supra, § 329; Redgrave v. Hurd, 20 Ch. D. 1; per curiam, in 13 Wall. 379.

As to a seller's fraud in sales by sample, see supra, § 364 et seq. And as to fraud in respect to title, see supra, §§ 370, 378.

<sup>3</sup> See Bailey v. Walford, 9 Q. B. 197, per Lord Denman, C. J.; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 3. A preponderance of evidence, though criminal in character, establishes fraud in a sale. Bixby v. Carskaddon, 55 Iowa, 533.

<sup>4</sup> Smith v. Hughes, L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3; Morse v. Rathburn, 49 Mo. 91. But the buyer's right to rely upon the seller's false statements is favored. Redgrave v. Hurd, 20 Ch. D. 1; Collins v. Dennison, 12 Met. 549; 56 Ala. 202.

<sup>5</sup> Gatling v. Newell, 9 Ind. 572; Story Sales, § 458; Matteson v. Holt, 45 Vt. 336; Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578; 52 Vt. 382; 81 Ind. 350; Hall v. Fullerton, 69 Ill. 448; Voorhees v. Earl, 2 Hill (N. Y.), 292; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 3; Manahan v. Noyes, 52 N. H. 232; Garland v. Spencer, 46 Me. 528; Collins v. Townsend, 58 Cal. 608.

goods are of no value to seller or buyer (as in the case of counterfeit bonds or worthless stock), the buyer is relieved of the obligation to return;<sup>1</sup> and so where the proper test necessary to show the fraud destroyed the thing.<sup>2</sup> An acceptance of goods under a contract, when induced by the seller's fraud, leaves the buyer still at liberty to rescind upon discovering the fraud.<sup>3</sup> And the latest decisions rule quite leniently to the buyer, in dispensing with a strict tender and formalities, so long as he has not exercised acts of ownership while delaying, and so far as the informalities or delay are set up by the defrauding party himself.<sup>4</sup> Yet since the law puts the party to his option to reject for fraud, or stand to the contract, a defrauded buyer, who, after discovering the fraud, makes no objection, but deals with the article as his own or keeps it unreasonably long, loses the right of repudiating the sale; though, in affirmance of the contract, he may still sue and recover damages.<sup>5</sup> Nor

<sup>1</sup> Ib.; Brewster v. Burnett, 125 Mass. 68; Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578.

<sup>2</sup> Pacific Guano Co. v. Mullen, 66 Ala. 582; 64 N. C. 439.

<sup>3</sup> Dutchess Co. v. Harding, 49 N. Y. 321.

<sup>4</sup> See American Wine Co. v. Brasher, 13 Fed. R. 595, 603, to the effect that, where the contract has been induced by fraud, it is not necessary that the buyer should absolutely tender what he has received; that he ought, however, to give notice of his intention to rescind and that he will not abide by the contract; that he ought further to be in a situation, upon the trial, to put the other party in the situation in which he was at the time of the discovery of the fraud. That the contract is partly executed at the time of the discovery of the fraud will not in itself prevent a rescission, unless it may be that it has gone so far that the subject-matter, or the greater part of it, has disappeared. And see Van Trott v. Wiese, 36 Wis. 439; Hen- drickson v. Hendrickson, 51 Iowa, 68; Potter v. Taggart, 54 Wis. 395. In Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, a buyer who rescinded his contract of purchase of stock for fraud was held not bound to receive the stock certificate left on deposit for him, and tender it to the seller before bringing his action for the purchase-money. "Acquiescence and waiver," says Mr. Justice Swayne (ib. 581), "are always questions of fact." . . . There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. . . . When fully advised, he must decide and act with reasonable despatch. He cannot rest until the rights of third persons are involved and the situation of the wrong-doer is materially changed. Under such circumstances he loses the right to rescind, and must seek compensation in damages. But the wrong-doer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission." is he only bound to rescind for fraud at the earliest practicable moment, but he must rescind the contract altogether, or not at all: he must retain neither the whole nor a part of the consideration received under an entire contract.<sup>1</sup> For here, as in general cases of rescission, it is incumbent upon the party who would rescind, to place, or offer to place, the other party in statu quo, even though the buyer has innocently consumed the property, or changed its condition while ignorant of the fraud. His inability to place the seller in his former plight is held a sufficient barrier to rescission, and he is remitted to his suit in damages;<sup>2</sup> though it is held, that, if the goods were necessarily destroyed in discovering the fraud, such restitution will be dispensed with;<sup>3</sup> and in some instances the duty of placing in statu quo is satisfied where the judgment in the suit will accomplish this result.<sup>4</sup> The election to rescind or not to rescind, once made, is final and conclusive; and upon such election should be the pursuit of remedies.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Story Sales, §§ 385, 458; Clark v. Neufville, 46 Ga. 261; Clarke v.

§ 606. He may sue upon the Fraud, or claim Damages for Breach of Warranty.—It should be borne in mind that warranty and fraud are essentially different; that, while warranty is founded in a contract, a fraudulent statement is essentially a tort; and that a transaction cannot amount to warranty and tort at the same time. Representations in a sale, sufficient of themselves to constitute a warranty, will not be deprived of that character by the fact that they were falsely and fraudulently made.<sup>6</sup> It follows that one who alleges fraud in a complaint cannot at the trial elect to Dickson, E. B. & E. 148; Matteson v. Holt, 45 Vt. 336; c. 15, supra.

<sup>1</sup> Campbell v. Fleming, 1 Ad. & E. 40; Miner v. Bradley, 23 Pick. 457; Willoughby v. Moulton, 47 N. H. 205; Voorhees v. Earl, 2 Hill, 292; Junkins v. Simpson, 14 Me. 364.

<sup>2</sup> Gatling v. Newell, and other cases supra; Western Bank v. Addie, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 145; Clarke v. Dickson, E. B. & E. 148.

<sup>3</sup> Smith v. Love, 64 N. C. 439;

Pacific Guano Co. v. Mullen, 66 Ala. 582.

<sup>4</sup> Allerton v. Allerton, 50 N. Y. 670. See Whitcomb v. Denio, 52 Vt. 382. Whether a contract is rescinded for fraud within a reasonable time is a mixed question of law and fact, and may be left to the jury. Ib.

<sup>5</sup> See Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578.

<sup>6</sup> Carter v. Abbott, 33 Iowa, 180; Rose v. Hurley, 39 Ind. 77.

prove breach of warranty merely, nor recover damages as for assumpsit when the suit was grounded in tort.<sup>1</sup> And before one can complain of fraud, he ought to show something done or said or concealed intentionally to deceive him in the transaction.<sup>2</sup>

But the buyer may elect to sue in tort or contract, where either remedy would be justified by the facts; and in the practice of some States, a count for false representation may be joined with a count for breach of warranty.<sup>3</sup> The scienter or knowledge of the material fact, which in actions upon the warranty need not appear, must, in actions based on fraud, be distinctly shown;<sup>4</sup> and, for fraudulent representation, the measure of damages is, in general, the difference between the actual and represented value.<sup>5</sup> What has been said as to the buyer's remedies, under a breach of contract, is largely applicable to suits brought in the present connection: and the buyer has been permitted to bring his cross-action for fraud in affirmance of the sale, and recoup damages when the seller sues for his price;<sup>6</sup> also to recover, in a suitable case, consequential damages on the principle laid down for breach of contract.<sup>7</sup> Assumpsit will lie, after rescission of a contract induced by fraud, for the recovery of the purchase-money, if it has been paid.<sup>8</sup>

The damages usually recoverable for breach of warranty may be greatly enhanced in case fraud is set up and proved.

<sup>1</sup> Ross v. Mather, 51 N. Y. 108, disapproving Williamson v. Allison, 2 East, 446.

<sup>2</sup> Ward v. Hobbs, 3 Q. B. D. 150.

<sup>3</sup> Lassiter v. Ward, 11 Ire. 443.

<sup>4</sup> Clark v. Bamer, 2 Lans. 67; Bartholomew v. Bushnell, 20 Conn. 271; Kingsbury v. Taylor, 29 Me. 508; Pike v. Fay, 101 Mass. 134. But where the action in case is brought, such averments are not necessary. 13 R. I. 646; 46 Mich. 403.

<sup>5</sup> Durst v. Burton, 2 Lans. 137; Stiles v. White, 11 Met. 356.

<sup>6</sup> Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. 283; Weimer v. Clement, 37 Penn. St. 147; Starr Glass Co. v. Morey, 108 Mass.

573; Garland v. Spencer, 46 Me. 528. Bank of Woodland v. Hiatt, 58 Cal. 234, permits the defence of fraud to be set up where the buyer of mining stock proving to be worthless is sued on a non-negotiable note given for the price. Where sued by the trustee of a bankrupt seller for the price, the buyer may set off a claim for unliquidated damages for a fraudulent misrepresentation inducing him to purchase. Jack v. Kipping, 9 Q. B. D. 113.

<sup>7</sup> Story Sales, § 458; Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Ex. 341; supra, § 578.

<sup>8</sup> Whitcomb v. Denio, 52 Vt. 382; Wood v. Sheldon, 42 N. J. L. 421.

A manufacturer who sells to one for his own use an article in which there is a defect, which he points out, is not liable for injuries resulting therefrom, unless the article is in its nature dangerous;<sup>1</sup> and with reference to articles only dangerous sub modo, and to parties but remotely connected with the dealer, negligence or wrongful dealing on the seller's part should not be hastily affirmed, with its disastrous consequences.<sup>2</sup> Otherwise it is a general rule, that a seller may make himself liable in an action founded on tort for deceit or negligence, to any one, be it buyer or third party, who, not being at fault himself, is injured by a dangerous or noxious article which is sold without notice of its dangerous properties; and this rule, which covers all injuries which may reasonably be contemplated as likely to result from such sale, has been applied in numerous instances to the relief of those injured by the sale of guns, poisons, compounds of dangerous ingredients, and the like, where the seller has, by direct falsehood or culpable suppression of facts which should have been made known, endangered the buyer or others in life, limb, or property.<sup>3</sup>

§ 607. Buyer's Avoidance where Fraudulent Sale is by Agent, etc.—Where the buyer is defrauded by the seller's agent, he may rescind the contract if he can put the principal party in statu quo; but his right to sue the principal for deceit or other tort must depend, according to the latest English cases, upon the latter's intent to participate in the injury. Against the guilty agent personally such action may be brought, but not against an innocent principal. Thus, in a sale of stock made through the fraud of corporation officers,

<sup>1</sup> Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.; Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 514.

<sup>3</sup> See Langridge v. Levy, 2 M. & W. 519 (discredited in 11 Q. B. D. 503); 4 M. & W. 339; George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Ex. 1 (which is approved in 11 Q. B. D. 503, reversing 9 Q. B. D. 302); Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 1; Thomas v. Winchester, 2 Seld. 397; Wellington v.

Downer Kerosene Oil Co., 104 Mass. 64; French v. Vining, 102 Mass. 132; Marsh v. Webber, 16 Minn. 418.

See for the latest exposition of the English rule, Peek v. Gurney, L. R. 6 H. L. 377, 412, and which holds that the false representation should be made with the intent that it should be acted on. And see 11 Q. B. D. 503.

it has been held that the defrauded buyer may refuse to perform, or may have his contract rescinded, the fraud of the agents being so far treated as the fraud of the principal; but that the corporation, if innocent, cannot be sued in damages for the deceit.<sup>1</sup> Now, as heavy damages may often be awarded for breach of a contract, by way of consequential injuries,<sup>2</sup> this distinction does not always appear easy of practical enforcement. The principal, who has not authorized or participated in the wrong, may doubtless put himself right by rescinding when he discovers the fraud of his agent, and making prompt restitution; nor, by adopting the contract, would he ordinarily mean to adopt such fraudulent words or acts of the agent as he was unaware of;<sup>3</sup> but the evil is in permitting the principal to enjoy the benefit of the contract fraudulently made, and yet claim immunity for the fraud. The better rule would appear to be, that a principal who retains the benefits of the contract after learning of the agent's fraud, exposes himself to legal liability for all the legal consequences flowing from the fraud, so far as that fraud was an element in procuring the sale, though not, perhaps, technically liable as for deceit; in other words, that the seller cannot, under such circumstances, claim to be an "innocent principal."<sup>4</sup> Nor, in this country, does any special distinction appear to have been taken usually in such cases, as against suits founded in the agent's tort; the right of the injured party to rescind or claim damages for the fraud being affirmed in general terms.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Western Bank v. Addie, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 146; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 3; Udell v. Atherton, 7 H. & N. 172. But see Barwick v. English, &c. Bank, L. R. 2 Ex. 259; Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325.

<sup>2</sup> Though, as already observed, what are called punitive damages are not awarded where the suit is strictly for breach of warranty. Supra, § 585.

<sup>3</sup> See Elwell v. Chamberlin, 31 N. Y. 611; Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238.

<sup>4</sup> Durst v. Burton, 47 N. Y. 167;

New York, &c. R. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Concord Bank v. Gregg, 14 N. H. 331; Crump v. U. S. Mining Co., 7 Gratt. 352; Fogg v. Griffin, 2 Allen, 1; Story Agency, § 308; Mundorff v. Wickersham, 63 Penn. St. 87; McClellan v. Scott, 24 Wis. 81; Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129; 2 Kent Com. 616, 621. It is too late to disaffirm the agent's contract after the principal has gone into bankruptcy. Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. But some late American

Where, on the other hand, one makes a sale through an agent, and instructs this agent to represent chattels as sound, knowing in fact that they are not, but fraudulently withholding knowledge of the truth from the agent, the agent's innocence in making the representation does not shield the principal seller from liability in damages for the fraudulent misrepresentation.<sup>1</sup>

§ 608. Fraud of the Buyer on the Seller; Seller's Avoidance of the Sale.—(2d.) The fraud of the buyer on the seller. This most commonly consists in such falsehood as to one's solvency, his ability to pay and means of payment, as induces the seller to part with his goods without getting paid for them. The rules set forth under this head do not altogether harmonize: but we take the better opinion to be, and that usually adopted by the courts in this country, that the seller who never designed parting with his chattels except to a party able to pay for them, shall be shielded against the buyer's fraud, notwithstanding the latter's misconduct consisted in suppression of the truth instead of open falsehood; and that, while it is not necessarily fraudulent for

cases rule that an innocent seller cannot be sued in tort for the fraud of his agent in effecting the sale; and the English rule is followed; the agent being, at the buyer's option, liable for his own deceit, and rescission with assumpsit lying against the seller. Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288. See Krumm v. Beach, 25 Hun, 293; 86 N. Y. 311.

The latest English decisions, though wavering greatly, appear to be settling in the direction indicated in our text as the preferable and the American doctrine. See Benj. Sales, 3d ed. §§ 464-467, and cases cited. The inconsistency of the appellate decision in Western Bank v. Addie, with Barwick v. English, &c. Bank (both cited, supra, in this section, and both of which, as Mr. Benjamin observes, were decided, in 1867, about the same time by appellate courts, each being ignorant of the case pending in the other), made recent uncertainty. But the principle favored in Barwick v. English, &c. Bank has since been expressly adopted; viz., that the principal in a sale is answerable for the fraud of his agent committed in the course of the principal's business and for the principal's benefit. Mackay v. Commercial Bank, L. R. 5 P. C. 394; Swire v. Francis, 3 App. Cas. 106; Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank, 5 App. Cas. 317; Weir v. Bell, 3 Ex. D. 238. Lord Blackburn, in 5 App. Cas. 339, asserts that the above cases of 1867 are reconcilable.

Two joint owners of a chattel are held jointly liable for the fraudulent representations of one of them in negotiating a sale of the chattel on their joint behalf. White v. Sawyer, 16 Gray, 586.

<sup>1</sup> Ludgater v. Love, 44 L. T. N. S. 694. And see cases cited, ib.

one who buys goods on credit to omit disclosing insolvency, yet if he purchased knowing his own insolvency, and with a preconceived design not to pay for the goods, the seller, who was misled into trusting the party accordingly, may impeach the transaction as fraudulent.<sup>1</sup> Such design may be inferred by the jury from the conduct of the buyer and surrounding circumstances, with reference not only to the sale in question, but to contemporaneous transactions.<sup>2</sup> That the buyer's actual fraudulent misrepresentation and false pretences as to his good standing, his property, and the worth of his business, which he made to induce the purchase, may be relied on, to the still greater advantage of the defrauded seller, for the purpose of impeaching such sale to an insolvent party, admits of no question.<sup>3</sup>

§ 609. Rule applied to Sub-buyers, etc. — The main issue, not always kept clearly in view where third parties who have become bonâ fide purchasers from the fraudulent buyer in possession are concerned, is, whether the sale had gone so far as to divest the seller, agreeably to his intention, of full title, including the right of property as well as of possession, or of nothing more than possession; for, if he had merely meant to surrender possession while retaining his rights and reme-

<sup>1</sup> Ferguson v. Carrington, 9 B. & C. 59; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 2; Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631; Hennequin v. Naylor, 24 N. Y. 139; Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 253; Burrell v. Stevens, 73 Me. 395; Loeb v. Flash, 65 Ala. 526; Thompson v. Rose, 16 Conn. 71; Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 317, and cases cited; Fox v. Webster, 46 Mo. 181. "In such a case," says Hoar, J., in Dow v. Sanborn, 3 Allen, 181, "the fraudulent party pretends to be a purchaser when he is not, but is in fact attempting to obtain possession of the property of another dishonestly with a view to deprive him of it without consideration. . . . In its moral quality it is hard to distinguish it from a larceny." But see Backen-toss v. Speicher, 31 Penn. St. 324;

Nichols v. Pinner, 18 N. Y. 295; Garbutt v. Bank, 22 Wis. 384; Story Sales, § 176. In Redington v. Roberts, 25 Vt. 686, a very fine distinction is asserted. See also Whittaker, Ex parte, 10 Ch. D. 446; 101 Mich.

<sup>2</sup> Hennequin v. Naylor, 24 N. Y. 139. On the other hand, failing circumstances, not amounting to a clear apprehension of insolvency or a mental intent to get the goods without paying, are held not to constitute fraud in various cases. Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 443, Bennett's note.

<sup>3</sup> See Jordan v. Parker, 56 Me. 557; Hoffman v. Noble, 6 Met. 68; Eaton v. Avery, 83 N. Y. 31. And as to a buyer's personal imposition, see § 610.

dies for securing the price as owner, or had not really sold to this buyer at all, the goods, as we have elsewhere seen, may still be reclaimed, according to the usual rule, as the seller's against the world.<sup>1</sup> What has been said of the doctrine of stolen goods and stolen negotiable instruments, has also a bearing upon the present inquiry.<sup>2</sup> Subject to these qualifications, bonâ fide third persons, who have purchased for value from the original buyer the whole or a portion of the goods which he fraudulently procured, while such goods were in his possession, are protected in rights acquired by them before the defrauded seller has done some act to disaffirm the original transaction.<sup>3</sup> But one who claims to be such bonâ fide purchaser for value from the fraudulent buyer, must, as against the defrauded seller, show that he is so;<sup>4</sup> and the defrauding buyer's attaching or execution creditors occupy no such vantage-ground, but are only substitutes for the buyer as respects the title he acquired.<sup>5</sup> The seller may disaffirm the sale as against the buyer's assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency.<sup>6</sup>

§ 610. Where Buyer is an Impostor.—The buyer's fraud may consist in giving a false name; and if the seller contract on the faith of a mistaken identity so induced, and

<sup>1</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, pt. 2, c. 2, § 2; Dean v. Yates, 22 Ohio St. 388; supra, § 292. See Rodliff v. Dalinger, 141 Mass. 1, as to an impostor case.

<sup>2</sup> Supra, §§ 18–21; Moyce v. Newington, 4 Q. B. D. 32.

<sup>3</sup> Pease v. Gloahec, L. R. 1 P. C. 220; Kingsford v. Merry, 11 Ex. 577; Williamson v. Russell, 39 Conn. 406; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307; Ditson v. Randall, 33 Me. 202; Barnard v. Campbell, 58 N. Y. 73; Larkins v. Eckwurzel, 42 Ala. 322; Chicago Dock Co. v. Foster, 48 Ill. 507; Hall v. Hinks, 21 Md. 406. In Shufeldt v. Pease, 16 Wis. 659, this rule is applied in favor of a creditor who takes the goods to satisfy his pre-existing debt. But see contra, Stevens v. Brennan, 79 N. Y. 254.

<sup>4</sup> Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462; McLeod v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Miss. 99; Lynch v. Beecher, 38 Conn. 490; Porter v. Parks, 49 N. Y. 564. A third party purchasing goods (qu. negotiable instruments), with notice of such facts as would put one ordinarily prudent on inquiry, is not thus protected though he paid value. 9 Mo. App. 151; Loeb v. Flash, 65 Ala. 526; 13 Rep. 90; Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462.

<sup>5</sup> Jordan v. Parker, 56 Me. 557; Thompson v. Rose, 16 Conn. 71; Hartt v. McNeil, 47 Mo. 526; Wiggins v. Day, 9 Gray, 97; Field v. Stearns, 42 Vt. 106; Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462; Oswego Starch Factory, v. Lendrum, 57 Iowa, 573.

<sup>6</sup> 8 Lea, 67.

trusting to the credit of the party falsely designated, he shall not be held, upon discovering the fraud, to carry out the bargain with the impostor.<sup>1</sup> But if the bargain were with such buyer personally, without reference to any name he might assume, the seller could hardly set up the fraud, even if he wished to; especially after such party has paid or tendered the price, and otherwise evinced his readiness and ability to fulfil the terms of the bargain on his part.<sup>2</sup> Again: the buyer may have misrepresented himself as an agent or partner of some house of good standing, and so induced the sale: in which case, as between himself and the defrauded seller, the sale may be rescinded, and the goods recovered; the question being, whether the sale was made to the man on his own responsibility, or simply as agent or partner of the concern represented.<sup>3</sup> So, too, is it where one by the artful use of a name in good standing which resembles his own, induces false credit and draws business to himself which was meant for the other.<sup>4</sup>

§ 611. Caveat Emptor applied in Buyer's Favor.—Caveat emptor has its reciprocal advantage for the buyer; and, dealing with the seller as one who exercises his own wits in making a bargain, he is not bound to impart the information upon which he bases his offer, nor disclose how or with whom he expects to derive a profit. Unless some special trust is reposed in him by the seller, the buyer can hardly be made answerable for merely concealing his knowledge of

<sup>1</sup> Duff v. Budd, 3 B. & B. 177; Stephenson v. Hart, 4 Bing. 476.

<sup>2</sup> Duff v. Budd, supra; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 1; Clough v. London, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 7 Ex. 26.

<sup>3</sup> Barker v. Dinsmore, 72 Penn. St. 427; Higgons v. Burton, 26 L. J. Ex. 342; Hardman v. Booth, 1 H. & C. 803; Rodliff v. Dallinger, 141 Mass. 1. But cf. Stoddard v. Ham, 129 Mass. 383, where no fraud was practised. See also Hamet v. Letcher, 37 Ohio St. 356; Lindsay v. Cundy, 3 App. Cas. 459; 2 Q. B. D. 96; 135

Mass. 278, 283. If the seller knows that the buyer is an agent, but not whose agent he is, and takes his note for the goods, this does not prevent him from afterwards electing to make the principal his debtor. Merrell v. Kenyon, 48 Conn. 314.

Where A. obtains goods by falsely representing that he was purchasing for himself and B. jointly, B. may, by his subsequent acts, make himself liable as an original purchaser. Ellis v. Chemical Co., 64 Ga. 571.

<sup>4</sup> Lindsay v. Cundy, 3 App. Cas. 459.

facts; and the wide dissemination of news by telegraph and the press excludes from our present consideration much of the old learning as to the buyer's justification in withholding his personal information of some sudden rise in foreign markets, of the declaration of war, and the like. But, where the common channels of news afford no help, the concealment of information not accessible to a seller might, in some extreme case, be a dereliction of duty on the buyer's part; and, in any case where the buyer procures an article at an unreasonably low price, his actual misrepresentations and deceitful conduct, inducing that result, are likely to vitiate the transaction, at the instance of the injured party.<sup>1</sup> The legal duty of imparting one's secret information affecting the value of the thing is by no means commensurate with the moral obligation;<sup>2</sup> but the court and jury are keenly susceptible to any practice of open imposition.<sup>3</sup>

There are various statements involving matters of estimate, opinion, or belief, in which buyer and seller are expected to clash on a bargain,—the one exalting and the other disparaging the intrinsic worth of the thing,—which the rule of caveat emptor regards lightly on either side, unless the one party had sound reason for relying upon what the other said.<sup>4</sup>

§ 612. Buyer's Fraud as to Credit of a Third Party; Lord Tenterden's Act.—The buyer's fraud may be with reference to a third person. Where the seller is induced by fraudulent representations to sell goods to an insolvent third person, from whom the misrepresenting party afterwards obtains them, the seller may sue directly the latter party, whose fraudulent conduct induced the sale, as though he had bought the goods in his own name; this on the assump-

<sup>1</sup> See Story Sales, § 175; 2 Kent Com. 482, n.; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 2.

<sup>2</sup> Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178; Turner v. Harvey, Jacob, 169; Vernon v. Keys, 12 East, 632; Jones v. Franklin, 2 M. & R. 348.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Turner v. Harvey, Jacob,

169; Harris v. Tyson, 24 Penn. St. 347, as to the purchase of land secretly known to contain a valuable mine; Brown v. Montgomery, 20 N. Y. 287; Prescott v. Wright, 4 Gray, 461.

<sup>4</sup> Belcher v. Costello, 122 Mass. 186; Ellis v. Andrews, 56 N. Y. 83.

tion either of a fraudulent conspiracy, rendering each participant liable, or that the nominal purchaser was only a secret agent for the misrepresenting party who finally bought the goods.<sup>1</sup> But fraudulent conduct is still a question of motive; and a merely false statement as to some party's solvency falls within the protection of a section in Lord Tenterden's Act (re-enacted in some of the United States) which requires one's representations concerning the character or credit of another party to be in writing, and signed by himself, in order to charge him personally;<sup>2</sup> and it is held, that even though the creditor of a firm in failing circumstances, who causes a party to sell such firm, on his own misrepresentations, goods upon credit, which he afterwards obtains in payment of his pre-existing debt, becomes directly liable for his fraud, he cannot be treated as incapacitated from purchasing the goods.<sup>3</sup>

§ 613. Seller's Election of Remedies; Matters of Practice.—Inasmuch as the defrauded seller's position is the correlative of a defrauded buyer's, such a party is likewise bound to elect what course he shall pursue after discovering the fraud. He may disaffirm the contract by reason of the fraud; refusing to deliver if he has not already done so, and retaining his legal hold upon the goods if the lien be not extinguished, or else demanding them from the buyer if the latter have acquired possession and full title. But he may doubtless, on the other hand, affirm the sale, notwithstanding the fraud; and if, after discovering the fraud, he voluntarily sues on the contract to recover the price,<sup>4</sup> or accepts security for the purchase-money from the defrauding buyer,<sup>5</sup> this is, as a matter of law, such affirmance of the sale as

<sup>1</sup> Biddle v. Levy, 1 Stark. 20; Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 2; Phelan v. Crosby, 2 Gill, 462; State v. Schulein, 45 Mo. 521.

<sup>2</sup> Act of 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 6; 2 Kent Com. 489, 490, n.; Haslock v. Ferguson, 7 A. & E. 86.

<sup>3</sup> State v. Schulein, 45 Mo. 521. As to a similar contract of purchase and agency with a guaranty, see 131 Mass. 384.

<sup>4</sup> Parke, B., in Stevenson v. Newnham, 13 C. B. 285; Story Sales, §§ 446, 447; Dibblee v. Sheldon, 10 Blatchf. 178; Byard v. Holmes, 4 Vroom, 119.

<sup>5</sup> Joslin v. Cowee, 52 N. Y. 90. See 1 McCrary, 70. As to the effect of claiming for his price against the debars him from setting up the fraud afterwards. Levying an attachment upon the goods fraudulently purchased, and selling them thereunder, with other goods of the buyer, is, however, held to be no affirmance of the fraud.<sup>1</sup> For the contract is voidable, and not void; and upon this lack of a notified avoidance do parties stand who have bonâ fide acquired adverse claims before the seller's repudiation.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, where the seller has rightfully rescinded the contract by reason of the buyer's fraud, no act on his part alone, without the other's co-operation, will revive the contract, or enable him to sue upon it.<sup>3</sup> In exercising his right to rescind, it is enough, where the buyer has given his worthless note for the price, that the seller, in his suit brought to disaffirm the sale, leaves the court to return the note and so place the buyer in statu quo.<sup>4</sup> In general, the seller must choose his position and keep consistently to it, either wholly rescinding or wholly affirming the sale; though for insufficient indemnity thus obtained, he is sometimes allowed a further recourse.<sup>5</sup>

On the whole, it appears well settled, that where the seller was defrauded by the buyer, he may, upon discovering the fraud, elect to treat the contract as a nullity, and bring his action for the recovery of the specific chattels, or trover for their value. He may replevy the goods, or may, if using no force, retake them in person. Many of the authorities maintain also that the seller may sue in assumpsit upon a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the goods, electing as between contract and tort; though there are eminent authorities which concede such election only by way of exception.<sup>6</sup> bankrupt's estate, see 121 Mass. 297; 93 Mo. 504; 87 N. Y. 166.

<sup>1</sup> Dean v. Yates, 22 Ohio St. 388.

<sup>2</sup> Pease v. Gloahec, and other cases supra, § 609. See Clough v. London, &c. R. R. Co., L. R. 7 Ex. 26, for a statement of the defrauded seller's position and the limitations of his right. And see Warner v. Vallily, 13 R. I. 483.

<sup>3</sup> Kinney v. Kiernan, 49 N. Y. 164.

<sup>4</sup> Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. Y. 264; Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Met. 547.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed., 445, Bennett's note; 88 N. Y. 605; 99 U. S. 582.

<sup>6</sup> See Dietz v. Sutcliffe, 80 Ky. 650, and authorities cited. Here it is held that where one fraudulently purchases goods on credit, with the

Although the party defrauded may, from the change of circumstances which has taken place in the mean time, be no longer able to avoid the contract on discovery of the fraud, he has a remedy by action of deceit for damages against the party by whose misrepresentations he has been misled to his injury; and if the buyer be pecuniarily responsible at all, this may be the seller's preferable recourse where he can pursue the goods in question no longer.<sup>1</sup> But in an action for deceit stricter proof of fraud may be requisite than where one simply means to relieve himself of a transaction into which he has been falsely or perhaps only erroneously drawn.<sup>2</sup>

§ 614. Extortion of a Bill of Sale; Avoidance is Personal to the Seller.—The privilege of avoiding a bill of sale extorted by force from an unwilling seller, is held to be so far personal with the seller himself, that his attaching creditors will not be allowed to impeach it.<sup>3</sup>

§ 615. Fraud in a Case of Exchange.—Fraud may arise in a case of exchange. Where S. exchanged horses with D., knowing that D. had stolen the horse, and B., with the same knowledge, bought S.'s horse from D., and the owner of fraudulent purpose of not paying for them, the seller may, in disregard of the credit, sue at once in contract for the reasonable value of the goods sold and delivered. And see Moller v. Tuska, 87 N. Y. 166. But see Moriarty v. Stofferan, 89 Ill. 528.

A seller, whose sale and delivery was induced by the buyer's fraud, does not, by an effort to retake the entire property which is only partly successful, lose the right to pursue for the value of the unfound portion. Powers v. Benedict, 88 N. Y. 605. But see, as to seller's loss of election to sue for recovering goods, by proving in bankruptcy, Moller v. Tuska, 87 N. Y. 166. The seller need not, in pursuing his remedies, reimburse for the fraudulent buyer's advances to others. 81 N. Y. 394. Nor reimburse beyond what justice requires.

156 Penn. St. 59, 65. Where rescission is made for fraud, notice is not a prerequisite before suing for the goods. Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 57 Iowa, 573.

<sup>1</sup> See Queen v. Saddlers' Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 421; Clarke v. Dickson, E. B. & E. 148.

<sup>2</sup> Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337. "No action is maintainable for a mere statement, although untrue, and although acted on to the damage of the person to whom it is made, unless that statement is false to the knowledge of the person making it." Bramwell, L. J., in 3 C. P. D. 1, 5. But as to untrue statements recklessly made, cf. Hine v. Champion, 7 Ch. D. 344; 13 C. B. 786.

<sup>3</sup> Lewis v. Bannister, 16 Gray, 500.

the stolen horse took it from S., it was held that S. could not recover from B., being in pari delicto.<sup>1</sup> But, where one is sued in tort for false and fraudulent representations concerning a horse which he exchanged with the plaintiff for the plaintiff's horse, he may recoup damages for like misrepresentations made to him in the transaction by the plaintiff concerning his own horse.<sup>2</sup>

§ 616. Fraud of Buyer and Seller upon some Third Party.—(3d.) The fraud of both buyer and seller upon some third party. Discussion of this subject has been somewhat anticipated;<sup>3</sup> and we simply add, that the rule is a variable one as to the effect of a bill of sale upon creditors' rights without an accompanying change of possession between seller and buyer. The whole subject is regulated largely by local statutes, among which the statutes of Elizabeth concerning fraudulent conveyances (which were declaratory of the common law) are prominent as a basis; and the general principle favored in England and America is, that possession affords only prima facie evidence of fraud, which may be sustained or rebutted by proof of other circumstances; though the stricter doctrine has prevailed in our Federal courts and certain States, that an absolute bill of sale, unaccompanied by a corresponding change of possession, is of itself a fraud in law.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Bixter v. Saylor, 68 Penn. St. 146.

<sup>2</sup> Carey v. Guillow, 105 Mass. 18. See, as to fraud in the exchange of land for goods, Smith v. Brittenham, 98 Ill. 188.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 292–303.

<sup>4</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 4; Stats. 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36; Edwards v. Harben, 2 T. R. 587; Story Sales, §§ 510–529; 2 Kent Com. 520–532.

As to the effect of delivery to the buyer under a condition precedent that property shall not pass until the price is paid or secured, see supra, §§ 292–303. It has been seen that there is conflict, as between different American States, upon the effect of a change of possession under such circumstances.

In a more general sense, possession by one not the owner may injure the rights of third parties. As to bills of sale, and their effect in this connection, English legislation has recently effected a considerable change in the law of that country. In Benj. Sales, 3d ed. §§ 489, 490 et seq., the acts of 1878 and 1882, which have rendered obsolete much of the law under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, as concerns the transfer of chattels, are set forth at considerable length. The bills of sale acts now in force in that country are the 41 & 42 Vict. c. 31

CHAPTER XVII.

ILLEGAL SALES ; MUTUAL RESCISSION.

§ 617. Avoidance by Reason of Illegality ; General Rule.—

III. Avoidance by reason of illegality is the next topic for treatment. Illegality cuts deeper than fraud : for a contract of sale which the law makes illegal cannot be enforced on either side, but is utterly void ; and, when such contract is found to be so by any innocent party who was misled into the bargain, he has no option but to drop it, as he can neither defend nor sue upon the bargain, and may render himself criminally responsible to the State if he goes further. But as there are illegal sales at the common law, and illegal (1878), and the 45 & 46 Vict. c. 43 (1882). And see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36 (1854), and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 96 (1866), which are now repealed. The main object of this legislation is to prevent fraud from being committed upon creditors and third parties by secret bills of sale, whereby one is enabled to gain a fictitious credit, while the other has power to take possession of the property to the exclusion of other creditors of the party invested with such fictitious credit. Formal execution and registry of such bills of sale are thus insisted upon.

For the American statutes on this subject, see Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 455-463, with Bennett's American notes. Apart from chattel mortgages, the legislation in this country as to chattel bills of sale is not so elaborate as in England. But wherever possession is transferred by the unpaid seller, it behooves him to regard carefully such local statute provisions as may be found enacted on this subject ; and so, too, where, after selling the property, the seller retains possession instead of the buyer.

Retention of possession of chattels by the seller is in our States evidence more or less conclusive of fraud upon the rights of third parties. See cases cited Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 455-463, Bennett's note ; also Bump and other general writers on Fraudulent Conveyances ; Fairfield Bridge Co. v. Nye, 60 Me. 372 ; Coburn v. Pickering, 3 N. H. 415 ; Rothchild v. Rowe, 44 Vt. 389 ; Ingalls v. Herrick, 108 Mass. 351 ; Clow v. Woods, 5 S. & R. 275 ; Capron v. Porter, 43 Conn. 283 ; Robbins v. Oldham, 1 Duv. 28. The main point of difference is whether such retention is only prima facie evidence of fraud or fraud per se. Statute provisions on this subject exist in various States ; as in New York, Maryland, Delaware, Missouri, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska, and California. See also supra, § 395.

sales founded in statute, the effect of illegality in the latter sense merely is liable to special regulation.

The old distinction taken between mala in se and mala prohibita is not countenanced by the late authorities; and, notwithstanding the moral feeling and common sense of men do discriminate,<sup>1</sup> the general rule is, that any promise or undertaking whose performance is founded in illegality, or tends to carry out some unlawful purpose, is of itself void, and will not sustain an action; and the law which prohibits the end will not lend its aid in promoting the means whereby it was designed to be carried into effect.<sup>2</sup> But it is sometimes held that the mere knowledge by the one party of the other's guilty purpose, where his own act may be consistently innocent, is insufficient to deprive him of his legal remedies, unless it further appear that he meant to enable the buyer to do the illegal act.<sup>3</sup> If such seller had no knowledge whatever of the buyer's guilty purpose, or even reasonable cause to believe, and no more, he could recover.<sup>4</sup> Hence, to a certain extent, a transaction may be illegal on one side, and not on the other, because of the motive of the respective parties to the sale, — the one being innocent, and the other guilty. So, too, the guilty party and the guilty purpose must often be separated; for while it is unlawful for one to let premises for purposes of prostitution, or sell tools for the purpose of house-breaking, it is not unlawful to furnish a

<sup>1</sup> See Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, per curiam.

<sup>2</sup> White v. Buss, 3 Cush. 448, per Shaw, C. J. And see Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, §§ 485-488; Montefiori v. Montefiori, 1 Wm. Bl. 363; Canaan v. Bryce, 3 B. & Ald. 179; Concord v. Delaney, 58 Me. 309; Watrous v. Blair, 32 Iowa, 58; Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 555; Myers v. Meinrath, 101 Mass. 366; Brackett v. Edgerton, 14 Minn. 174; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261; Sampson v. Shaw, 105 Mass. 149; Horton v. Buffington, 101 Mass.

400; Peterson v. Christensen, 26 Minn. 377.

<sup>3</sup> Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9; Bishop v. Honey, 34 Tex. 245; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258; Hodgson v. Temple, 5 Taunt. 181; Tuttle v. Holland, 43 Vt. 542; Tracy v. Talmage, 4 Kern. 162; Story Sales, § 506; McGavock v. Puryear, 6 Cold. 34. But see Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342; infra, § 619.

<sup>4</sup> See Kottwitz v. Alexander, 34 Tex. 689; Prescott v. Norris, 32 N. H. 101; Buck v. Albee, 26 Vt. 184; Hotchkiss v. Finan, 105 Mass. 86.

person with necessities of any kind because she happens to be a prostitute, or to make an innocent contract with a professional house-breaker.<sup>1</sup> And where, in an extreme case, the parties to an illegal contract are not in pari delicto, the party who has been oppressed, or of whose situation the other takes undue advantage, has been recognized as not without a remedy for recovering what was extorted from him.<sup>2</sup> Once more: the disaffirmance of the contract in its initial stage, and before the transaction is completely executed, might leave a party in a favorable situation for resorting to the courts;<sup>3</sup> and such is the tenor of late decisions.<sup>4</sup> But these qualifications of the rule are chiefly applied by way of indulgence to cases where the transaction involves no moral turpitude on the part of the party seeking a remedy, but is a violation of some statute against which public policy pronounces with some hesitation. Participating in a guilty purpose, and being in pari delicto, must put the party altogether outside of the law as to the guilty transaction; for "no man," as Lord Mansfield says, "shall set up his own iniquity as a defence any more than as a cause of action;"<sup>5</sup> and with regard to the illegal contract, the law will leave the parties where it finds them.<sup>6</sup> Whenever an illegal contract of sale has been carried out fully, all acts of delivery completed, and the price paid, neither law nor equity will reopen the transaction.<sup>7</sup>

§ 618. Rule where Some Promises are legal and Others illegal.—Where the whole consideration of a demand founded upon transactions is tainted by no illegality, and some of the

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, § 488; Bowry v. Bennet, 1 Camp. 348. But see Pearce v. Brooks, L. R. 1 Ex. 212.

<sup>2</sup> Jaques v. Golightly, 2 Wm. Bl. 1073; Worcester v. Eaton, 11 Mass. 368; Concord v. Delaney, 58 Me. 309; Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33; White v. Franklin Bank, 22 Pick. 281; Tracy v. Talmage, 4 Kern. 162.

<sup>3</sup> Tracy v. Talmage, supra. Comity or the conflict of laws is sometimes set up as a cause of indulgence in this connection. See Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253; Castrique v. Imrie, L. R. 4 H. L. 414.

<sup>4</sup> Where the unlawful agreement is executory only, money or goods are reclaimable. Taylor v. Bowers, 1 Q. B. D. 291; Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 49.

<sup>5</sup> Montefiori v. Montefiori, 1 Wm. Bl. 363.

<sup>6</sup> White v. Buss, and other authorities, supra, p. 685; Story Sales, § 488.

<sup>7</sup> Ib.

promises only are illegal, the illegality of these does not communicate itself to or taint the others, unless the contract be an entire one, with its parts inseparable;<sup>1</sup> and hence it is held that a number of articles may be sold to a customer under different sales, and the account rendered be in general sustained, notwithstanding some of the items prove to be for spirituous liquors, whose sale is forbidden by statute.<sup>2</sup> Even though a promissory note be given in settlement of the whole account, the character of the contract is not concluded, unless the taking of the note was such satisfaction as would prevent a suit upon the demand.<sup>3</sup> But "if any part of an indivisible promise," says Gibson, C. J., "or any part of an indivisible consideration for a promise, is illegal, the whole is void;"<sup>4</sup> and hence, if one agrees to pay a certain sum in consideration of the transfer of a stock of goods, and of a guaranty to procure for the buyer a certain public office, the illegality of the latter portion taints the whole consideration.<sup>5</sup> Nor can the parties, by artifice or evasion in making up their account, separate the legal and illegal items in an entire contract of sale, so as to render the contract enforceable as to the former portion.<sup>6</sup>

§ 619. Inclination of Courts as to Transactions plainly Immoral. — Furthermore, it should be said, that notwithstanding this later repudiation, out of respect to the legislative power, of the old distinction between mala in se and mala prohibita, our courts still inclinè to press illegal contracts involving a palpable offence against public morals more closely than those of a more venial nature whose criminality consists

<sup>1</sup> Carleton v. Woods, 28 N. H. 290; Boyd v. Eaton, 44 Me. 51; Odessa Co. v. Mendel, 8 Ch. D. 235; McKnight v. Devlin, 52 N. Y. 399; Thurston v. Percival, 1 Pick. 415; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 221; Hanauer v. Gray, 25 Ark. 350; Erie R. R. Co. v. Union Express Co., 35 N. J. Law, 240; Story Sales, § 504; Crookshank v. Rose, 5 C. & P. 19; Hinde v. Gray, 1 M. & G. 195; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519.

<sup>2</sup> Carleton v. Woods, 28 N. H. 290.

<sup>3</sup> Pecker v. Kennison, 46 N. H. 488.

<sup>4</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Waite v. Jones, 1 Bing. N. C. 656; Filson v. Himes, 5 Penn. St. 452. And see Kottwitz v. Alexander, 34 Tex. 689; Chandler v. Johnson, 39 Ga. 85; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251.

<sup>5</sup> Filson v. Himes, supra.

<sup>6</sup> Ladd v. Dillingham, 34 Me. 316.

in violating some statute of doubtful policy. The qualifications of the rule above stated should be taken accordingly. Particularly does this hold true of the qualification in favor of requiring something more than guilty knowledge on a seller's part, which the best of the late English and American cases utterly repudiate, save as applied to contemplated acts of inferior criminality and completed criminal acts which the party in question sanctions, not assists, by his conduct; or, in other words, only uphold as to sales, where the seller may possess knowledge of the buyer's illegal purpose, and yet sell without aiding to accomplish some heinous public offence. Upon this distinction are founded decisions which render the seller's guilty knowledge fatal to his rights, where he sells poison knowing that the buyer means to drug another with it,<sup>1</sup> or supplies goods for sustaining rebels in arms,<sup>2</sup> or vends a carriage to a prostitute to be used in aid of her vocation.<sup>3</sup> It follows that the bargain for a thing, in itself proper, may become void from regard to the purpose for which it is to be applied, and one's guilty knowledge of that purpose.<sup>4</sup>

§ 620. Principal cannot profit by Agent's Illegal Transaction.—He who sells by another sells by himself, on the principle of agency; and a principal cannot reap the benefits of an illegal transaction which a third party whom he employed

<sup>1</sup> Langton v. Hughes, 1 M. & S. 593. And see McFarlane v. Taylor, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 245.

<sup>2</sup> Martin v. McMillan, 65 N. C. 199; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342. And see Bradley, J., in the last-named case: "Can a man furnish another with the means of committing murder, or any abominable crime, knowing that the purchaser procures them, and intends to use them, for that purpose, and then pretend that he is not a participator in the guilt? Can he wrap himself up in his own selfishness and heartless indifference and say, 'What business is that of mine? Am I the keeper of another man's conscience?' No one can hesitate to say that such a man voluntarily aids in the perpetration of the offence, and, morally speaking, is almost, if not quite, as guilty as the principal offender." Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 347. The doctrine, with its limits, is ably set forth in this opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. See McGavock v. Puryear, 6 Cold. 34.

<sup>3</sup> Pearce v. Brooks, L. R. 1 Ex. 212.

<sup>4</sup> See Adams v. Coulliard, 102 Mass. 167; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, § 506 and n.; Sprott v. United States, 20 Wall. 450.

carried out, and wherein he participates by knowingly sanctioning the sale.<sup>1</sup> In whatever capacity one intentionally furthers the violation of law, his rights in the illegal transaction are excluded.<sup>2</sup>

§ 621. As to Sales Illegal at Common Law.—Of sales which may be pronounced illegal at the common law, irrespective of legislation (which, however, may recognize the offence besides), a number of classes may be stated. Whatever contravenes public decency and good morals, as sales for purposes of prostitution, and sales of obscene books or pictures, must be pronounced clearly illegal and void.<sup>3</sup> So the sale of poison, or murderous or burglarious implements, is illegal when in aid of felonious designs against life or property.<sup>4</sup> Sales to a public enemy are void by the common law;<sup>5</sup> and the same may be said of sales in aid of treason:<sup>6</sup> under which rule may likewise be brought smuggling contracts of sale;<sup>7</sup> though all these offences are largely regulated by statute; and, as to the last-named especially, the English law has ever been more solicitous of offences against its own enactments than those of other countries. Many classes of contracts are against public policy, and therefore illegal, which it is beyond our present scope to consider; and this same public policy is a variable thing of itself: but, as a writer observes, whatever contravenes an actual rule of policy, or which interferes seriously with the true interests of society, is against public policy.<sup>8</sup> When narrow views of trade were entertained, the common law pronounced “forestalling, regrating, and engrossing” contrary to public policy, and illegal, abhorring all attempts on

<sup>1</sup> Nicholson v. Gooch, 5 E. & B. 999; Galligan v. Fannan, 7 Allen, 255.

<sup>2</sup> See Story Sales, §§ 505, 506.

<sup>3</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Poplett v. Stockdale, Ry. & M. 337; Pearce v. Brooks, L. R. 1 Ex. 212.

<sup>4</sup> Langton v. Hughes, 1 M. & S. 593; Roberts v. Egerton, L. R. 9 Q. B. 494.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Brandon v. Nesbitt, 6 T. R. 23.

<sup>6</sup> Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342; Hanauer v. Woodruff, 15 Wall. 439.

<sup>7</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Pelcat v. Angell, 2 C. M. & R. 311; Creekmore v. Chitwood, 7 Bush, 317; Story Sales, §§ 507–509.

<sup>8</sup> Story Sales, §§ 489, 491; Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 242; Crawford v. Russell, 62 Barb. 92.

the part of speculators to control the market; but such is the rule no longer.<sup>1</sup> Nor are "gold" sales, in a period of paper-money as legal tender, or stock sales, though sometimes akin to gambling, to be pronounced classes of transactions void as against public policy.<sup>2</sup> Nor necessarily is a sale upon an option.<sup>3</sup>

§ 622. Sales against Public Policy and Good Government Sale of Offices, Lawsuits, etc.—On general ground of public policy, but with a special view to the pure administration of civil government, the sale of a public office, or the transfer of property in consideration of procuring a public office, is void; and, by whatsoever device such a consideration is embodied in a sale contract, the bargain must fail as illegal.<sup>4</sup> And whether it be the sale of an office outright, or the parcelling out of its profits between the office-holder and another, the rule is the same.<sup>5</sup> So is a sale illegal whose <sup>1</sup> 4 Bl. Com. 158; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Story Sales, § 490; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24. A wager or gambling contract is void: i.e., not to buy or sell goods, nor deliver nor pay for them, but to close the transaction upon the basis of the market price at an appointed time upon the difference. Hawley v. Bibb, 69 Ala. 52; Corbett v. Underwood, 83 Ill. 324; 81 Ill. 415; 79 Ill. 353; Bigelow v. Benedict, 70 N. Y. 202. But from this class is excepted sales which, though optional, contemplate delivery. Gregory v. Wattowa, 58 Iowa, 711; 13 Fed. Rep. 263. A sale contract whose moving consideration is an election bet is illegal. 15 Gratt. 653 (statute), 502; Harper v. Crain, 36 Ohio St. 338; 22 Minn. 52.

A contract for the sale of goods to be delivered at a future day is seen to be valid, where a bonâ fide delivery and payment of price is intended. Supra, §§ 209, 210. But a mere betting or wager sale of "futures" is null and void. Grizewood v. Blane, 11 C. B. 536. In England, the statute of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, is construed in this connection. And in some American States there are statutes of a similar character. See Sawyer v. Taggart, 14 Bush, 727; Shaw v. Clark, 49 Mich. 384; Rumsey v. Berry, 65 Me. 574; Barnard v. Backhaus, 52 Wis. 593; 80 N. C. 294; Elmer v. Welch, 47 Conn. 56.

But aliter, as it seems, where the gambling transaction is such, only in enabling one of the contracting parties to gamble. Thacker v. Hardy, 4 Q. B. D. 685. The honest intention of one of the parties may often protect his rights as against the other. See § 617.

<sup>2</sup> Brown v. Speyers, 20 Gratt. 296; Appleman v. Fisher, 34 Md. 540.

<sup>3</sup> White v. Barber, 123 U. S. 392; 70 N. Y. 202; 83 N. Y. 92.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 494; Wells v. Foster, 8 M. & W. 149; Filson v. Himes, 5 Penn. St. 452; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Spencer v. Jones, 6 Gray, 502.

<sup>5</sup> Hunter v. Nolf, 71 Penn. St. 282; Gray v. Hook, 4 Comst. 449; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 2; 10 Ir. C. L. 226.

moving consideration is the influencing of a public officer, or one dealing with such officer, in the discharge of his duty.<sup>1</sup> Lobby contracts, so called, inasmuch as they tend to corrupt legislation, are likewise illegal, whether for fixed or contingent fees; and so with other contracts founded upon the consideration of personally influencing public officers to perform certain official acts; though services might be rendered of no sinister nature, as in procuring testimony, conducting a hearing, or making an argument, in furtherance of legislative or executive as well as judicial procedure, sufficient to base a legitimate claim upon for compensation.<sup>2</sup> All sales in consideration of carrying or influencing public elections are void;<sup>3</sup> and so is the sale of a "recommendation," intended to influence another as though an honest and disinterested opinion.<sup>4</sup>

With more especial reference to the purity of judicial administration, and the sanctity of private rights, have the courts generally repudiated as illegal the sale of lawsuits, mentioning under this head the kindred offences of champerty and maintenance; but the ancient common-law rules against one party's intermeddling with another's right to litigate are greatly relaxed under the influence of equity and the modern practice acts.<sup>5</sup>

§ 623. Sales in Restraint of Trade Illegal.—No contract of sale is good which is in general restraint of trade;<sup>6</sup> for this is

<sup>1</sup> Cook v. Shipman, 51 Ill. 316; Richardson v. Crandall, 48 N. Y. 348; Weld v. Lancaster, 56 Me. 453.

<sup>2</sup> Mills v. Mills, 40 N. Y. 543; Bowman v. Coffroth, 59 Penn. St. 19; Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441. See Winpenny v. French, 18 Ohio St. 469; Sedgwick v. Stanton, 4 Kern. 289; Swayne, J., in Trist v. Child, supra.

<sup>3</sup> Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168; Swayze v. Hull, 3 Halst. 54; Duke v. Asbee, 11 Ire. 112.

<sup>4</sup> This principle applies in private or public transactions. 41 Conn. 581; 136 Mass. 265.

<sup>5</sup> Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Stanley v. Jones, 7 Bing. 369; 4 Bl. Com. 134, 135; Hutley v. Hutley, L. R. 8 Q. B. 112; U. S. Digest, 1st Series, "Champerty;" Sedgwick v. Stanton, 4 Kern. 289; Scott v. Harmon, 109 Mass. 237.

<sup>6</sup> Hinde v. Gray, 1 M. & G. 195; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Mumford v. Gething, 7 C. B. n. s. 305; Story Sales, §§ 492, 493; Crawford v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 190; Dean v. Emerson, 102 Mass. 480; Erie R. R. Co. v. Union Locomotive Co., 6 Vroom, 240.

in derogation of private rights, and tends to monopoly. But a contract imposing upon consideration a partial restraint is binding, if the restraint be kept within reasonable bounds. The vending of patent-rights or copyrights does not contravene this rule, for this amounts to the limited propagation of one's secret; and such rights, moreover, are admitted to be monopolies which government allows for a certain length of time.<sup>1</sup> One may agree to assign all future patents, as well as his present ones, relating to a certain invention.<sup>2</sup> Nor is a sale of one's "good-will," or even (as it is held) the promise to influence the public to deal with the buyer as the seller's successor, illegal.<sup>3</sup> It is only in partial restraint of trade, and therefore permissible, for a seller to stipulate that he will not carry on the business within the circuit of his usual custom as then definable, or of a particular municipality.<sup>4</sup> The restraint stipulated for might be in time instead of space. But it would appear that restraint in space is now the only decisive cause of avoidance, since partial restraint as to space is frequently upheld, though unlimited as to time;<sup>5</sup> and a restraint intended to operate through the realm in Great Britain, or through the whole State as our American courts would rule it, is void, because general.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Leather Cloth Co. v. Lorscheid, L. R. 9 Eq. 345; Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & Stu. 74; Morse Twist Co. v. Morse, 103 Mass. 73.

<sup>2</sup> Printing Co. v. Sampson, L. R. 19 Eq. 462.

<sup>3</sup> Hoyt v. Holly, 39 Conn. 326 (two judges diss.); Warfield v. Booth, 33 Md. 63.

<sup>4</sup> Guerand v. Dandeleit, 32 Md. 561; Warren v. Jones, 51 Me. 146; Jenkins v. Temples, 39 Ga. 655; Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224.

<sup>5</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 1; Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Ad. & E. 438; Guerand v. Dandeleit, 32 Md. 561.

<sup>6</sup> Taylor v. Blanchard, 13 Allen, 370; Mallan v. May, 13 M. & W. 511; More v. Bonnet, 40 Cal. 251; Hinde v. Gray, 1 M. & G. 195; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519. In Leather

Cloth Co. v. Lorscheid, L. R. 9 Eq. 345, James, L. J., reached the conclusion that there is no rule laid down as to the invalidity of a restraint which is unlimited in point of space; but that the sole test is the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the restraint at issue. This, however, was a case relating to the disclosure of a trade secret; hence, in Allsopp v. Wheatcroft, L. R. 15 Eq. 59, the statement of James, L. J., is doubted. But Rousillon v. Rousillon, 14 Ch. D. 351, sustains the former view; and it may now be regarded as quite doubtful whether restraint in space per se should be taken as illegal, apart from unreasonableness, upon all the particular circumstances of the case. See further, Davies v. Davies, 36 Ch. D. 379.

The right of one who has sold out the good-will of his business to carry on the same business in the buyer's immediate vicinity is a matter for reasonable interpretation, according to the sense of the parties; but the seller should not be allowed to overreach the buyer in such a bargain.<sup>1</sup>

§ 624. Sales made Illegal by Legislation; Penal Acts, Usury, etc.—Of sales whose illegality may be said to depend more especially upon legislation, several classes may be mentioned: such as acts against lotteries, acts requiring licenses or otherwise imposing taxes, acts regulating the sale of noxious or deceptive articles, acts enforcing certain requirements as to weight and measure, inspection acts, and the like, some of which pursue a theory of morals which the common law did not clearly sanction, while others are rather to facilitate the operations of government. The courts have distinguished between statutes which expressly prohibit the transaction and those which only prohibit it by implication, as by imposing penalties for disobedience; yet every such question must be tested by the true intent of the enactment as to rendering the contract illegal or not.<sup>2</sup> Usury taints a sale; though the policy of usury acts is a doubtful one.<sup>3</sup> Many other statutes which render sales void for illegality are founded upon a capricious policy, which fails to interpret truly the sense of the public, so that the courts incline to uphold the transaction. Even the imposition of a penalty may sometimes justify an inference, that not particular sales with individuals, but one's general business, shall bear the consequence of a non-compliance with the legislative enactment;

<sup>1</sup> See Mouffet v. Cole, L. R. 7 Ex. 70; Bradford v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 250; Labouchere v. Dawson, L. R. 13 Eq. 322. The rule precluding the seller of a good-will from soliciting former customers does not extend to compulsory sales, such as those made by trustees in bankruptcy. Walker v. Mottram, 19 Ch. D. 355.

<sup>2</sup> Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149; Harris v. Rannels, 12 How. 79;

1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 265; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 2; Story Sales, §§ 498, 499; Miller v. Post, 1 Allen, 434; Larned v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 435; Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 655; Coombs v. Emery, 14 Me. 404; Forster v. Taylor, 5 B. & Ad. 887; Tracy v. Talmage, 4 Kern. 162.

<sup>3</sup> Schermerhorn v. Talman, 4 Kern. 93; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 265 et seq.

as where one is required to take out a license as dealer on the basis of his average sales.<sup>1</sup>

§ 625. The Same Subject; Liquor Laws, Sunday Laws, etc.—Prominent among these classes of sales is to be mentioned that concerning spirituous and intoxicating liquors. Legislation on this subject is constantly changing in the several States, and the numerous decisions possess little more than local importance. It is settled that these statutes are not in contravention of the fundamental law of our land;<sup>2</sup> and a broad issue for all such legislation is, as to whether the sales of liquor shall be altogether illegal, or only illegal where the seller has taken out no license.<sup>3</sup>

Sunday laws differ from the classes above noticed in making the day on which one contracts the occasion of avoidance rather than the purpose of the contract; though their object is still the cause of public morals. At common law, sales on Sunday seem not to have been void; but, under English statutes for the past two centuries or more, the prohibition has remained in force to this day. Similar enactments, more or less comprehensive of scope, are to be found in nearly all of the United States, works of necessity and charity being usually the basis of an excepting proviso.<sup>4</sup> The disposi-

<sup>1</sup> See Larned v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 435; Aiken v. Blaisdell, 41 Vt. 655.

<sup>2</sup> Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129.

<sup>3</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 2; Stat. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, § 4; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49 (licensing act, 1874); Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33; Dolson v. Hope, 7 Kans. 161; Jameson v. Gregory, 4 Met. (Ky.) 363; Yaeger Milling Co. v. Brown, 128 Mass. 171.

English and American acts are found regulating (but not forbidding) the sale of articles made in imitation of butter. Act 50 & 51 Vict. c. 29; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461. Of articles dangerously explosive, like nitro-glycerine. Act 38 Vict. c. 17. And of various other articles within the scope of our text.

<sup>4</sup> See Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 3, § 2; Act 29 Car. II. c. 7, § 1; Drury v. Defontaine, 1 Taunt. 131; Bloxsome v. Williams, 6 B. & Cr. 232; 37 Ark. 224; Lyon v. Strong, 6 Vt. 219; Smith v. Bean, 15 N. H. 577; Northrup v. Foote, 14 Wend. 248; Allen v. Gardiner, 7 R. I. 22; Murphy v. Simpson, 14 B. Mon. 419; Cranson v. Goss, 107 Mass. 439; Mueller v. State, 76 Ind. 310; Finley v. Quirk, 9 Minn. 194; Sayre v. Wheeler, 32 Iowa, 559; Story Sales, §§ 500-502; Pate v. Wright, 30 Ind. 476.

A Sunday contract being fully executed, the law leaves parties where it finds them. Myers v. Meinrath, 101 Mass. 366; Green v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 25; Thompson v. Williams, 53 N. H. 248. Cf. as to replevin, Kinney v. McDermot, 55 Iowa, 674.

tion is frequently shown, at the present day, to mitigate the severity of such legislation by liberally construing the Sunday laws; and a sale void under such an enactment would appear good wherever a fresh promise passes between the parties on a subsequent day, or the execution of the bargain made on Sunday is on some other day of the week; and the bargain may hold in favor of an innocent party, as where the execution of the contract by the one in violation of the Sunday law was unknown to the other.<sup>1</sup>

§ 625 a. The Same Subject; Constructive Illegality not to be favored.—Courts in these modern days should not be zealous to extend the rule of illegality by construction, in furtherance of some assumed public policy. For, as a modern English judge has well observed, “if there is one thing which more than another public policy requires, it is that men of full age and competent understanding shall have the utmost liberty of contracting, and that their contracts, when entered into freely and voluntarily, shall be enforced by courts of justice.” This paramount public policy must, therefore, be considered, that courts are not lightly to interfere with the freedom of contract.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Simpson v. Nicholls, 5 M. & W. 702; Harrison v. Colton, 31 Iowa, 16; Dickinson v. Richmond, 97 Mass. 45; Sumner v. Jones, 24 Vt. 317; Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 555; Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287; Winchell v. Carey, 115 Mass. 560; Sayles v. Wellman, 10 R. I. 465. See Benj. Sales, supra; Story Sales, §§ 500–502. Where the price is agreed upon on Sunday, but delivery was not to take place till the next day, the contract is not illegal. Rosenblatt v. Townsley, 73 Mo. 536; Gibbs Co. v. Brucker, 111 U. S. 597. A Sunday subscription for a work of charity is not void. Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich. 1; 98 Penn. St. 389. But see 62 Ind. 365.

“The ground upon which courts have refused to sustain actions on contracts made in contravention of statutes for the observance of the Lord’s Day is the elementary principle that one who has himself participated in a violation of law cannot be permitted to assert in a court of justice any right founded upon or growing out of the illegal transaction. If, therefore, the evidence shows a good cause of action, without any participation of the plaintiff in an illegal transaction, he may recover, the law simply refusing its aid to either party in giving effect to an illegal transaction in which he has taken part.” Mr. Justice Woods in Gibbs Co. v. Brucker, 111 U. S. 597, 601, and cases cited.

<sup>2</sup> Jessel, M. R., in L. R. 19 Eq. 462, 465; approved by court in Roussillon v. Roussillon, 14 Ch. D. 365.

See further on this general subject, which broadens into contract illegality, the valuable note of Judge

§ 626. Avoidance of Sale by Mutual Rescission; Mutual Re-sale.—IV. Avoidance by mutual rescission. This method of terminating a sale is always open to the sale parties, who may rescind or modify at any stage, before or after full performance of their contract, and upon whatever terms they please, provided that all who had acquired rights under the sale acquiesce in the arrangement.<sup>1</sup> No new consideration is necessary; for where a contract is modified, the consideration for the original agreement is imported into the substituted agreement; and a mutual release from obligation furnishes a mutual consideration.<sup>2</sup> The presumed result of rescission is, that buyer and seller are restored each to his former rights,—the seller resuming his goods if already delivered, and the buyer his purchase-money if already paid; but in these as in other respects the parties are left free to regulate their status for themselves, and the proper province of court or jury is to decide upon the evidence what they really intended.<sup>3</sup>

In case of mutual rescission or of a mutual re-sale to the original seller, simple evidence of what was mutually intended will resolve usually the point of a re-vestment of Bennett to Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. 502-511. Our present limits forbid an exhaustive treatment of the subject.

<sup>1</sup> Of course the agreement to rescind must be mutual and complete; an unaccepted offer will not suffice. 86 Ala. 257. The terms of rescission and due formalities of notice should be observed. 154 Penn. St. 190.

<sup>2</sup> Kelly v. Bliss, 54 Wis. 187, 191; Stead v. Dawber, 10 A. & E. 57.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Kent Com. 504; Morgan v. Bain, L. R. 10 C. P. 15; Story Sales, §§ 415, 419, 426, 427; supra, § 600. The seller's title in his chattel may re-vest, notwithstanding the buyer retains possession after rescission for repairing it. Beecher v. Mayall, 16 Gray, 376. Mutual rescission is not to be inferred where the seller re-takes his goods by force, and notifies the buyer that he shall re-sell at the latter's risk. Stephens v. Wilkinson, 2 B. & Ad. 320; Page v. Cowasjee, L. R. 1 P. C. 127. But the seller's simple resumption of goods unpaid for, with the buyer's concurrence, would justify the presumption of a mutual rescission. Sloane v. Van Wyck, 4 Abb. N. Y. App. 250.

As to rescission of an executory contract for sale and purchase by the total destruction of the thing, see Kelly v. Bliss, 54 Wis. 187; Thomas v. Knowles, 128 Mass. 22.

A retrocession of property does not obliterate the ownership of the purchaser which existed during the interval between the sale and retrocession; nor affect privileges acquired on the property under such ownership. Wilmot v. Ouachita Belle, 32 La. Ann. 607.

title;<sup>1</sup> but where the rights of attaching creditors or subsequent bonâ fide parties intervene the issue is not so simple. In this latter case the same formalities of delivery are needful as before for a secure title; and re-possession by the original seller is needful to establish him in his full rights.<sup>2</sup> The needful consideration should be restored in fair accordance with the mutual intent.<sup>3</sup>

---

CHAPTER XVIII.

SALES AT AUCTION.

§ 627. Public or Auction Sales in General.—Having now finished the examination of private sales, we shall devote our final chapter on the present topic to the peculiar features presented in what may well be called, by way of contrast, public sales; for a sale at auction, instead of bringing buyer and seller together as individuals to make a private contract on their own terms, puts the seller forth to the public with his goods as undertaking openly to close a bargain with such a party as may on a certain occasion offer the largest price in presence of the other competitors. The subject-matter of an auction sale may be real or personal property, or both combined; sometimes the sale is of property as a whole, and sometimes it is of property in lots; and at one and the same auction the property of several owners is frequently offered.<sup>4</sup>

A sale at auction is a public sale of property to the highest bidder;<sup>5</sup> and as the essential characteristic of such sales is

<sup>1</sup> 102 Mass. 291, 295; Folsom v. Cornell, 150 Mass. 115.

<sup>2</sup> See Quincy v. Tilton, 5 Me. 277; 61 Me. 520; 1 Mason, 437.

<sup>3</sup> See 54 Fed. 32; Fewell v. Deane, S. C. (1895). On rescission of a sale, purchase-money paid may be recovered back in assumpsit. Ankeny v. Clark, 148 U. S. 345.

<sup>4</sup> Bouv. Dict. "Auction;" Story Sales, § 460; Bateman Auctions, 1, 2.

<sup>5</sup> The publicity of an auction and the competition which it engenders make it a most effectual means of the open selection by the seller, or his agent, of the highest from a number of bidders, the method of conducting an auction by public outcry, now almost universal, seems not indispensable. Thus, where the seller invites each bidder to put down his sum on a slip of paper, these slips to be afterwards taken up, and he whose paper contains the largest sum to be declared the purchaser,—this is considered essentially a sale at auction.<sup>1</sup> Nor is the method of selling by outcry invariable. As regularly conducted in England and America, the auction progresses from the lowest to the highest bid, closing with the last; but, in a Dutch auction, the procedure is reversed,—the property being set up above its value, and the price gradually lowered till some one takes it.<sup>2</sup>

§ 628. Leading Topics to be considered.—Our leading topics are,—(1st.) Auctioneers, their rights and duties; (2d.) Preliminaries of the auction sale, including terms and conditions; (3d.) Method of conducting the auction; (4th.) Fraud in the biddings; (5th.) Enforcement of the auction contract. And our consideration of the subject will be confined, as far as possible, to sales of personal property.

§ 629. Auctioneers; their Rights and Duties; Auctioneer as Agent.—(1st.) Auctions are, in general, conducted by a class of persons duly licensed upon giving a bond, and empowered to sell the property of others at public sale for a commission on the proceeds. By virtue of his employment, an auctioneer is solely the agent of the seller of goods until ascertaining and obtaining the market value of property. Bateman, 4. But the sale by auction, though evidence of the market price, is not conclusive. Shelley v. Nash, 3 Madd. 236; Croak v. Owens, 121 Mass. 28; Gill v. McNamee, 42 N. Y. 44. Moreover, it most nearly avoids the opportunity of fraud. Yet such a sale, if forced, often yields a less advantageous price than where time is taken for finding private purchasers and disposing of the thing at private sale.

<sup>1</sup> Attorney-General v. Taylor, 13 Price, 636. And see Dickerman v. Burgess, 20 Ill. 266; Tyree v. Wil- liams, 3 Bibb, 365. But whether this should be termed an auction sale, unless openly conducted, and affording the public an opportunity to compete, quære. Government contracts are frequently offered under statute for written bids or “sealed proposals.”

A sale by auction is not per se a sale in market overt. See supra, § 19; Lee v. Bayes, 18 C. B. 599; 2 Jur. n. s. 1093.

<sup>2</sup> See Lord Mansfield, in Bexwell v. Christie, 1 Cowp. 395; 18 Hun, 475.

the bargain is struck with the buyer, and then he becomes the agent of the buyer likewise for certain limited purposes. As the seller's agent, he is responsible to him, as any bailee for hire, for ordinary diligence and skill in the storage of the goods confided to him, but is not liable for inevitable accidents.<sup>1</sup> He is also bound, like other agents, by the seller's special instructions regarding terms and conditions of sale, in other respects observing the custom of trade; but in no case, without express authority, can he dispose of the goods at private sale.<sup>2</sup> On the other hand, he is under obligations to the public, and must conduct his sale honorably, and according to the terms he offers; and any instructions given by the seller which would operate as a fraud upon open bidders must be disregarded, or the employment refused.<sup>3</sup> A verbal authority makes one an auctioneer for the seller.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 79, 459, 472; Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340; Commonwealth v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. 217. Deputy-sheriffs are often, virtute officii, brought within the same rules as auctioneers. See St. Louis Church v. Bonneval, 13 La. Ann. 321; M'Mechen v. Baltimore, 3 Har. & J. 534; Davis v. Commonwealth, 3 Watts, 297. That an auctioneer's license does not permit him to carry on the additional business of pawnbroker, see Hunt v. Philadelphia, 35 Penn. St. 277. See Eng. Stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15, which requires an auctioneer to display his license at the place of auction. In London, many auctioneers are also brokers. Bateman, 17. As to license, see further, Gunnaldson v. Nyhus, 27 Minn. 440; State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 514; Bateman Auctions, 7-19, and Sheldon's notes; 18 Kans. 271. Under the legislation of various States only licensed auctioneers, having a local place of business, can sell at auction; and bonds are often required. People v. Grant, 126 N. Y. 473. An auctioneer's bond obliges him to pay over the proceeds of the sale. Tripp v. Barton, 13 R. I. 130; 3 Har. & J.

534. In various instances auctioneers are also brokers, or commission merchants, or even pawnbrokers. Separate licenses for such separate pursuits are sometimes required by local acts. Duties are sometimes imposed on auction sales; e.g., under acts of Congress during the late civil war, as part of the internal revenue system, and when United States licenses were also required for specified business pursuits. The English tax on auction sales was found troublesome, and finally abolished by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15.

Auctioneers act frequently as appraisers; and an English license as auctioneer serves for this double purpose. Bateman, 38, 39.

<sup>2</sup> Bexwell v. Christie, 1 Cowp. 395; Bateman, 20; Marsh v. Jelf, 3 F. & F. 284; Williams v. Poor, 3 Cr. C. C. 251; Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. 86; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261; 3 Har. & J. 534.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 79. See Mainprize v. Westley, 6 B. & S. 420.

<sup>4</sup> Yourt v. Hopkins, 24 Ill. 326; Chapman v. Partridge, 5 Esp. 256; Bateman, 20.

An auctioneer's business is to sell ; he has no authority as such to make a purchase for his principal.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, the auctioneer's authority is a personal one at the common law and cannot be delegated to others.<sup>2</sup> But custom and local statutes modify the rule ; and it is not unusual for an auctioneer to employ another to make the outcry and use the hammer under his own immediate direction and supervision ; and for matters subsidiary and incidental to the public vendue, as in storage and delivery of the goods, or clerical services rendered while the auction progresses, and at other times, the employment of clerks and porters is as common as in other kinds of business.<sup>3</sup> Even the auctioneer's absence during part of the time occupied by an auction which proceeds under his supervision is held not to invalidate the sale.<sup>4</sup>

The common rules of agency are applicable to an auctioneer. Thus, if he deviates from his principal's special directions, he is liable to his principal for the consequences ; and, under such circumstances, he may be also bound personally to the buyer in the contract.<sup>5</sup> An auctioneer's general employment is not sufficient notice to the public that he acts only as agent ; it would appear that he may auction off property of which he is owner ;<sup>6</sup> and hence he makes himself personally responsible to the buyer for all damage under the contract, unless, prior to concluding the bargain, he discloses the real seller's name ; though, if he has followed his principal's directions, he has his own remedy

<sup>1</sup> Story Agency, § 27.

<sup>2</sup> Stone v. State, 12 Mo. 400 ; Story Sales, §§ 79, 475 ; Pierce v. Corf, L. R. 9 Q. B. 210 ; Bateman, 29 ; Wolf v. Van Metre, 27 Iowa, 348. Doubtless an administrator or trustee may employ an auctioneer to conduct the sale ; though supervising the sale himself in a certain sense. Lewis v. Reed, 11 Ind. 239 ; 5 La. Ann. 437. A written authority to sell is often desirable, however, as in the case of a sale for a corporation. Bateman, 22 ; L. R. 9 Ex. 13.

<sup>3</sup> Commonwealth v. Harnden, 19 Pick. 482 ; Poree v. Bonneval, 6 La. Ann. 386 ; Bird v. Boulter, 4 B. & A. 443 ; Johnson v. Buck, 6 Vroom, 38 ; Harvey v. Stevens, 43 Vt. 653.

<sup>4</sup> Commonwealth v. Harnden, supra.

<sup>5</sup> Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261 ; Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. 86 ; Story Sales, § 477 ; 1 Bay (S. C.), 169.

<sup>6</sup> Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare, 618.

against the latter.<sup>1</sup> An owner, too, who revokes his auctioneer's authority, as he may do at any time before the sale, must indemnify the agent against liabilities already contracted in the due course of his employment; while, if the latter has meantime regularly concluded a bargain, the former cannot set it aside regardless of the buyer's wishes.<sup>2</sup> Any one who gets an auctioneer to sell his goods by thrusting them upon him surreptitiously, as part of those belonging to another party for whom the auction is made, perpetrates a fraud upon both auctioneer and buyer.<sup>3</sup> Disobedience of the principal's instructions may be cured by the principal's ratification upon full knowledge of the facts.<sup>4</sup> In short, the auctioneer sustains, as to the seller, the character of a special agent, with the usual rights and liabilities incidental to that relation.<sup>5</sup> So long as his special interest in the goods continues, he may sue seller or buyer when needful; and his possession of the goods for the purposes of the sale justifies him in maintaining trespass, trover, or replevin, against any third party who would wrongfully intermeddle or take them away.<sup>6</sup>

§ 630. The Same Subject; his Personal Responsibilities, etc.

—An auctioneer must take heed not to sell what he has no right to offer. Where he receives notice at any time before closing a bargain that what he has offered for sale does not <sup>1</sup> Franklyn v. Lamond, 4 C. B. 637; Mills v. Hunt, 20 Wend. 431; Story Sales, §§ 81, 477-480; Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush, 619; Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 375. And see 49 L. T. N. s. 45. Where an auctioneer sells without disclosing the owner's name, and the goods are afterwards claimed by superior title, the purchaser may sue the auctioneer for his purchase-money. (Two judges dissenting.) Seemuller v. Fuchs, 64 Md. 217. See §§ 368, 372.

<sup>2</sup> Warlow v. Harrison, 1 E. & E. 295; Manser v. Back, 6 Hare, 443. And see Bateman, 31; Simonton v. Minneapolis Bank, 24 Minn. 216, as to advances, &c. by an auctioneer.

See 30 Beav. 220, by Romilly, M. R. Specific performance of an agreement to sell at auction cannot be compelled by the auctioneer. 30 L. J. Ch. 409.

Bankruptcy or death of the principal revokes the agency. Story Agency, § 486.

<sup>3</sup> Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush, 619.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 473.

<sup>5</sup> See Story Sales, § 470; Bateman, 25 et seq.

<sup>6</sup> Story Sales, §§ 471, 474; Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81. But as to selling fixtures upon another's premises, see Davis v. Danks, 3 Ex. 435. See further, Woolfe v. Horne, 2 Q. B. D. 355.

belong to the principal, or that there is fraud in the title, he incurs a personal risk by going on with the sale.<sup>1</sup> Even a sheriff who sells goods taken in execution implies, in offering them, that he bond fide believes that he has a title to dispose of.<sup>2</sup> But any party who stops an auction sale on the allegation of title in another may be sued in damages for tort, if it appears that such allegation was not honestly made.<sup>3</sup> As to the auctioneer himself, if in this, as in any other instance, he connived at a fraud in offering the disputed goods for sale, he not only makes himself personally responsible to the true owner or buyer for the consequences, but is unable to sue his confederate, though it were the seller himself, for reimbursement; while, if he was honestly deceived in the title which proves defective, he has his remedy over against the principal, though personally responsible in the first instance.<sup>4</sup>

The employment of an auctioneer to sell by auction imports no employment to make a private sale; though the enlargement of the ordinary scope of his authority is matter of mutual contract.<sup>5</sup> So, on the other hand, an authority to sell at auction is not implied in the ordinary dealings of business men.<sup>6</sup>

630 a. The Same Subject.—The liability of auctioneers, like that of agents or bailees generally, in respect of the wrongful conversion of goods, depends upon whether they handle such goods with the view of passing the property in them, or whether they merely settle the price or are otherwise mere middlemen between owner and purchaser. In the former case they are liable; in the latter case they are not.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hardacre v. Stewart, 5 Esp. 103; Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66; 57 Fed. 685. And see, as to selling stolen goods, supra, § 19.

<sup>2</sup> Peto v. Blades, 5 Taunt. 657.

<sup>3</sup> Like v. McKinstry, 3 Abb. N. Y. App. 62.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 481.

<sup>5</sup> Marsh v. Jelf, 3 F. & F. 234; Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90; Bateman, 27.

<sup>6</sup> Story Agency, § 102; Towle v. Leavitt, 3 Fost. 360.

<sup>7</sup> Barker v. Furlong [1891], 2 Ch. 172; 8 Taunt. 237; 4 Bing. 66.

An auctioneer's advances or expenses incurred in good faith upon goods fraudulently purchased by the party employing him are protected. 68 Md. 229. Aliter, if he had previous notice of the fraud.

Where, then, the auctioneer sells for a wrongful party, though acting personally in good faith, and without knowledge of infirm title, and pays over the proceeds to his employer, he is liable to the true owner for conversion of the goods.<sup>1</sup> In short, if he sells personal property (other than negotiable paper<sup>2</sup>) wrongfully committed to him for sale, he is liable to the rightful owner for a conversion, unless he can show some other justification than his own good faith and his ignorance of such rightful owner's title.<sup>3</sup>

§ 631. Auctioneer's Rights; Compensation, Indemnity, etc. — Auctioneers are entitled to compensation, usually in the shape of a commission upon the sale; to which may be added the special disbursements and expenses incidental to each particular transaction, and sometimes an extra allowance for extraordinary services beyond merely selling at auction, though nothing exorbitant; this whole subject being largely regulated by local statute, established usage, and the special contract between the auctioneer and his principal.<sup>4</sup> But an auctioneer may lose his commissions, and render himself liable in damages besides, for negligence on his part whereby the

<sup>1</sup> Kearney v. Clutton, 101 Mich. 106, and cases cited; Consolidated Co. v. Curtis [1892], 1 Q. B. 495. Contra, 2 Cal. 571; 88 Tenn. 396.

<sup>2</sup> See Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 503; §§ 19, 20.

<sup>3</sup> Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. 285; Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757. A bailment by the true owner to the auctioneer's employer is no justification. Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357. But contribution by such owner to the auctioneer's mistake would justify. Hills v. Snell, 104 Mass. 173. As to replevin, see 58 Hun, 603.

See further, Charlesworth v. Mills, [1892], App. Cas. 231.

<sup>4</sup> Simpson v. Margitson, 11 Q. B. 23; Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340; Clark v. Smythies, 2 F. & F. 83; Grimshaw v. Atterwell, 8 C. & P. 6; Hunt v. Philadelphia, 35 Penn. St.

277; Harlow v. Sparr, 15 Mo. 184; Russell v. Miner, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 537. And see Bateman, 219 et seq. As to an auctioneer's compensation for selling property in a prize case, see 2 Sprague, 160; Blatchf. Prize Cases, 347. See, for the case of an auctioneer's special contract as to expenses, &c., Union Refining Co. v. Pentecost, 79 Penn. St. 491. The auctioneer must, as a rule, actually sell, to earn his fees, if employed on commission. 15 N. Y. Supr. 526. See special contract considered, 93 N. Y. 562. But as to interference of the seller, or other circumstances entitling the auctioneer to sue on a quantum meruit, see Bateman, 225; 3 Brews. 398; Lara v. Hill, 15 C. B. n. s. 45. Illegality of the sale, or negligence causing damage to the employer, operates against such rights of compensation. Bateman, 227; 24 La. Ann. 105.

sale is rendered nugatory.<sup>1</sup> Wherever the auctioneer, like any other employed selling agent, is the efficient cause of the sale, in bringing the parties together who become buyer and seller, as by offering the goods by advertisement, showing them, or referring an inquirer to his principal, and is not chargeable with ignorance or carelessness to the principal's injury, he may justly claim his compensation from the seller; and the latter cannot, on the plea that he had countermanded the authority given, or that the auction failed and the sale was privately made, evade giving a remuneration.<sup>2</sup> The validity of the contract to purchase, as between buyer and seller, is sometimes found to affect the auctioneer's right to recover compensation.<sup>3</sup> An indemnity to the auctioneer against injury to a third party, such as a claimant, would perhaps be inferred if there was no intentional wrong-doing on the auctioneer's part.<sup>4</sup>

§ 632. Preliminaries of Auction Sale; Advertisement, Terms of Sale, etc.—(2d.) As to the preliminaries of an auction sale. Public notice is given, commonly by advertisement or posters, of the time and place of sale, the subject-matter, and such other facts as may be essential. Advertising a sale of articles by auction does not amount to a contract with the public, or any party acting upon the advertisement, that there will be a sale of those articles; nor can one who makes a journey, or otherwise incurs expense, on the faith of an auction which does not take place as honestly advertised, sue the auctioneer in damages.<sup>5</sup> So a party may advertise to receive offers, without thereby implying a promise to sell to the party who shall make the highest offer.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Denew v. Daverell, 3 Camp. N. P. 451; 8 Daly, 261; Story Sales, § 470; Bateman, 35. As to the auctioneer's lien, see 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. § 379; Hone v. Henriquez, 13 Wend. 240.

<sup>2</sup> Clark v. Smythies, 2 F. & F. 83; Green v. Bartlett, 14 C. B. n. s. 681; Martin v. Silliman, 53 N. Y. 615; Wilkinson v. Alston, 48 L. J. Q. B. 733; Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139.

<sup>3</sup> Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. Law, 338.

<sup>4</sup> Dugdale v. Lovering, L. R. 10 C. P. 196; Beach v. Branch, 57 Ga. 362; 86 Penn. St. 120; and see supra, § 629.

<sup>5</sup> Harris v. Nickerson, L. R. 8 Q. B. 286.

<sup>6</sup> Spencer v. Harding, L. R. 5 C. P. 561.

Terms or conditions of the sale published previous to the auction enter into the sale on the seller's part; and these every bidder is supposed to make an element of his offer.<sup>1</sup> Terms and conditions, not only as to time, place, and the auctioneer employed, but in less obvious particulars and with special provisions, go primarily by the published advertisement or posters of the auctioneer; and upon all parties with due notice thereof they are binding. Standing rules of the auction-room may thus be brought to a bidder's knowledge, so as to form part of the contract; as, at a horse repository, a printed regulation conspicuously posted setting forth that no warranty of soundness would remain in force longer than twenty-four hours from the sale.<sup>2</sup> It is a rule, that printed or written conditions of sale so speak for themselves that they cannot be contradicted by the auctioneer's verbal declarations at the sale, nor by the bidder with knowledge thereof.<sup>3</sup> Nor matters it that the question comes up at a sub-sale of the same subject-matter by the purchaser.<sup>4</sup> But the auctioneer's oral statements, made at the time of the sale and before opening bids, in explanation of the written or printed terms, are sometimes admissible under the usual rules of evidence; so, too, might the sale be orally adjourned, or certain advertised articles be removed from competition.<sup>5</sup> And one who hears the auctioneer say publicly, before putting an article up for sale, that a specific published statement as to its character is wrong in a certain particular, making the needful correction, is held to his bid, if accepted, and cannot set up the printed terms against the verbal correction.<sup>6</sup>

But the bidder may strenuously insist that no term or condition shall prevail to his disadvantage which was not

<sup>1</sup> As to the condition of a deposit, see §§ 635, 644.

<sup>2</sup> Bywater v. Richardson, 1 Ad. & E. 508. And see Story Sales, § 463; Lamond v. Davall, 9 Q. B. 1030; Hagedorn v. Laing, 6 Taunt. 162; Plume v. Small, 1 Halst. Ch. 460, 650.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.; Gunnis v. Erhart, 1 H. Bl.

289; Shelton v. Livius, 2 C. & J. 411; Powell v. Edmunds, 12 East, 6.

<sup>4</sup> Shelton v. Livius, supra.

<sup>5</sup> See Rankin v. Matthews, 7 Ire. 286; Harris v. Nickerson, L. R. 8 Q. B. 286; Lee v. Hester, 20 Ga. 588.

<sup>6</sup> Eden v. Blake, 13 M. & W. 614.

Cf. Shelton v. Livius, 2 C. & J. 411.

fairly brought to his own personal knowledge by advertisement, poster, the auctioneer's public statement made at the sale, or the auction usage; and particularly is it incumbent upon a seller, who would hold the bidder to his bargain, to see to it that the auctioneer's special regulations, rules, or oral explanations and corrections, were amply offered to the bidders before the bidding was started. Where an auctioneer announces terms at the auction sale which in ordinary course should have appeared in the published notice, distributing no copies of such announcement among the bidders, he incurs great risk; for auction sales have been set aside at the instance of the accepted bidder who could show that such change or addition to the terms of the published notice was unknown to him, because he was somewhat deaf.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Torrance v. Bolton, L. R. 14 Eq. 124; L. R. 8 Ch. 118. See Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291; Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24; Snelling v. Thomas, L. R. 17 Eq. 303.

In auction sales of real estate, more especially, and generally where such a sale is judicial or compulsory, the publication by poster or advertisement of particulars as to the time, place, terms, and conditions of sale becomes a matter of far more consequence than in the usual auctions of personal property. But in general the public description in such respects should be followed. Written and printed terms and conditions should not contradict one another: they should not be ambiguous; nor as a rule should verbal declarations at the time of the sale be relied upon for contradicting them. Bateman, 44, 45; 3 Camp. 285; Flight v. Booth, 1 Bing. N. C. 370. As Lord Ellenborough once observed: "Men cannot tell what contracts they enter into, if the written conditions of sale are to be controlled by the babble of the auction-room." Jones v. Edney, 3 Camp. 285. And see Layton v. Hennen, 3 La. Ann. 1; 12 La. Ann. 826. These, however, are rules founded in general principle; and as to auction sales, exceptions are admitted in various instances, so as to allow of more flexible conduct on the auctioneer's part, as our text above indicates. In particular, parol evidence may be taken to explain the subject-matter of a written contract, though not to vary its terms. Bateman, 46. And see Brett v. Clowser, 5 C. P. D. 376; Pollard v. King, 63 Ill. 36.

Particulars ought, in general, to contain a faithful description of the property to be sold. Gross misdescription, accompanied by gross negligence, fraudulent misstatements, and the like, are to be taken against the auctioneer; and only a fair agreement and a fair sale can be specifically enforced. Bateman, 48-56, and Sheldon's notes. Errors and misdescriptions ought to be corrected before the sale: printed papers, with the corrections distributed if possible, in order to be safe, where the matter is of consequence; and at all events the attention of bidders should be drawn at the sale to the proper correction. Bateman, 56.

Puffing statements are dangerous, especially if specific performance and § 633. The Same Subject. — Conditions of an auction sale are to be reasonably construed, and, though not contrary to their plain intent, yet with reference to the mutuality of the contract. Thus, where a house and the land it occupies are separately sold, on condition, as to the former, that it shall be removed from the premises within a certain date, one who bids in both house and land for himself is not bound to perform the condition.<sup>1</sup> Nor, under an auction with any misdescription as to the quantity stated to be at the purchaser's risk, will it be presumed that a large deficiency in quantity was meant to be borne by him without the right to rescind, or even to claim deduction from the price.<sup>2</sup> A condition should be strictly construed as to the seller which professes to throw upon the buyer the burden of the former's title;<sup>3</sup> and conditions requiring the goods to be removed by the buyer within a stipulated time, in default of which the goods shall be re-sold at his loss, are presumed to allow this period to the buyer only, requiring the seller to be ready to deliver the goods at any time on the buyer's reasonable request.<sup>4</sup> A sale condition which reserves to the auctioneer the power of re-sale on the buyer's default renders the sale not absolute, but conditional, as to passing the property in the goods.

Conditions which have been published before the sale — as, for instance, printed with the advertisement of the the aid of a court of equity be sought against the bidder; but as a rule such statements are to be treated with allowance, and the more so if bidders could see for themselves and estimate the worth and qualities of the thing put up. See Bateman, 57, 58, and cases cited; the precedents relating chiefly to real-estate sales.

Where catalogues or plans are used at a sale, the foregoing rules of construction apply. See Bateman, 44-82. But printed catalogues need not ordinarily be furnished. 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

<sup>1</sup> Plume v. Small, 1 Halst. Ch. 460, 650.

<sup>2</sup> Whittemore v. Whittemore, L. R. 8 Eq. 603. And see Harnett v. Baker, L. R. 20 Eq. 50.

<sup>3</sup> See Waddell v. Wolfe, L. R. 9 Q. B. 515; Hamill v. Gillespie, 48 N. Y. 556. Thus, the announcement that the property is sold subject to a pledge or chattel mortgage, does not by inference bind the purchaser to any personal liability for the indebtedness so secured. Hamill v. Gillespie, ib.

<sup>4</sup> Lamond v. Davall, 9 Q. B. 1030. And see infra, § 645.

time and place of sale and things to be sold, or announced in posters or catalogues—enter fairly into the contract. Sometimes they are orally announced at the sale. But whether printed, written, or oral, they should be brought home by actual or constructive notice to the bidder in order to bind him, or they should conform to well-established usage.<sup>1</sup> Yet written terms or conditions of sale apply with more strictness to real than to personal property transactions; and as to the latter, at least, oral conditions of sale, publicly announced, may, as between seller and buyer, be contradicted by parol evidence of what they had agreed upon.<sup>2</sup>

§ 634. Method of conducting Sale at Auction; closing upon Bid, etc.—(3d.) The method of conducting the auction which prevails in England and America, is for the auctioneer, at the time and place appointed, in presence of the assembled bidders, to formally open the auction, and, after making final announcement of its terms, to put up each article or lot for sale, with his hammer in his hand, asking how much he is offered for a certain thing. Any person calls out a price, meaning it as the sum he bids for it: this <sup>1</sup> See Freme v. Wright, 4 Madd. 364; Mesnard v. Aldridge, 3 Esp. 271; Bywater v. Richardson, 1 A. & E. 508. Where a sale is made under specific or restricted terms, the auctioneer is not bound to notice a bid which is made on other terms or conditions. Moore v. Owsley, 37 Tex. 603.

A judicial sale, or sale under a trust, if not prescribed as to time and manner (as they usually are), must be governed by the sound discretion of the person appointed to conduct it. Blossom v. Railroad Co., 3 Wall. 196; Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159. But all such sales, and compulsory public sales generally, require a strict compliance with the judicial, trust, or statute directions. As to the condition that no allowance for damage should be made unless applied for within three days from the sale, see Atkins v. Howe, 18 Pick. 16.

Mr. Bateman divides the conditions of an auction sale into the following classes: (1) Conditions relating to the actual sale,—biddings, payment of a deposit, and signing of a contract; (2) conditions relating to the quantum of interest sold; (3) conditions relating to the title to the property; (4) conditions relating to completion of the purchase; (5) conditions relating to misdescriptions in the particulars; and (6) conditions relating to forfeiture of the deposit and a re-sale of the property. See Bateman, 90 et seq., where these conditions are discussed at length. The cases apply almost exclusively to sales of real estate; for with reference to personalty, conditions are rarely stated with technical formality.

<sup>2</sup> Mitchell v. Zimmerman, 109 Penn. St. 183.

the auctioneer announces, repeating until he hears a higher bid; and so on, with each higher sum offered, to the maximum bid; then, with some such final phrase as "Going, going, gone," he brings down the hammer upon his desk, declaring that the thing is "gone" or sold to the maximum bidder (whose name he now takes) for such a sum.<sup>1</sup> After the hammer is thus brought down the bargain is closed, by the auctioneer's virtual acceptance, on the seller's behalf, of the last bidder's proposal; and neither seller nor buyer can withdraw, though either might have retracted before the hammer fell.<sup>2</sup> A retraction by the bidder or auctioneer while the auction progresses should be loud enough for the other to hear it.<sup>3</sup> Any party may bid personally, or by his agent; but where one bids for another, without disclosing, either to the auctioneer or the owner, the name of his principal, he is liable as purchaser.<sup>4</sup>

A bid made at an auction sale, though formally accepted, does not usually constitute a complete sale, but only a completed bargain or auction contract; giving a right to enforce specific performance or to sue in damages for breach, where either party fails to perform.<sup>5</sup>

§ 635. Memorandum and Part Payment under Statute of Frauds.—Sales at auction are, as we have seen, within the Statute of Frauds; so that often a written memorandum should be made at or soon after accepting the bid, in order to hold the parties to the bargain.<sup>6</sup> This memorandum should comprise all essential terms and conditions, and, in

<sup>1</sup> An unaccepted bid cannot prevail though the sale be adjourned and finally discontinued. Blossom v. Railroad Co., 3 Wall. 196.

<sup>2</sup> See Story Sales, § 461; Payne v. Cave, 3 T. R. 148; supra, § 221; Byrne v. Van Tienhoven, 5 C. P. D. 344. Cf. 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

<sup>3</sup> Story Sales, § 461.

<sup>4</sup> M'Comb v. Wright, 4 Johns. Ch. 659; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Loomis, 11 Paige, 431; Warlow v. Harrison, 1 E. & E. 295. See Williamson v. Barton, 7 H. & N. 899; Woolfe v.

Horne, 2 Q. B. D. 355. Biddings are not always of necessity by word of mouth. See Bateman, 9, 120; Price, 636. See, as to receiving sealed proposals, Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254; Harvey v. United States, 105 U. S. 671; § 627.

<sup>5</sup> See Collins v. Demarest, 45 La. Ann. 108. But cf. § 644.

<sup>6</sup> Kenworthy v. Schofield, 2 Dow & R. 556; Burke v. Haley, 2 Gilm. 614; Brent v. Green, 6 Leigh, 16; Morton v. Dean, 13 Met. 385; Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302; supra, § 444.

general, conform to the principles already discussed. It is especially requisite, where the sale is of real estate, or for a large sum.<sup>1</sup> The fact that the law imposes upon auctioneers the duty of making memoranda of their sales, and the presumption in favor of the performance of one's official duty, cannot, it is held, stand for proof that there was a written memorandum of the sale.<sup>2</sup> But a deposit is frequently required from the purchaser at the completion of an auction sale by way of indemnity to the seller, and for securing compliance with the Statute of Frauds; and the requirement of such deposit is properly one of the published conditions of the auction. If the auctioneer waive such condition, the statute in this respect may fail also of compliance.<sup>3</sup> When the goods are knocked down to the bidder, the auctioneer is agent for both buyer and seller for the purpose of making the statute memorandum.<sup>4</sup>

The payment of deposit money at the time of auction is not to be considered usually a part payment of the purchase price, as such, but as the giving of an earnest to bind the bargain until title is investigated by the purchaser, and the formalities completed.<sup>5</sup>

§ 636. The Same Subject; Auctioneer's Warranty. — While an auctioneer does not ordinarily warrant that which he puts up at auction, he may bind himself to the purchaser by a personal warranty as to quality or title; and an express warranty, either on his own or the seller's behalf, is not unfrequently given to stimulate competition.<sup>6</sup> The ver-

<sup>1</sup> See Browne Stat. Frauds, passim; supra, cs. 9-11; Bateman, cs. 8, 9.

<sup>2</sup> Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467 (Church, C. J., Grover and Peckham, JJ., diss.).

<sup>3</sup> Ib. See Bleeker v. Graham, 2 Edw. Ch. 647.

<sup>4</sup> Story Sales, § 80; supra, §§ 505, 506; 2 Taunt. 38; 1 E. & E. 295. At or immediately after the sale the auctioneer ought to disclose his principal's name if he wishes to avoid further responsibility. It will be enough to write the name on the memorandum. Bateman, 129; 20 Wend. 431; 4 C. B. 637.

<sup>5</sup> See Collins v. Demarest, 45 La. Ann. 108. Acceptance of a check for deposit is held a reasonable practice in 31 Ch. D. 42. See as to registration of such memoranda, 36 Ch. D. 196.

<sup>6</sup> See Dent v. Grath, 3 Bush, 174; Barclay v. Tracy, 5 W. & S. 45; supra, §§ 329-341; Reese Silver Mining Co. v. Smith, L. R. 4 H. L. 64; 4 App. Cas. 13, 20; Bateman, 116.

bal warranty of an auctioneer, where he alone was trusted, is an original undertaking, and not within that provision of the Statute of Frauds which requires a collateral undertaking to be expressed in writing.<sup>1</sup> An authority, on the other hand, to give an express warranty on his principal's behalf is not readily inferred from the scope of his employment.<sup>2</sup>

The usual principles discussed under warranty have their application to auction sales; and some of our illustrations have been borrowed from this class of sales.<sup>3</sup> Matters of description which have been apparently intended as a mere expression of opinion respecting the kind, quality, or condition of the article offered, will not, especially where bidders were free to judge of the qualities of the article offered, and to rely upon such judgment, ordinarily bind the auctioneer or his principal; but caveat emptor does not sanction fraud in sales, whether by concealment or open falsehood; and material representations held out as an inducement to the purchase, and so relied upon, have been construed into a warranty.<sup>4</sup>

§ 637. Auctioneer's Right to enter upon Premises; Place of Sale, etc.—Since one's parol license to enter land is revocable at any time, an auctioneer who is employed to sell goods on premises not his own nor those of the seller, has no such interest in the goods as to render the license irrevocable, even though he may have incurred expense in consequence: he should secure a suitable instrument in writing before holding the auction.<sup>5</sup> And a condition that the thing sold shall be removed by the purchaser from the premises within a certain period from the day of sale must be fulfilled, else the sale is voidable at the seller's option.<sup>6</sup> An auctioneer is

<sup>1</sup> Schell v. Stephens, 50 Mo. 375.

<sup>2</sup> 9 Gray, 197; 9 Wheat. 645; supra, § 324.

<sup>3</sup> Supra, §§ 324-367. And see cases as to offering a picture as the work of an old master, supra, § 337; Power v. Barham, 4 A. & E. 473; 4 C. & P. 15. Also as to horse-sales, supra, §§ 339-342.

<sup>4</sup> Supra, §§ 345, 370; Bateman, 58, and Sheldon's notes.

As to the warranty of title, see supra, §§ 368-379.

<sup>5</sup> Taplin v. Florence, 10 C. B. 744. And see Davis v. Banks, 3 Ex. 435; Keith v. Reid, 2 H. L. Sc. 39.

<sup>6</sup> This rule applies though the seller be a city. Woodward v. City of Boston, 115 Mass. 81.

not obliged, of course, to conduct a sale, even of chattels, on his own premises; but auction sales of personal property in the public streets are an infringement upon the public rights.<sup>1</sup>

Wherever the sale is made, the rule is that the chattels offered should be in sight or accessible to the inspection of bidders.<sup>2</sup>

§ 638. Auction should be open to Honest Competition; Fraud vitiates Sale.—(4th.) Every auction should be fairly conducted, and open to honest competition. Fraud on either side will vitiate a public sale at the option of a defrauded party who is himself free from blame. But, following the usual rules, the sale is to be pronounced voidable, and not void; so that if the defrauded party fails to rescind the sale promptly on learning of the fraud, or takes the benefits of the bargain, he must abide by the transaction; while it must appear under any circumstances that the wrongful conduct of the one caused the other to bid higher than he would have done, or otherwise induced him to act to his disadvantage.<sup>3</sup>

An auctioneer is not justified in selling to himself, nor even to a firm of which he is a member; nor to bid with such

<sup>1</sup> Commonwealth v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. 217.

<sup>2</sup> McNeely v. Hart, 8 Ire. 492; Sheldon v. Soper, 14 Johns. 352; Bennett's Branch, &c. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Penn. St. 242; Tibbetts v. Jageman, 58 Ill. 43; Kennedy v. Clayton, 29 Ark. 270. To sell without opportunity to inspect must necessarily enhance one's risk of being bound under the law of implied warranty as seller or auctioneer. Supra, § 347. But as to setting aside a sale on this ground, the courts rule less favorably to the buyer; for opportunity to inspect, or usage with reference to the particular kind of property, may be taken against him, where he made no objection to bidding on any such grounds at the sale. See National Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159;

2 E. D. Smith, 440; Cook v. Timmons, 67 Ill. 203. If stock is offered by description, there is little occasion for looking at the instrument in question before bidding; for the incorporeal right is the thing of consequence. So, too, a sample might be offered, or a part of the thing, under the usual implied warranty. See 14 Johns. 222.

<sup>3</sup> See Morehead v. Hunt, 1 Dev. Eq. 35; Story Sales, §§ 462, 476; Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Penn. St. 251; McDowell v. Simms, Busb. Eq. 130; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. (U. S.) 134; Martin v. Ranlett, 5 Rich. 541; cases infra. Whether certain proceedings at an auction sale prevented fair competition or not is sometimes left to a jury. Pike v. Balch, 38 Me. 302.

an object.<sup>1</sup> But the reason of this rule is to discountenance fraud; and while some cases hold such sales void, even though the sale or purchase is nominally conducted by another representing the auctioneer,<sup>2</sup> others treat such a purchase with more regard to the fairness of the pecuniary result, and treat the sale as merely voidable at the seasonable election of the parties in interest.<sup>3</sup> Some late cases permit the auctioneer to bid, directly or indirectly, on behalf of some third person or competitor;<sup>4</sup> and stated bids are not unfrequently left with an auctioneer, in modern usage, by parties who wish to compete, but cannot conveniently appear at the auction; but some States discountenance such bids as injurious to other competitors.<sup>5</sup>

§ 639. The Same Subject; Fraud on the Part of Bidders.—Fraud on the part of bidders often consists in a ring or combination of individuals for the purpose of keeping the bids in their own hands, and preventing open competition; as by agreeing that only one shall bid for each article, and that the proceeds of the auction shall be divided among themselves. Such a combination is pronounced in certain instances an indictable conspiracy under English statutes; and all agreements which tend to monopolize proposals are to be discouraged for the sake both of the seller and open bidders, whether civil or criminal procedure be invoked.<sup>6</sup> It is even fraudu-

<sup>1</sup> Salomons v. Pender, 3 H. & C. 639; Bateman, 28; Story Agency, § 210; 4 De G. & Sm. 388.

<sup>2</sup> Taylor v. Stringer, 1 Gratt. 158.

<sup>3</sup> Brotherline v. Swires, 48 Penn. St. 68; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. 89; Crook v. Williams, 20 Penn. St. 342.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Scott v. Mann, 36 Tex. 157; Brock v. Rice, 27 Gratt. 812; Sheldon's n. to Bateman, 28.

With reference to sheriffs and other public officers, public policy might dictate stricter rules in this respect than in the usual case of auction sales among business persons. See Knight v. Herrin, 48 Me.

533; Smith v. Pope, 5 B. Mon. 337.

<sup>5</sup> Randall v. Lautenberger, 16 R. I. 158.

<sup>6</sup> Levi v. Levi, 6 C. & P. 239; Fuller v. Abrahams, 3 B. & B. 116; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 494; Smith v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. 136; Slater v. Maxwell, 6 Wall. 268; Fenner v. Tucker, 6 R. I. 551; Gulick v. Ward, 5 Halst. 87; Wilbur v. How, 8 Johns. 444; Wooton v. Hinkle, 20 Mo. 290; Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159; Loyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43; Gardiner v. Morse, 25 Me. 140; Martin v. Ranlett, 5 Rich. 541; Bateman, 121, and Sheldon's notes.

lent for one bidder to dissuade others from bidding against him on the pretence that the seller had wronged him, and that the article put up is rightfully his own.<sup>1</sup> But the mere attempt of one or more parties to stifle competition cannot invalidate the sale where the attempt proved unsuccessful.<sup>2</sup> Nor, at the present day, do combinations of bidders appear to be so unfavorably regarded as in some of the earlier cases; for, while it would appear that all bidding associations were formerly deemed of fraudulent character because of their tendency, the rule now prevailing is, that persons intending to purchase must not agree not to bid against each other, nor undertake to stifle honest competition, but that otherwise they may join to make a purchase bonâ fide for their common benefit, and, if need be, unite to become joint-purchasers of that which no one would wish to buy in for himself alone.<sup>3</sup> An auction property may be bought in for co-owners, partners, or a company; so may the parties authorize one person to bid for it on behalf of all.<sup>4</sup>

§ 640. The Same Subject; Fraud of Seller or Auctioneer; Puffing, etc.—Fraud on the part of the seller or auctioneer may be alleged where puffers or by-bidders (that is to say, fictitious bidders) are secretly employed to force competition above its true level, and make the thing sell for more than it would fetch were the auction fairly conducted; and any party, who has been misled by a fictitious bid so procured into offering more than he would otherwise have bid, may refuse to complete the contract, or claim relief against any purchase closing upon his offer;<sup>5</sup> for such employment is a

<sup>1</sup> Fuller v. Abrahams, 3 B. & B. 116.

<sup>2</sup> Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 189; Buckley v. Briggs, 30 Mo. 452.

<sup>3</sup> See Carew, In re, 26 Beav. 187; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 494, per Nelson, J.; Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Met. 384; Wooton v. Hinkle, 20 Mo. 290; Loyd v. Malone, supra; Bradley v. Kingsley, 43 N. Y. 534. See Dexter v. Shepard, 117 Mass. 480.

<sup>4</sup> Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159.

<sup>5</sup> Bexwell v. Christie, 1 Cowp. 395; Howard v. Castle, 6 T. R. 642; Thorntonn v. Haines, 15 M. & W. 367; Green v. Baverstock, 14 C. B. n. s. 204; Moncrief v. Goldsborough, 4 H. & M. 281; Morehead v. Hunt, 1 Dev. Eq. 35; Staines v. Shore, 16 Penn. St. 200; Towle v. Leavitt, 3 Fost. 360; Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159; Story Sales, § 484; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 3. But see Latham v. Morrow, 6 B. Monr. 630.

fraud upon honest bidders. The English chancery practice appears to have been more lenient, allowing one puffer in a chancery sale in order to prevent a sacrifice; but the courts of law refused to accede to this doctrine. Statute 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, at length required equity in sales of land to conform to the legal rule.<sup>1</sup>

In this country the common-law rule against employing a single puffer, or permitting by-bidding at all, prevails generally,<sup>2</sup> but not universally.<sup>3</sup> An auctioneer should not run up the price by pretending to receive bids not actually made; and if he does so, though without the seller's participation, the buyer may be relieved against the fraud.<sup>4</sup> The purchaser who would escape the bargain because of by-bidding should, of course, have been misled thereby; and he should act promptly upon his discovery, and comply with the terms usual in repudiating a bargain for fraud;<sup>5</sup> or refuse to complete the sale.<sup>6</sup>

§ 641. Limiting Bids; Sale with Reserve, etc.—But no owner is compelled to sacrifice his property by closing with the highest bidder on such public competition. He can limit his price in advance of the auction, and direct the auctioneer not to let it go for less; and if the auctioneer, in disregard of such instructions, closes a bargain, instead of adjourning the auction or withdrawing the goods for want of a proper bid, he makes himself responsible to his

<sup>1</sup> See Green v. Bavestock, supra; Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare, 618; Benj. Sales, bk. 3, c. 2, § 3; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Story, 632; s. c. reversed, 8 How. (U. S.) 134.

Some late chancery cases tend to discredit the practice of puffing, irrespective of legislation, and hold that where there are two by-bidders, counting the auctioneer as one, the auction is fraudulent.

Mortimer v. Bell, L. R. 1 Ch. 10 (1865). See also Heatley v. Newton, 19 Ch. D. 326. Yet for mere enhancement by fictitious bidding, without decided fraud, chancery disinclines to avoid a sale, in Union Bank v. Munster, 37 Ch. D. 51.

<sup>2</sup> See 2 Kent Com. 538, 539, Staines v. Shore, and Towle v. Leavitt, supra; Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134; Nat. Bank v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 159; Springer v. Kleinsorge, 83 Mo. 152; Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 338.

<sup>3</sup> Phippen v. Stickney, 3 Met. 384; Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 174.

<sup>4</sup> See Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134 (Taney, C. J., M'Lean and Grier, JJ., diss.); 19 Ch. D. 326.

<sup>5</sup> See Tomlinson v. Savage, 6 Ired. Eq. 430; Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Penn. St. 251.

<sup>6</sup> 23 W. Va. 338; 83 Mo. 152.

principal for the consequences.<sup>1</sup> So may the seller openly reserve the right to bid at the auction for himself; since it is the secret and false bid only which injures competition.<sup>2</sup> But while a bid thus made by the seller for his own protection is proper, and the courts are further disposed to let a sale stand, wherever the seller has merely put in the last bid and the auctioneer has knocked the goods down to him, although his intention of doing so had not been openly announced, it is a seller's duty to let the property go to others where the sale was published as being "without reserve;" for a sale "without reserve" implies that the highest bonâ fide bid from among the public competitors shall be accepted.<sup>3</sup>

§ 642. Miscellaneous Points as to Fraud in the Sale.—The auctioneer should make no private arrangement with any bidding party for signalling bids, so as to help him purchase the thing; nor smuggle into the auction for one person the goods of another, since a party might increase his bid out of personal regard for the advertised owner; nor give advantages to one over another fair and open bidder.<sup>4</sup> It is not absolutely fatal to the auction that more was offered than the property was cried off for; and the practice had been justified in some States of putting up the property again at

<sup>1</sup> Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. 86; Towle v. Leavitt, 3 Fost. 360; Bush v. Cole, 28 N. Y. 261. And see Bateman, 126, 137; Warlow v. Harrison, 29 L. J. Q. B. 14.

Equity, semble, favors the employment of a person to protect the property; and the great majority of sales by auction are made subject to a reserved price, which the seller generally fixes with the assistance of the auctioneer. Bateman, 140; supra, § 640.

<sup>2</sup> Dimmock v. Hallett, L. R. 2 Ch. 21; Mainprice v. Westley, 6 B. & S. 420; Story Sales, § 484; Staines v. Shore; 16 Penn. St. 200, per Gibson, C. J.

<sup>3</sup> See Robinson v. Wall, 2 Ph. 372; Thornett v. Haines, 15 M. & W. 367; Warlow v. Harrison, 1 E. & E. 295. But see Dimmock v. Hallett, L. R. 2 Ch. 21, as to a sale "without reserve," but with all parties free to bid. As to inadequacy of price, see Livingston v. Byrne, 11 Johns. 555. There are circumstances under which a bid is properly refused, and in good faith, as that of an irresponsible bidder. Hobbs v. Beavers, 2 Ind. 142; Den v. Zellers, 2 Halst. 153; Gray v. Veirs, 33 Md. 18. A minor's bid may be refused. Kinney v. Showdy, 1 Hill, 544.

<sup>4</sup> Conover v. Walling, 2 McCart. 173; Thomas v. Kerr, 3 Bush, 619; Pattison v. Josselyn, 43 Miss. 373.

the price bid, where it is fairly claimed by two or more persons, and so deciding finally who is entitled to the purchase.<sup>1</sup>

“Mock-auctions,” so called, which are tainted with fraud and coercion, in inducing innocent persons to bid unduly for articles put up, are not upheld either in law or equity.<sup>2</sup>

§ 643. Enforcement of the Auction Contract; General Rules.

—(5th.) Enforcement of the auction contract is the last topic for consideration. In the absence of special announcement to the contrary, chattel sales at auction are for cash; and an auctioneer runs a personal risk if he delivers the goods without receiving the price from the purchaser;<sup>3</sup> or if he takes, by way of payment, a promissory note instead of money.<sup>4</sup> But where custom or the seller’s express agreement has given to the auctioneer a wider discretion as to the time or mode of payment, he may exercise it with a corresponding modification of his personal liability.<sup>5</sup> On the other hand, the authority conferred may be so restricted in a sale as to give the auctioneer no right to receive payment, especially if the principal retains possession of the goods.<sup>6</sup> So might a seller revoke his auctioneer’s authority, even after the auction, and, in the exercise of prudence, take the matter of delivery and receiving payment into his own hands; though not so as to deprive the auctioneer of his lien for compensation, nor without giving the buyer ample notice of the revocation.<sup>7</sup>

§ 644. Settlement with Purchaser; Deposit Money, etc.—

If, under the terms of the auction, a deposit was made by <sup>1</sup> Conover v. Walling, supra. And see McMasters v. Commissioners, 1 La. Ann. 11, which declares that one of the disputants who re-bids must abide by the result, even though the goods are finally knocked down to a third person.

<sup>2</sup> See Bateman, 3, 142; Musgrove v. Robinson, 8 C. & P. 469.

<sup>3</sup> Brown v. Stanton, 2 Chit. 353.

<sup>4</sup> Williams v. Evans, L. R. 1 Q. B. 352. Whether an auctioneer can take a check, see 11 Mod. 87. He cannot, according to Broughton v. Silloway, 114 Mass. 71.

<sup>5</sup> Townes v. Birchett, 12 Leigh, 173. See a sort of credit arrangement made in Noah v. Pierce, 85 Mich. 70, the auctioneer retaining possession.

<sup>6</sup> Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645.

<sup>7</sup> Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. 19; Williams v. Evans, L. R. 1 Q. B. 352.

the purchaser, the auctioneer becomes stakeholder of both buyer and seller, and is bound to hold the money as assurance that the terms of sale shall be complied with. He cannot hand it to the seller, nor to the buyer, before the sale is completed, without standing answerable for its amount, less his own charges, to the injured party, in case the other proves delinquent.<sup>1</sup> An auctioneer is also bound to regard all matters brought to his notice which may affect the right to the deposit on either side;<sup>2</sup> and, in case of real doubt, he may interplead the parties.<sup>3</sup>

The property in chattels passes to a purchaser on acceptance of his bid at auction, to substantially the same effect as in the private sales of specific things where there is no condition of payment, and the place of delivery is the place of auction;<sup>4</sup> and the auctioneer cannot undertake to protect the buyer against further risks, or adjust subsequent claims which concern the latter as owner, at the seller's cost, unless expressly authorized so to do.<sup>5</sup>

§ 645. Remedies to enforce Auction Contract. — An auctioneer may sue in his own name for the price of goods which he sold in the course of employment, unless the seller has revoked his authority; nor should the buyer settle with the seller regardless of the auctioneer's claims.<sup>6</sup> But if his own charges be paid, the auctioneer is not justified in pursuing the

<sup>1</sup> Story Sales, §§ 83, 478; Burrough v. Skinner, 5 Burr. 2639. If in default, he might also be liable for interest. Gaby v. Driver, 2 Y. & J. 549; 1 Sch. Pers. Prop. §§ 257, 258.

<sup>2</sup> See Edwards v. Hodding, 5 Taunt. 815. A corporation cannot enforce an auction sale of its chattels informally entered into. Kidderminster v. Hardwick, L. R. 9 Ex. 13.

<sup>3</sup> Bleeker v. Graham, 2 Edw. Ch. 647; Bateman, 212, stating the English statutes on this point.

<sup>4</sup> See § 243, etc. The same difficulties of determining a mutual intent, which we have observed in private sales, might raise doubts here of a property transfer in the full sense, regardless of circumstances.

<sup>5</sup> Sweeting v. Turner, L. R. 7 Q. B. 310; Bateman, c. 10.

<sup>6</sup> Williams v. Millington, 1 H. Bl. 81; Robinson v. Rutter, 4 E. & B. 954; Beller v. Block, 19 Ark. 566; Minturn v. Main, 7 N. Y. 220; Flanigan v. Crull, 53 Ill. 352; Thompson v. Kelly, 101 Mass. 291. But as to this right, where the auctioneer has parted with his lien, see Coppin v. Walker, 7 Taunt. 237; Coppin v. Craig, 7 Taunt. 243. If the auctioneer sues, and the buyer proves that the auctioneer's principal was not the true owner, this is a sufficient defence. Dickenson v. Naul, 4 B. & Ad. 638.

buyer, who has honestly arranged payment with the seller, as by setting off the price at which he bid in the goods against a debt which the seller owed him; though the fact that nothing more is due him would not of itself debar an auctioneer from suing on the seller's behalf.<sup>1</sup>

The accepted bidder at an auction of chattels is ordinarily bound to pay the money promptly, and take away the goods; and unless he does so, or offers to do so, he is liable for damages. Any waiver of the prescribed terms of sale, or delay for the buyer's convenience, will, if made on the seller's behalf, be strictly construed. Indeed, the rule is, independently of local statutes which enlarge the remedies of the auctioneer or owner, that, for the buyer's delinquency in complying with the auction terms, the goods may be re-sold upon reasonable notice, and the buyer held liable for the difference between the price at which his bid was accepted and the price for which the goods are re-sold, together with the expenses incidental to the re-sale.<sup>2</sup> But in such re-sale, the conditions should not be made more onerous than before to the defaulting buyer's undue loss.<sup>3</sup>

As a rule, the auctioneer's authority for the seller ceases when the sale has taken place; and consequently he should not, unless specially empowered, undertake to rescind and modify the terms under which fulfilment was to take place.<sup>4</sup>

As to auction, or other sales of personal property, an action for price or damages or remedies at law with reference to the goods must be the usual recourse, on a party's default. Specific performance is enforced, however, in special instances, where necessarily the remedies at law would prove inadequate.<sup>5</sup> The special conditions which accompanied the

<sup>1</sup> Bartlett v. Purnell, 4 A. & E. 792; Grice v. Kenrick, L. R. 5 Q. B. 340; Minturn v. Main, supra.

<sup>2</sup> Coffman v. Hampton, 2 W. & S. 377; Boinest v. Leigne, 2 Rich. 464; Spring v. Chipman, 6 Vt. 662. See Hicks v. Ayer, 5 Ga. 298; Matthews v. McElroy, 79 Mo. 202. And see as to a seller's remedies, supra, cs. 12, 13.

<sup>3</sup> Weast v. Derrick, 100 Penn. St. 509.

<sup>4</sup> Bateman, 28; Nelson v. Aldridge, 2 Stark. 435; Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 386; 2 Rich. 464; Sykes v. Giles, 5 M. & W. 645.

<sup>5</sup> See supra, §§ 511, 529; Bateman, 201, 204.

sale at auction should, we may add, be fairly complied with on both sides.<sup>1</sup>

§ 646. Auctioneer's Final Responsibility for the Sale Proceeds, etc.—But, in general, an auctioneer's duty is to sell for his principal; and he must be faithful to his trust.<sup>2</sup> It does not lie in such an agent to dispute his principal's title, when sued for the amount of his sale;<sup>3</sup> though he is so far bound to respect the rights of others, that moneys still in his hands, and not yet paid over to the seller, may be reclaimed by the buyer who discovers facts to justify his avoidance of the sale, in conformity with the express or implied terms of the auction.<sup>4</sup>

So long as the auctioneer has custody of the property, his liability is that of an ordinary bailee for hire;<sup>5</sup> and on such a footing is he accountable to his employer before he has sold it. Should the auctioneer wrongfully part with the chattels or dispose of them, the owner can sue him for the conversion, unless he has waived the wrong by his own conduct.<sup>6</sup> It is the auctioneer's duty to account promptly for the sale proceeds; and for such proceeds he is accountable on the usual footing of agents and trustees.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mazoue v. Caze, 18 La. Ann. 31.

<sup>2</sup> Boinest v. Leigneux, 2 Rich. 464; Nelson v. Aldridge, 2 Stark. 435.

<sup>3</sup> Hutchinson v. Gordon, 2 Har- ring. 179.

<sup>4</sup> Stevens v. Lee, 2 W. R. 16. As the auctioneer may sue the buyer personally, so it would appear that the buyer may correlatively sue the auctioneer, even where the seller's name was disclosed. Woolfe v. Horne, 2 Q. B. D. 355, 360; Murray v. Mann, 2 Ex. 538; Hardingham v. Allen, 5 C. B. 793.

<sup>5</sup> Maltby v. Christie, 1 Esp. 340; Davis v. Garrett, 6 Bing. 716.

<sup>6</sup> Earl of Ferrers v. Robins, 2 C. M. & R. 152; McVeigh v. Bank, 26 Gratt. 188; Bateman, 232.

<sup>7</sup> Bateman, 233. For the owner's right to follow the proceeds of the sale, see Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562; 1 Atk. 165; United States v. State Bank, 96 U. S. 30; 15 Hun, 453; Le Breton v. Peirce, 12 Allen, 8. An auctioneer's bond comprehends the duty of accounting for and paying over the proceeds of the sale. Tripp v. Barton, 13 R. I. 130.

INDEX.

INDEX.

---

A.

	SECTION
ABANDONED PROPERTY . . . . .	8, 11
See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
ACCEPTANCE,
by donee under a gift inter vivos . . . . .	90
by donee under a gift causâ mortis . . . . .	183
See GIFTS.
of proposals to constitute a bargain . . . . .	228
upon part delivery by seller, how inferable . . . . .	308
in sales "on trial," or "approval;" "sale or return," etc. . . . .	310-312
where option is given to buyer . . . . .	313
as a waiver of warranty . . . . .	327
in sales, buyer's duty . . . . .	402
See SALES.
of part under Statute of Frauds . . . . .	459, 466
See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.
ACCESSION . . . . .	30
See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
ACQUISITION. See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
AGENCY,
divestment of true owner's title through . . . . .	25
gift inter vivos through an agent . . . . .	65, 85, 86
to an agent . . . . .	70, 91
gift causâ mortis through an agent . . . . .	177, 180
to an agent . . . . .	180, 184
in correspondence, agency in a bargain . . . . .	204, 224-227
to superintend a chattel's manufacture . . . . .	267
for custody under rule of conditional transfer . . . . .	295
case of "sale or return;" del credere agent . . . . .	313
agent's construction of condition in doubt . . . . .	315
broker's rights, etc., as to condition or warranty . . . . .	315, 318, 325, 362
agent's authority to warrant what he sells . . . . .	324, 325 delivery by or through agents . . . . .	395-397 payment by or through agent, broker, etc.; reimbursement of expense . . . . .	423-427
under Statute of Frauds . . . . .	468, 475, 500-508

AGENCY—continued,

- exercise of right of stoppage in transitu as to carrier, etc. 560, 564
- fraud and illegality in sale by or through agents . . . 607, 610
- See AUCTION; BAILMENT.

ANIMALS,

- wild, title to . . . . . 17
- See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
- title to their increase . . . . . 30
- sale of: horses, etc. . . . . 332, 339-341
- See WARRANTY.

ASSIGNMENT,

- under gifts inter vivos . . . . . 72 et seq.
- under gifts causâ mortis. . . . . 147, 171
- See GIFTS.

ATTACHING OFFICER . . . . . 50

AUCTION,

- sales at, included under Statute of Frauds . . . . . 444
- where successive lots are sold, rule as to entirety . . . 446, 457
- public or auction sales in general* . . . . . 203, 372, 627
- leading topics to be considered . . . . . 628
- auctioneer, his rights and duties . . . . . 629
- how far an agent . . . . . 629
- personal responsibility, compensation, indemnity,
etc. . . . . 423-425, 630, 631
- preliminaries of auction sale . . . . . 632
- terms and conditions, advertisement, etc. . . . . 632, 633
- method of conducting sale. . . . . 634
- of taking bids, closing upon highest bid . . . . . 635
- of memorandum and part payment under Statute of Frauds . . . . . 505, 506, 635
- of auctioneer's warranty . . . . . 324, 636
- right to enter premises; place of sale, etc. . . . . 637
- fraud in the biddings; general principles . . . . . 638
- on the part of bidders; stifling competition . . . . . 639
- on the part of seller or auctioneer; puffing, etc. . . 640-642
- in limiting bids; sales with or without reserve . . . 641
- mock auctions, etc. . . . . 642
- mistake as to terms . . . . . 598, 632
- enforcement of the auction contract . . . . . 643
- settlement with purchaser; deposit-money, etc. . . . 644
- risks of title after the sale. . . . . 644
- remedies upon buyer's default, etc. . . . . 645
- buyer's duty; auctioneer's final adjustment with seller, responsibility, etc. . . . . 646

AVOIDANCE. See FRAUD; RESCISSION OF SALE.

B.

SECTION

BAILMENT,

of things lost or stolen . . . . .	21
as to the increase of animals, and income of capital . . . . .	29
doctrines of accession and confusion applied . . . . .	38, 42
under a gift inter vivos . . . . .	70, 82, 85, 86
under a gift causâ mortis . . . . .	161, 180, 184
under a sale on condition . . . . .	295
warranty of title in bailee's sale . . . . .	372
under Statute of Frauds . . . . .	472, 473, 475
as to lien remedies . . . . .	540-544
mistake as to loan, sale, or gift . . . . .	595

BANK DEPOSIT,

gift of . . . . .	78, 80, 90, 147, 172, 173
-------------------	---------------------------

See GIFTS.

BANK-NOTES . . . . .	20, 147, 162
----------------------	--------------

BARGAIN . . . . .	204, 222, 234
-------------------	---------------

See SALES.

BARTER,

law of . . . . .	201, 293, 615
------------------	---------------

See EXCHANGE; SALES.

BILL OF LADING . . . . .	273-275, 301, 392, 539, 556, 567
--------------------------	----------------------------------

See DELIVERY; SELLER'S REMEDIES.

BILL OF SALE . . . . .	264, 336, 392, 539, 614, 616
------------------------	------------------------------

See SALES.

BILLS AND NOTES. See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

BONDS, COUPON . . . . .	74, 167
-------------------------	---------

See NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

BROKER. See AGENCY; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF . . . . .	315, 423, 507
--	---------------

BURGLAR'S TOOLS,

when not protected as property . . . . .	24
--	----

BUYER'S REMEDIES,

instances in which the buyer may invoke remedies . . . . .	570
where the seller fails altogether to deliver . . . . .	571
personal action; rule of damages . . . . .	571, 572
where payment was in advance, sale by instalments . . . . .	573, 574
when demand is necessary . . . . .	575 specific performance; the choice of remedies . . . . .	576
rule as to suing in trover, etc., considered . . . . .	577
where there is delivery of unsuitable goods . . . . .	578 confusion of rules; buyer's right of rejection . . . . .	579
limit of right to reject; its legal effect . . . . .	580
buyer's right to keep goods and claim damages . . . . .	581 requirement of notice; matters of practice . . . . .	583, 584

BUYER'S REMEDIES—continued,

damages for breach as to quality . . . . .	585, 586
under instalment contract; waiver of breach; miscellaneous . . . . .	587, 588
rule for breach of warranty of title . . . . .	589
remedies for failure in quantity, etc. . . . .	590
where delivery is unreasonably late . . . . .	591
buyer's option of remedies in such case . . . . .	591
action not always based on contract of sale . . . . .	592

See RESCISSION OF SALE.

C.

CARRIER. See AGENCY; BAILMENT; DELIVERY.

CASH. See PAYMENT.

CAVEAT EMPTOR . . . . . 322, 343, 345, 381, 603, 611

See SALES.

CHECK,

title by gift inter vivos . . . . .	73, 76
gift of one's own check . . . . .	77, 86 n.
gift causâ mortis of . . . . .	147, 168
gift causâ mortis of one's own . . . . .	148-151
payment by, in a sale . . . . .	419, 420

CHOSSES IN ACTION,

in gifts . . . . .	72, 115, 147, 174
--------------------	-------------------

See GIFTS.

in sales . . . . .	204, 318
--------------------	----------

See SALES.

C. O. D. . . . . 396, 397

COMMON OWNERS . . . . . 46

See CONFUSION.

CONDITIONS,

under a gift . . . . .	126-134, 195, 196
------------------------	-------------------

See GIFTS.

precedent to transfer of property . . . . .	276
under general law of contracts . . . . .	277
mutual intent; stipulations dependent and independent . . . . .	277, 278 precedence or concurrence of conditions; parties must perform in turn . . . . .	279-281
how far a stipulation may affect the whole consideration . . . . .	280
exceptions of waiver and impossibility . . . . .	282-284
under the law of sales . . . . .	285
precedent or concurrent; parties must perform in turn . . . . .	285
where a third party must first perform . . . . .	286

CONDITIONS—continued,

exceptions of waiver and impossibility . . . . .	287, 288
stipulations as to time of performance; how far conditional . . . . .	289
stipulations as to place of performance; how far conditional . . . . .	290
sales upon notice; rule of notice . . . . .	291, 291 a
where property transfer is conditioned upon paying or securing price. . . . .	292 obligation to deliver and obligation to pay as precedent or concurrent conditions . . . . .	293
no title in buyer notwithstanding delivery, until cash is paid . . . . .	294, 295
until price is adjusted; effect of check, etc. . . . .	296 rule applied to partial adjustment of price; sale on installment plan . . . . .	297 delivery carrying possession without property; how seller resumes possession . . . . .	298
delivery so given debars buyer's creditors . . . . .	299
rule as concerns buyer's sub-purchasers . . . . .	300
qualifications of rule as to bonâ fide purchasers for value; negotiable instruments, etc. . . . .	301 who is a bonâ fide purchaser in this connection . . . . .	302 interests of buyer and seller before breach . . . . .	302 a conclusion as to sales with condition of no property transfer until payment . . . . .	303
exceptions growing out of waiver or impossibility . . . . .	304
seller, how estopped by his own acts from claiming goods as his own . . . . .	305
how buyer should pay or adjust payment, perform condition and gain title . . . . .	306
evidence in sales for cash, on delivery, or upon credit . . . . .	307
rule as to partial delivery or partial payment . . . . .	308
property may pass defeasible by condition subsequent . . . . .	309
sales "on trial" or "on approval;" bargain of "sale or return" . . . . .	233, 310-312
conditional character of such sales . . . . .	310-312
sale to be satisfactory, etc. . . . .	313
other sales with option given to buyer . . . . .	313
sales "to arrive," etc. . . . .	314
miscellaneous conditions; rule of construction in doubtful cases . . . . .	315
"condition precedent" distinguished from "warranty" . . . . .	316, 344, 349
sale by sample; its implied condition . . . . .	263, 316, 317
sale by description, its implied condition . . . . .	317
sale of incorporeal securities; condition of genuineness . . . . .	318
sale of specific corporeal chattel; how far conditional . . . . .	319

CONDITIONS— continued ,
of sale transfer under Statute of Frauds . . . . .	463, 464
See AUCTION; BUYER'S REMEDIES; WARRANTY.
CONFUSION . . . . .	42
See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
CONSIDERATION . . . . .	56, 139, 492, 493
See GIFTS; PRICE; SALES.
CONTRACT . . . . .	56, 139, 141, 202, 237
See GIFTS; SALES.
COPYRIGHT . . . . .	28
COUNTERFEIT MONEY,
whether protected as property . . . . .	24
CREDIT. See PAYMENT.
CREDITOR. See FRAUD.
who forgives debt by way of gift . . . . .	97, 186
as affected by a sale . . . . .	270, 395
CROP,
sale of unsevered . . . . .	448-452

D.

DAMAGES. See BUYER'S REMEDIES; SELLER'S REMEDIES.
DEATH,
in gifts causâ mortis . . . . .	152-157, 189, 190
See GIFTS.
DEBT,
forgiven by way of gift . . . . .	97, 186
See PAYMENT.
DEED OF GIFT. . . . .	88, 179
DELIVERY,
in gifts inter vivos . . . . .	67 et seq.
in gifts causâ mortis . . . . .	159 et seq.
See GIFTS.
in sales, effect of part delivery . . . . .	232 as determining the question of property transfer and mutual assent . . . . .	245, 254, 264
effect of delayed delivery . . . . .	254 time or place as a condition; delivery before price is paid,
etc. . . . .	289, 290, 292-309
See CONDITIONS.
rule of delivery by or through a carrier, etc. . . . .	264, 272, 396-398
how affected by seller's reservation of jus disponendi . . . . .	272-275
bill of lading reserving property to seller or not . . . . .	273, 274, 301
where bill of lading is accompanied by bill of exchange . . . . .	274, 392

SECTION

DELIVERY — continued,

- in sales "on trial" or approval; "sale or return," etc. . . . . 233-310
- where option is given to buyer . . . . . 313
- general principles under law of sales . . . . . 382-401
- applied to warehousemen . . . . . 397

See SALES.

- of part under the Statute of Frauds . . . . . 459, 471

DERELICT . . . . . 8

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

DOCUMENTS OF TITLE . . . 392, 393, 539, 556, 567, 568, 614, 616

See SELLER'S REMEDIES.

DONATIO. See GIFTS.

E.

EARNEST . . . . . 476

See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

ELEVATORS, GRAIN . . . . . 46

ERROR. See RESCISSION OF SALE.

ESTOPPEL,

- in law of sales . . . . . 305, 392, 537-544

See SELLER'S REMEDIES.

ESTRAYS . . . . . 17

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

EXCHANGE,

- rule of conditions; "cross-sales" . . . . . 201, 293
- fraud as affecting the transaction . . . . . 615

F.

FACTORS. See AGENCY; STATUTE.

FINDER . . . . . 14, 15

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

FIXTURES . . . . . 453

FRAUD,

- under ordinary gift upon donor or donee by other party . . . 60, 100, 106
- upon creditors, purchasers, etc., under a gift . . . 112-123, 133
- under gift causâ mortis . . . . . 143, 192-194
- in sale as to essentials . . . . . 217, 219, 602 et seq.
- upon seller's creditors, where he keeps possession . . . 270, 616
- delivery conditional upon price payment no fraud . . . 299, 306
- in sales by sample . . . . . 364
- in auction sales . . . . . 638-642

See RESCISSION OF SALE.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF,

common law of sales is modified by this legislation . . . .	428
Statute of Frauds in general ; its history, etc.; language of 17th section . . . . .	429, 430 its policy in partial restriction; writing only sub modo essential	430
legal consequences of a non-compliance with statute . . . .	431 conflicting theories stated; contract properly exists, but is not enforceable . . . . .	432
how such contract becomes good by subsequent compliance .	433 statute compliance after goods have ceased to exist . . . .	433 sale contract if executed stands . . . . .	433 a conflict of laws; note given in consideration of damages, etc. . . . .	434, 435
section 17 of the statute, its leading divisions . . . . .	436
what contracts are embraced . . . . .	437
“contracts for the sale of” as to executory contracts, etc.	438-443
English and American decisions stated; Lord Tenterden’s Act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 14 . . . . .	439-443
summary of doctrines as to the contracts embraced . . . .	443
auction sales included; as to chattel mortgages, loans, and miscellaneous contracts . . . . .	444, 445
entirety of a contract; sale of lots or parcels . . . . .	446
“goods, wares, and merchandises;” personal property only included . . . . .	447
unsevered crops and products of the soil considered; 4th and 17th sections compared . . . . .	448-452
fructus industriales and fructus naturales ; general summary	450-452
as to contracts for the sale of fixtures, buildings, etc. . . .	453
whether section 17 applies to incorporeal chattels . . . .	454
“price” or “value;” the standard prescribed . . . . .	455 determination of such standard; principle of entirety in contracts . . . . .	456, 457 excessive price vitiates other stipulations in entire contract .	457
oral compliance under section 17 . . . . .	458
oral compliance by buyer’s part acceptance and actual receipt . .	459
legislative rule; as to seller; delivery . . . . .	459, 460
buyer’s acceptance and actual receipt distinguished . . . .	460 entirety rule applied; tests, etc. . . . .	461, 462
acceptance and receipt by one of joint purchasers . . . .	462 n.
as to transfer of seller’s property right; sales on condition, etc. . . . .	463, 464
statute satisfied by part acceptance and receipt, whether contemporaneous with sale or not . . . . .	465
effect of part acceptance and receipt, etc. . . . .	466
buyer’s part acceptance in general; proof of intention;

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF — continued,

right to inspect; specific and unascertained goods distinguished. . . . .	466, 467
under sample sales . . . . .	467 a carrier or other agent to receive may not be agent to accept	468
acceptance how evinced; mainly a question of fact . . . . .	469, 470 actual part receipt in general. . . . .	471
where goods are in buyer's custody . . . . .	472
in third person's custody . . . . .	473
in seller's custody . . . . .	474 constructive delivery and receipt by agents and carriers;
transit, etc. . . . .	475
oral compliance by giving earnest or part payment . . . . .	476
general doctrine . . . . .	476-479
where both discharge of debt and payment of price are contemplated. . . . .	478
transfer of property right not essential . . . . .	479
written compliance by signed note or memorandum . . . . .	480
compliance need not be by enforcing party; written contracts distinguished . . . . .	481, 482
rules of evidence apply; classification of subject . . . . .	483, 484
as to the written note or memorandum . . . . .	485
letter, acknowledgment, telegram, two or more writings	485, 486 writings and parol evidence, how far consistent . . . . .	487 to whom memorandum is addressed; intention to be bound not essential . . . . .	488
writings not contemporaneous; evidence to support them, etc.	489
parol evidence in such cases . . . . .	489 a
as to what such writings should contain . . . . .	490 identity of parties as buyer and seller to appear . . . . .	491
subject-matter and essential terms should be shown . . . . .	492, 493
"price" distinct from "consideration;" other essentials	492, 493
substance, and not form, regarded; competency of evidence	493 writing which repudiates, whether a memorandum . . . . .	494
where the original bargain has been modified . . . . .	495, 496
as to how and by whom the writing should be signed . . . . .	497
method of signing; writing, printing, stamping, etc. . . . .	497, 498
signature on one of several papers; by party to be charged . . . . .	498 as to delivery of the note or memorandum; unauthorized memoranda, etc. . . . .	499
as to compliance by means of agents . . . . .	500 authority how conferred; whether seller's agent may bind buyer . . . . .	501
evidence requisite; telegraph clerks, etc. . . . .	502, 503
agent cannot be the charging party himself . . . . .	504

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF — continued,

auctioneer's authority to make binding memorandum	505, 506, 635
broker's authority to make memorandum . . . . .	505, 507, 508
"bought and sold notes," and their efficacy . . . . .	507
broker contracting without a principal . . . . .	508
sales sometimes affected by 4th section of statute . . . . .	509, 510
collateral undertaking . . . . .	509
agreement not to be performed within a year . . . . .	510

FUTURES,

sale of . . . . .	621
-------------------	-----

G.

GAMBLING TOOLS,

not protected as property . . . . .	24
-------------------------------------	----

GIFTS,

I. GIFTS IN GENERAL . . . . .	54
definition; origin and history of such transfers . . . . .	54, 55 absence of consideration as an element . . . . .	56
are to be classed with contracts as founded in mutual under- taking . . . . .	57
mental capacity of donor and donee considered . . . . .	58, 59
freedom of will and good faith on both sides requisite. . . . .	60
improvident not favored . . . . .	60 a on immoral or illegal consideration . . . . .	61 should be certain, and to a certain party . . . . .	62
classification as to personal property; gifts inter vivos and gifts causâ mortis ; distinctions . . . . .	63
II. GIFTS INTER VIVOS . . . . .	64
definition and essentials . . . . .	64
unexecuted gift; whether promise to give is enforceable . . . . .	65
such promises to be distinguished from contracts upon con- sideration . . . . .	66
gifts inter vivos; how executed . . . . .	67
delivery with suitable intention requisite on donor's part . . . . .	67
delivery, actual or constructive; according to subject-matter . . . . .	67
words of gift alone do not suffice . . . . .	68
corporeal chattels pass by manual delivery . . . . .	69
rule where donee is custodian, bailee, etc. . . . .	70
whether delivery of receptacle carries its contents . . . . .	71
incorporeal chattels , how delivered . . . . .	72
where delivery is fully such as the species admits of . . . . .	72
the same subject; earlier application of the rule . . . . .	73
gift of sealed instrument . . . . .	74
symbolical delivery supported at this day on equitable grounds . . . . .	76

GIFTS—continued,

gift of life insurance policy . . . . .	76 n.
gift of one's own check, promissory note, etc., not complete . . . . .	77
gift of savings-bank books; equitable assignment . . . . .	78
imperfect delivery supported as declaration of trust . . . . .	79
equitable assignment and declaration of trust doctrines compared . . . . .	80
safer opinion restrains the operation of such doctrines . . . . .	81
bailment of incorporeal property is not gift . . . . .	82
delivery to donee through some third party . . . . .	83
where such third party takes as trustee for donee . . . . .	83
where custodian of chattel is to deliver to donee . . . . .	85
revocation of custodian's authority; death of donor pending delivery . . . . .	86
declaration of trust with co-operation of third person . . . . .	87
delivery by instrument in writing . . . . .	88 deed of gift, and its effect . . . . .	88
other instruments in writing, and their effect . . . . .	89
statute formalities, etc. . . . .	89
acceptance the requisite act on the donee's part . . . . .	90
acceptance of a beneficial gift, how far presumable . . . . .	90
acts consistent or inconsistent with acceptance . . . . .	91
where there is an equitable assignment or declaration of trust . . . . .	92
proof needed to establish an executed gift . . . . .	93
actual intention to be gathered from words, acts, and mutual conduct . . . . .	93 circumstances favorable to sustaining transfer as a gift . . . . .	94 circumstances unfavorable to sustaining transfer as a gift . . . . .	95
where a deed of gift is made . . . . .	96
evidence of gift by forgiveness of a debt . . . . .	97
miscellaneous points . . . . .	98
one's mental reservation cannot defeat his gift . . . . .	99
gift not sustainable where possession is without the owner's consent . . . . .	100
summary of the law of execution of gifts inter vivos . . . . .	101
gifts inter vivos ; effect of execution . . . . .	102
its effect as concerns the parties themselves . . . . .	103 cannot be revoked or annulled by either party . . . . .	103
trustee under a gift should carry out the trust . . . . .	104
how far upheld upon the donor's death . . . . .	105
avoidance for mental incapacity or fraud . . . . .	106 parties may rescind or modify . . . . .	107
where parties make new contract as to the property . . . . .	108
whether parental gifts may be revoked . . . . .	109
civil law of revocation . . . . .	110

GIFTS—continued,

its effect as concerns third persons . . . . .	111
exceptions stated as to bonâ fide purchasers, etc. . . . .	112
the main exception concerns prejudiced creditors of donor . . .	113
fraudulent transfers affected by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, and analogous legislation . . . . .	113, 114
whether such legislation extends to incorporeal personalty . . .	115 fraud a question of fact; intent to hinder, delay, and defraud . . . . .	116, 117
fraud upon donor's antecedent creditors . . . . .	118
fraud upon donor's subsequent creditors . . . . .	119
general consideration of fraud upon creditors . . . . .	120
rule where donor has died insolvent . . . . .	121
rights of creditors lost by laches, etc. . . . .	122
concluding remarks upon fraudulent transfer . . . . .	123
donee takes the gift subject to all equities existing at time of transfer . . . . .	124
summary of law as to the effect of executed gifts . . . . .	125
qualified or conditional gifts inter vivos . . . . .	126
successive interests in expectancy by way of gift . . . . .	127
alternative gifts; conditions precedent and subsequent . . .	128
gift with resulting trust in donor's favor . . . . .	129
gift subject to donee's discretion . . . . .	130
how far the donor may give under reservations in his own favor . . . . .	131, 132
gift for one's own beneficial use cannot exclude one's creditors . .	133
how to determine whether gift is qualified or absolute . . .	134
III. GIFTS CAUSÂ MORTIS:
nature of such gifts; their definition . . . . .	135
their origin and history . . . . .	136
contrasted with ordinary gifts, legacies, etc. . . . .	137, 138 distinguished from a contract or transfer upon consideration . .	139
general division of subject . . . . .	140
capacity of parties to the gift . . . . .	141
as to testamentary or contract capacity . . . . .	141, 142
undue influence; marital and parental relations . . . . .	143
what property may be given causâ mortis . . . . .	144
as to gifts of one's whole property; civil and common law . . .	144-146
such gifts confined to personal property; corporeal kinds included . . . . .	147
incorporeal species may be given causâ mortis . . . . .	147
but not donor's own note, bill, etc. . . . .	148-150
unless bill, draft, etc., is accepted by drawee . . . . .	151
expectation of death . . . . .	152
civil and common law doctrines discussed . . . . .	152-155

GIFTS — continued,

“last illness,” “peril of death,” “expectation of death,” proofs, etc. . . . .	152-156
conclusion from modern authorities . . . . .	157
how gifts causâ mortis are executed . . . . .	158 execution on donor's part requires delivery . . . . .	159 element of delivery associates gifts causâ mortis with other gifts . . . . .	160
mere promise to give is ineffectual . . . . .	161
of corporeal chattels , donor's delivery . . . . .	162
symbolical delivery; receptacle and its contents . . . . .	162, 163 instances of insufficient delivery . . . . .	164
intention and the act must coexist . . . . .	165
of incorporeal chattels , donor's delivery . . . . .	166
modern quite different from ancient rule; rule changing con- stantly . . . . .	166
gift of bonds and mortgages . . . . .	167
gift of bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments . . . . .	168 gift of insurance policy . . . . .	169
gift of stock . . . . .	170
indorsement or assignment, expressive of intent . . . . .	171
gift of savings-bank deposit . . . . .	172, 173
gift of due-bill, receipt, etc.; of receptacle and contents . . . . .	174, 175
to third person for donee, donor's delivery . . . . .	176, 177
promise of delivery by residuary legatee; peculiar instances . . . . .	178
by instrument in writing, deed of gift, etc., donor's delivery . . . . .	179
whether formal delivery can be dispensed with . . . . .	180
case where donee or trustee is already in possession . . . . .	180
how far chancery aids informal delivery . . . . .	181
part delivery where the gift was entire . . . . .	182
execution on donee's part , what is requisite; acceptance, posses- sion, etc. . . . .	183
proof of execution to establish such gifts . . . . .	184
burden on donee; donor's declarations, etc. . . . .	184
how issue is determined in practice . . . . .	185
evidence of such gift by forgiveness of debt . . . . .	186
effect of executing gift as concerns the parties themselves; rev- ocability . . . . .	187, 188
revocation by donor's recovery from peril . . . . .	189
by donee's death before donor . . . . .	190
by donor who repents the gift; effect of will, etc. . . . .	191
whether posthumous birth causes revocation . . . . .	192
revocation for mental incapacity, fraud, force, etc. . . . .	192
controversies between donee and donor's representatives . . . . .	193
effect of executing gift as to third parties . . . . .	194

GIFTS — continued,

claims of creditors not to be defeated; practice . . . . .	194
qualified or conditional gifts causâ mortis . . . . .	194
trusts or conditions thus coupled must be contemporaneous, certain, etc. . . . .	196
general policy of gifts causâ mortis . . . . .	197
legislative restraints desirable . . . . .	198
mistake as to loan, sale, or gift . . . . .	595
GUARANTY. See WARRANTY . . . . .	338

H.

HUSBAND AND WIFE,

gifts between . . . . .	114, 143, 151 n., 178
-------------------------	-----------------------

I.

ILLEGALITY,

in sales . . . . .	202, 617-625
--------------------	--------------

See RESCISSION OF SALE.

INCOME,

title to . . . . .	30
--------------------	----

INDORSEMENT,

in making a gift inter vivos . . . . .	72 et seq.
in making a gift causâ mortis . . . . .	171

See GIFTS.

INFANTS,

in gifts . . . . .	58, 59, 90, 143, 192
--------------------	----------------------

INSTALMENT,

sales upon . . . . .	267, 297, 308, 390
----------------------	--------------------

INSURANCE POLICY,

gift of . . . . .	76 n., 169
-------------------	------------

J.

JUS DISPONENDI,

reservation of, by seller . . . . .	271 et seq.
-------------------------------------	--------------------

See SALES.

L.

LARCENY. See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

LEASE,

gift of . . . . .	81 n.
-------------------	-------

LEGACY,

contrasted with gift causâ mortis . . . . .	137, 138, 141, 194
--	--------------------

SECTION

LEGATEE,
gift causâ mortis through . . . . .	178
LIEN,
in general under law of sales . . . . .	383, 420, 424 530-557
See SELLER'S REMEDIES.
in conditional acceptance under Statute of Frauds . . . . .	463, 464 LIQUOR,
sales of . . . . .	624, 625
LOST CHATTELS . . . . .	14-17
See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

M.

MAIL, BARGAIN BY. . . . .	224, 225
See SALES.
MARKET-OVERT . . . . .	19
See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.
MEMORANDUM . . . . .	485
See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.
MENTAL CAPACITY.
requisite in gifts generally . . . . .	58, 59, 106
rule in gifts causâ mortis . . . . .	141, 142
MISTAKE . . . . .	5
See AUCTION; RESCISSION OF SALE.
MIXTURE. See CONFUSION.
MONEY . . . . .	20, 24, 67, 159
See PAYMENT.
MORTGAGE,
rule of accession applied . . . . .	39
gift of, causâ mortis . . . . .	167
sale compared with . . . . .	210
title whether warranted in sale under . . . . .	372
whether Statute of Frauds applies . . . . .	445
MUTUUM . . . . .	38

N.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS,
title to, by original acquisition; lost, stolen, etc. . . . .	16, 20, 21
title to, by gift inter vivos . . . . .	73, 76, 80 gift of one's own note, etc. . . . .	77, 86
gift causâ mortis of . . . . .	147
gift of one's own note, etc., causâ mortis . . . . .	148-151
title to, by sale . . . . .	301, 318, 454, 595, 605

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—continued,

payment by, in sales . . . . .	419-421, 435
NOTICE . . . . .	291

See CONDITIONS; SALES.

O.

OCCUPANCY. See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

ORIGINAL ACQUISITION,

includes occupancy, and title to products . . . . .	5
occupancy in the primitive sense; foundation of primitive title . . . . .	6, 7
occupancy in the modern sense . . . . .	8
chattels abandoned or derelict . . . . .	8
waifs; to whom they belong . . . . .	9
treasure-trove and its ownership . . . . .	10
wrecks, ancient and modern doctrines as to title . . . . .	11-13
lost chattels, and to whom they belong . . . . .	14-16
rule as to lost or destroyed negotiable instruments . . . . .	16
estrays and wild animals, their ownership . . . . .	17
stolen chattels, rights of ownership . . . . .	18
bonâ fide holder's title to lost or stolen chattels . . . . .	19
where chattel was sold in market-overt . . . . .	19
where chattel is of a negotiable character . . . . .	20, 21
when a finder may be treated as a thief; rule of larceny . . . . .	22
miscellaneous instances of chattels without a known owner . . . . .	23
certain chattels not recognized as property . . . . .	24
true owner's title, how divested; general rule . . . . .	25
summary of the modern doctrine of occupancy . . . . .	26
title to products in general . . . . .	27
title to general products; brain products; patents and copy- rights . . . . .	28
title to increase of animals; income of capital, profits, etc. . . . .	29
accession considered as a rule of title . . . . .	30
definition of accession; its elements . . . . .	30
old distinction as to creating some new species or not . . . . .	31
closeness with which component parts are thus united . . . . .	32
element of comparative values . . . . .	33
test of new species or not, whether suitable . . . . .	34
accession a rule of practical convenience . . . . .	35
taker's conduct as affecting title in such cases . . . . .	36
doctrine summed up as to chattel accession without mutual assent . . . . .	37
accession of chattels by agreement of parties; use of mate- rials to repair, manufacture, etc.; bailment or sale . . . . .	38

ORIGINAL ACQUISITION — continued,

accession of one person's chattels to another's real estate; intentional or unintentional annexation or severance . . .	39, 40
accession applied to pledge or chattel mortgage . . . . .	39
confusion considered as a rule of title . . . . .	42 defined and distinguished from accession . . . . .	42
application of the rule of confusion . . . . .	43
leading tests in confusion to be examined . . . . .	44
rule where confusion was by mutual consent . . . . .	45
application of the rule to grain elevators . . . . .	46
rule where confusion was by one's wilful misconduct . . . .	47
the same subject; mingling funds in breach of trust . . . .	48
rule where confusion was by unintentional error . . . . .	49
rule where confusion is caused by a stranger; attaching officer, etc. . . . .	50
rule where confusion is caused by inevitable accident, vis major , etc. . . . .	51
Roman law of confusion . . . . .	52
points of similarity and of difference between accession and confusion . . . . .	53

OWNERSHIP. See TITLE.

P.

PARENTAL GIFTS . . . . . 109, 114, 127, 129, 143

PATENT RIGHTS . . . . . 28, 576

PAYMENT,

presumptions as between cash and credit sales . . . . . 244

by instalments as a chattel is made . . . . . 267, 268

where transfer of title is conditioned upon payment . . . . . 292-309

See CONDITIONS.

partial payment and partial delivery . . . . . 297, 308

in sales, buyer's duty discussed . . . . . 411-427

See SALES.

part, under Statute of Frauds . . . . . 476-479

PENAL ACTS. See ILLEGALITY. . . . . 624

PERSONAL PROPERTY,

summary of doctrines in the preceding volume . . . . . 1

See TITLE.

PLEDGE. See BAILMENT.

POSTHUMOUS BIRTH . . . . . 192

See GIFTS.

PRICE . . . . . 205, 211, 292-308, 492, 493

See SALES.

PRODUCTS. See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

PROFITS. See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION. . . . . 29

PROPERTY,

- transfer of, in sales . . . . . 235 et seq., 292 et seq.
     See CONDITIONS; SALES.
 under Statute of Frauds . . . . . 463, 479

Q.

- QUITCLAIM . . . . . 374
     See SALES; WARRANTY.

R.

REAL PROPERTY. See TITLE.

RECEIPT. See DELIVERY; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

REPLEVIN. See SELLER'S REMEDIES.

RE-SALE,

- seller's remedies . . . . . 545-551
 mutual . . . . . 626

RESCISSION OF SALE,

- special causes of avoidance or rescission . . . . . 593

I. ERROR OR MISTAKE:

- should be substantial, etc.; instances cited . . . 219, 594, 595, 597
 as to quality, etc., not substantial . . . . . 595 as to the party dealt with . . . . . 596
 rules of construction; mutual and one-sided mistakes . . . 598, 599 effect upon sales executed or not executed . . . . . 600 restitution required; entire contracts, etc. . . . . 601 duty of one who receives goods by mistake . . . . . 601

II. FRAUD:

- in sale contracts generally . . . . . 370, 602
of the seller on the buyer . . . . . 352, 603
     caveat emptor does not countenance fraud . . . . . 604 buyer must have been deceived; his duties . . . . . 605 may sue upon the fraud or for breach of warranty . . . . 606 scienter to be here shown; rule of damages . . . . . 606 rule where fraud is by seller's agent . . . . . 607 of the buyer on the seller . . . . . 608 how inferred; rule as to sub-buyers, etc. . . . . 608, 609
     where buyer is an impostor . . . . . 610
     caveat emptor where buyer conceals important information . 611 where one induces sale to another; Lord Tenterden's Act . 612
     seller's election of remedies; matters of practice . . . . 613 extortion of a bill of sale; avoidance personal to the seller . 614 in a case of exchange . . . . . 615

RESCISSION OF SALE — continued,

- of both buyer and seller upon some third party* . . . . . 616 general doctrine; bearing of legislation . . . . . 616 and n.

III. ILLEGALITY:

- general rule of avoidance, with its qualifications . . . . . 617 where some promises are illegal, and others legal . . . . . 618 greater strictness in case of palpable moral offence . . . . . 619 principal cannot profit by agent's illegal contract . . . . . 620 as to sales illegal at common law; immoral sales, gambling sales, etc. . . . . 621 sales of "futures," etc. . . . . 621 sales against public policy; sale of offices, etc. . . . . 622 sale of lawsuits, etc. . . . . 622 sales in restraint of trade . . . . . 623 as to sales made illegal by legislation; penal acts, usury, etc. 624 sales against revenue acts, liquor acts, Sunday laws,
   etc. . . . . 624, 625

IV. MUTUAL RESCISSION:

- parties may rescind at pleasure, etc. . . . . 626

REVOCATION,

- of gift inter vivos* . . . . . 103-110
of gift causâ mortis . . . . . 189-193

See GIFTS.

REWARD,

- of finder* . . . . . 15

S.

SALES,

- distinguished from bailment . . . . . 38

I. SALES IN GENERAL:

- preliminary observations*; definitions . . . . . 199, 200 barter or exchange . . . . . 201 classified; absolute or qualified, executed or executory, of things specific or not specific, legal or illegal, private or public . . . . . 202 involuntary or judicial sales . . . . . 203, 372
 the parties, — seller, buyer, agents, etc. . . . . 204 corporeal or incorporeal chattels, how sold . . . . . 204 the leading essentials of a sale . . . . . 205 a thing to be sold, essential . . . . . 206 as to chattels no longer existing . . . . . 206, 207 chattels not yet existing; transfer of potential rights . . . . 209, 210 a price essential; the application of a money value . . . . . 211 as to payment in commodities instead of money . . . . . 211, 212

SALES — continued,

price should be fixed or ascertainable . . . . .	213
where something remains for ascertaining price, sale is not complete . . . . .	214
price sometimes left to third party's adjustment . . . . .	215
where implied instead of expressed . . . . .	216 should be bonâ fide ; need not be adequate . . . . .	217 mutual assent to transfer of the thing at the price . . . . .	218
fraud, force, or error in essentials; genuine intention . . . . .	219
mutuality as to the thing . . . . .	219
mutuality as to the price . . . . .	220
mutual assent in general, how expressed . . . . .	221
negotiation of bargain, proposals, etc. . . . .	222, 223
how carried on; concluded by mail correspondence . . . . .	224, 225
common and civil law doctrines compared . . . . .	226
bargains by messages other than through mail; telegrams, etc. . . . .	227
limitations as to place and time of accepting proposal . . . . .	228
where proposer leaves time open for assent . . . . .	229, 230
death or refusal revokes an offer . . . . .	231
how assent may be inferred . . . . .	232 order for goods . . . . .	232 a sales may be conditional or qualified; right to repurchase, etc. . . . .	233
writings constituting a bargain construed; previous oral stipulations merged . . . . .	234
II. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY RIGHT:
transfer of property right in a sale; mutual intention controls . . . . .	235, 236
executory and executed sale contracts, etc.; civil and common law . . . . .	237, 238
effect of contract of sale in transferring property right to be considered . . . . .	239
property transfer in sale of specific chattels ; specific chattels defined . . . . .	240
where nothing remains to be done to chattel . . . . .	243 transfer of property presumed when bargain is closed . . . . .	243
shifting of this presumption; rule qualified where price is not paid . . . . .	244
qualification as to matter of delivery . . . . .	245 presumption applies with above qualifications . . . . .	246
where something remains to be done to chattel; presumption against immediate transfer . . . . .	247 rules of Judge Blackburn and other English judges; putting into a deliverable condition, weighing, measuring, etc. . . . .	248-255
delivery as a circumstance evincing mutual intent . . . . .	254
summary of doctrine; rules of Judge Blackburn restated . . . . .	255

SALES — continued,

- property right is but one element of title . . . . . 2, 3, 255 n.
property transfer in sale of chattels not specific . . . . . 256 goods must be separated, selected, etc., and subject-matter made specific . . . . . 256, 257
 but numerous exceptions are found; mutual intent regarded 258 instances where an article is made to order . . . . . 259 doctrine of subsequent appropriation; cases reviewed 260–262, 265 more than appropriation may be needful . . . . . 263 delivery as a circumstance in appropriation of specific chattels 264 application where chattels are made to order . . . . . 266–269 appropriation after a rejection . . . . . 268 a rule as to unfinished chattels, ship-building, etc. . . . 267, 268 property transfer for limited purposes; rule as to creditors,
   etc. . . . . 270
seller's reservation of jus disponendi . . . . . 271 application to carrier's delivery . . . . . 272 bill of lading; its effect restrained . . . . . 273, 274 where accompanied by bill of exchange or draft for price . . 274 limitations of the jus disponendi doctrine . . . . . 275 conditions in sales . . . . . 276 et seq.
   sales "on trial," "on approval," "subject to inspection,"
     "sale or return," sales "to arrive," sample sales, etc. 310 et seq.
     See CONDITIONS.
 warranty, express and implied, in sales . . . . . 320 et seq.
     See WARRANTY.

- III. TRANSFER OF POSSESSION, etc. . . . . 382 delivery in general; numerous meanings of the word . . . 383 seller's general duty of delivery in fulfilling bargain . . . 384 general rule as to place of delivery; mutual intent qualifies . 385 time of delivery; sundry expressions; month, day, hour,
   etc. . . . . 386, 387
 quantity to be delivered; no more nor less than contracted for 388 construction as to quantity; substantial not literal compliance 389 rule of partial delivery . . . . . 390 as to manner of delivery; general principles . . . . . 391
indicia of title; constructive delivery; bill of sale, etc. . 392, 393
 where buyer waives complete delivery . . . . . 394
 effect of delivery as concerns third parties . . . . . 395 delivery to buyer's agent is delivery to buyer; case of carrier, etc. . . . . 396
 delivery whether by means of seller's or buyer's agents . . 397 rule as to warehousemen and other agents . . . . . 397 miscellaneous points as to delivery, usage, etc. . . . . 398 where thing sold is in buyer's possession . . . . . 399

SALES—continued,

seller's responsibility as to chattel sold, but not delivered . . . . .	400
seller's duty measured by scope of contract, etc. . . . .	401
buyer's leading obligations . . . . .	402, 411
buyer's duty of acceptance . . . . .	402
acceptance in general; more than receipt; buyer's duty . . . . .	403-405
buyer's right to inspect before accepting . . . . .	406 acceptance inferred from delay, acts of ownership, etc. . . . .	407
duty of rejecting and returning goods, if unsatisfactory . . . . .	408
seller's waiver of strict legal requirements in such cases . . . . .	409
where delivery is for acceptance by instalments . . . . .	410
buyer's duty of payment . . . . .	411
several modes of payment stated . . . . .	411
payment of price in cash; ordinary rule . . . . .	412 time and manner of payment; paying by instalments . . . . .	413, 414
rules as to cash payment applied . . . . .	412
tender of cash; what suffices; doctrine stated; risks of de- livery, etc. . . . .	412-417
payment by present adjustment not in cash . . . . .	418
buyer's check, note, acceptance, etc., whether absolute or conditional payment . . . . .	419
case of further security, third party's obligation, commodity, etc. . . . .	420 effect of such third party's insolvency before delivery . . . . .	420
where adjustment is compound or optional, etc. . . . .	421
as to sales on credit; general principles . . . . .	422
payment through buyer's or seller's agents . . . . .	423
how made to seller's agent; agent's authority to adjust . . . . .	423, 425
lien of certain agents not discharged by payment to principal . . . . .	424
as to settling with broker, factor, etc., who sells for principals . . . . .	424
Roman law of payment and tender . . . . .	426
miscellaneous costs, expenses, etc., in sales . . . . .	427 law of sales affected by important legislation; Statute of Frauds . . . . .	428
See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.
remedies for breach under the law of sales . . . . .	511, 529, 552, 570
See BUYER'S REMEDIES; SELLER'S REMEDIES.
rescission or avoidance of sale for error, fraud, or illegality; mutual rescission . . . . .	593
See RESCISSION OF SALE.
public or auction sales . . . . .	203, 627
See AUCTION.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS:

lost or stolen chattel, sold in market-overt, etc. . . . .	19, 23
doctrines of accession and confusion applied . . . . .	38, 45

SAMPLE,

- sale by, what constitutes . . . . . 316, 317, 338, 350, 359-365
 buyer's right to examine under such sale . . . 362, 363, 406, 408 acceptance under Statute of Frauds . . . . . 462, 467 a

See CONDITIONS; WARRANTY.

SEAWEED . . . . . 13

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

SELLER'S REMEDIES,

- in general, for buyer's breach* . . . . . 511
by personal action where property has not passed . . . . . 511, 512 damages awarded; rule of measurement . . . . . 513, 514 ceasing to supply after contract is broken . . . . . 515 items thus reckoned; duty of re-sale . . . . . 516, 517 where buyer dies or becomes insolvent; sundry points . . . 518, 519 market value; exceptions to rule of measurement . . . 520, 521 choice of remedies given in New York, etc., practice . . . 522 rule under part delivery; as to liquidated damages . . . 523, 524
by personal action where property has passed . . . . . 525 seller sues as creditor, if possession be surrendered . . . 525 but rights under security remain; conditional surrender . . 526
 form of action for goods sold and delivered . . . . . 527 where property has passed but not possession . . . 528, 529 et seq.
by proceedings against the goods . . . . . 529
re-sale, lien, and stoppage in transitu to be considered . . . 529 unpaid seller's rights in goods after property has passed . . 530 nature of his lien right here conceded while he holds possession . . . . . 531
 as between unpaid seller and insolvent buyer himself . . . 533 custody of seller or his agent; advances to buyer . . . 533, 534 rule where sale was on credit . . . . . 535 as between unpaid seller and buyer's sub-vendee . . . . . 536 seller may by his conduct be estopped from asserting lien . . 537 lien otherwise good against sub-vendee . . . . . 538 bills of lading not here considered; bills of sale . . . . . 539 doctrine of estoppel; warehouseman or other bailee in possession estopped . . . . . 540-544
law of re-sale; general doctrine . . . . . 545 a technical breach of contract, but available . . . . . 547 where property has passed, but not possession, English rule . 547, 548 American doctrine of re-sale . . . . . 549 requirement of notice; replevin suits . . . . . 550, 551
seller's lien; its nature and extent . . . . . 530, 552, 553 how such lien may have been excluded or waived . . . . . 554 up to what period the lien extends . . . . . 555 effect of transferring documents of title . . . . . 556

SELLER'S REMEDIES—continued,

- how buyer by tender, etc., may terminate seller's lien . . . 557
- seller's right of stoppage in transitu* . . . . . 552, 558
- division of the subject . . . . . 559
- parties by and against whom the right is exercised . . . 560, 561
- seller, consignor, factor, etc., but not a stranger, may exercise it . . . . . 560
- party against whom, is buyer or quasi buyer who is insolvent 561
- the transit with its proper limits . . . . . 562
- carrier for transit; continuous purpose of transportation . . 562
- buyer may break transit, and intercept goods . . . . . 563
- carrier's acts at terminus; what acts exclude seller . . . 564
- method of exercising right of stoppage; notification to middleman, etc. . . . . 565
- effect of exercising right; parties stand as before, etc. . . 566
- seller's right paramount to that of buyer's attaching creditors 566
- right, how defeated by transfer of documents of title . . . 567
- must be bonâ fide transfer to third party for value . . . . 568
- other means of defeating or excluding this right . . . . . 569

See BUYER'S REMEDIES; RESCISSION OF SALE.

SHIP-BUILDING CONTRACTS . . . . . 267, 268

See SALES.

SPECIFIC THINGS , . . , . 240 et seq.

See SALES.

STATUTE,

- of 13 Eliz. c. 5, etc., as to gift in fraud of creditors, etc. 113, 114

See GIFTS.

- as to sale in fraud of creditors, etc. . . . . 616
- of frauds , . . . . 428 et seq.

See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

- Lord Tenterden's Act; 9 Geo. IV. c. 14 . . . . . 440, 612
- English Factors' Acts; bills of lading, etc. . . . . 556

STOCK,

- gift of . . . . . 72, 73
- gift causâ mortis of . . . . . 147, 170
- sale of . . . . . 318, 454, 576, 605, 607, 621

STOLEN CHATTELS . . . . . 9, 18–22

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU . . . . . 552, 558 et seq.

See SELLER'S REMEDIES.

SUNDAY LAWS . . . . . 625

T.

TELEGRAM . . . . . 227, 503

See SALES.

TENDER. See CONDITIONS; DELIVERY.

THIEF . . . . . 9, 18-22, 24

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

TIMBER . . . . . 448-452

TITLE,

to personal property in general . . . . . 2, 3, 225 n.

its essentials . . . . . 2, 3, 239 n.

how it may accrue; original and derivative acquisition . . . 4

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

certain chattels not recognized as property . . . . . 24

by gift . . . . . 54

See GIFTS.

by bargain and sale . . . . . 199

See SALES.

TREASURE-TROVE . . . . . 10

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

TRESPASS. See ACCESSION; CONFUSION.

TROVER . . . . . 577, 613

See BUYER'S REMEDIES.

TRUSTEE. See also AGENCY.

mingling of trust funds with one's own . . . . . 48

in a gift inter vivos . . . . . 83, 87, 92, 104

in a gift causâ mortis . . . . . 176, 177, 180, 196

See GIFTS.

U.

UNCLAIMED CHATTELS . . . . . 23

USURY. See ILLEGALITY . . . . . 624

W.

WAIFS . . . . . 9

See ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

WAREHOUSEMAN. See AGENCY; DELIVERY; DOCUMENTS OF TITLE.

WARRANTY,

in general; definitions, distinctions, etc. . . . . 316, 317, 320 et seq.

caveat emptor the rule; exceptions numerous . . . . . 322

under executory or executed sale . . . . . 323

how far an agent may warrant . . . . . 324, 325 effect of custom and usage . . . . . 326

when waiver may be inferred . . . . . 327

express and implied warranty to be considered . . . . . 328

as to express warranty . . . . . 329

WARRANTY — continued,

what representations have this force; limitations, etc.	329, 330
no special form of words necessary . . . . .	331
time of giving; prospective operation, etc. . . . .	332
buyer's opportunity for ascertaining the defect . . . . .	333
express warranty as to latent defect not presumed . . . . .	334
may be in writing . . . . .	335
effect of parol evidence in such case . . . . .	336
general interpretation; cases of doubtful intent . . . . .	337
express guaranty construed as warranty, and not as condition	338
in horse-sales, etc. . . . .	332, 339
of animal's "soundness," "kindness," etc. . . . .	339-341
as to animal's defects; when discoverable, etc. . . . .	341
as to implied warranty of quality . . . . .	342, 343
caveat emptor rule, its exceptions; sources of confusion	343-345
warranty and condition precedent not always distinguished	344 distinction between ascertained and unascertained chattels .	346 general rule as to specific ascertained chattels; opportunity to inspect, etc. . . . .	347
as to sale of meat or provisions . . . . .	348
rule as to unascertained chattels; sale by description .	349, 350
how far description amounts to condition precedent	316, 351, 352 buyer's right to refuse such chattels if not what were called for . . . . .	352
instances of descriptive language in such sales . . . . .	353, 357
implied warranty here of merchantable quality or fitness	354, 355
limitations of such warranty . . . . .	355, 356
implied warranty of quality deducible from circumstance that the seller's skill or expert knowledge must be relied upon . . . . .	358
as to sales by sample . . . . .	359, 360
that bulk shall correspond with sample . . . . .	360
"average sample" sales . . . . .	361
rule of final inspection by buyer in sample sales . . . . .	362, 363 bearing of fraud and artifice upon such sales; dealer or manufacturer . . . . .	364, 365
latent defects in article made, etc., to order . . . . .	364, 365
rule of warranty as to second-hand chattels . . . . .	366
whether implied where express warranty is given . . . . .	367
as to implied warranty of title . . . . .	368
doubtful in executed, not executory, contracts . . . . .	369
rule clear as to fraud, express warranty, etc. . . . .	370, 371
where sale is by executor, sheriff, pledgee, bailee, etc. . . . .	372
where sale is of an incorporeal chattel . . . . .	373
a quitclaim of one's title always implied . . . . .	374

SECTION

WARRANTY—continued,

whether in general there is a warranty implied . . . . .	375
English doctrine in this respect; authorities reviewed	376, 377
buyer may recover price paid, but qu. as to damages . . .	377
American doctrine in this respect . . . . .	378
whether one sells while in or out of possession . . . . .	378
where one, after selling, acquires a new title . . . . .	378 doctrine of the civil law; eviction, etc. . . . .	379 miscellaneous warranties; warranty as to quantity, manufacturer's make, etc. . . . .	380
summary as to implied warranty and caveat emptor . . . . .	381

SEE AUCTION; BUYER'S REMEDIES.

WRECKS . . . . .	11, 12
------------------	--------

SEE ORIGINAL ACQUISITION.

THE END.

